The column has been designed by Mr. Sambell, architect, who in his profession has had to contend with the almost insuperable difficulty of being deprived from his birth of the faculties both of speaking and hearing.

The Statue has been designed by Mr. Burnard, conformably with the just proportions of the column, and cannot fail to enhance his reputation as a sculptor.

Mr. Prior has, with the greatest ingenuity and skill, overcome the difficulty of raising the Statue, weighing nearly four tons; and he not only projected and gratuitously superintended the erection of the scaffolding, but, by supplying the materials and working machinery, reduced the expense of erection from £50 to about £20. He, moreover, it was who rebuilt the column, after the first attempt had failed.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

REMAINS OF MALMESBURY ABBEY CHURCH.

IN the memorials of the piety and taste of our forefathers, who thus glorified religion through art, England is especially rich; but, probably, in no part of the island is there a greater store of this archæological wealth than in the county of Wilts, on the north-western border of which lies the borough of Malmesbury, rendered famous and flourishing by its Abbey, the most considerable monastic institution in the west of England, except that of Glastonbury.

The Abbey at Malmesbury originated with Maldulf, a Scotch monk, who settled here about A.D. 643; and, gathering a company, first of scholars and then of persons disposed to live in regular discipline, began a monastery. It was better established by Aldhelm, who had been educated here under Maldulf, and who, after his master's death, was appointed (A.D. 675) to be Abbot, by Eleutherius, Bishop of Winchester. Aldhelm was a native of Malmesbury, an eminent scholar for his time, a poet, and an excellent musician. He was nephew to Ina, King of Wessex, and from the abbacy of Malmesbury was advanced to the see of Sherburne, and finally canonized. His fame greatly aided the prosperity of the monastery of Benedictines at Malmesbury, and Eleutherius, on his account, gave the town, &c. to the new foundation.

Thus acquiring celebrity at an early period, the Abbey continued to increase in riches and affluence to the period of its dissolution. Many Kings and nobles contributed largely to its revenues: among these were the Saxon sovereigns Ina, Athelstan, Edgar, and Edward the Confessor; also, William the Conqueror, and his Queen Matilda; and in a charter of 1065, the manors of the Abbey are said to consist of 350 hides of land, nearly equal to 40,000 acres. Athelstan enriched the Monastery with relics and ample gifts; he also commanded that he should be interred within its walls: and dying at Gloucester in 941, his remains were conveyed to Malmesbury Abbey, and there deposited with great pomp, under the high altar.

Mr. Britton refers the building of the Abbey Church to Bishop Roger, temp. Henry I., who deposed the Abbot Edulf, and usurped his place in the government of the convent at Malmesbury. Sir Richard Colt Hoare, however, refers the Church to the Saxons, as did also John Carter. Leland, who visited Malmesbury temp. Henry VIII., calls the Church "a right magnificent thing." It was originally a cross-church: the central tower had fallen before Leland's time, and now but a small part of the Church remains—that is, part of the nave and aisles, the grand southern porch, and a wall belonging to the south transept. The upper part of the western tower, which was standing in Leland's time, has since fallen, and the part of the nave immediately adjacent to it is dilapidated.

For what remains of the Abbey Church we are indebted to Thomas Stump, a rich clothier of Malmesbury, who bought it soon after the Dissolution, and gave it to the town. They fitted up the nave and used it as their parish church; suffering their former parochial church, except the tower and steeple, that stood in the Abbey churchyard, to go to decay.

As an early specimen of large proportion, massive masonry, and elaborate decoration, Malmesbury had few rivals. It appears to have been erected about that period when the circular and pointed arches were both in use, but when the latter was first beginning to be adopted, and the former was declining. The prevailing style in arches and columns is the massive Anglo-Norman, with the introduction of the Pointed or early English. A series of the latter is used on both sides of the nave, and in the vaulting of the two aisles. "These," says Mr. Britton, "are evidently part of the original design, and were built at the same time as those portions wherein the circular style prevails. The character of the mouldings and ornaments is late Norman; so that the structure would appear to belong to the Semi-Norman or Transition style, as may be seen in the Norman triforium with semicircular arches, supported by pointed arches, which are enriched with Norman mouldings, and spring from massive cylindrical Norman piers." The prominent architectural features of the remains are the nave with its aisles, parts of the transept, and a large porch on the southern side. In this fragment of a large pile are displayed three or four different styles, all of which appear to have gradually advanced in lightness of form and elegance of character. The perfect semicircular arch, as the earliest example, is conspicuous in the western front, the southern porch, the original lower tier of windows round the aisles, and in the middle division of the nave. Some of these are plain and simple in their shape and mouldings; others are ornamental with sculptured basil-relievi; and some have a central mullion, with tracery, &c., the latter, perhaps, the earliest example of the kind. The next variety of feature is the intersecting arch, which formed a sort of ornamental facing round the lower part of the exterior wall of the church. On each side of the nave is a series of pointed arches, which spring from massive columns, and are finished with mouldings and dressings which more properly assimilate with the circular than with the pointed style, i. e. their character is late Norman. Above these is a colonnade of broad round arches, with an open colonnade to the roof of the aisles; and over these is a series of long, narrow, pointed, arched windows, with mullions, tracery, &c.

MALMESBURY ABBEY.

We have abridged these judicious details from Mr. Britton's "Architectural Antiquities," wherein he has bestowed upon the Abbey Church a more than usual portion of illustrative plates.

The entrance doorways to the Church must have been elaborately beautiful: a fragment of the western doorway, with its enriched sculptured mouldings and capitals, remains; but the great decorative boast is the southern porch, the finest piece of Norman architecture and design in England. The exterior portal is composed of eight concentric arches, receding one behind another, and covered to the base with sculptured knot and trellis-work, foliage, and medallions inclosing figures. The inner doorway, from the porch to the aisle of the church, is richly dight with sculpture.

The town of Malmesbury is a fine old place. Its famed market-cross has fared better than the Abbey, and has been judiciously restored.

In connexion with the Abbey, we must not omit to mention that William of Malmesbury, one of the most truthful of our old historians, was when a boy placed in the monastery whence he derived his name, where, in due time, he became librarian, and, according to Leland, precentor, and ultimately refused the dignity of Abbot.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the county of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—MARCH 20 1852.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SUPPLEMENT.

VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1852. [GRATIS.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Lord Chancellor took his seat on the woolsack a few minutes before five o'clock.

The expected announcement of his future commercial and financial policy by the Earl Derby, in reply to Lord Beaumont's interrogatories, attracted a very large attendance of Peers; and the galleries, the spaces around the throne and below the bar, and other localities set apart for strangers, were thronged, a considerable number of those present being ladies.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Lord REDESDALE said that their Lordships were aware that much complaint had been made as to the irregularity which prevailed in the mode of conducting the business of the House. To remedy the inconvenience which had arisen, he had prepared a set of rules which he now begged leave to lay upon the table, and which he trusted the House would adopt.

The rules were ordered to lie upon the table.

THE COMMERCIAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Lord BEAUMONT, in accordance with previous notice, rose "to present a petition complaining of the injury inflicted on the country by the uncertainty which exists as to the intentions of Government respecting the law regarding the importation of foreign corn; and to put a question to her Majesty's Government, whether it is, or is not, their intention to recommend to Parliament an alteration of the present policy with respect to the importation of corn as soon as a new Parliament can be assembled?" The noble Lord proceeded to say that it was desirable that the country should be put in possession of the intention of Ministers at the earliest possible moment; but the country were as yet totally unaware what measures were likely to be proposed in regard to the measures of 1846. He called upon the noble Lord at the head of the Government to make an explicit statement on this subject, and answer in a manner to remove all doubt and uncertainty. The noble Earl (the Earl of Derby) had on a former occasion stated that he had not in any way changed the opinions he had long formed on this subject; that he thought the principle of levying a duty on corn the right principle; and that it was for the advantage of the country that such a duty should be maintained. After stating this opinion, the noble Earl proceeded to say that this was merely his private and individual opinion; consequently, this declaration could form no guide or index for the country from which to divine the policy of the Government. He (Lord Beaumont) inferred, however, that the noble Earl would propose the imposition of a duty on corn, if not in this Parliament, where he had avowed himself in a minority, yet in the next. The only way of ascertaining the sense of the country was to take a division in the House of Commons at the earliest possible moment; and if the noble Lord had announced that intention, he (Lord Beaumont) would not have said a word upon the subject; but, instead of doing so, the noble Lord had merely said that it was a question for the country to decide. There were two courses that might have been adopted, each of them free from objection. The noble Lord might have said frankly that he would have proposed such a measure in the next Parliament; or that, although retaining his private opinion, he would abstain altogether from bringing forward the subject, in view of the great public dangers likely to arise from its renewed agitation. Had the noble Lord done so, he would not have offered a word of objection, believing either course to be perfectly fair and straightforward; but what the noble Earl had really done was to appeal to the country to reopen the agitation on this question. This was not the conduct of a statesman, but of an agitator out of doors; and he regarded it as highly censurable in a Minister to throw out this ball of dissension to the public, when, without making not the slightest attempt to settle the question in Parliament. Assuredly it was the part of a Government to originate measures; but the noble Earl had declared his resolution to adhere to the decision of the majority, whatever that might be. If that were so, why were advancing more rapidly than could have been thought possible to the government of an extreme democracy. The moment the noble Earl had stated the line he meant to adopt, his words had been taken by both parties—the agriculturists on the one hand, and the Anti-Corn-Law League on the other—as the signal for renewing a fierce and bitter agitation, of which no one could anticipate the end. At any rate, if there was to be agitation, the country had a right to know clearly what the real intentions of the Government were. As matters stood at present, the public was thoroughly mystified, for each of the Ministers, in their addresses at the hustings, held a different language on the subject. The noble Lord then proceeded to comment upon the speeches delivered at Lincoln by Mr. Christopher, and at Aylesbury by Mr. Disraeli. He insisted that before a dissolution took place the country was entitled to know positively from Government what course they were about to pursue, and whether it was their intention to propose a fixed duty as protective against foreign corn. It was the custom of gentlemen of honour on the turf, when they entered more than one horse for a race, to state with which they intended to win, and the noble Lord could not do better than follow the example. At present, no two of the Ministers had agreed in their statements, yet all of them asserted that it was quite clear what they intended to do. The consequence was, a state of utter darkness and uncertainty in the public mind; and he was credibly informed that the effect of the noble Earl's statement had been to suspend valuations of land to a considerable amount; whilst in-coming and out-going tenants did not know on what basis to make their calculations. A clear and distinct statement would at least prevent any one from building on false hopes. He (Lord Beaumont) had originally considered the mode of settlement proposed in 1846 a dangerous one, and had, therefore, opposed it. He had foreseen that much evil would result, and his anticipations had been verified in the suffering which both the owners and occupiers of land had undergone since that change. He knew cases in which rents had been reduced 25 per cent. But, on the other hand, he must say that what little good he had then anticipated as likely to result from the change had been infinitely exceeded. Looking throughout the country generally, he maintained that the labouring classes had never before been in a condition equally comfortable. If that were the case, he thought they would not be justified in reversing the policy of 1846, even if the sufferings of the owners of land were greater than they were. Whatever, therefore, his opinion might be in the abstract, he was against all attempts to reverse the policy of 1846, from the certainty that by such attempts fierce and violent passions would be stirred up, and class set against class. He called on Government to put an end to the prevailing uncertainty by declaring their resolve to abide by the present policy, or at least to say plainly, if they intended to make any alteration in it, what that alteration was. If, however, the noble Earl was determined to leave things in uncertainty, he must tell the noble Earl that he was acting a part unworthy of a Minister. The noble Lord concluded by putting his question formally in terms of his notice, and presenting a petition from Yorkshire, praying their Lordships to adopt such a course as might be best calculated to relieve the country from its present uncertainty.

The Earl of DERBY then rose and said:—My Lords, it will be most satisfactory to myself, and I know it will be equally so to your Lordships, if I take the short and summary mode recommended by the noble Baron, who has occupied an hour and ten minutes of your time with a discursive question, which requires the simple expression of "yes" or "no" in reply; but although I hope not to occupy so much of your Lordships' time as the noble Baron has occupied in putting his question, I confess that I am not prepared to give him so brief and categorical an answer as that. At the same time, my Lords, I shall be most ready to give to the noble Lord and to your Lordships such explanations as are consistent with my duty, in regard to the course intended to be pursued by her Majesty's Government, as may have been left in the slightest degree of obscurity in the course of the observations which I had the honour to submit to your Lordships a fortnight ago. In doing this, it is not necessary that I should follow the noble Lord—and I assure him that I have no intention to do so—into the various arguments with regard to the policy of the Corn-laws, the course which was pursued in 1846, the incidents of burdens or of losses which fall upon the landlord, upon the tenant, or upon the labourer. And I shall not be led by the noble Lord, and I trust that none of my noble friends near me will be led by anything which takes place hereafter on this subject, into a most fruitless and unnecessary discussion on the subject of the Corn-laws. (Ministerial cheering.) My Lords, the noble Lord has certainly not done great justice to his clients; because, although he commenced by stating that he should proceed to show to the House the various evils under which these petitioners were suffering, the grievances which were afflicting them, and the anxieties which deprived them of their repose both by night and by day, yet to the close of his speech not one single word was said about the petitioners, and it was not until a question was put by my noble friend near me, that we even elicited from the noble Lord who those petitioners were, or what was the foundation of the question of the noble Lord. Well, now, the noble Baron was kind enough to allow me a sight of this petition after he had given notice of it. I speak with every respect of the petitioners. I have no doubt they are men of the highest respectability, but undoubtedly in point of numbers they are not exceedingly extensive. (A laugh.) These, as the noble Lord has stated, are petitioners who are not confined to a single district, or a single township, but a certain number of them I find are from the township of Snaith, and one or two others from adjoining districts. Well, now, what is the numerical force of those petitioners who are in this state of unparalleled uncertainty? What interests do they represent? What great bulk of property has come forward to complain to your Lordships of their unparalleled state of anxiety, the agitation into which the country is thrown, and the total cessation of all agricultural affairs which arises out of this protracted uncertainty? Why, my Lords, the petitioners are just 13 in number—(Laughter)—and thus they speak of themselves:—"The humble petition of the undersigned owners and occupiers of land in the county of York." The noble Earl near me has been kind enough to sum up the extent of the occupation of these petitioners. One of them, no doubt a highly-respectable farmer, occupies 500 acres of land; but the whole 13, including that gentleman, own and occupy only to the amount of 1841 acres. I see that some of them are farms, some of them very respectable gentlemen. Mr. Langley is one of them; but amongst them I see Mr. J. Wright, the auctioneer at Snaith, and his occupation is 12 acres. Mr. Pickering, the surgeon of Snaith, is another, and he occupies 20 acres of land. (Laughter.) These, then, are the petitioners who come before you on the present occasion. The noble Lord has not plainly stated their grievances. I am happy to find—and even there the noble Lord correctly stated the fact, when called upon to read the prayer—that the injuries and grievances of these petitioners are not injuries and grievances in esse, but injuries and grievances in posse. They do not feel any grievance or annoyance now, but they anticipate that hereafter they may, and consequently they petition your Lordships to remove the anxieties relative, not to what they actually feel, but to what they anticipate. Now, take the case of the surgeon or the auctioneer—one occupying 20 and the other 12 acres of land. Take the auctioneer, who is a highly respectable man, no doubt; I dare say he has made some money in his business as an auctioneer; and no doubt he has a snug little villa, shrubbery, and kitchen-garden, with three or four cows; and he lives very comfortably, not on his farm, but on his business as an auctioneer. What is the amount of wheat, I should like to know, which is grown by Mr. Jonathan Wright, the auctioneer of Snaith, which is to be deducted from his house, his pleasure-grounds, his kitchen-garden, and his lawn—the whole to be taken out of 12 acres of land? Yet that gentleman cannot sleep night nor day. He cannot rest for a single hour, oppressed as he is with his grievances, alarms, and anxieties. (Loud laughter.) He cannot tell how to estimate the value of his land; he cannot take a lease; he cannot agree upon the covenants which are necessary for conducting his cultivation and his husbandry, because he does not know whether or not we are going to put on a moderate duty on the importation of corn at some distant or indefinite period. Why, to talk of the postponement of the final settlement of this question for a period of eight, ten, or twelve months, as interfering with all the operations of agriculture, and preventing arrangements between landlords and tenants, is—without any wish on my part to depreciate or diminish the magnitude and importance of an ultimate declaration now, rather than at the next harvest, of what are the intentions of her Majesty's Government, or, what is of more importance, the intentions of Parliament on this great question. (Hear, hear.) Does the noble Lord suppose, either, that the imposition of any such duty as could be carried by any Government would produce materially to interfere with the arrangements which subsist between them as to rent and the covenants under which they hold their land. I have not supposed any amount of duty as being the duty that ought to be levied; but the noble Lord has taken the sum of 7s. or 8s., indirectly referring, I think, to what was said in a speech by a right hon. friend of mine in the county of Buckingham the other day. Now, I am not going to speak with regard to the amount of the increase of price which would be produced in the home market by any possible alteration of the duties on foreign corn. I am not going to re-open the subject upon which a noble Earl opposite put a question to me the other day, when he contended that whatever increase takes place in the price of corn or other articles in consequence of the imposition of a duty falls not only upon the price of that which is imported, but upon the whole amount of the produce of the country. What I contended for then was, and what I contend for now is, that whatever the duty may be, it is not the whole amount, but a small portion of that amount, which must be added to the price in consequence of the addition of the duty. Take a duty of 4s., 5s., or 7s., or whatever you please—let us take, for instance, that with which we are the most familiar, a 5s. duty on the import of corn—that is, an addition of 4s. to the present existing duty. Now, suppose the utmost possible extent of the augmentation of price in this country consequent upon an increased duty of 4s. to be 1s. 6d. or 2s. a quarter, will any man tell me that to doubt whether that amount would or would not be imposed, and the substitence of that doubt for some eight or ten months, could introduce the smallest amount of uncertainty with regard to the relations of landlord and tenant, and the permanent arrangements between them? (Hear, hear.) My Lords, I certainly have seen a statement, and I read it with some surprise, which was made by a friend of mine the other day, that he should take care to inform his tenants that if they obtained a 5s. duty upon wheat, he should immediately put on half-a-crown, I do not know whether per acre or per quarter, upon their rents. Now I do not think this is a very generous course of proceeding. That gentleman is himself a farmer, and an extensive sheep-owner; and he is at this moment canvassing the city of Westminster upon the ground of his extreme liberal principles! (Loud laughter.) Now, I confess that it appears to me the sheep are not the only portion of his property which this gentleman seems disposed to fleece. (Laughter.) But I believe the example he has set, or has announced his readiness to set—for I do not believe he would do it—is an example which would not be followed by country gentlemen generally. (Hear, hear.) I grant, however, that this question should remain in abeyance no longer than is absolutely necessary. (Cheers.) I admit that most frankly. But, with regard to the uncertainty; my Lords, there is a very large party in this country, as is well known, who have declared in the most emphatic terms that it is not until the next election that that uncertainty should be removed—that at the next election the question must be settled, and settled definitively, and to that election they refer on their own part, confident in the strength of their case, but ready to submit to the judgment of the country, should it be pronounced against them. (Hear, hear.) So that, whether the change of Government had or had not taken place, that uncertainty as to the final decision of the country, and of Parliament following the country, must have equally remained, but with this difference, that, in consequence of that change of Government, the period of the duration of the uncertainty will be diminished; and the dissolution of Parliament, which might in have been postponed for a period of two years in the ordinary course of things—I trust I need not offer an apology for alluding to it—must take place within a period of six or eight months from this time. (Cheers.) Therefore, my Lords, so far as uncertainty is concerned with regard to the final decision of the country, the period of that uncertainty is not extended, but diminished. (Cheers.) The change of Government, remember, has not taken place upon any question connected with the subject of the land. And I go further, and say that the period ought to be as short as possible, and that the appeal to be made to the country ought to be made as early as a regard for the true interests of the country will permit. (Hear, hear.) But I say further, that, so far as it depends on me, no taunt, no challenge, no difficulty to which I may be subjected, and no mortification to which I may be exposed, shall induce me to recommend to my Sovereign that that dissolution of Parliament, however anxious I may be for the decision, shall take place one hour sooner than regard to those great and paramount interests renders necessary. (Loud cheers.) Let me venture to look back for a moment to the circumstances under which her Majesty's present Government have assumed—the noble Lord was good enough to say, have taken upon them—power. I would correct the expression, and say, have assumed the responsibilities and the duties of office. (Hear, hear.) The late Government fell by no adverse motion of ours. (Cheers.) Least of all did they fall by any adverse motion involving the question of Protection to the landed interest. (Protracted cheering.) Patiently and steadily we have abstained from pressing that question in the shape of direct Protection upon the attention of Parliament. (Hear, hear.) The noble Lord will not, I think, venture to say, that from those who sit opposite to him in this House, or from those who sit opposite to his party in the other, the late Government had been encountered by a factious opposition or by a desire to eject them from office. By what did they fall? They fell by their own internal weakness. (Cheers.) They fell by their confessed and notorious inability to conduct the business of the country. (Loud cheers.) They fell by the absence of their friends (Hear, hear.) They fell by having quarrelled with their colleagues. (Hear, hear.) They fell by their inability to muster 130 gentlemen in the House of Commons to give them support upon a question which they declared to be fatal to their existence. (Great cheering.) My Lords, it was under these circumstances that we were called upon to assume office; and I, for one—and I thank my noble friends and my colleagues in the House present for the readiness with which they answered to the call—felt that, in the then state of this country, internally and externally, the country ought not, and should not, be left without a Government. (Loud cheers.) My Lords, when that division took place which was the ostensible cause of the fall of the late Government—the real causes were very different; and perhaps the noble Earl opposite, whom I see taking a note (Earl Grey), may be somewhat aware of that cause—(Laughter and "Hear")—when, I say, the late Government had been placed in that minority, the noble Lord at the head of the Treasury announced to Parliament, that, subsequently to that decision, he had consulted his colleagues as to the propriety of their resignation, or of a dissolution of Parliament, and that he had come to the conclusion, that, under the circumstances of the country, a dissolution was inexpedient. (Hear.) Inexpedient for whom, my Lords? Inexpedient for the noble Lord and his colleagues, or inexpedient for the interests of the country? (Hear.) I will not so far impute such unworthy motives to the noble Lord as to suppose that it was to the convenience or advantage of his colleagues and himself that he looked. (Hear.) I must consider that he and his colleagues had come to the conclusion that a dissolution of Parliament at the present moment—whatever results it might have upon the future constitution of parties—that such a dissolution of Parliament was not only inexpedient, but that it would be most dangerous to the interests of the country. (Hear.) Then, my Lords, I ask, with what face can any man or body of men who had declared that a dissolution was inexpedient—who had declared that they were unable themselves to conduct the Government—who had advised the Queen to send for me to undertake the duties of responsible Minister of the Crown—with what face, or upon what pretext, I say, can any man, or any body of men, call for a premature dissolution of Parliament which they themselves had condemned; or seek to embarrass that Government which they know, if they succeed in destroying, they would not have the means of rebuilding, or of building another in its place. (Loud cheers.) But the noble Baron said that upon this particular question of the Corn-laws we ought to have taken one of two courses: either we ought plainly and simply to have declared that, having now obtained office by the support of those who call themselves the Protectionist party, we threw down the ladder by which we have mounted to office, and in that case he would be the last man to taunt us with our inconsistency; or else, that we ought to come forward at the present moment, state in the fullest and completest detail the course which we intend to recommend to Parliament, and which course we have ourselves declared that we have no intention of recommending to Parliament until another Parliament has assembled. (Hear, hear.) I will ask the noble Lord to look back to the last occasion when a change of Government took place in this country. In 1846 the late Sir Robert Peel's Government was ejected from office by an adverse vote upon an important Irish question, which was introduced and supported by the gentlemen who succeeded Sir R. Peel in the Ministry. In 1846 a motion in opposition to the policy of the then Government was carried successfully against Sir R. Peel. There was the usual intervening period between this fall of the old Ministry and the formation of the new, and at the end of a fortnight's time, precisely the same as under the existing circumstances, Lord J. Russell appeared in the House of Commons as First Minister of the Crown, and stated what those bills lying on the table of the House were with which he intended to proceed, and what those were which he proposed to abandon. On that occasion Lord John Russell was taunted by one of those hon. members who is now supporting him—the hon. member for Finsbury, and he was called upon by the House to state the principles upon which he intended to conduct his Government, and the course which he intended to pursue in regard to a particular measure. Now, I commend to the attention of noble Lords opposite the very clear and elaborate answer made them by Lord J. Russell, standing in the position of First Minister of the Crown. He denied the right of Parliament to put such questions to him, and he denied that it was the duty of the Government to answer them. (Hear, hear.) He declared that upon those questions he would give no answer whatever. He refused to pledge himself to a particular course in regard to important measures of reform, and of those relating to the Irish Church. But the noble Lord went further, for, with regard to the measure relating to the Church of Ireland, he used these remarkable expressions.—"I do not say that I am satisfied with the existing state of things. I may desire to reduce the revenues of the Protestant Church in Ireland. I may desire to endow the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland. I retain the opinions I have expressed upon both those questions; but the people of England entertain different opinions, and I will be guided by my duty in my course by the recorded opinions of the people of England. (Hear, hear.) And I will not pledge myself as to the course which now, hereafter, or at any time I will take upon the important and vital questions—the maintenance in its integrity of the Protestant Church in Ireland, and the endowment of the Roman Catholic Church." (Loud cheers, hear.) Now, these were the doctrines of Lord John Russell in 1846. These were the doctrines in which the Opposition of that day acquiesced, and willingly acquiesced. These were the principles, without let or hindrance, upon which Lord John Russell and his Government took office in the middle of a session of Parliament. These were the principles upon which they were permitted to go on to the close of the session without any factious interruptions, and to dispose of the business that was pressing upon the immediate consideration of Parliament. My Lords, I ask for no one measure, I ask not for justice —not to me or my colleagues—but justice to the great interests of our common country. (Hear, hear.) I ask not to be precluded from making the necessary financial arrangements for the public service. I ask not to be precluded from placing this country in a permanent state of internal organisation against the danger of foreign invasion. I ask you not to permit any unnecessary interruptions to the progress of public or private business, or any interference with those useful law reforms which have been already so ably sketched out, and upon which the hearts and the minds of the people are fixed (Hear.) I call upon you, my Lords, indeed, I ought to beg pardon of my noble and learned friend on the bench below me (Lord Lyndhurst) in alluding to this subject, because the noble and learned Lord the other day, in dwelling upon these important questions, made a most able and elaborate statement, in which he showed all the inconveniences of a dissolution at this period of the year. And I am conscious how incapable I am, after such an eloquent and unanswerable speech, to put before you as topics for consideration, and to enumerate the evils that must arise from a premature interruption of these proceedings. If noble Lords opposite, and hon. and right hon. gentlemen in the House of Parliament, have really no objection to wait for the pronouncement of the verdict of the country, I ask where is the anxiety—where is the alarm—where is the uncertainty that are said to prevail in the public mind as to the policy of the existing Government? (Hear, hear.) I have already told your Lordships that in regard to financial measures I do not intend to make any proposition that could in any way disturb the present state of things. I tell you now, and I have told you before, that the next election must finally and conclusively decide the course which we shall take, and that in the meantime we shall not propose any measure that could call for such opposition as is now threatening us. I shall say no more; but if the business of Parliament be interrupted—factiously interrupted—in this House I have no fear of any such interruption, and I trust that in the other House better councils will prevail; but I repeat, if the Government are to be interrupted by discussions upon mere abstract questions—if the necessary measures waiting for our consideration are to be impeded in their progress—then, I say, the just censure of the country must fall upon the heads of those who have so wantonly interfered in preventing any Government being carried on. But we are told that there is much anxiety, alarm, and uncertainty prevailing in the public mind as to the intentions of her Majesty's Ministers. Where, I ask, are there any indications of such feelings? The country appears tranquil, peaceable, and contented. (Hear, hear.) Is there a more accurate barometer of public apprehension than the public funds at this moment? And yet will the noble Lords opposite point out a single moment during the whole period in which they held office when the public securities were so steady or had shown a greater tendency to advance than at this moment? Yet, according to the noble Lord's statement, the country is in a perfect panic. (Hear, hear.) Now the question of the commercial and financial concerns of this country is not, as the noble Lord seemed to infer, a mere question of the imposition or non-imposition of a moderate duty upon foreign corn, nor is there any question raised as to the total reversal of the policy of the late Sir Robert Peel as far as regards the imposition of a duty upon foreign corn, or the repeal of the navigation laws, or any of those great measures in the policy of which though I do not concur, yet I do not desire to see reversed. I do think, however, that that policy has been carried to an unnecessary and a dangerous extent The noble Lord himself admits that to one great class of the community they have occasioned serious evil, and that much injury has been suffered by such class, in consequence not only of the adoption, but also the mode of adoption, of the principles of Free Trade. My Lords, I think that other interests have suffered equally with the land, not to the same extent, perhaps, but in the same manner. But on that account do I desire to go back upon all legislation of the last few years? I recollect well, at the same time the measure for the repeal of the navigation laws was under discussion, I warned your Lordships against adopting that measure; and amongst other reasons urged by me against your adopting it, I said that whatever you did in reference to the imposition of those duties, the principle of that measure respecting the navigation laws if once assented to would be final and irrevocable, and you could never again hope to reverse it. I repeat the same words now. (Hear, hear.) I do not desire to go back to the law of 1846 as regards corn. I do not desire to go back to the law of 1842. I desire your Lordships and the country to consider—not by means of agitation —not through the agitation of persons who, perhaps, make more noise than they possess influence, who bring down large amounts of subscriptions up paper, who have agents, and perhaps still exercise, a most dangerous influence upon a portion of the community, and who may succeed by such influence in creating local apprehensions; but I say it is a question which ought to be considered by Parliament deliberately and calmly discussing, not so much whether a mode of relief might not be adopted by imposing a moderate duty upon corn, but whether you will apply your minds, not to the reversal of our commercial system, but whether such modification might not be made in it as shall lighten the blow and alleviate the injustice inflicted upon those interests which you confess have suffered by our recent policy. (Hear, hear.) I have a most confirmed conviction that if you carefully and calmly consider this subject, and I believe my colleagues coincide with me in these views. I expressed my opinion that for the relief of the farmer, without any serious difficulties and expenditure he ought to be relieved by the country, and I known it on other classes, a moderate imposition of duty would produce a large revenue, and thereby enable other taxation to be taken off. (Hear, hear.) That such a duty would hardly produce an appreciable effect upon the price of food, and that it would thereby be the most just, economical, and, for the country, the most advantageous mode of affording relief. (Hear, hear.) But, at the same time, I think that that is a proposition which no Minister should bring forward unless he was sure of its being called for not only by a large majority in Parliament, but also by the concurrent opinion deliberately expressed throughout the country. (Hear, hear.) But, my Lords, I say that that is only one portion of a great question—I say it is the duty of the Minister who feels and thinks with me to devise and carefully to deliberate upon such measures as he thinks best calculated to alleviate the injustice, and to mitigate the distress, of a large portion of the country. But, I say, that in taking into consideration the course which the Government ought to pursue under such circumstances, they are bound—not, as was suggested by the noble Lord opposite, to fling down some months before a definite and fixed proposition as to the precise mode of operations which for five or six months to come may give rise to angry agitation—but to commend the cause of the suffering interests, not to certain advocates, but to the calm, deliberate sense of the country. They should ascertain the deliberate sense of the people upon the question, and upon such base those measures which they propose as remedies for the evils complained of, even though, abstractedly, and in their own mind, the Government might not think them the most desirable that could be framed, yet such as they feel they could carry into effect with the general concurrence of Parliament and without raising any angry feeling. I apprehend that this is a much more statesmanlike course than that which the noble Lord opposite suggests—namely, that of introducing a proposition for the purpose of being negatived, and then hastily appealing to the electors for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the country upon it. (Hear, hear.) But that is not all. It is not the mere question whether a paltry duty should be imposed upon this or that foreign produce. It is not the whole of the commercial question, great as it is, that is involved. That is not the question on which I would make an appeal to the country. I intend, my Lords, that that appeal shall be made. I recall with regret and surprise the proceedings that have taken place not very long ago. I suppose I am bound to make the same circumlocution in speaking of Chesham-place as in speaking of another circumlocution in speaking of Chesham-place as in speaking of another place. (Laughter.) I say, my Lords, with some surprise that proceedings have not taken place in Chesham-place which I think bid fair to render the Chesham-place compact a rival to the Lichfield House compact. (Laughter.) The noble Lord who preceded me in office, it appears, had summoned together a large body of his supporters to consult with them on the course which they ought to take in opposition to the existing Government. Looking at the circumstances under which the noble Lord has quitted office, I should have hoped that the last object he would have in view, as a statesman and as a patriot, was to organise an opposition against that Government which circumstances compelled to succeed him. (Hear, hear.) I confess that my surprise and regret were much increased when I saw the nature of the association which the noble Lord has formed for that purpose. I saw on that occasion that the noble Lord was attended by 168 members of the House of Commons. Now, where, I ask, were those 168 members when the Government fell in consequence of its own weakness? (Hear, hear.) Where were those supporters of the noble Lord and his Government on that occasion? It appears that, not being disposed to support the noble Lord on that trying moment, they absented themselves from attendance; and, although they permitted the noble Lord's Government to fall, they now willingly join in the cry of hostility to the existing Government—trees; and as there was nothing in the case of the sugar duties which should make it an exception to the policy which her Majesty's Government had avowed their determination to pursue—not unnecessarily to press upon Parliament during the present session questions which it would be better to reserve for another Parliament—it was not his intention during the present session to bring forward his motion. The opinions he had repeatedly expressed upon this subject had, however, undergone no change, but her Majesty's Ministers had determined that this question, like others of a similar nature, ought to be reserved for a future Parliament.

In reply to a further question, Sir J. PAKINGTON stated that the reduction of duty which was to take place on the 5th of July would not be interfered with.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

In answer to Mr. Adderley, Sir J. PAKINGTON said that he had not thought it necessary to send out by this day's Cape mail instructions to General Cathcart to alter the policy prescribed by Lord Grey; but added, that the condition and future government of the Cape colony were under the anxious consideration of Ministers. He had, however, sent out to the Legislative Council, urging them to consider the constitutional ordinances as early as possible.

THE ENCUMBERED ESTATES COMMISSION.—IRELAND.

The MASTER of the ROLLS gave notice of his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill to continue undiminished those powers of the commissioners which should expire on the 28th of July next.

TAX UPON COALS.

In answer to Mr. Headlam, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that he would not avail himself of official privilege to refuse an answer to a premature question, but would at once declare that the Government had no intention to impose a tax upon coals, unless (as added, amid much laughter) such a tax was desired by Mr. Headlam's constituents, in which case the matter should receive the best attention of Ministers.

Mr. HERRIES, in answer to Mr. Anstey, declined to say whether he could produce the papers connected with the dismissal of Colonel Outram until they had been examined.

Mr. WALPOLE promised the assistance of Government to Mr. Aglionby in passing his bill for the enfranchisement of copyholders—to some of the details of which they objected—if the hon. member would consent to postpone it.

M. AGLIONBY consented, and fixed the committee for the 24th.

THE COMMERCIAL POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Petitions having been presented by Mr. MILNER GIBSON from the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester, and by Mr. BROWN from Liverpool, praying that there might be no interference with the Free-Trade policy of the country commenced in 1846, the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply was read.

On the question that the Speaker leave the chair,

Mr. VILLIERS rose, in accordance with the notice he had previously given, to put some inquiries to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the subject of the future commercial and financial policy of the Government. The hon. gentleman, after some remarks upon the great importance of the question to which he was about to refer, urged the stagnation in trade, and the many injurious consequences to all the great interests of the country, which must result from uncertainty in so vital a matter. Seeing how the members of the present Government had distinguished themselves for their adherence to Protection, and their declarations out of office that they would use their power, should they succeed in forming a Government, in reversing the Free Trade policy, the country had a right to have an explicit declaration of their intentions. He contrasted the state of things under Free Trade with what they had been under Protection. When was there a time when trade had been so active, when the application of capital was more abundant, the people more generally employed or better fed—when the poor who, from accident or sickness, were obliged to enter the hospitals or unions, were in a better physical condition, or even when agriculture had progressed with more rapid strides, and land found more purchasers than since the establishment of Free Trade. Our shipping trade was improving, the complaints from our West India colonies were decreasing, and there was every reason to believe that these and all our other colonies were fast growing into prosperity under the more liberal policy we had recently adopted. Such had been the state of affairs at the commencement of the present year. What was it now? Confidence had given place to uncertainty and activity; orders were withheld, and trade was suspended under the apprehension of an impending change. Even foreign merchants looked on the change of Ministry here as an intimation of a change of our commercial policy. The state of Europe in regard to its political liberties, should be a warning to the people of England how they allowed any interference in the commercial liberties they had so recently achieved. After adverting to a rumour that a 5s fixed duty was to be proposed, he put the question distinctly to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether Ministers intended to propose an import duty on foreign corn, calling upon him to give such explanations as to the Ministerial principles of commercial and fiscal legislation as would place their views fairly and fully before the country.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, who on rising was received with cheers, spoke as follows:—The hon. and learned gentleman who has just addressed the House has noticed the extraordinary contrast which he fancies exists in this country between the condition and feelings of the people in January last and in the present month of March. The hon. gentleman stated—not, indeed, with that definite detail which perhaps might have been expected, yet in language sufficiently strong, and evidently impressed with the conviction of its truth—what he imagines to be the condition of England at this moment. It is, says the hon. gentleman, a condition of distrust, apprehension, anxiety, and uncertainty. Warming with his subject, the hon. gentleman soon found out that the feeling of distrust amounted even to a state of paralysis. ("Hear," and laughter.) I must confess I listened to this announcement with some apprehension, but more surprise. (Hear, hear.) No information has yet reached me tending to show that the condition of the people or the state of public feeling at all corresponds with the description given by the hon. member. (Hear, hear.) I do not find in the commercial transactions of this country any of those symptoms which the hon. member dilated on as a consequence of the change of Administration. I, necessarily, have communications with many persons of great eminence in the commercial world—men who are the highest authorities in matters of trade and finance. They are persons familiar with scenes of the most active commercial life, and neither from their words nor countenances could I have inferred that the country was in a state of paralysis, or that even feelings of distrust, apprehension, and anxiety were influencing those whose interests they represented. On the contrary, the inference I draw from the representations of these gentlemen is, that the people are in a state of contentment and prosperity. (Hear, hear.) I can find no confirmation of the hon. gentleman's gloomy views in the present price of the public securities. (Cheers.) That barometer of public opinion certainly gives no indication of distrust and anxiety. Every circumstance to which my attention impresses me with the conviction that the public mind at the present moment is in a state of peculiar tranquillity. (Hear, hear.) One thing in the hon. gentleman's speech surprised me, and that was the discovery he has made, not only that the Government intends to propose a fixed duty, but the very amount of that duty, and also its certain effects. The duty, it seems, is to be 5s., which will raise the price of wheat only 2s. a quarter, and on that account, the hon. member says, the farmers will not have it. Two things result from this statement. In the first place, it is absolutely impossible that a duty which will enhance the price of wheat only 2s a quarter can produce all the evil consequences the hon. member has predicted; and, secondly, if the farmers will not have the duty, they cannot say we have deceived them if we should not propose it. (Cheers and laughter.) These are the irresistible conclusions which must be drawn from the matured argument of the hon. member. The hon. member says the present Government are bound to state frankly and fully their intentions with respect to what he calls the fool of the people. I will not stop to notice the hon. member's disingenuous perversion of what I may be permitted to call a provincial jest perpetrated by me. I never talked of a poor man ordering mutton chops at a coffee-house; and I really must express my surprise, that, when we were expecting to hear from the hon. member a high discourse on political economy, he should condescend to such a misrepresentation. Dismissing that matter, however, I feel it my duty to respond to the hon. member's challenge. The hon. member says that we are bound, now we are in power, to carry into effect the opinions we declared in Opposition, and he quoted some words with which I concluded a speech of mine, in which I predicted that if the then Government refused to listen to the claim of justice they would ultimately be defeated and justice would be conceded. I cannot think that was a fortunate quotation to make, considering that the motion I then brought forward was not for a fixed duty on corn, considering that it had nothing to do with taxing the food of the people, but was recommended to the House as a measure of conciliation and compromise, and as a probable means of terminating the fatal controversy between great political interests. As far as regards my conduct on the occasion referred to, my task would indeed be easy. I might take the expressions which the hon. gentleman quoted, and say I am prepared to the best of my ability, to fulfil the spirit of the policy I recommended on the evening when I made that speech. (Hear, hear.) But, with the permission of the House, I will not narrow my observations to that issue. I wish, without reserve, fairly and frankly to express the feelings of the Government. (Hear, hear.) I think that, in the first place, the House should consider the position of the Government and the circumstances under which gentlemen sitting on these benches acceded to office. That is an element of consideration which must not be omitted. Since the repeal of the Corn-laws a controversy has been maintained in the country as to the policy or impolicy of that important measure. Various efforts were from time to time made to induce Parliament to mitigate its effects. At last the question arrived at this point:—The present Parliament, which was elected in 1847, when the effects of the repeal of the Corn-laws had not been felt by the class most interested in the measure, approached a conclusion, and the natural termination of its existence loomed in the distance. The Earl of Derby, after various efforts to mitigate the effects of the law, declared it was necessary an appeal should be made to the community at large to settle a controversy which in Parliament had been sufficiently prolonged. It perhaps will not be thought arrogant on my part, after the allusions made by the hon. member, to refer to what I have done on the subject. More than two years ago, I said, that, as far as Protection was concerned, after the House had, by large majorities, negatived the motions from our side, I would no longer raise the question, but would confine myself to introducing measures which were totally independent of the abstract principle of Protection. I also stated my opinion that the question of Protection, as an abstract question, was one which could no longer be considered in this House, but must be settled by an appeal to the country. The question being that state, there is suddenly and unexpectedly a change of Government. If the Government had been expression of the opinion of Parliament upon the condition of the agricultural interest—if it had been upon a motion asserting the expediency of immediately returning to the principle of a protective policy—if a motion of that kind had been sanctioned by the House of Commons, and if a change of Government had immediately occurred, I think there would have been some ground for the hon. and learned gentleman—whether it was in our power or not to take these steps to which he referred—putting the question, and that it would have been absolutely necessary that I should be called upon to announce the policy which we were prepared to propose. (Hear, hear.) I take for granted that was the case. (Hear.) Why are we sitting on this side of the table to take a different course of policy from that which we asserted on the other side of the House? ("Oh, oh!" and cheers.) That certainly is not open to us; but it is our duty here to adhere to the principle which, after experience and reflection, I laid down as the rule of our conduct in this Parliament—that we would not call upon the present Parliament in any way to alter that commercial policy which it had adopted. (Cheers and a laugh.) I put it with confidence to all candid men if there is not a clear distinction between a party obtaining power by the professions of what are in common parlance call a Protective policy and finding themselves in office, and a party who in Opposition deprecated discussion of that policy, however they might have felt that the time might come when the House of Commons would be induced to adopt a policy contrary to that which in times past it had pursued. (Hear, hear.) The House will, I acknowledge no more than that which any candid man would say is a perfectly fair position. (Hear, hear.) That being the case, I think it is preposterous to suppose that instantly a change of Government takes place we shall be called upon in the House of Commons to announce the measures we think should be introduced. But I am not disposed to take advantage of what may be considered a very limited and partial view of our position in order to avoid the fullest discussion of our present circumstances. I will answer the hon. and learned gentleman without any reserve whatever. (Hear, hear.) The honourable and learned gentleman says, that our not announcing at this moment a statement in detail as to the measures which we think necessary occasions distrust and uncertainty in the country. But surely it does not occasion greater uncertainty than did our position in Parliament before. ("Oh, oh!" from the Opposition benches, and Ministerial cheers.) There was in opposition a powerful party, who felt necessarily and strongly that till this question was put fairly before the country they never would be satisfied. (Hear, hear.) There was a powerful party in both Houses who said that till a verdict was given at a general election they would not be content, and therefore the question was still unsettled and uncertain. (Hear, hear.) There was the same uncertainty, and we may depend upon it that in a country like this no settlement of a question can be satisfactory till the vast majority of the population are convinced that it is a safe and sound one. (Hear, hear.) I think that what has taken place, in fact, rather tending to decrease the uncertainty, because it is a change which insists that very verdict to which we all look. If we had been in opposition it might have been postponed for a period much longer than in all probability it will now be; so that argument of the hon. and learned gentleman completely falls to the ground. (Hear, hear.) But the hon. and learned gentleman asks me to tell him whether, in another Parliament, we shall be prepared to propose a fixed duty, accord ne to his own figures, of 5s. upon corn. (No, no.) That is the question, as I understand it. (No, no.) If it is not, I shall be glad to know what the real question is.

Mr. VILLIERS.—The question I put was, whether the Government intended to propose any scheme of commercial or fiscal legislation before the dissolution of Parliament in such a way that the question of the principle of Protection or a duty on corn should be submitted to the deliberate judgment of the electors. (Hear, hear.)

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER.—That is a mere Parliamentary periphrasis of what I said somewhat more simply. (A laugh.) Well, then, I say it is not the intention of the Government to do anything of the kind. (Cheers and counter-cheers.) I only express my own feeling and that of my colleagues when I say we believe a very great injustice was done to the agricultural and other interests in the changes that took place in 1846, and afterwards in 1848 and 1849—(Hear, hear)—and that we are extremely desirous for the benefit of all classes of the community that the injustice should be redressed. (Hear.) We think that it would be our duty to consider the condition of the agricultural interest—and I take that interest in particular because it is the one most prominently referred to in the observations made by the hon. and learned gentleman, not because I wish to confine my observations to it alone—we think it would be our duty to consider the condition of that interest, and to propose those measures which, in our opinion, are most calculated to redress the grievances under which it suffers. (Cheers.) But we are not pledged to any measure. (Laughter from the Opposition benches, and Ministerial cheers.) I think it would be entirely out of character to say, that in a new Parliament we should be bound to bring forward certain specific measure in order to redress the grievances, or to propose the measure indicated by the hon. and learned gentleman—a 5s. fixed duty. (Hear, hear.) I am not at all clear sharing as I do the opinion of the hon. and learned gentleman as to the little effect which it has in raising prices, that that is a measure which is by any means one I may think it our duty to recommend. (Hear, hear.) But I say frankly to the hon. and learned gentleman, that, in considering the fiscal arrangements of this country, I do not—I will not—to gain any popularity, or to avoid any blustering, give it as my opinion that a duty such as he describes is one which any Minister under any circumstances ought to propose. ("Hear, hear," and a laugh.) I think the hon. and learned gentleman and his friends have so far succeeded by their agitation—not their present agitation, which I believe to be very harmless, but by former agitation—to invest the proposition with such an amount of prejudice, that, though I may consider such a proposition a good one, I may not think it expedient to adopt it. (Hear, hear.) I know there is a great desire on the part of gentlemen opposite that there should be a proposition for a fixed duty. ("Hear," and laughter.) I regret, for their sakes, that I cannot give a promise to make any proposition of the kind. What I intend to do, with the assistance and consent of my colleagues, is to redress the grievances of the agricultural interest; and we reserve to ourselves the right of considering what may be the best means by which that great object can be attained. (Hear, hear.) I think that, in consequence of the prejudice with which the proposition for a fixed duty on wheat—such, for example, as the hon. and learned gentleman had referred to—has been invested, it would be very unwise in any Minister to make it before the verdict of the country has been pronounced with regard to it. (Hear.) That verdict will, in all probability, be speedily given. That question will then be decided. But the question of a redress of the just grievances of any interest in this country will not be settled by a verdict of that nature. (Hear, hear.) That is a great subject, and it is for the Government to consider those measures which they conscientiously believe will best attain the object they frankly announce it is their object to accomplish. (Hear, hear.) I hope I have answered the inquiry of the hon. and learned gentleman. ("No, no," and laughter from the Opposition benches.) I understood the hon. and learned gentleman, when he was so kind as to interrupt me, to say that his main inquiry of her Majesty's Government was, whether it was their intention to propose any fiscal arrangements affecting our commercial system before a dissolution of Parliament, so that the opinion of the country might be taken on the point. Nothing is further from my wish than to misrepresent him. I understood that to be his question, and I thought I had answered very frankly that it was not the intention of the Government to do so. I am totally at a loss to understand the derisive cheer of the gentlemen opposite. (Hear, hear.) I went even further; I assumed that the hon. and learned gentleman would wish to know the feeling of the Ministry on the question of a moderate fixed duty, and if we, either in this Parliament or the next, meant to propose it. I was not bound, if I had adhered strictly to the tenour of the inquiry, to state the facts I did; but I told the hon. and learned gentleman, that neither in this nor the next Parliament did her Majesty's Ministers consider themselves bound to make any such proposition whatever. Have I not frankly answered the question? (Cheers and counter-cheers.) I am totally at a loss then to understand the derisive cheer opposite; but I can only explain it in this manner, that I do not think that my answer to the inquiry was as agreeable as hon. gentlemen opposite would have liked it to be. (A laugh.) I also told hon. and learned gentlemen that we did think ourselves bound to give a just redress of the grievances under which the great productive interest of agriculture suffers, and that we would consider, if we had the opportunity, in a new Parliament, the means which we thought the best calculated to accomplish the end we desired. (Hear, hear.) I have recapitulated the answers I gave to the hon. and learned gentleman, in order that there should be no mistake whatever in their purport or meaning (Hear, hear.) I am aware that the Government is placed in some difficulties; but they are difficulties which, we did not seek them, so we will not shrink from them. (Cheers.) I am told, though I know not on what authority, that there has been on the part of the new Government, an ad misericordiam appeal to the House of Commons. I am not aware of it. I have not sanctioned it. I have not made it. I have not any of my colleagues. Let the House judge, then, on how, we shall do our best to encounter it. What we ask is, not fair play for the Government, but fair play for the country. (Cheers.) It is our intention to carry on the affairs of the country, notwithstanding such difficulties which we acknowledge to exist, to the best of our ability. There are, as all gentlemen must know, questions of an exigency which cannot be neglected; and, in my opinion, there are some measures not of so formal a character, but not of a less important nature, that I think ought to be passed. But if gentlemen opposite suppose that, so far as we are personally concerned, we have any wish unnecessarily to prolong the present state of affairs, they labour under a very great mistake. I shall, however, mention some measures that I think should be introduced without delay—not merely those votes for the public service that all will join in granting us—not merely the Mutiny Bill, which no one, I think (though I have heard some strange rumours), will be prepared to oppose—(Hear, hear)—but those other measures, with regard to which, on the part of the Government, the greatest efforts will be exerted to secure their speedy passing. Those three measures I shall deem it my duty earnestly to press on the attention of the House of Commons. One of them is the disfranchisement of the borough of St. Alban's, which my right hon. friend near me stated, the other night, would be proceeded with. In connexion with this matter, I beg to say I shall take the earliest opportunity of expressing, on the part of the Government, what our intentions are, if supported by the House, with the distribution of the four seats which, in case that bill passes, will be at our disposal. My opinion is, that it is of the greatest importance, before Parliament is dissolved, to have the number of seats complete. (Hear, hear.) The next question, one of very great importance, is that of Chancery reform. I think it is possible, from the manner in which that question is placed, that it may be carried through Parliament with much greater speed than has attended measures of that kind. (Hear, hear.) There is on the table of the House the report of a commission with which gentlemen are familiar. I may state—though of course I am ready to give every credit to our colleagues for a desire to act on the recommendations of that commission in the same unreserved manner as ourselves—it is but right to say, that there may be no unfounded charge of delay against us on the subject, that we have found no bill of the kind by the late Government, and have therefore found nothing to assist us in the matter. Nevertheless, the Lord Chancellor has drawn up the heads of a bill, and instructions have been given to frame the bill itself. It will be introduced into the other House, by which its progress will be greatly facilitated; and therefore I hope, that, notwithstanding what has occurred, a good measure of Chancery reform will be carried. (Cheers.) Before it is unnecessary for me to say that the bill will go unreserved upon the recommendations of the commission. (Hear.) There is a third measure which we feel it our duty to bring forward on the earl est possible day public business will allow, and that is a measure for the internal defence of the country. (Cheers.) These are three measures which, whatever may be their fate in Parliament, will be speedily and immediately submitted to its consideration; and I trust we shall be permitted to carry them through. (Hear, hear.) I should now sit down, did I not feel that I have a duty to perform to her Majesty's Ministers. The Opposition has very frankly inquired what are the principles upon which the Administration is formed. There is a subject scarcely second to that in importance in this country, and that is the principle on which her Majesty's opposition is formed. (Great cheering.) I hope, therefore, I may be permitted to take this opportunity of making that inquiry. (Cheers.) I have been somewhat surprised, seeing that I am informed on authoritative statement, that the noble Lord the member for London, within a fortnight of resigning the government of the country from an avowed inability to carry it on—within a fortnight of having communicated to the House of Commons the solemn and mature opinion of his Cabinet that the dissolution of Parliament was not expedient—within a fortnight of having communicated to our gracious Sovereign that her Majesty should send for the nobleman now at the head of affairs; I am surprised to learn that that noble Lord (Lord John Russell) has felt it to be an imperative duty to construct a new Opposition, the object of which, so far as I can collect it from the authoritative statement, is to force Lord Derby to do that which the noble Lord himself would not venture to attempt—(Cheers)—that which he announced as in the opinion of his Cabinet to be inexpedient. (Hear, hear.) No doubt the noble Lord arrived at that conclusion with a due regard to all the important circumstances which in this country cannot but enter into the consideration of an individual responsible for the government of the country. (Hear, hear.) No doubt the noble Lord thought that in the present state of affairs, in the present state of Europe and of England, a dissolution of Parliament was highly inexpedient. It was with this conviction and this general determination the noble Lord resigned the reins of power, and recommended a successor who surely the noble Lord might have felt must be equally conscious of the responsibility of advising his Sovereign to such a step. (Cheers.) But if I am to trust the authoritative statement, as I have a right to do, the more especially when I have myself been challenged on the part of the Government, surely I am entitled to inquire what are the principles on which this new Opposition is formed—(Hear, hear)—an Opposition which the noble Lord has constructed under the inspiration and with the aid and assistance of the right hon. gentleman the member for Ripon—(Cheers)—and the hon. gentleman the member for the West Riding. (Cheers.) Such unbounded confidence existing between three such eminent men, I wish to know on what principle this new Opposition is founded—this new Opposition headed by a noble Lord acknowledged by all of us to be an able and fitting leader, with such experienced Vice-Lieutenants as the right hon. gentleman the member for Ripon, and the hon. gentleman the member for the West Riding. (Hear.) What, I again ask, is the principle on which the new Opposition is founded? Is it the principle of Papal supremacy or Protestant ascendancy? (Cheers.) Is it the principle of national defences or of perpetual peace? (Cheers and laughter.) Is it the principle of household suffrage or of the electoral groups? (Laughter.) Is it the opinion of the new Opposition, along with the hon. member for the West Riding, that Free Trade is a panacea for all the evils of the States? Or is it the opinion of the new Opposition, in deference to the noble Lord the member for London, that Free Trade is a great exaggeration? (Cheers.) These are questions I think it legitimate to ask, and I think they ought to be as frankly answered as the question which has been addressed to her Majesty's Ministers. (Hear, hear.) I know that the prospects we as a Ministry may have in the present Parliament very much depend on our knowledge of those who are our opponents. Considering the circumstances under which we acceded to office, I certainly did not expect within a fortnight of his resignation to find in the prime mover of difficulties against the late Government the noble Lord the member for London. (Hear, hear.) But, great as may be the obstacles we may have to encounter, I confess for myself I do not despair. I have confidence in the good sense and good temper even of the existing Parliaments. If I have miscalculated those qualities, I shall still hold my trust in the sympathy and support of the country, which I am convinced that it will support the present Government in their attempt to do their duty to their Sovereign, and in their resolution to baffle the manœuvres of faction. (Loud cheers.)

Lord J. RUSSELL.—When, some three weeks ago, I quitted office, I stated the fact of our resignation to this House in very few words, but at the same time indicating the reasons why we had resigned, and indicating, I think very clearly, the course which in future I meant to pursue. (Hear, hear.) But, Sir, that course has been so misrepresented in the speeches that have been made and in the addresses that have been printed to electors, that I feel myself bound on this occasion to enter somewhat more fully into a statement of the reasons for which we resigned, and of the course we had pursued in the Government; nor will I refuse to the right hon. gentleman, if it is not already explicit enough, a statement of the course which I mean to pursue as an independent member of Parliament. In the first place, I must say that the plea which the right hon. gentleman has put forward—which the Earl of Derby put forward more moderately—but which has been exaggerated at last into a most wonderful and extraordinary statement, is one which I certainly have been surprised to hear. The statement is, that the present Government have only accepted office because the Queen was without a Government—(Hear, hear)—and that they could not leave her Majesty without servants to conduct the public business of the country. (Hear, hear.) Why, Sir, it is a notorious fact that for years they have been endeavouring to supplant the late Government—(Hear, hear)—that they have been almost unscrupulous as to the means, and that they omitted no opportunity by which they could place themselves in the situations they now hold—(Cries of "Oh! oh!" from the Ministerial side of the House, answered by ironical cheers from the Opposition)—and be it remarked that they did not satisfy themselves with making direct motions in this House by members of their own party, by which they could obtain fairly the sense of this House as to a great public question—and a great public question I will admit it to be, whether, in the first place, the acts which established Free Trade were wise and politic; and, in the next place, whether they had been carried into effect cruelly and unjustly, but I cannot—and far be it from me to dispute the right of any number of members of the House to oppose the Government on that ground; but they took advantage of any opportunity, of any occasion in which any member of the House of Commons differed with the Government, to come down and join the ranks of the opponents of the Government. (Cheers and counter-cheers.) It was in this way, that, without agreeing with the hon. member for Montrose—totally disagreeing with him when he said he wished for a perpetual income-tax, and to lay the ground for the remission of the income-tax—they came down to this House to support him in order to inflict a blow on the Government of that day. (Hear.) What was their course at the commencement of the present session? Did they refrain from any attack on the Government? Did they confine themselves to weapons of legitimate warfare? Did they not use poisoned arrows for the purpose of attacking the late Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland? (Loud cheers and counter-cheers.) Had they not a motion, of which they had given notice for the very next week, which was a vote of want of confidence in the Government? And, after this, can they pretend they were surprised when they were asked to take office, or that they were going to take office on any other ground than because they had made a successful opposition to the Government? (Hear, hear.) Upon the very occasion on which the noble Lord the member for Tiverton refused to the Government of the day leave to bring in a bill with respect to the militia—as upon the motion of the hon. member for Montrose—they came down without notice on the subject, without any opinion with respect to it—(cries of "No no!" cheers, and counter-cheers)—I believe, myself, without any opinion with respect to that subject—(Cheers and counter-cheers)—and they took the unusual course of refusing to the Minister leave to bring in a bill with respect to the militia. (Hear.) I own I am surprised that, after that course, they should make an allegation that they only accepted office because the Queen was left without a Government. (Hear, hear.) Upon that very night they took pains to collect members in order to defeat Ministers on the grant for the Ordnance: they were most active in collecting members for that purpose. (Hear.) Well, Sir, what I felt on this subject was this—it is the duty of the Prime Minister of this country to superintend the whole of the important questions that relate to foreign affairs, to the colonies, and to the domestic affairs of this country, and all questions with respect to the revenue and other departments of the country that are of importance; but I felt it would be impossible for me, if I were to be liable to those continual attacks in this House, and if the Government were to be degraded by those occasional defeats which must follow from the course adopted to take the House by surprise—I felt, I say, it would be impossible for me to give that attention to the subjects of great concern to the public which it was my duty to give. (Hear, hear.) I felt, therefore, if I were not driven out of office, I should be worried out of it by gentlemen in opposition—(Hear, hear)—and then, indeed, after all this conduct, to come forward and say they only accepted office because the Queen was without a Government, I own does appear to me to be a false pretence, because their Parliamentary position was a perfectly constitutional one—they had only to say the policy of the late Government was injurious to the country, and that they wished to prevent them from continuing that course; and, for my own part, I have no objection to hon. gentlemen opposite, if that policy was considered injurious to the country, fairly occupying the places they do; and I think the right hon. gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer is fully entitled to the eminence he now enjoys—(Hear, hear)—for the great talents he has displayed and the manner in which he has conducted the business he has had to perform. (Cheers.) But, with respect to the position in which I now stand—and I must say, also, the position in which I stood when I quitted office—it has been entirely altered in consequence of the speech said to have been delivered on the 27th of February by the Earl of Derby. I have here a pamphlet which purports to be a speech of the Earl of Derby, and I have no doubt that the Earl of Derby did deliver a speech of that nature. Now, in what position does that speech place the Government? and in what position does the right hon. gentleman place them now? The Prime Minister says, "I cannot propose measures to Parliament, unless I have, I should be in a minority." That is not an unusual position; but Ministers who have said that have usually said, "It is impossible for me to propose those measures with any prospect of success in the present Parliament. I must advise the Crown to call another Parliament, and to that I lament I must submit the measures I think right for the country:" but the proposition of the noble Lord at the head of the Government, and the proposition of the right hon. gentleman to-night, is this, "We are in a minority; we mean to conduct the whole business of the country with that minority; we mean to go through the session, and when the session is over we mean to exercise our own discretion whether we shall dissolve Parliament or not—it may, perhaps, be dissolved in December, and then we shall propound the measures we think necessary." Why, Sir, in such a position as this, I must ask if it was unconstitutional in me, as I thought it would have been, to have held office with an uncertain majority, can it be constitutional in them to hold office declaring themselves in a minority? (Hear, hear.) It appears to me, I own, that there is no constitutional precedent, that there can be no constitutional precedent, for such conduct as this. (Hear, hear.) And then all matters of a party or controversial nature are to be laid aside. (Hear.) We are to be allowed to discuss the bill for the disfranchisement of St. Alban's, which the late Secretary for the Home Department introduced, and which the present Secretary for the Home Department has continued, and upon which, therefore, it is not likely there will be any difference of opinion; and we are at liberty to discuss the measure with respect to Chancery reform—a subject upon which the late Government adopted the report of the commission, and upon which they had directed a gentleman competent for the purpose to prepare a measure to be laid before Parliament. And again upon that, therefore, there is little difference of opinion; but upon that question in which the country is interested—(Hear, hear)—upon which my hon. friend the member for Wolverhampton put his legitimate question, that question—what is to be the price of the food of the people—(Hear, hear)—that question, whether there is to be a fixed duty on corn—the tax on which the researches of all scientific men, five-sixths will be paid to the landlords, and only one-sixth to the Exchequer—if we ask anything about it, we are to be told that next February we shall learn something about it, but at present our mouths must be closed, and we must not presume to put such a question. (Hear, hear.) In the same manner, with regard to our colonial interests, our navigation and shipping interests—all these matters are to be suspended till next February—and then the country is to be asked some question on which we scarcely get a hint from the right hon. gentleman. (Hear hear.) The right hon. gentleman repeated three or four times, that he would frankly and fairly answer the question of my hon. friend—(A laugh)—but, assuring us of his frankness and fairness, he constantly disappointed it, and refused to give any answer to the question of my hon. friend—very different, indeed, from his speech in Buckinghamshire, in which a fixed duty was promised to the agricultural party—at least in the right hon. gentleman is reported to have said—but the right hon. gentleman says, "We do not preclude ourselves from proposing a fixed duty on corn."

MR. DISRAELI.—I quoted the opinion of Mr. M'Culloch.

Lord J. RUSSELL.—I know that: but I do not think the right hon. gentleman quoted that part of Mr. M'Culloch's book in which he said that the time was past for that, and that nothing could be more unconstitutional than such a proposition at the present day. (Hear, hear.) That part of Mr. M'Culloch's opinion was sunk; but the other part, as I thought, and read in three or four different reports in three or four different newspapers, seemed to be adopted by the right hon. gentleman, and, as I read it, he said, "That is the easiest way of giving relief to the agriculturists, and, therefore, we shall propose it; but if that mode fails, we shall propose a mode more costly and expensive." (Hear.) But now it appears the whole matter is to be involved in this mystery—that we are to sit here discussing Parliamentary Reform and sanitary measures until the usual time for ending the session, and then we are to be prorogued; and some time in September, when the registrations have been duly looked into, and the benefit from the alteration in the elections ascertained, then Parliament is to be dissolved, and every agricultural member is to be at liberty to go to his constituents and say, "I am for Protection, and if you support me we shall have from the Government protective duties;" and every member of a town constituency will be at liberty to say, "The Government have in fact given up Protection; they do not like to say it at present; until the next session, when the right hon. gentleman will have their agricultural friends; but we shall find that the Free-traders in Parliament are the great majority, and the Prime Minister of the Crown will be as good a Free-trader as any other member of Parliament—(Hear, hear)—and this, Sir, is put upon us under the pretence of constitutional government! (Hear, hear.) I merely believe there never was such a delusion attempted to be practised upon a people, and least of all upon such a people as the people of England. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I am told this is to be referred to the intelligent portion of the people of England. Upon this subject the whole community is intelligent. (Cheers and counter-cheers.) It is a question which now every one understands. Ten years ago, when there was a dissolution in 1841, it was not understood; but the whole people of the country understand it now. (Hear.) They know what it means; they know it means the addition of something, whatever it may be—1d., 2d., or 2½d., or whatever it may be—to the price of their loaf, and that that tax is to go in the main part to the landlords of this country. (Hear, hear.) That is perfectly understood. It requires no greater intelligence than all the labourers of this country possess. They do understand it; and they require to know, and the community at large requires to know, whether the Government is to propose that tax or to abandon it. But to that plain question we can obtain no answer. We are to be left entirely in the dark. (Hear, hear.) And then the right hon. gentleman tells me there is a change in the opinion I held when I was in her Majesty's councils, in which I said I would not advise her Majesty to dissolve Parliament. There was two circumstances at that time—one was, that if we had dissolved Parliament at that time we should have been liable to the objection stated by Sir R. Peel in 1846—that it would have been using the prerogative of the Crown—it would have been so understood and represented, in order to maintain a party in power, and that was not a legitimate use of the prerogative of the Crown. (Hear.) In the next place, I would have been dissolving Parliament before the supplies for the army and navy, and before the Mutiny Bill had passed; and in the state of affairs generally I did not think it was wise to advise the Crown to take such a step. I should say even now, after the Mutiny Bill was passed, that a dissolution would be accompanied with the greatest inconvenience with a great delay of the public business; but if gentlemen were so exceedingly anxious that public business should be proceeded with, if they were so anxious for the disfranchisement of St. Alban's and the passing of Chancery Reform, they had nothing to do but to leave the late Government unmolested, and those measures would have passed. (Cheers and laughter.) They might have been perfectly secure to have had those measures passed in the course of the session, if they had been harmonious, and had agreed not to attack Ministers. But these are matters to which I am bound to allude, because the whole policy of the late Government with respect to these matters of commercial policy has been assailed, and one member of the Government after another has proclaimed that it is the object of the present Ministers to overturn that policy or to mitigate its evils. The right hon. gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, calls it, in short, acting in direct contradiction to the policy of Sir R. Peel, and which has been continued by us. Now, I wish to show to the House the matters in which we have followed up that policy, and that that policy has produced in our hands general results beneficial to the country. I am obliged to refer to some papers which will show the House that, with regard to those particular measures, we have obtained results which ought to be satisfactory to the country. In the first place (much confusion was occasioned at this part of the noble Lord's speech by many members leaving the House), when we left office there was a surplus revenue of about £2,700,000, and the sum applied as a sinking fund in the course of last year amounted to about £2,500,000. So much for revenue. The state of public credit was unusually high, and the taxes which had been reduced during our government to an amount of £4,000,000 had not diminished the general revenue of the country. The taxes—in particular with regard to one branch of the revenue, namely the excise—had increased so much, that, after taking away by Sir F. Peel's repeal of the glass duty and ours of the brick duty £1,080,000 of revenue, there was an increase of the excise of last year over the excise of 1844. In 1844 the excise duty was £14,450,000: in 1851 it was £15,865,000, showing an increase of £1,415,000 in only seven years. Now, with regard to the export of manufactures during the time we were in office, they increased from £57,000,000 to £74,000,000, implying an increase of native industry and capital, and thereby implying just the contrary of what the hon. gentleman the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster had again stated; namely, that industry and capital had diminished. But there are three subjects particularly which show the fairness of the policy adopted by Sir R. Peel. We proposed an alteration in the duty on sugar, by which those duties were very much reduced, and the increase of consumption has been such, that, whereas in 1846 the sugar imported for consumption was 244,000 tons, in 1851 it was 329,000 tons. With regard to colonial sugar, the importation ought, according to the supposition of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to have fallen off considerably: but the importation, which in 1845 was 155,000 tons, was in 1851, 281,000 tons, being an increase of 37,000 tons. We also made some alterations with regard to timber, and there has been an increase of imports from 1,307,000 loads in 1843, to 2,037,000 loads in 1851. Another great change we introduced was the change with respect to the navigation laws, and we have found that there has been a very large increase indeed in the number of British ships since that change was made. In 1848 the tonnage of our shipping was 4,602,000 tons; last year it was 4,300,000 tons. In 1848 the number of seamen employed was 230,000; last year the number had increased to 240,000. Now let us see whether any such dangers as those mentioned by the right hon. gentleman the President of the Board of Control (Mr. Herries) have been incurred by that alteration. I conceive that the mischief would arise only in two ways—either by the diminution of British shipping, or by the increase of the shipping of some particular foreign state, in such a manner as to make that foreign state a dangerous rival to this country. Now, neither of these consequences has occurred. I find, on looking over the number of ships, that 18,205 belonging to the United Kingdom cleared out, against 505 belonging to Russia, 2286 belonging to France, and 946 belonging to the United States, and those are the only powers which can be looked upon as dangerous rivals to us with regard to navigation. While, however, there has undoubtedly been an immense increase in the tonnage of British ships, there has been a much larger increase, taken altogether, in the tonnage of foreign ships; but that, so far from being a disadvantage, proves only an increase in the trade of the kingdom. (Hear, hear.) It proves that persons who import into this country raw materials for manufacture, articles of food, or whatever else, obtain ships at a cheaper rate of freight and with greater readiness than before the alteration of the Navigation Laws. Now, what, in fact, was that Navigation Law to which so much importance is attached—and which even Adam Smith was disposed to defend, as the least objectionable of our commercial regulations? Any one who looks to the history of the Navigation Act, will see that it was an act of vengeance against the States of Holland—that it was an act of political rivalry, intended to prevent the States of Holland from obtaining the carrying trade of the world, and thereby having enabled it to become a greater naval power than England. Of late years, then, when no such object was attempted, and when that old policy was consequently unnecessary, it was fit to repeal the Navigation Laws, and by that repeal we have not incurred in any degree that danger against which Cromwell thought it necessary to guard. The hon. member for Wolverhampton (Mr. C. Villiers) has truly said that under these measures the country has flourished to an extent that was before unknown; that not only has there been an immense increase in the export of manufactures, that not only has the number of ships enormously increased, that not only has the consumption of articles of food increased to a degree that no one suspected, but that the people at large have been in a state of comfort and welfare which they never attained before. (Hear, hear.) It is, as I understand, the purpose of the present Government to reverse that policy. (Hear, hear.) That is stated obscurely and mysteriously in the speeches of the members of the Cabinet. It is stated clearly and decidedly by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Mr. Christopher). He has said plainly—and I thank him for the announcement—that it is Lord Derby's sincere desire to reverse that financial and commercial policy—(Hear, hear)—which has been so injurious to native industry and capital for so many years. Now, my belief is just the reverse. I am sincerely desirous to maintain that policy, which has been so beneficial to native industry and to native capital. (Cheers.) I therefore do not cloak my meaning in words when I say that I mean to oppose any attempt to re-impose a duty on corn, whether for the purpose of protection or of revenue. (Cheers.) That is, at least a plain declaration. There are words which cannot be mistaken; and I think, with the present Government in power, it does behove us to endeavour to obtain a clear decision upon that subject. If the right hon. gentleman opposite refuses, as I think he has a right to refuse, to defer to the decision of the present Parliament, and does not mean chosen favourable to Free Trade, I think he is bound not to delay until next February submitting this question to the country. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I think it must be the interest of all parties—the interest of every person engaged in trade and commerce—to obtain a solution of the question. I think it is likewise the interest of every person engaged in agriculture. (Hear, hear.) I said many years ago, and I remember that the right hon. member for Stafford (Mr. Herries) declared himself surprised at the assertion, that I believed Protection was the bane of agriculture. I think we have had proof of the truth of that assertion since. I did not say that Protection was injurious to particular farmers, or to those who did not well cultivate the soil; but I said I thought agriculture in general was injured by it; and since the abolition of that protection we have seen greater advances made in measures for improving the agriculture of the country and increasing production, than we had ever seen before. (Cheers.) My belief is that there never was a system introduced which tended more to the benefit of the people of this country than that commercial policy which, since 1842, has been placed upon our statute-book. (Cheers.) It is a commercial policy in agreement with all the deductions of science, in agreement with all the arguments of men desirous to see an intercourse between the nations of the world. If you maintain that policy, you will go on to flourish. But, observe, it is not a question that can be constantly suspended. (Hear, hear.) It is a living and active principle; and therefore, last year, although after abolishing the window-tax we had only a small surplus left, we acted upon the supreme principle upon which the Corn-law had been abolished, and upon which differential duties had been repealed, and we repealed the differential duty upon coffee, and very much reduced that upon timber. That was proceeding, according to our sense, upon the same principle as before. But if there is a surplus of revenue this year, a question arises upon which hon. gentlemen hardly refuse to discuss—What shall be the disposal of that surplus? (Hear, hear.) Then, if we say, as we shall be inclined to say: "Continue to give activity to those principles which you have found so beneficial," the right hon. gentleman opposite may say, "Oh! but we are not Ministers for that purpose." (A laugh.) Questions on commerce—questions of trade—questions of finance—these are questions with which we are incompetent to deal. (Laughter.) They are controversial questions—("Hear, hear," and cheers)—and they must be suspended till next year." Why, I ask again, is this the interest of the country? Can it be this interest of the country, that you shall have no decision one way or the other? On the contrary, is it not the interest of every one that you should propose, either to this or to another Parliament, such measures as you conceive necessary for redressing the evils now suffered by the landed interest, by the shipping interest, and by the colonial interest? (Hear, hear.) We should then have an opportunity, in vindication of our principle, of contending that not only all that has been done ought to be maintained, but that the same system ought to be extended and carried further. Entertaining these views, I have been greatly surprised at the declaration of the right hon. gentleman opposite. I believe no Minister of the Crown ever stood in the position in which he stands. I believe no Minister of the Crown ever stood in the position of saying, "I have great measures in contemplation—measures which will relieve the landed interest from cruelty and injustice—which will relieve the colonial interest from the burdens which it [illegible] which will relieve the shipping interest from the [illegible] which it is now suffering—but I shall not submit to Parliament those measures. I will not call a new Parliament, to submit those measures to them; but I will continue to govern in a minority, relying that the House of Commons will not only have forbearance towards us, but that they will be ready to injure the country for our behalf." Why, Sir, the course which the present Ministry pursue, while it is the one most convenient to themselves, is the one most inconvenient to the country. (Cheers.) If they can obtain from this time till February next, not professing any principles—(Cheers)—but endeavouring to get together, by one means or another, a majority for the next Parliament, undoubtedly that is a great advantage to them; but the whole country is, in the meantime, to be kept in suspense. No [illegible] knows whether he can order a cargo of corn for the spring of next year, the manufacturer can know whether he may have a market for his manufactured goods; no farmer can settle with his landlord the terms upon which his rent is to be fixed (Hear, hear)—this, too, for the convenience alone of eight hon. gentlemen opposite, in order to promote those interests we are to sacrifice all the great and permanent interests of the country! ("Hear, hear," and cheers.)

Mr HERBERT charged the noble Lord and his friends with carrying on a factious opposition. He denied the advantages said to have resulted from Free Trade, and quoted a variety of statistics to show that the recent change in our Navigation Laws had been to throw much of the carrying trade into the hands of foreigners.

Sir J. GRAHAM, in reply to Mr. Disraeli's challenge, stated that he was not disposed to give any factious opposition to Government, and considered that certain measures were of immediate necessity. But he thought the question which had been raised that night was of the utmost importance. He had no doubt as to what were the real intentions of Government upon that question, and the matter for consideration was, whether Government should be permitted to carry their intentions into effect. Frank avowals had been made in the House of Lords, and it was perfectly clear the design was to dissolve Parliament, and to re-impose import duties, and among them a duty on corn. He then cited a series of avowals committing Lord Derby to the demand of a far higher amount of duty than that which had been scorned by his Chancellor of the Exchequer; and he stated that Lord Derby had actually proposed to Lord Palmerston to join the present Administration, and had been refused, on the ground that Lord Palmerston could not unite with a Ministry which intended to re-impose a tax on corn. Sir James then referred to Protectionist declarations by other members of the Government, whom he declared to be "Disraelites indeed, in whom there was no guile." He proceeded to contend that there was no parliamentary precedent for the series of forbearance now asked of the House by the Ministers, a forbearance actually forbidden by homage to the representative principle He next addressed himself to Lord Derby's argument that land was going out of cultivation, and showed the contrary from the sums borrowed for drainage, from the demand for guano, from the enclosure of wastes, and from statistical returns; and he declared that if, by a dissolution, the Government should succeed in reversing a policy which had proved so beneficial to the country, the result would be a feeling, not against the Government policy, but against the representative system. Adverting to Lord Derby's solemn declaration, that he sought to produce "peace on earth and good-will among men," he predicted that the very opposite result would be caused by his policy, and he avowed that the bond of co-operation which united himself with the Opposition was the desire to maintain the system of Free Trade, to uphold which there was no sacrifice he was unprepared to make.

Mr. WALPOLE said that the questions put to the Chancellor of the Exchequer had been answered three hours before. It was not the intention of the Government to reverse the Free-trade policy, but they thought that policy ought to be so modified as to obviate injustice to a part cular interest. If Government were to go to the country, let them go upon their own declaration of policy, and not upon those of their antagonists. In answer to Lord John Russell, he contended that the Government were pursuing a course eminently constitutional. Lord John Russell and Sir J. Graham had, he thought, underrated the importance of proceeding with Chancery reform and other measures. And he reserved it was unjust to the country to dissolve on such a period. After comparing the conduct of Government with that of Mr. Pitt, under circumstances which he described as similar, he warned Lord John Russell how he, a lover of the constitution, aided himself with democrats, and concluded by an earnest vindication of the course the Ministry was taking.

Mr. GLADSTONE thought that this was no time to complain of the length of a debate, the circumstances being so important. Every effort which man could make ought now to be made to bring the question of Free Trade to a final issue. He would consider two points—the duty of the House as regarded the Government, and its higher duty as regarded the question of Protection. Eulogising the course Lord Aberdeen had taken upon the subject, he complained that Mr. Walpole, in his able speech, had avoided recognition of the fact that there was something irregular in the existence of a Government which was in a minority in the House of Commons. Arguing that Mr. Walpole had taken an erroneous view of the precedents afforded by Mr. Pitt, which he regarded not merely as dry precedents, but as confirmations of the great principle that a Government, to be strong and useful, must have a majority in the Commons, he did not complain that the present Ministry had taken office, because their having done so promised to bring the real question to an issue. The House was entitled to ask the Government for a distinct assurance, that, after the despatch of necessary business, the Crown should be advised to dissolve, and the present duty of the House was to obtain that assurance in plain terms. He thought on the defensive question Government were entitled to a hearing; and, also, that on the St. Alban's Bill public interests would not be offended by delay. But the disposal of four new seats did not come within the category of necessity, nor was Chancery reform a question for the disposal of which the existence of that Parliament need be prolonged. As regarded Protection, he could hardly reconcile the various declarations that had been made, but would accept those of Mr. Walpole, and limit himself alone indisposed to the reversal and the modification of the Free-trade policy. He had no right to ask Government what they intended to do in a new Parliament, but the demand he made was not an unfair one from those who knew they had not a majority, and he hoped that Ministers would not drive the Free-traders to a disagreeable alternative. It was, he reminded the House, not with demonstration but with a practical issue that they had now to do. They had so to act, that, in a few months hence, Protection might be spoken of as a thing that was past and gone, upon the deliberate verdict of a nation

Mr. BALLIE COCHRANE condemned the system of opposition adopted by Lord John Russell.

Lord PALMERSTON thought that Ministers should receive all the forbearance required by their position, which was anomalous and unconstitutional, but which, being accidental, involved them in no blame A dissolution at that moment, and in the state of business, was confessedly an impossibility, and, therefore, Government ought to be assisted in carrying forward necessary measures. Certain of the measures they proposed were absolutely required by the prospect of a dissolution. But he thought that Government, by every principle of good faith, were bound to take the earliest opportunity of dissolving, and, after taking the sense of the country, to call the new Parliament together as soon as possible, in order that the very important questions at issue might be set at rest finally and for ever. He could entertain no doubt whatever as to the way in which that settlement would take place. Re-imposition of the taxes on food was utterly out of the question, and nothing could be more detrimental to the higher classes than for the country to believe that they wished to lay new burdens on the bread of the population.

Mr. C. BERESFORD claimed a fair trial for the new Government.

Mr. C. VILLIERS briefly replied, contending that what was factious opposition which called on the Government to declare their intentions on great public questions before granting supply.

Sir JOHN TYRRELL made a short speech in defence of the new Government, and expressed confidence that the result of the coming elections would be a return to Protection, in a modified degree, or at least to a fairer adjustment of taxation.

Mr. OSWALD charged the country party with seeking the restoration of Protection for the purpose of keeping up their rents.

Mr. NEWDEGATE suggested that if the Opposition were so anxious for a dissolution, they had it in their power to force it; but they feared to do so, because it was thought possible that the measures of the new Government on Chancery reform, for the defence of the country, and on other questions, would find more favour with the country than their own

Sir A. BOCKBURN complained that no answer had yet been given to the question whether Protection was to form part of the Queen's Government.

Mr. BOOKER spoke in defence of the Government, and strongly in favour of Protection.

SUPPLY.—NAVY ESTIMATES.

The House then went into committee of supply on the navy estimates, when a vote of 39,000 seamen, including 11,000 marines and 2000 boys, and a naval reserve of 5000 men, was agreed to; also votes for [illegible] of the wages to seamen, marines, and naval reserve, [illegible] victualling, were likewise agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The House having resumed, afterwards resolved itself into committee on ways and means, and a vote of £8,003,000 was taken.

The Burghs (Scotland) Bill was read a second time.

The Charitable Trusts Bill and the Copyright Amendment Bill were also read a second time.

The Suitors in Chancery Relief (Stamp Duties, &c.) Bill passed through committee.

Adjourned at one o'clock.

(Continued on page 242 of the Number which the present Supplement is published.)

DR. REID'S PLAN FOR LIGHTING THE NEW HOUSE OF COMMONS.

IN the Appendix to a Report presented to the House of Commons, on Tuesday night, in reply to that part of the resolution in which Dr. Reid is desired to state specially what plan he would propose for lighting the House, he has submitted the following plan:—

In the lighting of a chamber such as the House of Commons, the leading desiderata are—

a. The introduction of a light so mild and equal that its use during the sitting of the House shall be attended with the least possible fatigue to the eye or any objectionable radiation of heat upon the forehead.

b. That it shall be manageable at all times, without incurring the necessity of altering or increasing unduly the ventilation required during the actual sitting of the House.

c. That it shall be capable of being lighted without the escape into the House of any offensive gas or effluvium, and without requiring any attendance in the body of the House, as this renders it impossible to adjust with satisfaction the temperature and ventilation to the commencement of business.

d. That in the employment of gas the finest quality shall be used, instead of the gas employed in a Session at the House of Commons.

To fulfil these desiderata, the following is the plan recommended:

Let the space outside the inner glass at the windows be appropriated for the introduction of gas-lights. They can then be placed beyond the direct line of sight between all parts of the House where there are seats either for the members or for strangers.

I cannot hesitate to recommend the removal to some other place of the stained glass at present there, the substitution of uncoloured glass, and the formation of a chamber between the inner glass and an outer glass frame extending along the whole of the House, on either side of the windows. The recent erection of the upper corridor immediately under the windows above the division corridors has given the most ample facilities for this purpose; a light iron frame would be sufficient for the glazing required, without interfering with the supply of light externally by day; it would be invisible when the works are further advanced, except on one side (from the Committee-room corridor opposite), and some windows from which a very partial view of the House only can be obtained; and, were it necessary, any peculiar form considered desirable might be given to the iron work outside.

I have a so to recommend that the panels in the central horizontal part of the ceiling be removed and replaced by others, the general form and configuration of the rest of this portion of the ceiling being left untouched. Essentially, these unedited or mirror panels would present a mildly illuminated surface, with a small central subdued light or star, instead of the two luminous surfaces they exhibit at present; this arrangement having the opportunity, during the effect of this light, of finishing them in harmony with any artistic effect he may desire, that is, not competing with the leading objects for which they can be used.

This mode of lighting would not only be free from the objections with the visible arch tecture within, unless the use of the panels be objected to, and on this point it is fair to state that opinions be suspended till it is seen, but would at the same time put the lighting on a much more harmonious footing with the warming and ventilation than it has ever assumed, either in the present House or in the late House of Commons, except in illustrations given in 1836 before the late Lord Melbourne, the late Duke of Buccleugh, and the late Lord Durham. At that period the time then at my disposal in London allowed only twenty-four hours only to introduce the gas, to submit the first illustration that led others ultimately, both at the Houses of Parliament and Buckingham Palace, to the conviction that gas could be used by proper ventilating arrangements without causing any inconvenience either from the leakage of gas itself or from the products of combustion.

On a question where so many opinions have been expressed, it may be proper for me to explain, particularly after the part I have had in conducting experiments for lighthouses under the Commissioners for Northern Lights, as well as in public buildings, that it has always appeared to me that the principal difficulties in the lighting of the House of Commons, which have caused so many changes within the last twelve years, have arisen from the fact being too much overlooked, that some approximation to the diffused light of day is the great object to be attained for the comfortable transaction of business. The illumination of the countenance is the practical end required, not the introduction of visible lamps, that become more and more objectionable in proportion as they approach to a lighting use lamp, where the great object is to see the light itself.

It is on no usual grounds that the removal of the stained glass windows is recommended, particularly where such great interest and delicacy of colour appears, but from the conviction that this will improve the light both by day and by night. In a chamber where so many valuable lives are exposed annually to such tear and wear of constitution day after day, the introduction of pulled and noisy persons, in fitnesses when the ceremonial action is at least apt to fatigue it not to tell injuriously on the constitution, step and the others mentioned would in a so contribute to produce a much more homogeneous light than it has hitherto been secured, while the flickering of the present external lights would also be entirely avoided

In these observations I have submitted a plan based on data accumulated at both Houses of Parliament during the last fifteen years, and confirmed by trials made in the House itself, so far as they were practicable, and on the others made with as close an approach to the present lamps corresponding with the two eyes; take, for example, a, the simplest form of picture—an arrow standing in a vertical direction through a circle—it would appear to each eye like the Diagram. These two designs being all that is necessary to produce with the aid of the Stereoscope the effect of one arrow standing through a single circle, with the barbed end uppermost, it now remains to explain how the effect is produced. It is important to know that in looking at natural objects both eyes are invariably directed or converge on the same point, and can only regard a single point at the same time, whilst the Stereoscope enables each eye to look at the corresponding points of two separate pictures. This is indeed the whole secret of this instrument, which, by bending the rays of light coming from each picture towards each other, enables each eye to regard a different image at the same time. In the Diagram of the arrows, a a and b' b are corresponding points, the parts b' b being separated by a wider span than a a: consequently, the eyes being each directed on the parts b' b will be wider apart, or will have a greater divergence than when looking at a a; and, as parts of the same object in nature give the effect of greater or less distance in proportion as they cause the eyes to converge and diverge, it follows, according to this law, b' b should appear at a greater distance than a a, in other words, the barbed part of the arrow should appear more pointed. The annexed Diagram may assist the explanation: here the arrows are supposed to be combined, or stand over each other; the eyes (c d) being directed on the corresponding points (a a), the angle will be represented by e c d; and when directed on b' b, the angle will be e c d; but e d is a much smaller angle than a c d; consequently, b a, or the barbed part of the arrow, must appear the nearest; that such is the fact, may be proved by experiment. When this law is understood, the most curious effects may be produced by equally simple means; the addition of a mere dot, or angle line, to a diagram will be all that is necessary to make it stand out from the surface on which it is drawn. The following are illustrations of some of the simplest forms of stereoscopic pictures—the first is intended to produce the effect of one ball standing before the other; the second, the effect of the barb of an arrow pointing towards the observer; the third two lines; and the fourth a nail.

An explanation of the construction of the first image will suffice for the remainder. The balls are supposed to be in a direct line with the left eye; consequently, the left image will be represented by one ball, and the right image by two. This diagram will also serve to show more forcibly how divergence and convergence of the eyes is produced by stereoscopic pictures: the combined pictures of the balls are represented in this diagram. The left eye, being in a direct line, can only see the ball a, and remains fixed on this point when the right eye is directed to b: a comparison of the angles will at once show that b must appear in the background from the increased divergence of the eyes. The angular part of this case is, that only the right eye moves, whilst the left eye is stationary. A mere glance at any geometric stereoscopic pictures will at once show that should be in the foreground, and which in the background. All that is necessary is to measure the space between corresponding points of both pictures; those which are widest apart will appear behind those parts which are nearer to each other. In this Diagram a pair of pictures produce opposite effects to each other; the part which stands out in one is behind in the other. The law just mentioned will explain it. In the upper pair a is nearer to a than b is to b; hence the part a a will appear nearest, and vice versâ in the lower pair of pictures. We cannot, from vision alone, have the idea of distance; it is only when combined with the actual experience of touch or measurement that we can say one part is nearer than another. Nothing can be more subject to deception than vision: as an example, the reflection of a natural picture in a mirror presents all the effects of distance; yet we know from experience every part of this picture is reflected from a plane surface. Again, the recently-discovered pseudoscope has the effect of making objects exactly the opposite of what they really are: solids look hollow, objects on the right appear on the left, the most distant objects look the nearest, objects approaching have the effect of receding, &c. A natural picture may, then, simply be considered as a picture containing effects which cause the eyes to be directed on a flat surface; all the ideas associated with it, of distance, &c., are the result of a knowledge or experience which is quite independent of the picture itself, although they assist most materially in giving a character to the impression made on the brain. Colour also assists in giving an idea of the form of irregular images, and, in a certain degree, may indicate distance by its force or tone. The chief function of colour, by which is meant light and shade, is to assist in exhibiting the shape of objects when there is an absence of direct lines. A globe is an illustration of this—without light and shade it would look like a flat circle.

A few words in conclusion on the advancement of photography. The commercial or public application of photographic science in this country has been in a great measure confined to the action of light on metallic plates, although most beautiful effects may be produced on a more convenient and cheaper material, and it is probable that this branch of the subject will be more than ever investigated, since stereoscopic pictures on metal, from their weight, cost, and other inconveniences will not be so largely employed as camera pictures on paper. The public have not yet been able to enjoy the latter advantage, owing in a great measure to the traces of intimidation on the part of certain persons professing to have a legal monopoly of the vast field of photographic discovery. This absurd pretension must soon explode. No individual or number of persons can substantiate a just claim to a field so fertile, and worked by so many labourers. As well might a single man claim a right to the entire gold diggings of California or Australia. It is to be hoped future progress in the science of photography will not be hindered or obstructed by the narrow-minded conceits of men, whose chief ambition is to hang their names to the original discoveries of true genius; possessing nothing within themselves but a disgraceful love for patented monopolies, and the indulgence of a selfish tyranny, supported by law and money. The Castleys, Smithgoes, Jonesstyps, Tadbutyps, or any other of the human types, may affect to possess a unique claim to all future developments of photography, and may, backed by the lawyer, alarm timid investigators with notices not to trespass or touch on their domains; but we would earnestly recommend a sun bath into an ocean of the large class of photographists, for the purpose of organizing and exposing this attempt at monopoly. When do we hear of Farnsley, Playfair, Wheatstone, Hunt, and other eminent and honourable investigators, hurrying to the Patent Office for protection and monopoly? The true devotees of science require not the aid of law and parchment to secure the right of discovery—real merit, like good wine, needs no bush. We hope, therefore, in a short time, to be supplied with a collection of our pictures for the Stereoscope, and also with the proper improvements, at a fair cost, representing the most remarkable objects as well as the most remarkable men in the world.

Stereoscope instruments, with the best construction of lenses, are advertised in our columns at a most reasonable rate; it therefore only remains to do away with other pretensions to admit of this wonderful and instructive discovery being enjoyed by all classes.

In the course of this inquiry many matters have been left untouched, through fear of confusing the subject; the chief object being to show the analogy between the stereoscopic and natural pictures in their relation to the organs and sense of vision. To the scientific man many of the forego ing explanations will appear unnecessarily explicit and tedious; but I trust, to the great bulk of your readers, I may have succeeded in making this beautiful and remarkable discovery intelligible: in that case I shall not have failed in proving, in this particular instance, like effects result from like causes.

W. L.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SIR WESTON Arms of Goodwin of Upper Winchendon, Bucks: "Per pale or and gu a lion rampant betwn a fle de-lis counterchanged." We find no coat appropriate to Goodwin of Hd.

S H J Is not to bears for Arms "Or on a chief indented az, three escallops arg. Crest: A lion's head erased and issuant ppr.

S H S—The cross cross-bow were argent Arms of Perthus: "Arg a chief gu

I S S—Arms of our silken names, Bart: "Gu a sword in pale point downwards, blade arg hilt and pommel or, between two hands couped in the form of the latter on a chief ermine a plate bearing a representation of the Castle of Edinburgh ppr, between two muscles ar. Crest: A dove's head erased and couped ppr holding in its beak a sprig of olive vert.

IVANHOE Joyce, or Joyce (professor of French origin) bears for Arms: Ar three tortoises in bend between two bendlets gu. Crest: A demi-wolf ppr collared and lined or issuing from a saltier arg.

D L B—It requires good interest to get a lad into the Royal Navy as a midshipman, and his subsequent promotion depends mainly on the same influence. Commissions in the navy are not purchaseable

J T "Arms of Telford," Longmy orm, and sa '

J H R Seaford.—There are so many families of Scott, that, unless the county be indicated we can afford no correspondence.

JACK TAR—An examination must be passed

A CORRESPONDENT Is true as that she was Lady Robinson, the second wife of Sir F P Robinson whose death she recently recorded, was daughter of Thomas Farquhuson, Esq, of Invercauld.

WHITLOCK—The arms are: "As a chev between three birds arg (Crest. On a castle arg a bird, wing displaye, or." Another coat, viz "Per fesse or and sa a lion ppr issuing out of the fesse between two garbs counterchanged" was granted to William Whitlock, Esq, of Devonshire

L. B. S.—Tow er dower, in obedience to the rules of your study, should lay aside the customs of swinging, flinch arms of the deceased or display them at once

A SUBSCRIBER.—No arms appear to the name, and in quail in, but there are to a family with a like, a, or pond, armed

ST JAMES.—We think the lady, in contracting an inferior marriage would lose her right of presentation at Court

INQUIRER.—A grandson is not entitled to use as his own either the arms or crest of his maternal grandfather In case of a great an name and arms being bequeathed by will

A YEAR OLD SUBSCRIBER of the issue of the son you become entitled to quarter his arms

M. V. Ashton-under-Lyne: "Sa, three crescents arg., between the points of each a mul et or. Crest A dex or hand brandishing a sword ppr." We can find no such Arms or Motto.

J. "Sa two bars gu, in chief three crosses pattée fitchée or." If the second line "Catharine-wheels of the first."

FENWAY—If the Queen were single, she might marry a subject of any rank

SCIPIO—Military commissions are not purchaseable under the regulation price

ENQUIRER.—The wife of a gentleman of the Privy Council takes precedence of the wife of the grand-daughter of a nobleman to the female line

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—The husband of an heiress is entitled to bear, on an escutcheon of pretence, his wife's arms; he further has legal right to the crest of her family, as we observed before. Rose, pernel also to assume her name and arms The son of the heiress by her first husband will be entitled to quarter his arms, as will also any children he may have by a second marriage

AN INQUIRER R A.—Knight Hood cannot be purchased There are certain offices at Court to which the honour is generally granted that may be bought—for instance, the confidential office of Lord Steward of Ashes which sold for about £7000 or £8000

H S—Brevet-Admiral James Noble descended from a respectable mercantile family settled at Bristol. His father was a gentleman of the name, and his mother a descendant of an ancient family at Ross whose crest signify an ar Rose cross cleaving of a war with Amor on

D M—Brevet commissions are not purchaseable under the regulation price

DURHAMITE.—In this case it were gra tis. In 16.4, to Roberts of Truro

GUARDIAN.—Hedgeworth and Hedgworth are the same family, traceable in Cheshire to the 11th century. The name was formerly spelt Hedgeworth, and is evidently derived from the hedge-row, still found in Cheshire "hedgerow." The above is the coat to which the family was seated at Audlem. Arms, "Az on a bend a g three bells shaken vert. Crest A sa lodged p.P. Motto: Discretion is it!"

PAX Any motto may be adopted. The seal impression sent has been so defaced we cannot describe it

JACK WARSHY.—Lady Catherine Carnegie is second daughter of Charles Noel Noel, present Earl of Gainsborough

U V Z—Possibly an examination of the pedigrees of Bullock in the "Dictionary of the Landed Gentry" may throw light on the subject

D B P Armagh.—If the three pales were gu on a cotton arg, a lion rampt. as

A CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.—The late Sir Charles Forbes, Bart, born for a time. "Quarterly 1st and 4th az three boars' heads couped or muzzled gu for Forbes 2nd and 3rd az three cinquefoils arg for Fraser, in the centre a crescent for difference. Crest A dex arm embowed in armour ppr, grasping in the hand a battle-axe ppr, all between two branches of broom ppr. Motto: Above the crest, "Nec tumidus nec humilis" Under the crest, "A thistle grows on an ancient soil"

A. S.—Arms of a man, gra ted 1748 "Az four cocks rampant, two in chief and as many in base, or. Crest. Out of a mural crown arg, a semi-cock rampant, as, holding between his claws a thistle ppr."

IOTA. It is rarely done to attach, having a yellow and gold dress, one child to the personal property of a well-to-do widow, and to remain on in office equal to adding the child to the property

A. A. A.—Such a mother as you ought to any part of the property

A. A. A.—See Debrett, or the Commissioners' Office at the south east end of the Royal Exchange

ALPHA Members of Parliament are privileged from arrest for debt with in the House sitting, and not forty days after every prorogation, and forty days before the next meeting. Our Correspondent is right in his correction of the name born for Sir Gerard Noel, Bart, who died on 23d Jan, 1850

H M W—Pre 3 and 5 Will 4, c. 24, "An Act to render certain marriages valid and to alter the law with respect to certain other marriages"

SIR GEORGE K We have not his address

G. E. Edinburgh.—A copy of the seal in such a work, or we would say, by the meaning line

O F—The office of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commission is at 9, Park-street, Westminster

ARGUS, Portsmouth.—Apply to the Ecclesiastical Gazette

R J, Poulton-cum-Fearnhead.—Possibly a letter addressed to the W J Hooker, Kew Gardens, may succeed

AN OLD TRAVELLER is thanked. He has probably let us have a communication by this time

J P B F—Captain Warner does not sell any goods but a pamphlet on his new lotion

A B, Bures on Suffolk.—Since the new "Gazetteer" (not published by Longman and Co) is out, Northwood They must receive attention

A Y The history of the law of real property would be a study, as somewhat too heavy for the general reader, as of the Hargreaves Lodger Bars

GIANNETTA That which is commonly called the arms of an ecclesiastical dignitary is really the part of the paternal coat which appertains to the personal estate of the bearer, and not of his see

H. H.—Look out of Hard

AN IA. NORTON—Arms of Sa, a chev ener. arg. between three dexter hands ar, on, or, a chief of the third ermine spear heads ar. Crest: A dragon's head erased arg. pierced. Arms of Sir "Per pale gu and sa a chev ar, on a canton arg on a fesse dancetté or, three crosses pattée of the first. Crest: A griffin's head erased as in the bend two arrows in saltire the points downwards gold, gorged with a collar dancetté or, thereon three crosses pattée gu.

H H, Manchester.—The pay of an Ensign in the R I C service is more than that of an Ensign in the British, but the promotion is somewhat more slow

C C Darwin, of Lincolnshire Arms: "Arg, on a bend gu, between two cottises vert, three escallops or"

W F Arms of Pomund of Surrey: "Per chev, ermine and gu, a chev between three Bourchiers of the first" Of Hood of Hereford: "Arg a chev between three vert, a chief or"

ALBERTUS We can find no arms to the name of Seaton

A Z—By returning to the county history and the heralds' visitations of the district in which the name is found, it will be easily possible to trace the pedigrees. The other source of genealogical information are the parish registers, wills, and private papers. Arms of Bellenden, with a bar, are: "Or a lion rampt. az, a mullet for difference arg, between three crescents of the last"

J L—There are no names registered to the name of Lindop

A H C, Inverness—The Arms at which a sketch is submitted belong to the family of Sitwell

S S—The title of Sundon, conferred in 1720 on William Clayton, M P for Wigan near, became extinct on his lordship's death without issue in 1768

A SUBSCRIBER AN INQUIRER Red Cliff, the Heralds' Office in England you are not entitled to an INQUIRER of the laws of the Heralds' College in Ireland or Scotland you have no business with them, but you think, in Ireland or Scotland you would, as well as by the usual fundamental principles of Heraldry, be entitled to bear the arms of your father

GRIEF—It would not be fair for us to name any particular district Rosanna, in the county of Wexford, Ireland Note, also, the younger branch of the Right Hon W F Fownes Tighe, of Woodstock, county Kilkenny. Mrs Tighe, the gifted author of "Psyche," was the wife of Henry Tighe, Esq, of the same family, the grandson of Sir William, of Rosanna

ROSANNA—Apply by letter to the principal of the East India College at Addiscombe

R. S. ARTHUR—The publication of the correspondence referred to must, we believe, be the honour of Knighthood A reference to the Gazettes of the period will explain the matter

A CONSTANT VICAR—Arms of Wendt: "Arg, three wood-cocks ppr, each armed with a club over the back, sinister, and a dexter hand couped at the wrist in fesse gu, thereon a cross gu. Crest: An ass trotting, armed, ar."

S SALES A man having no coat of arms of his own, cannot use that of either his mother or wife. Arms of a bend: "Az, on a bend engr between three griffins' heads erased or a thistle ppr, within a bordure of the last, charged with eight escallops of the field" Arms of Sneyd: "Az a cross flory or on a chief ar, three round buckles of the last."

INQUISITIVE.—James Earl of Derwentwater, the ill-fated Earl of Derwentwater, does not appear to have had a title her or any on his life her's side until 1688

A Mc—The principal titulars are Arg

No [illegible] be bound to be completed in two or more vols. Vol. I.

LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND.
By AGNES STRICKLAND.
New, revised, and enlarged edition.
Embellished with Portraits of every Queen.
The present volume completes the interesting Biography of Mary Beatrice of Modena, Consort of James II.
LONDON: RICHARD BENTLEY, Publisher, 8, Great Marlborough street.

Just published 6s. 6d. cloth.

HELEN of INNSPRUCK; or, The Maid of Tyrol. A Poem in Six Cantos, illustrative of the War of Liberation in Tyrol, embracing the early life and execution of Hofer.
"The story of the heroism struggle for freedom is well narrated, and many of the passages have the poetic power and beauty."—Literary Gazette.
"A composition singularly free from faults. A volume of more than [illegible] possibility."—Sun.
London: HAMILTON, ADAMS, and CO. Bristol: H. O'Neill.

On 1st Stat March will be published, in 2 vols 8vo, with a Portrait, price 24s.

THE LIFE of LORD JEFFREY, with a Selection from his Correspondence.
By LORD COCKBURN
One of the Judges of the Court of Session of Scotland.
With Engravings on Steel after Drawings by Alfred Elmore, R.A.
THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. By SIR WALTER SCOTT, Bart. Uniform with the Standard Edition. Price 3 each. To be complete in 25 Volumes, Crown 8vo, price 3 each.
[illegible] MR. BRADBURY, AGNEW, and CO. Bouverie-street.

IN-STRUCTIONS in the Art of FIGURE DRAWING. By R. C. Woodward, of Queen's College, London, a Member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and Professor in the Architectural School of the Royal Academy. Illustrated by Walter G. Mason.
London: WARNE and NEWTON 38, Maiden-lane; and sold by all Booksellers and Artists' Colourmen.

On the 31st March will be published, in 2 vols 8vo, with a Portrait, price 24s. or post-free for 28s.

ON the MANAGEMENT of SHIPS at SEA; a Letter to the Right Honourable the Privy Council of the Board of Trade, &c. &c. &c. in lieu of Evidence taken on that Subject on behalf of the Officers of the "Orion" in August, 1851, and Extracts from the Log and Journal of the Voyage of the survivors of the "Amazon."
By WILLIAM SHIRLING LACON, Esq. H.C.S.
London: PARKER, FURNIVALL, and PARKER.

VALUABLE BOOKS.—R. SAYWELL'S CATALOGUE of STANDARD and MODERN WORKS in Divinity, Ecclesiastical History, Biography, &c. at very reduced prices. May be had gratis on application. A List of Works in General Literature is in the press, and will be forwarded on receipt of one stamp. 4, Parliament-street, near New Oxford-street.

TWO CHESS-PLAYERS.—Messrs KLING and HOWITZ beg to announce, that the FIRST VOLUME of its CHESS—PLAYER is NOW READY, and may be had, in cloth, price 4s. 6d. Post-free, 5s. The Subscription for the Work is 10s. 6d. per annum, to be paid in Month by Parts, price 2s. 6d. stitched.
London: H. HASTINGS, 13 Caroy-street, and all Booksellers

Fourth Edition price 1s; or 14 stamps by post,
WHAT SHALL I DO WITH MY MONEY? or, Thoughts about Safe Investments. "We strongly recommend this excellent little publication." Railway Times. "Exceedingly useful to parties desirous of ascertaining the best mode of investing their money."—Herapath's Journal.—By one of the Author, T. E. HARVEY, 12, Pall-Mall East, for 14 stamps. Sold by D. STEEL, 2, Bge ng-gardens.

In 1 vol. 2s 6d; post paid, 3s,
SATURNIAN RELIGION, the SHIELD of HEALTH: From the wisdom of Egypt, morals, and aims of religion; showing that it means are applicable to the cure of Christians, as evinced by the Modern Systems of Diet and Medicine. By ROBERT HEWARD, M.D.
FISHER and Co 23 Paternoster-row. Post-paid for 36 stamps, of the Author, 6 Upper Gloucester-street, Dorset-square, London.

Now ready, at all Books ns the
NEW EDITION of BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1852
Revised and corrected throughout to the present time from the personal communications of the Nobility, &c. In one large volume, 8vo. Embellished with upwards of 1,000 Arms, and 1,500 Portraits of Noble Personages, with the Autographs of many, price 31s. 6d. bound.
"For the immense quantity of personal and family history, admirable arrangement of details, and accuracy of information, Burke's Peerage and Baronetage is without a rival. It is the standard book of reference touching the aristocracy."—Times.
COLBURN and CO., Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

This day is published, Part I. price 5s.
THE BOOK of the GARDEN. By CHARLES M'INTOSH, late Curator of the Royal Gardens of her Majesty the King of the Belgians at Claremont, and of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch at Dalkeith Palace; author of the "Practical Gardener," &c.

CONTENTS
Introduction. Gardening, as an Art of Design and Taste, considered as regards its Utility, Pleasure, and Importance.
Chap I.—The Formation and Arrangement of Culinary and Fruit Gardens.
Chap II.—Garden Walls.

ILLUSTRATIONS
Ground plan of Garden at Dalkeith Palace
Section of Ditto
Section of Ditto
Plan of Architectural Flowergarden at Dalkeith
Elevation of Ditto
} All Engravings on Wood
WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London. Sold by all Booksellers.

THE "AMAZON."—The Rev. WILLIAM BLOOD'S (one of the survivors) SERMON contains the most copious and authentic details of the awful catastrophe. Preached at Portsea on Sunday Morning following his miraculous escape.—Price 6d; post-free, 8d.
A graphic description of the horrors of the great catastrophe.—Price 6d; post-free, 8d.
Sold by ALLOTT and JONES, 3, Paternoster-row; and all booksellers.

By the Rev. [illegible] D. 12s post 8d
THE REVELATION of St. JOHN briefly explained. By Mrs. J. MARSH.
"Must prove useful to the Church of Christ. We particularly recommend it to be placed in the hands of the young."—Adult Mag.
"One of the most interesting and valuable compilations that has ever been our [illegible]."—Church Review.
"A book which [illegible]."—Christian Remembrancer.
"Presents the whole [illegible]."—Christian Observer.
"A popular and [illegible]."—Church Times.
"A concise but [illegible]."—Record.
"Mrs. Marsh has [illegible]."—Morning Herald.
"Mrs. Marsh has [illegible]."—Standard.
"Mrs. Marsh has [illegible]."—Record.
"Mrs. Marsh has [illegible]."—Record.
"Mrs. Marsh has [illegible]."—Record

NEW BOOKS, &c.

NEW FICTIONS

I. LENA, the SILENT WOMAN. By the Author of "Kate Coppe," &c. In 3 vols Just published

II. THE LILY of ST PAUL'S: a Romance of Old London. In three vols. [Ready this day.

III. THE SCHOOL for FATHERS: an Od English Story. By [illegible]

The following Works will appear with the Magazine for April.

FIRST PART OF

ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY, Embellish d with above Two Hundred Engravings

NINEVEH and its PALACES. A Narrative of the Discoveries of LAYARD and BOTTA; with Descriptions of the Sculptures, &c. By JOSEPH BONOMI. Demy 8vo cloth 6s.; or, handsomely bound in calf gilt, 10s.

* * In this volume will be contained, together with accurate Drawings, an account of the [illegible] remarks recently added to the NATIONAL ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY.—JOHNSON'S TOUR to the HEBRIDES; complete in one volume, full of charming Pictures, price 2s 6d, in form with "Boswell's Life of Johnson." With this volume will be incorporated a complete Index to the "Life of Dr Johnson."

Also, with the Magazines for April,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON COOKERY BOOK; embellished with upwards of 200 useful and descriptive Wood Engravings and Fifteen Hundred Original Receipts, the whole forming a complete [illegible] By FREDERICK BISHOP, Cuisinier to [illegible] Lord Saffird, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.; or, handsomely bound in calf gilt, 10s. 6d.

A STORY with a VENGEANCE; or, How Many Joints may go to a Tale. By ANGUS B. REACH and SHIRLEY BROOKS. Illustrated by JOHN LEECH and others. Crown 8vo, in wrapper, 1s, or neatly bound in cloth extra and edges, 1s 6d

London: 227, Strand.

With the Magazines for April will appear, as the First Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY, Illustrated with above Two Hundred Engravings,

NINEVEH AND ITS PALACES:

The Discoveries of BOTTA and LAYARD applied to the Elucidation of Holy Writ

"For the stones shall cry out of the wall, and the beams out of the timber shall answer it."—Hab ii 11.

By JOSEPH BONOMI.

PROSPECTUS of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY.

Price SIX SHILLINGS each volume

Illustrated Works are every day becoming more popular. The skill which Art can afford to Literature is beginning to be more thoroughly appreciated by the reading public, and the [illegible] of the mind through the eye is felt to be not only of advantage as a source of refined amusement for the passing hour, but as one of the most positive and permanent instruction. To meet the demand for works of this kind which has so remarkably arisen, the proprietors of the NATIONAL ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY have the honour to announce a New Series, of larger and more expensive Illustrated volumes, under the title of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY.

Each volume will contain upwards of 400 pages, full-sized demy octavo, printed on superfine paper, and in a handsome and elegant type. The Landscape Illustrations will invariably be derived either from original sketches or from those taken on the spot for the purpose; and the Portraits will be as accurate and faithful as it is possible to make them; while the Architecture and Archæology of each work will in no case be contented to the most conscientious Artists and Engravers. Each volume will be handsomely and substantially bound, and will form an elegant ornament to the Drawing-room table, as well as a useful addition to the shelves of the book case. [illegible] Works of History, Biography and Travels, and the general progress of Art, Science, and Literature, and will in all respects be as varied in the subjects selected as the interest and the wants of the present time demand

2?7 Strand, Feb. 1852.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORKS,

JUST PUBLISHED AT NO. 227, STRAND,

In 2 vols demy octavo, price One Guinea, or elegantly bound in calf, half-morocco, marbled edges, 21s 6d,

THE POLICAL WORKS of LOUIS NA- [illegible] With an Original Memoir of his Life, brought down to the present day, drawn from authentic sources.

These volumes possess great interest. Among the most important works of the Prince which they comprise are "The Political Reveries," which [illegible] published in 1832, "The History of Napoleon III," [illegible] "Extinction of Pauperism," [illegible] "Essay on the Nature of Napoleonism," [illegible] "Letter to a Friend in London," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Palmerston," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Normanby," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Ellenborough," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Brougham," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Malmesbury," [illegible] "Letter to Lord John Russell," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Aberdeen," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Derby," [illegible] "Letter to Lord Clarendon

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 551.—VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1852. [SIXPENCE. { WITH MUSIC SUPPLEMENT, GRATIS.

THE NAPOLEONIC IDEA IN FRANCE.

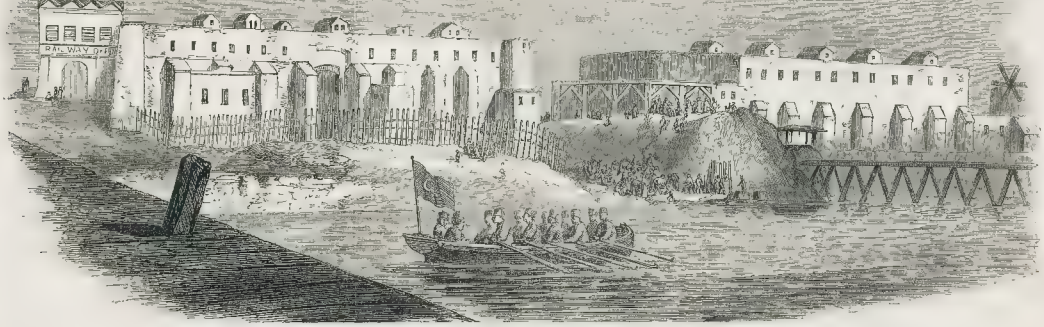
THE great struggle which is to render the year 1852 a memorable one in English history has been adjourned until the money business of the nation shall have been transacted. The adjournment seems to give satisfaction to Parliament—if we may judge from the spirit of acquiescence that has been manifested by Lord John Russell and the other leaders of the Opposition. Out of doors there is, at the same time, a comparative lull in politics. Though the combatants are preparing for the inevitable encounter, and "Bread-tax" and "Anti-Bread-tax" are marshalling their forces, the attention of the public is no longer as exclusively devoted to the one theme as it was a week ago. We can look abroad as well as at home; and, not indifferent to the fate of our nearest neighbour, who sits upon a powder-barrel, smoking his cigar, we look over the Channel to survey the position and enumerate the deeds of the Autocrat of France.

And certainly the spectacle is one that has its attractions. When a great fire is raging in a parish, all the neighbours get out of bed to look at it. There is a fascination about a mighty mischief, which to most minds is irresistible. The sight may be painful, the certain catastrophe may be terrible; we may even feel inclined to shut our eyes, but we are compelled to gaze and to wonder. Human nature loves the tragic. It is always interested in watching the progress of a great drama, whether it be real or fictitious. It does not signify whether the hero of it be a Macbeth or a Louis Napoleon, an Iago or a Persigny; the fascination is felt, and the spectators are absorbed with the spectacle.

It is but two weeks since we last recapitulated the deeds of the French President, and expressed the difficulty that even wonder had in keeping pace with him. Since that time he has continued his course at an accelerated rate. He has heaped decree upon decree with a rapidity which is sufficient to take away one's breath. Each decree is so much more marvellous than its predecessor, that Incredulity cries "What next?" and dares him, but in vain, to proceed further.

"The Gauls, when I have conquered them, will be a fine booty," said the Emperor Nero; "but, in the meantime, I will seize the estate of Galba." The President, having both conquered the Gauls and seized the estate of Galba, has followed up his deeds by depriving of his confidence those among his former associates in the subjugation of France, who, like M. de Morny, had the honesty to stop short at the spoliation of the House of Orleans; and of their liberty, those who, not being his associates, had the courage, like M. Bocher, to protest against the wrong. Though virtually acquitted by one tribunal, M. Bocher has been put upon his trial a second time for distributing a legal document in defence of the property of which he was the trustee and the administrator, and has been condemned by judges, coerced for the purpose, to one month's imprisonment. That he is not on his way to the pestilential marshes of Cayenne, is the most surprising part of this surprising business. This, however, is but a small portion of the President's deeds during the fortnight. We have to add to the number four or five others of a far more sweeping character. Nothing escapes the Argus eyes of the modern Bonaparte—nothing is too small or too large for the hands of Briareus. He has announced his determination to remove from the magistracy every judge who shall not carry out the Napoleonic idea of jurisprudence, and convict such prisoners, we will not say such delinquents, as he pleases—for delinquency and imprisonment by no means go together in France. In addition to this, he has removed, or is about to remove, all public teachers, except the clergy—who on their part are by no means inclined to assume the responsibility he would throw upon them. He has also determined to purge the French Academy of the troublesome philosophy and intellect that adorn that illustrious body, and has made a beginning with M. Villemain and M. Cousin, who are no longer to be permitted to lecture, for fear that the Napoleonic idea should not be sufficiently insisted upon in their invaluable lucubrations.

HIS HIGHNESS ABBAS PACHA, VICEROY OF EGYPT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)



THE RAILWAY WORKS IN THE HARBOUR OF ALEXANDRIA.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

There was a time in France when such doings would have overthrown a Monarchy; but they are performed with apparent safety by the marvellous man, the "centaure impetueux" who now holds the reins of power, and governs the wild horse of democracy with such consummate equestrianism. But astounding as these proceedings are, they have been thrown into the shade by the bold feat of the conversion by a simple decree of the Five per Cents—a measure which the Government of Louis Philippe was afraid to attempt. Louis Napoleon, however, has done it;—we will not say successfully, for the result remains to be ascertained. There has been a run upon the public treasury by creditors who wish to receive back their investments at par; and the Emperor of Russia may yet do much to impede the operation, if he should refuse to accept four-and-a-half per cent. for the fifty millions of francs which he invested some years ago in this stock, and insist, like a multitude of smaller creditors, on reimbursement at par. Should the operation be successful, the Napoleonic idea is, that it will effect a saving of 18,000,000 francs, or £720,000 per annum; but, as it appears that all or nearly all of the hospitals and other charitable institutions in Paris and throughout France have invested most of their property in this stock and hold one-third of the whole amount, it has been resolved on second thoughts, not to deprive them of a fourth of their income, but to make up the difference to them out of the general taxes. This is mere hocus-pocus, and will materially reduce the amount of the alleged economy to the public. But, whatever may be the result, whether for good or for evil, the act or the attempt will remain a significant proof of the power and the daring of the President.

Yet, large as the measure is, it is as nothing in comparison with the Napoleonic Budget, which has just been promulgated. In the days (not very remote) when France enjoyed some degree of liberty, the Budget was the most important State business of the year. Every item in it was explained and justified by a responsible Minister, examined in the great Council of the nation, and only suffered to become law after the fullest publicity and the most satisfactory investigation. But Louis Napoleon will tolerate no such proceedings. His Budget is as arbitrary as his coup d'état, and springs, like Minerva, armed and fully prepared to do its work, from the head of the astonishing Jupiter of the Elysée. The Legislative Assembly, when dismissed on the 2d of December by the dragoons of General St. Arnaud, had already received a budget, presented by M. de Germiny, a responsible Minister. Louis Napoleon, without reason assigned, has increased the amount of that Budget by fifty-four millions of francs; and by his decree, as if in mockery of the Senate and the Legislative Body, which are in a few days hence to assemble, has declared this unexamined and undiscussed Budget to be the law of the land. He has increased the expenses of the war department by twenty five millions of francs, of the police department by about four millions, of the navy by five millions, and of other departments in a similar manner, and all without the slightest explanation. He has, however, reserved one task for the sham Legislature. He has generously allowed them to debate with closed doors upon the amount of his own "dotation." No doubt they will grant him an Imperial revenue, inasmuch as he who made can unmake them, and as the greater portion of them are dependent upon him, not only for their honours, but for their dinners.

Another fiscal measure—we will not say the last or the least of those which are to spring from the fertile brain of this marvellous legislator—is one for the consolidation of all the insurance companies in the hands of the Government. Whether the shareholders are to receive compensation, or whether the act is simply to be one of spoliation, remains to be seen. Europe may well ask, "What next?" and pause with wonder until the great man shall reply.

And what is the social state of France in other respects? A reign of terror, if ever there was one. It has cozed out that the expense of conveying prisoners to Cayenne and elsewhere has already exceeded the enormous sum of thirty millions of francs. "Thousands of persons," says the able and fearless correspondent of the Morning Chronicle in Paris, "have recently been condemned to transportation to Cayenne, Lambessa, and Algeria. We almost every day find accounts in the papers of huge convoys of those prisoners proceeding to the different seaports on their way to their banishment. 279 condamnés, from the departments of the Var, Vaucluse, and the Bouches du Rhone, were embarked on board the Solon, at Marseilles, on the 1st of March, for Algeria; 298 condamnés, from the Herault and Basses-Alpes, arrived at Algiers on the 4th, in the Labrador, where they joined another convoy of 133, who had preceded them; 496 condamnés arrived at Havre on the 8th of March, and among those were eleven persons who had been arrested on the previous day only (the 7th), and who were sent off without trial, and without even any known reason; 260 condamnés, from the neighbourhood of Bourges and Nevers, were brought on the 14th from Orleans to the fort of Bicetre; and on the night of the 17th instant 300 of these unfortunates were sent off from the fort of Ivry, in the outskirts of Paris, for Havre, on their way to Cayenne. Another similar convoy passed through Paris on the 18th with 338 individuals, all condemned to perpetual banishment to the penitentiary establishment of Lambessa. These unhappy victims were all from the department of the Nièvre, and among them were M. Lerouy, the late assistant mayor of Clamecy; and M. Moreau, an advocate at the bar of that place. Many other instances are known in which persons in respectable stations in life have been arrested in the streets for no known reason, and have been carried from prison to prison till their friends have lost sight of them. Where they are now—whether in France, in Algeria, or on their way to Cayenne—no one can tell, for the authorities will say nothing. All that can certainly be said is, that if alive they cannot communicate with their friends."

The President, however, keeps his coolness. He is as immovable as fate. His pitiless "system" carries him away, and he is as blind to consequences as he is deaf to remonstrances. There is a grandeur of tyranny about him which is without parallel in modern times. But how long will the French endure such a system? and do not the fervid words of the poet of 1830 well describe the state of France in 1852?

> Paris n'est maintenant qu'une sentine impure,
> Un égout sordide et lugubre;
> Où mille noirs conrans de limon et d'ordure,
> Viennent trainer leurs flots honteux.
> Un tandis regorgent de roquins sans courage,
> D'effrontés coureurs de salon . . .
> Qui vont de porte en porte et d'âge en âge,
> Cessant jusques bouts de galons.

The description is not a flattering one; but we fear, that, apt as it was when first penned, it is still more applicable now. Were it not true, Louis Napoleon could not do as he has done.

Amongst the cargo of the Bentinck, which left Southampton on Saturday with the Indian mail, was specie to the value of £182,000; viz. £80,000 for Egypt, and £102,000 for the India and China ports.

THE VICEROY OF EGYPT.

HIS Highness Abbas Pacha, present Viceroy of Egypt, only son of Toussoun Pacha, and grandson of the late Mehemet Ali, was born at Jedda, in the Hedjas, in the month of Siffu, 1229 (A.D. 1813), and is consequently now in his thirty-ninth year. At the age of eighteen months he was brought to Egypt; six months after which he lost his father, who died at Cairo of plague during the sadly memorable visitation of 1815. Until he had attained his seventh year, the child was brought up and acquired the rudiments of an ordinary education in the harem of his mother; when, in consideration of the character and services of his father, he was made a Pacha of two tails by order of the Sultan Mahmoud. At eight years of age, he was sent to the College of Aboo-Zabel, and subsequently to that of Kaukah, where he received a liberal instruction in the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages (with all of which he is critically familiar), and also in mathematics and military engineering. At the age of fifteen he was removed from collegiate studies, and appointed by Mehemet Ali to the confidential office of provincial inspector, which post he usefully occupied for a period of three years. At this time the expedition had been sent against Syria, and Abbas was named to the command of the cavalry division of the Egyptian army under Ahmed Pacha Manickli. His services and activity there were honourably mentioned on three or four occasions in the published gazette. The fatigues of incessant exposure and unhealthy bivouacs brought on an attack of intermittent fever, which necessitated his return to Alexandria. On his arrival Mehemet Ali refused to permit him to rejoin the army, as he required the services at home of confidential men; and Abbas Pacha received the appointment of Governor of the Gharbiah district. After two years he was named Inspector-General of the Provinces; and, during the year in which the great fire occurred at Cairo, he succeeded to the important and responsible offices of Khahir, or Chief Minister, and President of the Council of State. During the occupation of these posts—for a period of more than eight years—he acquired general respect, both with the natives and European Consuls.

On the accession of his uncle, Ibrahim Pacha, Abbas lost favour, in consequence of his intimation of certain of the members of Mehemet Ali's family, and he determined on a pilgrimage to the Hedjas, whither he proceeded on the 16th zilcade, 1267. He had been there only thirty-eight days, when intelligence of his uncle's death reached him, and he was enjoined to return to Egypt without the accomplishment of his pilgrimage. He was duly recognised by the foreign Consuls as the legitimate successor, under the hereditary settlement of the year 1841; and proceeded soon after to Constantinople, where he was well received by the Sultan, and duly invested with viceregal authority in Egypt. On his return (10th November, 1848) he set about the adoption of a novel line of policy. He eschewed the old system of his predecessors, of frittering away the resources and labour of the country in useless armaments, costly and unprofitable public works, and a weak attempt to maintain European manufacturing establishments. He directed the attention of his people towards agricultural industry, released them from the pressure of severe taxation, and removed, as far as possible, all restrictions on free internal trade. The effect of these measures is now beginning to manifest itself in the increased wealth of the country, the increasing productions, and in the existence of a spirit of enterprise unknown before. The removal of the odious poll-tax reduced the people's burthens and the Pacha's income by the large annual sum of £630,000; yet the latter, in spite of this, from a better system of administration, the public revenue of the country has now increased to almost its former amount.

To carry out his plans he had serious difficulties to encounter. He found in office a host of men hostile to all departure from a system of things that enabled them to enrich themselves by means of peculation and corruption. But, bringing a thorough practical knowledge of the popular wants to bear on the government of the people, he determined at once to grapple with the difficulty, and he dismissed all those among the public employés in whose fidelity he could not place the necessary confidence, and replaced them by tried, and certainly, as events have since proved, more trustworthy and respectable men. While he thus benefited his country, he had the misfortune to raise up against him at Constantinople, whither all those men repaired, a powerful and hostile party, by which he has been since grievously harassed. They have had influence enough to seduce several members of his family from their duty and allegiance to him; and their familiarity with the resources of Egypt has likely led to an union advantageous of by the Court of Turkey to concoct a system of judicial and administrative reform, which, under the most specious pretexts for the improvement of the local government, is designed to subvert the authority and independence of the Pacha, promote disorder among the people, and so enable its ever-active projectors to aim a blow at the existing dynasty, and supply a long envied field of patronage to the cupidity of Constantinople adventurers and courtiers.

The Pacha has always shown the utmost anxiety to promote the interests of the Anglo-Indian transit. He has spent £70,000 in making a carriage-road across the desert to Suez; he has expended large sums in improving the Nile navigation; and he has now undertaken, at the probable cost of a million sterling, the construction of a railroad from Alexandria to Cairo.

In private life the Pacha is distinguished for his generous remembrance of services rendered during his comparative adversity, and by many other good qualities of heart; but he is by no means free from weakness of character. Contact with the world has greatly contributed to expand the resources of his intellect, and improve the better qualities of his mind. He has been generally misunderstood, and faults and vices have been attributed to him which are libellous and unjust. He is fond of out-door sports, and has one of the most valuable and extensive collection of horses and dogs ex sting. He often joins in the gazelle chase and in boar-hunting, in both of which he exhibits extraordinary skill and activity.

He is much and affectionately attached to his family, and has recently placed his sons under the tuition of an English gentleman engaged for the purpose, and is generally encouraging the study of our language about his Court. His predilections are decidedly English, and he seems to understand the national character much better than it generally is amongst Orientals, with whom the bland and courteous manners of the French commonly prevail.

It will be seen, by reference to our Parliamentary report, that the question between the Pacha and the Sultan was the subject of debate in the House of Commons on Tuesday night.

The accompanying Portrait is from a clever lithograph lately executed by a French artist.

RAILWAY WORKS AT ALEXANDRIA.

THE railway works referred to in the preceding memoir are now progressing rapidly. The portion of the line between the city of Alexandria and the Nile will, it is hoped, be completed in less than eighteen months, which will be a great boon to the "overland" traveller, the canal being the present mode of transit, and the most disagreeable and tedious part of the route.

The superintending engineers occupy offices adjoining the Shunr., or Government grain-stores, on the Western Harbour outside the city.

Part of the stores have been pulled down, and the embankment and pier for the Railway are already commenced. The works present a busy scene of men, women, and boys at work. The engineers seem pleased with the Arabs as labourers: the latter are, generally speaking, pretty well clad at Alexandria.

Near the village of Aboo-homis, twenty-five miles from Alexandria, five miles of the earthwork of the Railway are completed. 5000 men are employed on the works, and many more are soon to be added.

A return to the House of Commons was printed on Saturday, showing the loans made for public works and the interest charged. Various loans have been made in Great Britain 256 for churches and chapels, and 789 for 1 ot-law union workhouses. In Ireland £1,40,780 was issued for Poor-law Union workhouses, &c., and no interest chargeable thereon for at least 10 years. The rates charged is regulated from 5 per cent. to £3 0s. 10d. per cent.

At a vestry meeting specially convened, held on Saturday last, in the New Vestry Hall, King's road, St. Pancras, Thomas E. Walker, esq., churchwarden, in the chair, the following resolution was passed:—"That the vestry, condemning the principle of centralisation, pledges itself to use its best endeavours to put an end to this great evil in all its forms, and undertakes to support a full and fair competition, more particularly in obtaining a plentiful supply of pure water."

On Saturday, Mr. E. J. Chance, the senior surgeon of the City Orthopædic Hospital, Hatton-garden, gave the second of a series of lectures on the various deformities to which the human frame is liable in childhood; and, in conclusion, introduced a most interesting looking female child, who had a species of hands in the place of feet, the toes or fingers, of which there were six on each limb turning downwards towards the heel.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THURSDAY, March 25, 1852.

We have been living here for the last three weeks, or something more under the cloudless sky and balmy temperature of a Neapolitan spring; such weather has not, indeed, been remembered for years at this generally ungenial season, attracting crowds of pedestrians to every public promenade, and bringing equipages without number to the Boulevards and Champs Elysées, some of them almost vieing with those exquisite turn-outs which astonish every foreigner on his first visit to Hyde park on a fine afternoon during the height of the London season. On last Thursday, the Mi-carême, when Lent is interrupted for twenty-four hours by the return of all the follies of the Carnival, the display of horses, liveries, and toilettes was particularly grand, the scene being additionally animated by carnavalesque cavalcades and processions, and coachfuls of well-dressed masks. The clothes-shop of the Prophète, for instance, advertised its wares after this fashion, in a style that would make the establishment of "Moses and Sons" pale with envy—the equestrian troupe of the Circus being all costumed in the guise of the dramatis personæ in Meyerbeer's opera, while the trappings of the horses and the gleaming banners proclaimed to the world the unapproachable elegance of the cut and the cheapness, above all, that are to be found at the Prophète. But when was merit known to exist without exciting envy? Close upon the traces of Le Prophète followed an immense chariot, accompanied by a cavalcade comprising a collection of nearly all the costumes under the sun, and divulging to the public the important fact that a new theatre was immediately about to open, which, under the name of Le Palais de Cristal, is to exterminate all competition. In the evening, by an innovation which is in fact nothing but the revival of an ancient custom, a portion of these advertising masks continued to perambulate the city with lighted torches, which produced a novel and curious effect.

We have had during the week a host of balls, official and non-official. Among the former, the most splendid was that of the Minister of Police, where, for an official reunion, the company was singularly select. It was remarked that not one of the new uniforms was to be seen—even M. de Casabianca, the Minister of State, having doffed for the occasion the glittering costume which he invariably wears in public. The ball of M. de Persigny, at the Ministry of the Interior, was more numerously attended; a wonder gallery having been constructed in juxta position with the apartments, and communicating with them by means of the windows, converted into doors for the nonce. In the centre of this gallery the architect had reserved a large circular space, the walls of which were garnished with well-stored buffets; while a fountain, surrounded with rich exotic shrubs, occupied the centre. At each end of the gallery two large mirrors reflected the thousands of lights before them, and prolonged the scene to an ideal extent. At this ball there were a few uniforms, but the great majority even of the official personages were in mufti.

M. Alexandre Dumas' fils, who, it may be remembered, made a very successful début here at the Vaudeville, with "La Dame aux Camellias," is at present engaged on a book, which, whatever may be its faults, will at least possess the merit of originality. The characters of Werther and Charlotte, Paul and Virginie, and Manon Lescaut, with the Chevalier Desgrieux, are to be introduced in one novel. Its title is to be "Le Regent Mustel;" and, notwithstanding the bizarrerie of the plan, report declares it is replete with interest.

The jury for the examination of the pictures sent in for the annual exhibition at the Palais Royal are, it appears, exercising their functions with inordinate severity; hence no little apprehension among the candidates for exhibition. In 1848, and ever since, the jury, elected by the artistes themselves, have indiscriminately admitted all the works sent in, good, bad, and indifferent, the two latter categories prevailing in immense majority against the former. The effect of this injudicious indulgence was, that some great artists—the Scheffers, for instance—positively refused to exhibit any of their works. This year, however, the "gentlemen of the jury" have, instead of standing in medias res, gone to the opposite extreme; for it is reported, that in the principle day four hundred pictures were examined, and only thirty-seven judged worthy of admission, and it is besides affirmed that of three thousand five hundred pictures sent in, only one thousand are to be admitted. Prizes are to be awarded to the artists at the close of the exhibition, the principal prize being a medal worth £120, with 47 other medals of from £80 to £10 in value: the total sum expended in these rewards is estimated at somewhat under £1100.

Great activity now exists in the ateliers of many of our best sculptors, several statues having been ordered for the church Ste. Clotilde. One of them, "St Cloud," by M. Dantan, the model of which has been on view at his atelier, seems worthy of the former works of that well-known artist.

FRANCE.

The meeting of the marionnettes Parliament on Monday next, the 29th instant, is preceded by an "organic decree" this week from the "Prince President," which gives the comble to all the previous acts of autocratic legislation that have characterised the rule of Louis Napoleon since the coup d'état of December 2. This voluminous document consists principally of a body of standing orders and rules for the management and conduct of business in the Council of State, the Senate, and the Legislative Body, and thus deprives those mock deliberative assemblies of the last shadow of intrinsic power which it might be supposed that they would possess, in common with all societies or bodies of any kind whatever, viz. that of framing their own internal regulations of proceeding. The decree also prescribes the relations of these bodies respectively towards each other and towards the public, from which it appears that the Council of State ranks the first of the three—a matter which has caused considerable mortification to the Senators. Amongst the main provisions, it is decreed that every proposition to modify the Constitution must receive the signatures of ten Senators before it can be brought forward. Each Senator has the privilege of presenting to the President the basis of a bill.

The Senate can propose no amendment to bills. The vote of the Chamber is void unless half the members are present. No senatus-consultum can be debated unless three out of five bureaux have voted for the project in consideration.

With respect to the Legislative Body, it is decreed that they cannot reject a bill without discussing all its articles separately. The printing and distribution of a deputy's speech without authorisation of the Chamber is punishable by a fine of from 500f. to 3000f. against printers, and 5f. to 50f. against distributors. Under this article there will be no impediment whatever to giving extended publicity to the arguments of a servile majority; while a speech which may contain a triumphant refutation of those arguments can be completely suppressed. By another article, a deputy who does not take the oath within a fortnight from the verification of his election loses his seat. The severest penalty applied to a deputy is fifteen days' exclusion. The salary of the President of the Assembly is 100,000f.

The form of oath to be taken by all three bodies to the President of the Republic is as follows:—"I swear obedience to the Constitution, and fidelity to the President."

The place of meeting for this sham Legislature on the first day of its existence is to be within the walls of the Tuileries, in the Hall of the Marshals. There the President of the Republic, surrounded by his aides-de-camp, his orderly officers, the Ministers, and the members of the Council of State, will take his station on a raised platform; and opposite to him will be, on one side the Senate, and on the other the Legislative Body. The President will deliver a speech. The form of oath will then be read, and each member of the Senate and Legislative Corps, on his name being called over, will repeat, from his place, the words "Je le jure." The clergy, the magistracy, and the diplomatic body will be represented at the solemnity. A small number of places will be reserved on the occasion in an upper gallery for persons receiving invitations.

The oath to be taken by the different Law Courts and the manner of taking it are to be somewhat similar. The President in person will receive the oaths of the members of the Court of Cassation, of the First Presidents, and the Procureurs-Généraux of the Courts of Appeal. The members of the Courts of Appeal will take the oath before their respective conveners at a public sitting; the members of the different tribunals will take the oath before the heads of their different departments.

The Council-General of the Bank of France, in its sitting of Saturday last, resolved to raise to one hundred millions of francs the amount of its funds to be set aside for advances on French public securities.

On Sunday Louis Napoleon reviewed six regiments in the Place de Carrousel, and distributed two crosses of the Legion of Honour and five medals to each regiment. He then addressed the troops in a short speech, which is the first he has delivered to them since the coup d'état. It is a direct "bid" for popularity with the army, and is as follows:—

Soldiers.—In giving for the first time this medal, I am anxious to explain to you the object for which I have instituted it. When any one perceives, like me, how much devotedness, abnegation, and patriotism are to be found in the ranks of the army, a feeling of repugnance to his mind that the Government has at his disposal such scanty means of acknowledging so great trials, and rewarding such marked services. The admirable institution of the Legion of Honour would lose its prestige were it not restricted within certain limits. Yet, how often have I regretted to see soldiers and officers return to their homes without a recompense, although by their length of service, their wounds, and by arduous warfare, they had merited a testimony of satisfaction from their country! It is in order to accord them such a mark of approbation that I have instituted this medal. It may be given to such persons as have re-engaged themselves in the army, after having previously conducted themselves well; also, to those who have made four campaigns; or to such as have been wounded or specially named in the orders of the day of the army. It ensures them an annuity of 100 francs for life. That sum is undoubtedly but small; but what is dear is the ribbon which you will wear on your breast, and which will signify to your comrades, your families, and your fellow citizens that he who wears it is a brave man. The medal will not prevent you from proceeding to the cross of the Legion of Honour, should you be worthy of receiving it. On the contrary, it will be as a first step towards obtaining the cross, since it will in advance point you out to the attention of your superiors. You are not to receive at the same time two pecuniary allocations, but you will be able to wear at the same time the two decorations; in the same way as a non commissioned officer, corporal, or soldier to whom the cross of the Legion of Honour has been accorded, may also, if he should again signalise himself, receive the medal. Soldiers, this distinction, I repeat, is but a trifling matter for the immense services which both here and in Africa you render to France; but receive it as an encouragement to maintain intact that military spirit which does you so much honour. Wear it as a proof of my solicitude for your interests, and of my affection for that great military family of which I am proud to be the head, because you are so.

Arrests and deportations to Lambessa, in Algeria, or to Cayenne, continue with painful frequency. M. Clement Thomas, Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard of Paris during the insurrection of June, 1848, who has resided in seclusion in the Bordelais since the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, has received notice to quit France within eight days. Several inhabitants of the Gironde have received similar orders; among others, MM. Suniot, an ex-Constituent; and Belot de Mauléon, judge of the tribunal at Bordeaux. On Sunday last 60 political prisoners, among whom was M. Quesne, former editor of the Travailleur, were despatched from Nancy to Paris, preparatory to their transportation to Africa. Eight others were set at liberty on condition of their quitting France within eight days. Among these are M. Lullier, an ancient Constituent; Leboeuf, ex-Colonel of the National Guard at Nancy; De Vallerot, ex-Sub-Prefect of Toul; and Antoine, attorney. Eighty-three political prisoners were transferred on Tuesday from Montpellier to Cette, where two steam-vessels were waiting to convey them to Africa. Three hundred and one political prisoners have been embarked at Havre on board the steam-frigate Berthollet for Guiana. M Gafney, chief editor of the Journal du Havre, has been expelled from France. The military authorities of the Côte d'Or have sentenced twenty-six persons to be exiled from France, eighteen of whom are to be conveyed to Cayenne or Lambessa. This is a frightful state of things.

At Limoges, M. d'Haussonville and Thomas, accused of publishing a libel on the President of the French Republic in the Bulletin Français, have been acquitted.

EGYPT.

By advices of the 7th inst., we learn that the negotiations pending between the Government of Egypt and the Sublime Porte relative to the vexed question of the Tanzimut, do not present a very satisfactory aspect. The last letter of Abbas Pacha on the subject had so greatly irritated the Sultan, that Abdul-Medjid sent it back to the Grand Vizier, with a memorandum in the margin, to the effect that "he could not, he ought not, and he would not consent to the demands therein contained relative to the Tanzimut." It was, in consequence, supposed that the next letter to the Viceroy would be of a menacing character, and would order him absolutely to obey the decision of the Porte. The Viceroy had returned to Cairo from Upper Egypt, and was not yet known what effect the last news from Constantinople had on him.

On the 29th of February four Pachas had arrived at Alexandria from Constantinople, in the Medjidie steamer. It was given out that they were proceeding to Mecca; but it was supposed that they would be charged to deliver a letter to the Viceroy on their way. They at once set out for Cairo.

The works on the section of the railway between Alexandria and Damanhour had been at last commenced, although but little has been done. This, however, shows that the enterprise has not been abandoned.

UNITED STATES.

Advices to the 10th instant have been received this week from New York.

In Congress, on the 8th, a bill was reported in the Senate by the Finance Committee, the object of which was to increase the value of silver, and thereby retain it in the country. It was said that the measure would greatly tend to alleviate the inconvenience to which the trading community are frequently subjected for want of small change.

In the House of Representatives it was stated that drafts of the Federal Government were actually being protested, for want of funds in the Quartermaster's department to meet them.

A bill had been introduced in the Senate, ceding the public lands to the States in which they lie at certain prices.

Archbishop Hughes had delivered a lecture in New York on "The Catholic Chapter in American History," which is said to have been very favourably received by both Protestants and Catholics.

A renewed attempt at a trial of the parties engaged in the late expedition of Lopez against Cuba was commenced on the 8th instant. It is expected that the investigation will disclose some interesting circumstances connected with that wretched affair.

From Mexico the accounts with regard to the movements of Caravajal are conflicting—one representing him as having attacked and captured Camargo, and now closely besieging Matamoras; another that he had attacked Camargo, as reported, with about 600 men, but that he had been repulsed and obliged to retreat, with the loss of his artillery and ammunition.

WEST INDIES.

We have accounts, viâ New York, from Jamaica, to Feb. 29, from which we learn that the session of the Colonial Parliament had been closed on the 26th from the Governor. The cholera had abated its ravages, but the small-pox continued to be very destructive in various parts of the island.

The Lord Bishop of Jamaica was suffering under indisposition at Charlottenburg.

At Havannah the Conde Miraflores had been appointed Capt.-General of Cuba, in the place of General Concha.

FREEDOM OF BRITISH SUBJECTS AS UNDERSTOOD IN GIBRALTAR.

—The following extraordinary official notice appears in the Gibraltar Chronicle of the 9th inst.:—"Secretary's Office, Gibraltar, March 5, 1852.—A notice having appeared of an intended general meeting of the merchants, landowners, and others interested in the commerce of Gibraltar, to take place on Wednesday, the 10th inst., in the public room of the Exchange, for the purpose of addressing a letter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, praying for an inquiry into the civil administration of Gibraltar, such meeting is hereby prohibited, and will be prevented, by order of his Excellency the Governor.—By command, G. ANDREANI, Colonial Secretary." It thus appears that the right of free discussion of political matters and of meetings for the purpose of petitioning the home Government are not permitted to the colonists in Gibraltar. It is understood that many abuses in the administration of affairs at Gibraltar have long existed, one, among others, it is only necessary to name to excite universal reprehension, viz. the censorship of the press. Only one journal is allowed to be published in Gibraltar, and all the articles intended for insertion in that paper have daily to be submitted to the Government censor, who either alters them or suppresses them at the pleasure of the Government. Whether such a state of affairs can long exist in a territory belonging to a free country like England, it is not difficult to judge. It may be remarked, that handbills posted on the walls convening the meeting above referred to were torn down by the police, under instructions from the Governor.

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

Viscount Galway, one of the new Lords-in-Waiting, has been re-elected for East Retford.

Mr. Scully (Free-trader) has been elected for Cork county, in the room of Dr. Power (appointed Governor of St. Louis). Mr. Scully had a majority of 301 over his competitor Mr. Frewen (Protectionist), out of a total aggregate of upwards of 6000 votes recorded on the occasion.

Lord Naas, the new Chief Secretary for Ireland, who had been reported on the previous week by the conservative journals of Kildare, was returned on Monday for the borough of Coleraine, in the room of Dr. Boyd, without a contest. An opposing candidate, Mr. Kennedy, was proposed and seconded, but did not go to the poll.

Viscount Jocelyn, who was appointed to the office of Vice-Chamberlain in her Majesty's Household, was re-elected on Tuesday for the southern division of Shropshire.

No fewer than seven members of the Western Circuit Bar are candidates for seats in Parliament at the next election, besides those now having seats: Mr. Slade, Q.C., for Salisbury; Mr. Buck, Q.C., for Weymouth; Mr. M. Smith, for Truro; Mr. Phinn, for Bath; Mr. Cox, for Tewkesbury; Mr. Collier, for Plymouth; and Mr. Carter, for Taviston.

ASHBURTON.—Mr. George Moffatt, on the retirement of Colonel Matheson, has offered himself as a candidate for this borough as Liberal principles.

BEDFORD.—At a meeting of the Liberal party on Tuesday in this borough, a new candidate was introduced to them in the person of Mr. Chisholm Anstey. Mr. Anstey made a long address. He is regarded as the "people's candidate."

BIRMINGHAM.—Messrs. Muntz and Scholefield, the present members, will again offer themselves, with a tolerable certainty of re-election. The last-named is, it is said, to be opposed by Mr. J. T. Chance, the son of a merchant in the town. This gentleman is a Liberal-Conservative; he has not, however, yet formally announced himself, neither is it finally decided that he is to be the candidate. The opposition to Mr. Scholefield is being got up by the ultra-Protestant party, that opposed his votes on the Aggression Bill of last year having given those persons some offence.

BRIDGWATER.—A meeting of the Liberal Association has been held, at which it was determined not to give the society's support to the present Liberal member, Mr. C. J. K. Tynte, but to Mr. Kinglake and Lord Henley.

CIRENCESTER.—The sitting members, Viscount Villiers, son of Earl Bathurst, Free-trader, and Mr. Mullings, Protectionist, will offer themselves again. A requisition is in course of signature, calling upon Mr. Edward Holland, of Dumbeton Hall, to allow himself to be put in nomination. Mr. Holland was formerly M.P. for East Worcestershire, and is a practising agriculturist and Free-trade landlord, very popular on the Gloucestershire hills.

CHATHAM.—Viscount Enfield retires from the representation of this place, and Captain Peel is spoken of as his probable successor.

HARWICH.—The letter from Mr. Waddington, M.P. for Maldon, accepting the invitation of the Protectionist party at Harwich to come forward for that borough, has been published in the shape of a preliminary address. The probability is that Mr. Waddington being able to promote the making of the long-talked of Harwich Railway with, it is believed, give him a good chance of success.

HULL.—Mr. J. Stanley Moore, of Liverpool, will be invited to stand on the Conservative interest for this place in conjunction with Mr. Clay, and his return, if he consents, is considered certain.

KENT (WEST).—Sanguine hopes are entertained by their supporters of the return of Sir Edmund Filmer and Mr. Masters Smith for this division of the county. Mr. Law Hodges appears to have got into disfavour with the constituency.

KNARESBOROUGH.—There are now three candidates in the field—namely, Lt.-Colonel Wilson, of Nostell Priory (on Protectionist and Protestant principles), Mr. Collins, the present Conservative candidate, and Mr. Westhead, the present Liberal representative.

LANARTH.—It is rumoured that the following candidates are likely to offer themselves; viz. Mr. Williams and Mr. D'Eyncourt (the sitting members), Mr. J. H. Palmer, and Mr. William Hawes.

LANCASHIRE (SOUTH).—Mr. Alexander Henry, one of the present members in the Free-trade interest for South Lancashire, has come to the resolution of retiring at the close of the present Parliament.

LEEDS.—Mr. William Beckett has issued his address, in which he says—"I shall at the proper time pay my personal respects to you, for the purpose of restoring the Parliamentary privileges with which you have invested me, and asking your pleasure as to the renewal of them in the hands of those of some other gentleman." With respect to Free Trade he says:—"I can have no hesitation in assuring you that I think it my duty to oppose any attempt for the reversal of a policy which has been attended with such unbounded commerce, and produced so great an increase in the comforts and enjoyments of life among the great body of my fellow-countrymen."

LINCOLNSHIRE (NORTH).—An animated contest is expected for the representation of the division of Lindsey, between Sir Montague Cholmeley, one of the present sitting members, and James Harkes Stanhope, Esq., of Revesby Hall. The latter gentleman is brought forward as the Protectionist champion, and the same anomaly is presented as occurred in the late contest for South Nottinghamshire a year since, namely, that of two Protectionists contending for the same principle. The new aspirant bases his hopes of success upon the league of tenants versus landlords.

LIVERPOOL.—Two Protectionists, Mr. Andrew Stewart and Mr. George Hodson, have expressed their determination of going to the poll in opposition to the sitting members.

NEWARK.—Mr. John Stuart will retire from the representation of this borough at the close of the present Parliament, when the nominee of the present Duke of Newcastle will, no doubt, be a Free-trader.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—There are now three Liberal candidates offering themselves for the representation of this borough. Mr. White has brought forward Mr. Watson, Q.C. It is definitely stated that the Conservatives will bring forward a candidate.

NORTHUMBERLAND (NORTH).—At a private meeting of the most influential of the Liberal electors of the northern division of the county of Nottingham, held in the town of Nottingham on Saturday—Mr. Pager, of Ruddington, in the chair—after discussing the chances of returning a candidate of Liberal principles, in place of Mr. Handsworth, who is certain to retire at the coming general election, it was decided that no such attempt be made; but that the Duke of Newcastle be requested to nominate a Free-trade Conservative (understood to be one of Sir Grace's own brothers), and the Liberal party would give him their hearty and united support.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE (SOUTH).—At present it is understood that Mr. Barrow and Mr. Hildyard will be returned at the general election unopposed.

PEMBROKE BOROUGHS.—Sir John Owen has issued his address for the Pembroke Boroughs, in which he confidently appeals to what "he has already done" as his main reliance upon the suffrages of the electors.

REIGATE.—Mr. Hillebrant Meredith Parratt, of Edingham House, Leatherhead, who offered himself in 1847 to represent this constituency, announces that he will again come forward at the next election. He has issued a Free-trade address.

RIPON.—Earl de Grey, it is stated, considers Lord Goderich's opinions much too liberal to allow of his election for the borough of Ripon.

ROCHDALE.—Mr. Sharman Crawford has definitely announced his intention of retiring from the representation of this borough. Mr. Miall is a candidate.

ROCHESTER.—The present members, Mr. Bernard and T. Hodges, both in the Liberal interest, have just issued addresses, expressive of their intention again to solicit the suffrages of the electors of this borough in the event of a general election.

SALFORD.—A requisition has been got up and numerously signed, calling on Mr. Brotherton, M.P. for Salford, to continue his services in that capacity to the electors.

SALISBURY.—Mr. W. J. Chaplin has issued an address to the electors, in which he announces his intention of again requesting the favour of their suffrages at the coming general election. Mr. C. B. Wall has also addressed his constituents, avowing himself to be an advocate for further and progressive reform.

SHEFFIELD.—On Monday evening last a friendly meeting of the supporters of Mr. Parker and Mr. Roebuck, the sitting members, was held at the Royal Hotel to consider the propriety of again putting them in nomination, in the event of a dissolution for this borough. The following motion was adopted unanimously:—"That this meeting forms itself into a committee, with power to add to its number, to support Mr. Parker and Mr. Roebuck at the approaching election, and the pledges itself to use its utmost exertions to secure Mr. Parker and Mr. Roebuck's return to Parliament as the representatives of the borough of Sheffield. £120 were subscribed immediately towards a fund for election expenses.

STAFFORD.—Mr. Serjeant Allen, of the Oxford circuit, has issued an address to the electors, pledging himself to assist in any measure that won d give untaxed food to the people.

STROUD.—Mr. Stanton will retire in favour of Lord Morpeth, the eldest son of Earl Dacie. His Lordship is at present at Malta, and it is most probable that he will not return to this country in time to be personally introduced to the inhabitants before the election.

TEWKESBURY.—All three of the candidates for the representation of this old-fashioned borough have completed their canvass, and taken their present farewell of the electors. The present sitting members, Mr. Martin and Mr. Humphrey Brown, offer themselves again, the third candidate being Mr. E. W. Cox, barrister of the Western Circuit. The contest is now narrowed to the event of an election for this borough. The following motion was adopted unanimously:—"That this meeting forms itself into a committee, with power to add to its number, to support Mr. Parker and Mr. Roebuck at the approaching election, and also pledges itself to use its utmost exertions to secure Mr. Parker and Mr. Roebuck's return to Parliament as the representatives of the borough of Sheffield. £120 were subscribed immediately towards a fund for election expenses.

STAFFORD. Mr. Serjeant Allen, of the Oxford circuit, has issued an address to the electors, pledging himself to assist in any measure that would give untaxed food to the people.

STROUD.

THE BURMESE WAR.

WAR STEAMER "HERMES." BURMESE KING'S SHIP. H.M.S. "FOX."

BURMESE STOCKADES.—VIEW TOWARDS RANGOON. (SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

BURMESE WAR-BOAT.

MOULMEIN.—MARTABAN IN THE DISTANCE.

THE KAFFIR WAR.

We have received from a Correspondent the accompanying View of Post Retief, Winterberg Mountains, where are the graves of Lieut.-Colonel Fordyce, Lieut. Carey, Lieut. Gordon, 74th Highlanders; Ensign Ricketts, 91st Regiment; and ten soldiers of the 74th and 91st Regiments, who fell in a desperate fight with the Kaffirs, on October 15 and November 6 last. On this occasion Lieut.-Colonel Fordyce was killed at the first volley on the 6th. The enemy was partially driven from his position, but, unfortunately, not without several other fatal casualties among the troops. Lieutenant Carey of the 74th, two sergeants, and two rank and file, were killed; and Lieutenant Gordon shot through both thighs (since dead), and eight men (all of the 74th Regiment), wounded. The details were given in our Journal of January 10.

THE KAFFIR WAR.—GRAVES OF BRITISH OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS AT POST RETIEF, WINTERBERG MOUNTAINS.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—LECTURES ON THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

On Wednesday evening Professor Tennant gave a lecture on Gems and Ornamental stones, describing the physical characters of minerals, such as the crystalline form, fracture, hardness, lustre, colour, double refraction, electricity, and specific gravity. This latter character he strongly recommended persons to make themselves acquainted with, as a safe and easy mode of ascertaining the different species of polished gems, rather than the common and dangerous method of testing by a file; he having known several instances when valuable stones have been very seriously injured by the latter process—diamonds, for instance, having been broken in the direction of the cleavage planes. Mr. Tennant next described the crystalline forms of the diamond, and referred to the collection of minerals in the British Museum as containing one of the most complete series of natural crystals of the diamond at present known. He then described the Koh-i-noor diamond, celebrated for its size and well-known history; he stated that, upon examination, it proved that two of its largest faces are cleavage planes, which correspond to the faces of a regular octohedron; one of these faces has been but slightly polished. The Indians attach superstitious notions to the possession of the diamond, and value it much higher than Europeans do: he instanced the Nassuk diamond, now in the possession of the Marquis of Westminster, which was valued at £30,000, but only realised £7200. Mr. Hope's blue diamond was next mentioned as being unique, its colour being that of a sapphire, and the stone of a very large size. A collection of gems, the property of Mr. J. F. Thistlethwayte, No. 24, Class 1, he considered was the most complete he had seen, as exhibiting all the various species of gems in their natural and polished state. Mr. Tennant's own collection was then alluded to, No. 14. It contained the unique crystal of emerald deposited by his Grace the Duke of Devonshire. It was one of the finest stones in the Exhibition, weight 8 oz. 6 dwts. It is a six-sided prism, two inches in length, and measures across the three diameters, 2¼, 2¼, 1¾. It has a small piece of quartz adhering, which, if detached, would probably reduce the weight three or four dwts. It is reported to have been brought to this country by Don Pedro, and was found at Muso, near Santa Fé de Bogota, in Granada. The beautiful colour of the emerald is supposed to be due to one or two per cent. of oxide of chrome: its composition being silica 68, alumina 15, glucina 12, with traces of lime, oxide of iron, and oxide of chrome. The emerald breaks readily at right angles to the axis of the prism. The Indians are well aware of this, and availed themselves of it in an emerald girdle of a Sikh chief, exhibited in the Indian collection; most of the emeralds being transverse sections, about a quarter of an inch thick, probably planed by cleavage, the faces afterwards polished, but many retaining the original crystalline faces of the prism.

EXACT SIZE OF A LARGE EMERALD THE PROPERTY OF THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE.

SCENE AT THE PARIS BOURSE.

The financial decree of the Prince President, converting the Five per Cent. Rentes into Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Rentes, was recorded in our Journal of last week; and, in our late edition, was announced the satisfactory declaration of the Minister of Finance, that it is not the intention of the Government to compel any charitable institutions to accept the Four-and-a-Half for the Five per Cent stock.

The accompanying Illustration shows the great excitement outside the Bourse, in consequence of the above decree. The magnificent flight of steps leading to the Bourse was crowded with people; but as women were not admitted within the railings, they assembled in masses, eagerly awaiting the news, or the stockbrokers who occasionally came to receive orders.

The statues have just been placed upon their pedestals at the Bourse, and contributed to the picturesqueness of the above extraordinary scene.

LACON'S PATENT BOAT-LOWERING APPARATUS.

The object of this invention, which has just been patented by W. S. Lacon, Esq., C.S., is to suspend boats at the sides or the stern of a vessel, so that, in case any sudden emergency, as the conflagration or foundering of a ship, her boats may be readily lowered and put to sea without the risk of the tackles or other contrivances which connect the boats to the vessel retarding the operations of lowering and floating them clear of her.

LACON'S PATENT BOAT-LOWERING APPARATUS.—FIG. 3.

The manner in which the difficulties hitherto attendant on the lowering of boats during tempests, on dark nights, and at periods of excitement and danger, are overcome, is by suspending the boats from chains or ropes which pass over the davits of the ship, and thence down to a winch or windlass, round which they are wound, but are attached thereto in such a manner, that, when the winch is free to revolve, the ropes or chains will unship or disengage themselves from their attachment by their own weight. By this means the possibility of the ship in its onward progress through a rough sea dragging forward a lowered boat and capsizing or swamping it, is prevented: the weight of the chains or ropes, to say nothing of the resistance of the boat, being sufficient to disconnect them from the winch, and thereby render the boat free of the ship.

In the accompanying Engravings, Fig. 1 represents in side view a boat suspended, according to the improvement, from the davits at the side of a ship; and also the apparatus employed for lowering the boat into the water, as fitted to the deck of a ship. Fig. 2 is a cross section of the same. In these figures, a a are two davits, or iron brackets, firmly secured to the bulwarks of the ship; and provided with sheaves, or friction-pulleys, over which the ropes or chains (b b) for supporting the boat pass.

LACON'S PATENT BOAT-LOWERING APPARATUS.—FIGS. 1 AND 2.

Mr. Lacon prefers to raise the boat to its elevated position by the use of the ordinary tackle; and, when thus raised, he permanently retains the boat in the desired position by passing around it, near the head and the stern of the boat, two broad belts or straps (c c), composed of metal or plaited rope, and having a ring attached at either end—the inner ring being for the purpose of forming a permanent attachment with the suspending chains, and the outer ring for allowing of a temporary connection by means of a splicing rope (d) to a ring of the suspending chain.

CONVERSION OF THE FRENCH FIVE PER CENTS.—RENTES.—EXCITEMENT AT THE BOURSE.

The ropes or chains (b b) pass down from the davits to conca[illegible] and are connected thereto by the last link in each chain catching on to a [illegible] pin projecting from the periphery of its barrel. These barrels are mounted on a shaft (f), which turns in bearings in the bracket-pieces (g g). When the ends of the slings have been connected together by the splicing-ropes (d, see fig. 1.) the barrels (e e) are caused to rotate for the purpose of equalizing the suspending-chains, and causing them to sustain the weight of the boat. The tackles before mentioned as employed for hoisting the boat are then removed. At about the middle of its length, on the shaft (f) between the barrels, is keyed a large friction-wheel (h), to which a ratchet-wheel (i i) is affixed. Around this pulley (h) a friction-strap (k) is placed, and the ends of the strap are jointed to a lever (l), which works on a fulcrum (m). Into the teeth of each of the ratchet-wheels a catch, projecting from a lever (n), which works on a pin (o), takes, for the purpose of preventing the running down of the chains (b b) by the rotation of the barrels. Each lever to be brought forward, and set fast by means of a pin (p), which is readily withdrawn when the apparatus is to be brought into operation.

In Figure 3, the lowering apparatus without the winch is shown as fitted in the chains outside the bulwarks, the shaft connecting the barrels running above the ports, so as not to interfere with the direction of the guns; and the levers of the friction strap and fall being led inboard at an equal distance between two guns, would not interfere with the working of the guns, or they may be fitted so as to be worked by a man in the chains outside.

For further details of this important invention, we are compelled, by want of space, to refer to Mr. Lacon's pamphlet,* just published. It is written in nautical language, suitable to the comprehension of seafaring people; the object being to attract the attention and excite the interest of sailors, in the hope of making them feel that the lives of their fellow-men may be dependent upon each of them.

* On the Management of Ships' Boats. A Letter to the Right Hon the President of the Board of Trade With Evidence of Evidence taken on the Trial of the Officers of the Orpheus, in August, 1850, and Extracts from the Statements and Evidence of the Survivors of the Amazon. By William Stirdlar Lacon, Esq., H.C.S.—Parker, Furnivall, and Parker, Wal ston.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 28.—Fifth Sunday in Lent.
MONDAY [illegible]—Siege of Acre, 1799.
TUESDAY, [illegible] sovereigns entered Paris, 1814.
WEDNESDAY, 31.—Beethoven died, 1827.
THURSDAY, April 1.—All Fools' Day.
FRIDAY, 2.—Cambridge Term ends.
SATURDAY, 3.—Oxford Term ends.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 3, 1852.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M [illegible]	M [illegible]	A M	A M	A M	A M	A M
[illegible]	[illegible]	10 17	45	30 9	9 59	50 10 36	11 20	11 58	Ho 0 25	0 50	1 15

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, [illegible].—The Programme for [illegible] Mademoiselle Marie Cruvelli, and Mademoiselle Sofia Cruvelli; together with the great dramatic [illegible] Madame Wagner, Signor Vietorn, Signor Bellini, Signor Ronconi, and Herr Formes (making [illegible] engagement with Sig Tamburini, Sig Lablache, and Signor Marini, and the [illegible] Mademoiselle Angiolina Bosio, Mdlle Emma Vercit, and Mdlle Adelaide Comelli, [illegible] Signor Gardoni, Pardini, Mercuriali and Castelcini [illegible] addition of the Engagement with Sig Tamburini, prima donna from La Scala, Milan and [illegible], is daily expected. Sig Belletti, his first appearance in England since his return from America. Sig Ferlotti, of the Italian Opera, Paris—his first appearance in London; and Sig Senati, his first appearance at this theatre. An Engagement has also been effected with the celebrated baritone, Sig Di Benedet, who will make his first appearance in this country. Signor Farrandi, F Lablache, and Labunche. DIRECTOR of the MUSIC and CONDUCTOR, Mr. BALFE.

Arrangements of great interest are in progress. The repertoire of her Majesty's Theatre comprises the undermentioned Operas:—Don Giovanni, Nozze di Figaro, Il Matrimonio Segreto, Lucia di Lammermoor, Puritani, Elisir d'Amore, Don Pasquale, Crociato in Egitto, Il Don Forcari, Norma, La Sonnambula, La Favorita, Il Barbiere, Semiramide, La Gazza Ladra, Otello, Borgia, Linda di Chamouni, Maometto II, La Figlia del Reggimento, Roberto il Diavolo, Gugliomo Tell, Torquata Tasso, Tancredi, Roberto il Diavolo [illegible] Pompeia, Fortesti, and L'Ecodige.

Mozart's chef-d'œuvre, "Don Giovanni," will be presented with the combined services of Mdlle Sontag, Mdlle Cruvelli, Mdlle Jenny Lind, and Lablache.

The exertions of the Management will be directed to the production of many novelties, and amongst the earliest will be (with the kind permission of H R H the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha) a new Grand Opera, composed by the Royal Highness, and produced with great success at Vienna and Berlin, entitled CARILDA, supported by the entire strength of the establishment. Likewise an Opera, composed by Count [illegible] which Madame Sontag has already obtained an additional triumph to her many [illegible] successes.

[illegible] MENTS for the BALLET.—Mademoiselles Cerito, Caroline Rosati, Guy Stephan, Louise Fleury, Rose, Pascaud, and Rosalie Lamoureux. Monsieurs Perrot, Desplaces, and Corps de Ballet. Maitres de Ballet: M Corrisei and M Gosselin. Master of the French School of Choreography. Regisseur de la Danse: M Paul, Master of the English School of Choreography.

Regisseur and Director of the Mise en Scène, M A Harris. Principal Artist to the Establishment, Mr Charles Marshall. The Scenery under the superintendence of Messrs Odgers and Miss Bradley. Principal Machinist, Mr D Norman. Head of the Property Department, Mr Bradwell.

The SEASON will commence on TUESDAY Evening, MARCH 30, with (for the first time at the Theatre) Donizetti's Opera of MARIA DI ROHAN, in which Mdlle Cruvelli will have the honour of making her first appearance in this country; and a new Spanish Ballet Divertissement, entitled LA MORISQUE. In which Mdlle Guy Stephan will make her first appearance since her engagement at Madrid.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Opera Box-office, Colonnade, Haymarket.

ROYAL PRINCESS' THEATRE, OXFORD-STREET.—Under the Management of Mr. CHARLES KEAN.—On MONDAY, MARCH 29, will be performed Shakspeare's Historical Play of KING JOHN, with the Melodrama of PAULINE. Tuesday, 30, the Grand Historical Play of KING JOHN. Wednesday, 31, Shakspeare's Historical Play of King John, and the Melodrama of Pauline. Thursday, April 1st, the Corsican Brothers. Friday, the Merchant of Venice. Saturday, 3d, Shakespeare's Historical Play of King John, and the Melodrama of Pauline. Saturday, 3d, the Corsican Brothers and the Comedy of Used Up.

FRENCH PLAYS, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Positively the Last Six Nights of M FREDERICK LEMAITRE'S and Mdlle CLARISSE'S Lengagement. MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 29, the Entertainments will commence with [illegible] Vaudeville, entitled LA COMBE SENSIBLE. At which will be produced (for the [illegible] time this season), the popular Play of L'AUBERGE DES ADRETS. Robert Macaire, by [illegible] Lemaitre.

M FRE[illegible] MAITRE [illegible] CLARISSE [illegible] but one of his Engagement, will take place on WEDN SDAY NEXT, MARCH 31st on which occasion will be produced (for that night only) the celebrated Drame of LA DAME [illegible] THE PRE[illegible] Georges Maurice by M F Lemaitre; Hortense (Amorite by Mdlle [illegible] Positively the Last but one of the performing Dogs will be exhibited. Doors will be open [illegible] and the Performance commence at half-past Seven. Prices of Admission: Boxes, 6s; pit, 3s; Amphitheatre, 2s. Private Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be made at the Box-office, Mr. Mayo's Library, 33, Old Bond-street; also at the principal Libraries and Music-sellers, and at the Box-office of the Theatre, from Eleven till Five daily.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, W BAYLISS.—On MONDAY, March 29th, and following evenings, will be presented, for the last Week, the gorgeous Eastern Spectacle of TANCRED; or, the Triumph of the Crusaders. To be succeeded by the most comic and interesting Scenes of Equitation in the ARENA, introducing during each by skilled performers in the various feats of horsemanship. The whole concluding with a laughable afterpiece. Box-office open from Eleven till Four daily.

ROYAL MARYLEBONE THEATRE, ADELAIDE-STREET, WEST-STRAND.—LAST SIX NIGHTS until the EASTER HOLIDAYS.—MONDAY, MARCH 29th, and every evening during the week.—An Entire Change of Performance. Mons Brown (after which the MANAGER'S ROOM, with New Songs by Samuel Barbert Adm, and Mr Scott Brown); to be followed by the Laughable Farce, entitled [illegible] time at this theatre, the Farce of The TWO GREGORIES; or, Where did the Money come from. [illegible] Performance on Wednesday, March 31st, and Saturday, April 3d. To commence at three. Doors open half an hour before each performance. On Easter Monday will be produced the Grand Magical Spectacle of ALADDIN and the WONDERFUL LAMP, with New Scenery, Costume, Decorations, and Mechanical Contrivances.

MRS. FANNY KEMBLE, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Positively the LAST READINGS of MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, with the accompaniment of Mendelssohn's Music, MONDAY MORNING, MARCH 29, and for the last time, on Saturday Morning, April 3d. The Music will be performed on the same occasion by Orchestra, under the direction of Mr Lucas, commencing punctually at half-past Two o'Clock Private Boxes, £2 2s; Stalls, 10s 6d; Pit, 5s; Amphitheatre, 3s; Gallery, 1s 6d. Tickets to be had of Private Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be secured at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; also at the principal Libraries and Music-sellers; and at the Box-office.

HUNGERFORD HALL and CROSBY HALL.—On WEDNESDAY NEXT, and following FRIDAY and TUESDAY, a Course of THREE LECTURES on ELECTRO-BIOLOGY (so called) and MESMERISM will be delivered at HUNGERFORD HALL, Strand, by Mr HICKS, illustrated by a great variety of striking experiments upon individuals from the audience. In these Lectures the various methods of experimenting will be fully explained, by which the whole secret will be made manifest. Syllabuses and Tickets may be obtained at the Hall. Mr HICKS will also lecture and experiment at the COMMERCIAL HALL, King's-road, Bermondsey, On THURSDAY NEXT; GROBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street, on WEDNESDAY; and at the CAMBERWELL INSTITUTION, on THURSDAY. To commence each Evening at Eight o'clock

LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—LAST NIGHT at CROSBY HALL.—MR LOVE will appear again at CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street, on MONDAY, MARCH 29 in his Entertainment entitled LOVE'S LENTEN LUCUBRATIONS, with Vocal Impersonations, &c. To be followed by the far-famed Story of PAST TEN O'CLOCK and a CLOUDY NIGHT; or, the Watchman. with other Entertainments. On Wednesday, March 31, Mr LOVE will appear (with a total change of Entertainments) at the Syro Arms, St. John's Wood. On Monday, April 5, 7, 9, and 10, in the Three Hours Royal Sadler's Wells: April 12, at the Horns, Kennington; April 14, at Lecture Hall, Camberwell; April 21, at Brentwood. Finsbury Hall, Lever Lane. Begin at Eight. Stalls, 3s; Hall, 2s; Gallery, 1s. Books of Programmes, &c. 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—PREVENTION OF FORGERY.—A Lecture by J H Pepper, Esq on Glynn and Appel's Patent Paper for the Prevention of Piracy and Forgery by the Associate Process.—During Lent a LECTURE on ASTRONOMY will be delivered by Dr Bachhoffner, on Wednesday and Friday Evenings, at Eight o'clock. The celebrated Vocalist KLANCY is HERE, will appear for the first time in England in his new Musical Divertissement, "The Illustrated Crystal Pa ace," on Monday the 29th inst, and continue each Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday Evenings, at Eight o'clock.—A Description, by Mr Crapo, of the various kinds of Muskets, Rifles, &c.—Dancing Views, &c. —Admission, 1s; Schools and Children under ten years of age, half-price.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr COSTA.—The Subscription is One, Two, or Three Guineas and [illegible] sons having the subscription dating from 15th March to a correspondent [illegible] Haydn's "Creation" will be performed on next FRIDAY, 26, and Handel's "Messiah" on WEDNESDAY, the 7 h of April.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER-HALL.—Conductor, Mr COSTA.—FRIDAY NEXT, March 26, MISCELLANEOUS CREATION.—Vocalists engaged: Madame Clara Novello and Mr Stus Reeves. The Orchestra, the most extensive in Exeter-Hall, will consist of combining 16 double-basses and nearly 200 performers. Tickets, reserved, 5s; central seats, numbered seats, 10s 6d each; at the Society's Office, 6, in Exeter-Hall.

MRS GIBBS (formerly Miss Gradon) will by request give [illegible] Communications to 54, Albany-street Regent's Park.

MDLLE. SPEYER begs to announce that she will give TWO SOIREES MUSICALES, at the New Beethoven Rooms, 27, Queen Ann-street, on THURSDAY, APRIL 1, and WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, on which occasions she will perform a selection of classical and modern Pianoforte Music, besides being assisted by eminent artistes. Reserved Seats for subscribers to the two soirées, one guinea. To be had of Mdlle. Speyer, 13, Eto. [illegible] quest at Messrs Chappell's, 50, New Bond-street; and Leader and Cock's, New Bond-street.

MR. NEATE respectfully announces that his last Three QUARTETT and PIANOFORTE SOIREES will take place at the New Beethoven Room, 27, Queen Ann-street, on the 31st inst. and the 14th and 28th of APRIL. Executants: MM. Sainton, Cooper, Hill, Piatti, and Neate. A ticket to admit three persons to one Soirée, £1 1s; a Single Ticket, 10s 6d. Programmes and Tickets may be had of Mr. Neate, 9, Chapel-street, Portland-place, and at the principal Music shops.

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S ASCENT OF MOUNT BLANC. Illustrated by Mr W BEVERLEY, EVERY EVENING, at Eight o'Clock.—Stalls, numbered and reserved, 3s; Pit, 2s; Gallery, 1s. Children half-price. Stalls may be taken every day from Eleven to Four; 3s; area, 2s; gallery, 1s. Children: Stalls, 2s; area, 1s.

A MORNING PERFORMANCE every TUESDAY and SATURDAY, at Three o'clock.
EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

MDLLE. LA[illegible] LAST WINTER EVENING, next THURSDAY APRIL 1, at WILLIS'S ROOMS; to commence at 8 o'clock. The Programme will consist of Concerted and Solo Pieces, selected by Mdlle. Lucas, and (the second performance in England) Gary Piatti, Bottesini, & Sonnet, and Pater. Vocalists—Madame Leonard (a Scotch air) Signor Marras, Mr. Frederick Chaner, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had at the Office, adjoining Exeter Hall; of Mr. ALLCROFT, 16, New Bond-street; and of all Musicsellers

JOSEPH STAMMERS, Director

GRAND NATIONAL CONCERTS, EXETER HALL.—For the ENCOURAGEMENT of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT.—The FIRST GRAND CONCERT will take place next MONDAY, MARCH 29. Vocalists: Misses Birch, Poole, Eyre, Messrs. Chaner, Bodda, Lazarus, and Phillips. Conductor, Mr. [illegible] Phillips, Esq.; Messrs Whitworth, Weiss, George Tedder, and W Harrison. Instrumentalists. Mrs A Goddard, Mr Richardson, the Juvenile Harpists, the Lockwood Family, and the Messrs Distin. The Orchestra, Mr Lockwood. Leader, Mr Tibbwell. Conductors, Messrs Anselmo, T Hegen, and J Wily. Tickets, 5s and 3s; Reserved Seats, 6s; Stalls, 7s. To be had at all the Libraries and Musicsellers; and at the Hall on Monday, where places can be secured.

HUNGARIAN MUSICAL COMPANY, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The Hungarian Musical Company have the honour of informing the nobility, gentry, and public, that in consequence of the kind and flattering reception they have received, and at the earnest solicitation of several families of distinction, they have relinquished their engagements for the ensuing week at Derby, Nottingham, and Leicester, in order to give another series of FOUR CONCERTS, at the above Theatre, on [illegible] SATURDAY, at which time they positively leave England, on the evening of Tuesday, March 30th Thursday, April 1st, and Saturday, April 3d, at half-past eight o'clock.—Stalls, 3s; boxes, 4s; and [illegible] Programmes, to be had at the Stalls and at the Libraries. Messrs Mitchell, Sams, Ebers, Andrew, Allcroft, Olivier, &c, &c.—Free list of former series suspended.

CALDWELL'S ASSEMBLY-ROOMS, Dean-street, Soho, capable of accommodating 300 persons.—OPENED MONDAY NIGHT.—Admission, 1s[illegible] per quarter, 4s[illegible]. Mr Caldwell undertakes to teach any Lady or Gentleman unacquainted with the routine of the Ball Room to enter with grace and freedom, and take a part in the Fashionable Quadrilles in one night. Open every Night at Eight, and forming twice a week. The next LONG QUADRILLE NIGHT will take place on TUESDAY, March 30. Admission 1s.

EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—Incorporated by Royal Charter.—The TWENTY-NINTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this Society is NOW OPEN, from Nine, A M, until dusk. Admittance, 1s.
J W ALLEN, Sec.

HINDOSTAN.—This GRAND MOVING DIORAMA is NOW OPEN DAILY, at 12, 3, and 8 o'Clock, at the ASIATIC GALLERY, Baker-street Bazaar, Portman-square, illustrating the Tour of TAMERLANE'S Son, Prince [illegible] Louis Haghe, and Mr Knell. The Scenes arranged by Lieutenant-Colonel Leard, from his own and other Original Sketches. Forming a Complete Panorama of Eastern Exhibition

THE PIANOFORTE BAZAAR, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, London. This extensive establishment is now open for the sale of new and second-hand Pianofortes, Harps, Organs, &c, on commission; also for warehousing pianofortes, and all kinds of musical instruments. The Pianoforte Warehouse is the largest establishment of instruments an excellent opportunity for their immediate sale. Goods entrusted [illegible] Manufacturers in East Anglia—Messrs. Tuesday, Woodcock, and Co.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S PARK.—The HIPPOPOTAMUS presented by H. H. the Viceroy of Egypt, the ELEPHANT-CALF, and many recent additions, are exhibited daily.—Admission, 1s; on Mondays, 6d.

LADIES' GUILD.—The Managers will RECEIVE for SALE, at the Bazaar of the Institution, 4, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square, all descriptions of WORKS, the bond fide production of Ladies, provided they shall be adjudged by the Works Committee to be of such evidence of artistic ability and skill. A Notice will be given in confidence to the President. Mrs. SOUTHWOOD HILL

ART-UNION of LONDON.—(By Royal Charter.)—Subscription of a Guinea annually entitles the Subscriber to a Chance of obtaining a Work of Art, of the Value of Fifty Pounds, and upwards, besides participating in the Distribution of the Prizes of Engravings. Every Subscriber becomes entitled to a Proof Impression of the Plate engraved from the Picture selected by the Committee of Management, and to a Receipt for the Subscription. Each Subscriber will be entitled to select for himself, as hereinafter, a work of art from one of the public Exhibitions.
GEORGE GODWIN } Hon. Secs.
LEWIS POCOCK. }
444, West Strand.

ROYAL ASYLUM OF ST. ANN'S SOCIETY, affording a Home, Clothing, Maintenance, and Education to Children of those once in prosperity, but now in want, and of any nation. By Voluntary Contributions.

THE ANNIVERSARY FESTIVAL will be celebrated at the LONDON TAVERN on Friday, April 30th, 1852, The Right Hon the Earl of TANKERVILLE in the Chair.

The Lord Bishop of Norwich will preside at the GIRLS' ANNUAL MEETING, at the Royal asylum, on Wednesday, 19th May, 1852, at Two o'clock.

The Lord Bishop of [illegible] will preside at the BOYS' ANNUAL MEETING, in June.

T. Charlton-row, Maunsio House. EDWARD FREDERICK LEEKS, Secretary.

Life Subscription, £10 10s; a Governor for Life, £21; Life Governor, £105; Perpetual Presentation, 750 guineas. Executors of benefactors by will become Life Governors.

DEAF and DUMB PRIVATE ESTABLISHMENT.—Mr. JAMES RHIND, nearly fifteen years late Principal of the Liverpool Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, and Author of various publications on the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, begs to announce that he has OPENED PRIVATE PUPILS exclusively. References:—His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Venerable the Archdeacon Hodson, the Archdeacon Campbell, the Rev Dr. Mackie, &c., &c., with relatives and friends of former pupils. For terms, &c., address Mr Rhind, 37, Canning-street, Falkner-square, Liverpool.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—The late distressing ACCIDENT at the COLLISION of the STEAMER Arrow and the BARQUE Ann is earnestly requested towards alleviating the distress of AGNES FRY, who, labouring under the [illegible] relyals, and with her Daughter [illegible] now suddenly left in distressed circumstances, by the death of her husband, Thomas Fry, Esq, late of the ship Ann, of Liverpool. Contributions will be [illegible] by a full from his employers, at the moment he wished to see [illegible] effect from a touch of a trust that [illegible] Fry, and her child, may be [illegible] of which no [illegible] parties, parts cases of which so recently appeared in the public papers. The deceased and his family were much respected in the neighbourhood. This sad case is strongly recommended by the Rev Charles Kingsley, the Rectory, Chelsea; the Rev R W Cadman, 9, Manor-terrace, Chelsea; the Rev Dr Wilson, Sydenham; Messrs Hatchard's, Piccadilly, who gratuitously will kindly receive donations in favour of the unfortunate Widow and Child.—Further particulars may be obtained upon application to William Lawrence, Esq, Sion Cottage, King's-road, Chelsea, of John Wood, Esq, Church-street, Chelsea; or of Mr John Weeks, horticultural builder, King's-road, Chelsea.

LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION, established by Royal Charter, 1720, for LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES.
Head Office—7, Royal Exchange, Cornhill. Branch Office—16, Regent-street
WILLIAM KING, Esq, Governor. EDWARD BURMESTER, Esq, Sub-Governor
JOHN ALVES ARBUTHNOT, Esq, Deputy Governor.

DIRECTORS.

Robert Allen, Esq	William Ib.ss, Esq	Charles Kerr, Esq
Bernard Beaglehole, Esq	Benamy Jacobs, Esq	Charles Lyall, Esq
George Barnes, Esq	James Dowse, Esq	John Ord, Esq
Thomas Bell, Esq, Esq	John Fuzes, Esq	George Peirse, Esq
Henry Blanshard, Esq	Samuel Gregson, Esq	Patrick F Robertson, Esq
Thomas Byrth, Esq	Charles Graham, Esq	Alexander Scott, Esq
J Weston Borradaile, Esq	John Alex Hankey, Esq	Thomas Wedding, Esq
Charles Crawley, Esq	Edward Harnage, Esq	Patrick P Wilson, Esq

WEST-END LOCAL COMMITTEE.—Two Members of the Court of Directors in Rotation, and Henry Ringrose, Esq; John Tod Pratt, Esq
LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Peter Hardy, Esq, F R S.

This Corporation has granted assurances on lives for a period exceeding 130 years, having issued the first policy on the 27th of March, 1722.

Two-thirds, or 66 per cent., of the entire profits are given to the assured.

Policies may be opened under any of the following tables:—

At a low rate of premium, entitling the assured, either after the first five years, to an annual abatement of premium for the remainder of life, or, after payment of the first premium, to a participation in the ensuing quinquennial bonus

The high character which this ancient Corporation has maintained during nearly a century and a half, secures to the public a full and faithful declaration of profits.

The Corporation bears the whole expenses of management, thus giving to the assured, in consequence of the premium reductions by its corporate fund, advantages equal to those of any system of mutual assurance.

Premiums may be paid yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly.

No entrance fee or other charge beyond the policy stamp.

The fees of medical referees are paid by the Corporation.

A policy may be effected for as small a sum as £20, and progressively increased up to £30, without the necessity of a new policy.

Every facility will be given for the transfer or exchange of policies, or any other settlements arrangements will be made for the convenience of the assured. JOHN LAURENCE, Secs.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—ALTERATION of TIME on and after 1st APRIL. The Morning Express Train will leave Paddington at 8.45 A.M., instead of 9.30 A.M.

The Afternoon Train from Swindon to Gloucester and Cheltenham will leave at 7.45 A.M., instead of Eight o'Clock. Other Alterations may be seen in the Time Books.

GERMANY.—A Beneficed Clergyman and his Wife, about to visit Germany in the Spring, wish to receive into their Family ONE or TWO YOUNG PERSONS. Great Advantages offered, and the highest references given and required. Address Clericus, Mr Lumley, Bookseller, 126, High Holborn, Lond n

NOTICE.—The Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS can have their Volumes Bound in the appropriate Covers, Gilt Edged, at 3s per Volume, by sending to our carriage paid, with Post-Office order payable to LEIGHTON, SON, and HODGE, 13, Shoe-lane, London

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Jessie's Catechism.—Saunders's Art of Singing—Lamartine on the Restoration of Monarchy in France Vol. 2.
MUSIC.—The Surprise Polka.—L'Desir d'Amore.

WITH THIS WEEK'S "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS" IS GIVEN A MUSIC SUPPLEMENT, GRATIS.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1852.

THE question to be decided at the approaching general election will not be what many of the friends of the existing Administration wish it to be considered —whether we shall have a Conservative or a Liberal Government. No such issue will be determined. The point that will be raised is, whether our bread shall be taxed or untaxed—whether the law, under the operation of which Great Britain is prosperous and happy, with a fully-employed and welled population, shall be respected, and considered irreversible. Conservative and Protectionist are by no means convertible terms. The truest Conservative, as well as the ablest Minister of our day, was the great statesman who repealed the Cornlaws, and converted Free Trade from a splendid theory into a still more magnificent fact. The common sense of the country will bear this in mind in the elections. Lord Derby may be a Conservative Minister, though, when he appeals to the country to annul a great enactment, his title to be considered a Conservative may well be disputed; but his political faith includes something else than Conservatism. In fact, his Lordship is in one respect a Destructive; for if there be any value in words, we are justified in believing what he has twice repeated in Parliament since he assumed the responsibilities of office—that he denies the justice of an existing law, and would abrogate it immediately if he had the power to do so. Mr. Cobden and the League are far better Conservatives at the present time than Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli. If we are to look for the opponents of reckless and unnecessary change in our laws and institutions, we must look for them not on the Ministerial, but on the Opposition benches in both Houses of Parliament. The intelligent constituencies of the empire will not be deluded into the idea that they will support Conservatism by supporting a bread-tax. The great principle to be decided will be kept steadily and clearly in view, however much the friends of a protective, prohibitory, and anti-commercial system of trade may seek to perplex, mystify, bemuddle, and confound it. A bushel of chaff may be heaped upon the grain of wheat that gives occasion to the controversy, but the bread-eating people of the large towns will be able to see their way to the substance of the dispute. We know already how they will decide it. Yet it is possible that in the next parliament the small towns may defeat the large ones, the decaying boroughs overbalance the prosperous ones, and that the Free-traders may find themselves in a minority. It is possible, too, that Lord Derby may consider himself strong enough, in the autumn of 1852 or the spring of 1853, to attempt to return to a Protective policy. This would be the worst misfortune that could befall the country. The minority in which the Free-traders would find themselves would not be so small or so powerless as that which surrounded the few members of the first Anti-Corn-law League, when, as almost unknown men, they so modestly commenced their operations in Manchester. They organised themselves at a time when Sir Robert Peel was as yet unconverted; when Lord Melbourne declared that the repeal of the Corn-laws would be madness; and when Lord John Russell thought that there were justice and healing virtue in a fixed duty of eight shillings. Yet that small minority converted, in the sound and practical statesmanship, and all the intellect of the nation, to its own views, and thus became a powerful and overwhelming majority. The same results would again ensue were the Free-traders—by an improbable, but not impossible, mischance—to be placed in a minority in the new Parliament. They would not, because they could not, cease to stir the question. They would have fewer converts to make; they would have the successors of Sir Robert Peel to fight in their ranks; they would have the whole weight and influence of the Whig and Liberal parties; and, being backed by all the large towns without any exception, and by the populous and industrious manufacturing districts, they would, in due time, become a majority again, far more powerful and irresistible than before. It was hoped that Lord Derby himself would have foreseen this result, and that he would have forborne to meddle with the established order of things. If his Lordship desires, as we must believe he does, to serve his country, and to render for his own name worthy to rank among those of the illustrious Ministers who have gone before him, the most fortunate thing that can happen for him will be a thorough and unmistakeable defeat. Yet we cannot help thinking that he would have served his country far better, and entitled himself far more certainly to a niche in the temple of its worthies, if he had had the courage to think a little less of his own consistency, and a little more of the new truth that has evidently dawned upon his mind. He has refused to repeal the Navigation-laws, which shows how his thoughts are tending; and yet, on a point of mistaken chivalry to his party, he has shrunk from the responsibility of applying the same argument to the Corn-laws. He has thus lost a noble opportunity. He might have saved his credit with his party by deploring that the Corn-laws had ever been repealed;—and saved it with the country, at the same time, by declaring that he would not interfere with the settlement made six years ago, upon the ground that the result, if attainable, would not be worth the fearful struggle which it would cost. He might then have devoted himself to practical measures, and entitled him self to be considered a conservative, and a wise Minister. But, whatever may be the verdict which the electors of to-day or to-morrow shall pass upon him, we may be certain, that, having allowed the opportunity to pass, and stirred up a controversy that were far better had it been left to die away, posterity will deny his Conservatism, and reject his wisdom as worse than foolishness.

THE present Government promises to devote its attention to the subject of taxation; and Mr. Disraeli has even invited those who consider themselves injured by the operation of any particular impost, to lay their case before him. We are glad to learn that the grievance and wrong inflicted by the bundle of taxes popularly and justly known as the Taxes on Knowledge, will be among the first that will solicit his attention. The motion of Mr. Milner Gibson for the repeal of the Advertisement Duty, of these Excise Duty upon Paper, and of the Stamp Duty upon newspapers, has been fixed for the 6th of April, and we trust that upon that occasion the friends of popular education will not be found absent. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, whatever his present opinions upon cheap corn and bread may be, is known to have such literary sympathies as to dispose him to give an earnest attention to the subject of a tax that can be proved to render literature dear and bad, and to prevent useful knowledge from being accessible to the people in their own homes. It therefore becomes a duty all the more urgent upon the friends of popular enlightenment to support Mr. Milner Gibson the present time. It was of little or no use to moot the question while a statesman so obstinately prejudiced as Sir Charles Wood was the Financial Minister; but with Mr. Disraeli the case is different, as there appears to be in his mind no foregone conclusion upon the subject. Sir Charles Wood derived his only information —and that was erroneous—from Mr. M'Culloch; but Mr. Disraeli has proved that he has studied the question for himself. It is not likely that these taxes will be repealed in the present expiring Parliament; but the members of this expiring Parliament who hope to have seats in the next will not forget, if they are wise, that their votes on this subject will be jealously watched.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The sojourn of the Court at Osborne was brought to a close on Saturday last, when her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the youthful members of the Royal family, and attended by a numerous suite, left the Isle of Wight, and, crossing to Southampton in the Fairy Royal yacht, returned to town by a special train on the London and South Western Railway. The alteration in the usual route, viâ Gosport, on this occasion, arose from the roughness of the water at Spithead. Her Majesty alighted at the Nine Elms station, and proceeded thence (escorted by a detachment of the 7th Hussars) to Buckingham Palace, where the Royal party arrived shortly before six o'clock.

The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the other members of the household, attended Divine service on Sunday morning, in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley officiated. In the afternoon the Earl of Derby had an audience of her Majesty.

On Monday her Majesty and the Prince Consort visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester House. On the same day the Countess de Neuilly, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and the Prince de Joinville, visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace. In the evening her Majesty and the Prince Consort attended the performance of a French play.

On Wednesday her Majesty held her third Levee for the present season.

THE QUEEN'S LEVEE.

The Queen held a levee on Wednesday, at St. James's Palace. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Royal suite, arrived from Buckingham Palace shortly after two o'clock, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, and were received by the great officers of state

His Serene Highness Prince Nicholas of Nassau attended the levee.

The Queen wore a white silk train, brocaded with silver, and trimmed with silver bands and pink satin ribbons. The petticoat was of white satin and tulle, trimmed with pink satin ribbons and silver. Her Majesty's head-dress was formed of diamonds, with a green wreath.

The diplomatic circle, which was very numerously attended, was first introduced. After some presentations had taken place, the general circle, among whom all the members of the new Ministry were observed, paid their respects to her Majesty.

The Duchess of Northumberland had an assembly on Saturday evening, at Northumberland House.

The Marchioness of Salisbury received a large circle of the aristocracy, after a grand banquet given by the noble Marquis, on Monday evening, in Arlington-street.

The Countess of Jersey had a "reception" on Tuesday evening, at the family mansion in Berkeley-square.

The Earl of Derby received the members of the Cabinet at dinner on Wednesday evening, in St. James's-square.

The Countess of Malmesbury had an assembly on Wednesday evening, in Whitehall gardens. The Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, and Lord and Lady John Russell were present.

Miss Burdett Coutts gave a grand dinner to his Grace the Duke of Wellington, consisting of forty guests, on Tuesday evening; and subsequently had a "reception," which was attended by a numerous and brilliant company.

We regret to announce the premature demise of the youthful Mrs. Kemeoxis, wife of Captain Kingscote, and daughter of Colonel Wyndham, who expired on Friday week at the Grove, Sussex. Mrs. Kingscote had only just completed her 22d year.

The Marquis of Chandos has been appointed Keeper at the Privy Seal of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in the room of Sir William Gibbes, Bart., resigned.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Alfred Mansell as Consul at Guernsey for his Majesty the King of Denmark.

Mr. John King, delegate from the colony of Victoria, was presented at the levee by the Right Hon. Sir John Pakington on Wednesday last, as the bearer of an address to her Majesty from the inhabitants of the colony of Victoria, expressive of their devoted loyalty and attachment to their Sovereign, and of their sincere thanks to her Majesty for the erection of their province into a separate colony of the British empire, under the Royal name of Victoria.

Mr. Stephens, chief superintendent of police at Birmingham, has been presented by the Liberal association of that town, on the part of the Emperor of Austria, with a magnificent gold snuff-box, marked with diamonds, &c., and, in the second at each corner of the lid, the whole valued at £7 0, for his services in effecting the apprehension and conviction of Hill, the forger on the bank of Vienna. Mr. Minty, mercl ant of Liverpool, has been presented by his Excellency with a splendid diamond ring, for his services as interpreter to the Emperor. Mr. G. Leadbuter, who was also instrumental in Hill's arrest, and a person of the name of Molitani to justice, for forgeries on the Austrian Government, has been presented with a magnificent gold watch, an accompaniment to the watch presented to the superior, and of the commercial traveller of the house to whom the forgeries were committed, £50 to the former and £20 to the latter. Inspector Bunning, clerk of £6,000 a year; one chief clerk, £700; one junior clerk, £150; four assistant clerks, £1,183; five junior clerks, £1,000; and messengers, £300. The salaries of the clerks annually increase to a certain amount

Mr Minter, the young Englishman who was cut down by an Austrian officer at Florence, was at Genoa on the 15th. The Genoa Gazette states that his face is marked with a large scar.

Accounts, by way of Bahia, have been received, very contradictory in many points, that Mr. Hogg, late a member of the legislative council of New South Wales, has perished in a fray with the natives of one of the group of islands called the Solomons His vessel, the Wanderer, in which he was returning from California to Sydney, had, it is said, been subsequently wrecked, but the details of this occurrence, like those of his alleged death, are so little consistent with each other as to throw very considerable doubts on the whole narrative. Further information is obtained and considerable credence is given to Mr. Hogg's safety.

APPOINTMENTS IN POST OFFICES.—An order has been issued from the General Post office, declaring that—1. After 31st March, 1852, the undermentioned fifteen minor money-order offices will be raised to major money-order offices, and postmasters must amend their money-order lists of offices accordingly; and, after that date, pay orders issued at those offices on receipt of the corresponding advice direct from the office of issue: Aberaeron, Glamorganshire; Bedale, Yorkshire; Bridlington Quay, Yorkshire; Budleigh Salterton, Devonshire; Clewdon, Somersetshire; Darwen, Lancashire; Eccles, Lancashire; Hasslingden, Lancashire; Heckmondwike, Yorkshire; Holmfirth, Yorkshire; Hyde, Lancashire; Lytham, Lancashire; Newton, near Warrington, Lancashire; Oxbury, Staffordshire, Stokesley-bridge, Durham. 2. After the 31st March, 1852, the undermentioned 14 major money-order offices will be reduced to minor money-order offices, and post masters must be careful to correct their money-order lists according.y, and, after that date, as required by the regulations, to pay no money-order issued at these offices, unless the corresponding advice shall have been received by them through the chief money-order office, London, with the stamp of that office affixed to the document:—Andover road, Hampshire; Arlington, Cambridgeshire; Camborne, Cornwall; Caxton, Cambridgeshire, Chumleigh, Devonshire; Ermebridge, Devonshire; Gerrard's-cross, Buckinghamshire; Helmster, Somersetshire, Marazion, Cornwall; Stockenchurch, Oxfordshire Wheatley, Oxfordshire; Winchfield Hampshire; Yealhampton, Devonshire.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.—An important decision, affecting the future management of this college, has just been come to by the president and fellows. The demyships, which, up to this time, have been appointed to by this industrial fellows in rotation, are now to be competed for by examination. It has been determined also to receive commoners for education, as at other colleges. These are both departures from the strict letter of the statutes, none of these early foundations being designed for general education; but it was wisely considered, that, as they have in other respects, for their own convenience, as for instance in regard to the residence of the fellows, relaxed their statutes, they should make some compensation by using revenues not originally belonging to them. The same step was taken about a year since by Corpus Christi College; so that now New College and All Souls stand alone in not receiving under-graduates beyond those who form part of their original foundation.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently received testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev J. Harris, from the inhabitants of Bingham, Nottinghamshire, on resigning the curacy; the Rev. J. Fisher, incumbent of Heapey, Lancashire, from friends; the Rev. A. Bowles, on his resigning the charge of Ripley, Surrey, from the inhabitants; the Rev. R. W. Dr. Davies, of Court-y-Gollen, from the ratepayers, on his retiring from the office of chairman of the Board of Guardians; the Rev. T. Martin, of Withyham, on his resigning the office of chairman of the Hawerthwaet quarter-sessions; the Rev. R. Pugh, of Christ Church, Mostyn, Flintshire, from parishioners and friends; the Rev. E. F. T. Ribbons, assistant-curate, and head-master of the Grammar-school, Leek, from members of the congregation and other friends; the Rev. F. Swanton, of St. John, Winchester, from his parishioners.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following preferments and appointments have recently taken place:—Canonry: The Ven. Archdeacon Thorpe, in Bristol Cathedral. Colonial Canonries: The Rev. E. Judge, the Ven. E. Harrison, the Rev. W. A. Newman, the Ven. E. Welby, the Rev. F. M. White, to be canons of Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope. Honorary Canonry. The Rev. G. Rooke, to Durham Cathedral Deanery Rural: The Rev. J. Griffiths, to Llangynllo, Cardigan. Rectories: The Rev. J. Child, to St. Breock, Cornwall; the Rev. S. H. Hughes to Llansagrad and Llansilgo, Anglesey; the Rev. R T. Lowe to Lea, Lincolnshire; the Rev. W. Williams to Masamynis and Llanvyllin, Montgomeryshire; the Rev. E. Edwards to Malwyd, Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire, the Rev. J. A.P. Llewellin to Bekkor, Kent; the Rev. E. B. Heawood to Allington, Kent; the Rev. J. H. L. Cameron to Buckhorn Weston, Dorset.

OXFORD.—In a Convocation holden on Tuesday, a clause was added to the examination statute authorising the pro-proctors to assist the masters of the schools by their presence during their examinations in writing for the responsions; and a decree was passed, by which the number of candidants will be limited to about 240 per annum each. A Convocation will be holden on Thursday, April 8, at two o'clock, for the purpose of electing a Professor of Political Economy, in the room of Nassau William Senior, M.A., of Magdalen College, whose term has now expired.

CONSECRATION AT PRESTWICH.—On Thursday morning, the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Manchester consecrated the new church of St. Margaret, Rooden Lane, a chapel of ease to the parish church of Prestwich. It will accommodate 800 persons. It has been built by subscription; the principal subscriber being Lord Wilton, who also gave the land for the church and churchyard.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—The Rev. R. Whiston has been elected national, but the hearing of the appeal against the election and claims of Jones is fixed for Monday, the 5th of April, at eleven o'clock, in Doctors' Commons.

ECCLESIASTICAL INQUIRY AT ITS REPORT.—A commission has been issued by the archbishop of Canterbury, addressed to the Chancellor of the diocese, the Rev. Canon Morgan, Rev. R. Lane Freer, and the Rev. John Venn, authorising them, under the provisions of the Church Discipline Act, to inquire into and report upon several charges preferred against the Rev. Edward Thompson, D.D., the vicar of Eington, with Hunterston, Brittay, and Michael Church annexed. The charges have been brought forward by several of the reverend gentleman's parishioners, and the commissioners have arranged that the inquiry shall be opened at Hereford in the beginning of April.

The Leeds Intelligencer states by authority, "that the Rev. W. H. Bathurst has resigned the rectory of Barwick-in-Elmet, in consequence of some conscientious scruples, but that he will continue a member of the Church of England, and has no intention of joining any body of dissenters."

The Bishop of Ripon preached the anniversary sermons at the parish church, Halifax, on Sunday last, when collections were made amounting to £60 on behalf of the Sunday-schools.

A beautiful window of stained glass has recently been erected in the chancel of St. Paul's Church, Holme Cultram, to the memory of the late Mr. John Messenger, of Eastcott, near Skibburnless, who was a zealous promoter of the building of the church.

It is rumoured that the Rev. J. Watson, M.A., curate of Long Whalton, in the diocese of Peterborough, has seceded from the Church and joined the Church of Rome.

SECESSIONS FROM THE CHURCH OF ROME.—It is reported that Lord Beaumont and his sister, the Hon. Miss Stapleton, have both seceded from the Church of Rome, and become members of the Church of England. The event of Lord Beaumont's secession has been for some time deemed probable. Lady Lovaine has also always been a member of the Church of England. Her Ladyship is daughter to Lord Kilmaine. The Hon. Mr. Stapleton, brother to the noble Lord, seceded from the Church of Rome about fifteen months since. Bell's Messenger.

"CURSING" A MAGISTRATE BY A CLERGYMAN.—A most extraordinary, novel, and exciting scene was witnessed at the Flordon station on Saturday evening. When the five o'clock train from Norwich arrived there, the passengers were much surprised at seeing the Rev. Mr. Ward, the curate of the parish, standing in the passage of the station-house, dressed in his canonicals. It was, however, soon unwarranted that he was waiting there to "curse" a neighbouring magistrate, who was expected by the train, and who had given him some presumed offence. When the individual above alluded to was giving up his ticket to the station-master, the rev. gentleman thus addressed him:—"I utter a curse upon the man. I curse you; I curse you; I curse you, and your children: I curse all you have—may your children be fatherless and vagabonds, and beg their bread," &c.; and thus he went on until the "cursed man" drove off. We understand that the matter has been laid before the Bishop, and the rev. gentleman, in default of finding sureties to keep the peace, was committed on Sunday night to the Castle, by Edward Howes, Esq.

A NEW RELIGIOUS SECT.—For some time past there has been in existence a religious sect under the direction of a man named Vintras, which not only entertains very peculiar doctrines, but pretends to possess the power of working miracles. The noted Rose-Tamisier, who got up the pretended miracle of a bleeding picture in a village near Aix, was one of the leaders. The headquarters of the sect were at Thuy-sur-Soulles, near Caen. Their goings on have for a length of time been a nuisance and a scandal. A few days ago the Prefect of the Calvados caused all the members of the sect to be arrested, their papers and things used in worship to be seized. Amongst the persons captured are three priests under interdiction for misconduct, and two ladies, occupying a respectable position in society the Countess d'A. and the Marquise de S.—Galignani.

A MORMON MIRACLE.—A boiler-maker, who was a Mormonite, met with a severe accident lately at Birmingham from the bursting of a gauge cock while he was at work, and struck him on the eye with such force as to destroy the pupil. The man was recommended to go to Dr. Neill, the eminent oculist, at the Eye Institution, Monmouth-street, Birmingham, before he quitted the town, going to the elders for the laying on of hands, &c., that his sight might be restored. The elders saw the difficulty, and consulted together, when one of them with a strong Yankee access nt said, "Well, have you faith?" "Yes," was the answer. "Wal, what did the tells you to do?" Answer "They advised me to go to Dr. Neill." "Very well," said the elder, "Du you go to Dr. Neil, and whatever he does we will bless, and God will bless it too." The man accordingly went to Dr. Neil, but whether the pupil of the eye was restored or not, he got his vision in another way, and saw enough of Mormonism to leave it.

NEW APPLICATION OF VAPOUR BATHS.—A letter from Vienna, of the 18th, says:—"A discovery of the greatest importance to the agricultural districts has recently caused great sensation here. For the last two years an epidemic disease has decimated the horned cattle, and caused ruin to the breeders. The veterinary art was as powerless to arrest the malady as that of the physician to stop the progress of the cholera Two premiums of 75 000 francs each, one offered by the Austrian and the other by the Russian Government, have hitherto remained unclaimed. At length, a Dr. Gutbrod, a veterinary surgeon, has come forward, having, it is said, discovered an infallible remedy in the application of vapour baths.

FIRE AT BROYDON.—On Wednesday morning an extensive fire broke out in Surrey-street, Croydon, by which the premises of the following persons were destroyed; viz. Mr. Burt, corn-factor; Mr. Nash, clog and pattenmaker; and Mr. Ringham, house-decorator. They were, however, all insured.

LOSS OF THE "AMAZON."—The commissioners appointed to conduct the official enquiry into the loss of the Amazon have just published their report, in which they furnish a condensed narrative of the chief occurrences connected with the unhappy disaster, and a summary of the evidence which went to point out for the origin of the fire. The great loss of life which occurred they consider to have been owing to too great a desire of the superior officers to save their vessel, by postponing their endeavours to subdue the flames, which soon became beyond control, instead of enforcing order and arrangement at the first with respect to the escape of the crew and passengers in the boats added to the mischievous effects of the course upon which the boats rested, and to the impossibility of stopping the engines after the engine-room had been abandoned. They recommend that all seagoing steam-vessels carrying passengers should have fixed on board a steam-pump, either connected or unconnected with the engine, which can be worked by hand when the steam is not up; and that in large vessels a close means of subduing fire should be increased by the use of a donkey and additional fire-engines. They recommend other precautionary measures against fire. The report concludes with an acknowledgment, that the code of instructions issued by the Royal Mail Steam-packet Company to the commanders is superior to any in use in the merchant service.

FOURTH GENERAL REPORT OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England have issued their fourth general report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

The following comprises the main features of general interest in the document, the other parts referring solely to various plans for improved territorial arrangements:—

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England submit, in accordance with the provisions contained in the 26th section of the Act 13 and 14 Vict, c. 94, a report of their proceedings for the year preceding the 1st of November now last past.

The commissioners in their last report adverted to the defalcation of their late treasurer and secretary. They have now to state, that, during the year which has since elapsed, they have received the legacy to which reference was then made, and also a sum of £290 remitted from abroad, in further diminution of the debt due to the commissioners.

The commissioners stated in their last report that they had taken preliminary steps for procuring the septennial return, contemplated by the Act 6 and 7 Will. 4, c. 77, of the revenues of all the archbishoprics and bishoprics of England and Wales. This return, which includes the year 1850, has been since received, and has been laid before the House of Commons, in compliance with two addresses, dated respectively the 7th of June, 1850, and the 10th of February, 1851. (See Parliamentary Paper No. 400, of Session 1851.)

The necessity for these septennial returns in future has been superseded by the provisions contained in the Act 13 and 14 Vict., cap. 94, which require that every Bishop thereafter appointed should receive the fixed annual income assigned to his see, without reference to the actual produce of its revenues.

The commissioners having taken into consideration the best mode of carrying out the last-mentioned provisions, have passed a scheme, which has since been ratified by an order of her Majesty in council (Appendix No 1, No. 548, p. 81).

The provisions of that scheme apply to all Archbishops and Bishops succeeding to their respective avoidances happening after the 1st of January, 1846, and take effect from the commencement of their respective incumbencies. With respect to any other Archbishop or Bishop, the commissioners are only empowered to regulate the income of his see, according to the provisions of the same act, upon the expression on his part of a willingness to accept a fixed annual income. The commissioners have received applications from several Bishops who are desirous of availing themselves of those provisions.

A considerable number of proposals has been made by the lessees of estates vested in the commissioners, either for the purchase of the reversions of or for the sale of the leasehold interest in such estates. As the circumstances in which these proposals relate are very different, the commissioners have not deemed it expedient to lay down any definite general rules, but, in considering them, have felt it to be their duty, in ordinary cases, to pay due regard to the recommendations in the report of the Committee of the House of Lords in the last session of Parliament in relation to this subject. It may be well here to observe, that the Act 13 and 14 Vict., c. 104, founded on the report, which gave to lessees of ecclesiastical corporations to sell to their lessees the reversion of, or to purchase the leasehold interest in, the estates belonging to such corporations, does not apply to the portion of church property which is vested in the commissioners.

The total number of benefices permanently augmented by the commissioners, up to the 1st of November last, amounted to 820, with an aggregate population of 2,581,299; and the sums now payable by the commissioners in augmentation of the incomes of these benefices, exclusive of the value of land and tithe rent-charge actually annexed in certain cases, amount in the aggregate to £44,744 per annum, or thereabouts.

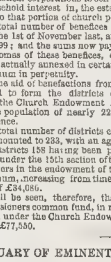
By the aid of benefactions from private sources, the commissioners have been enabled to form the districts enumerated in the Appendix No. 14, p. 68, under the Church Endowment Act (6 and 7 Vict., c. 37), by which an aggregate population of nearly 22,000 have been provided with pastoral superintendence.

The total number of districts constituted under that act, up to the 1st of November last, amounted to 233, with an aggregate population of more than 826,000. Of these districts 138 having been provided with churches have become new parishes, under the 15th section of the act. The sums now payable by the commissioners in the endowment of these districts amount in the aggregate to £2,806 per annum, increasing from time to time, as churches are provided, to a maximum of £34,086.

It will be seen, therefore, that the permanent annual charge upon the commissioners common fund, in respect of augmented benefices and districts constituted under the Church Endowment Act, amounted on the 1st of November last to £77,550.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HENRY WHEATLEY, BART., C.B., G.C.H.



SIR HENRY WHEATLEY, of Hampton Court-green, Middlesex, who for several years Privy Purse to King William IV. and Queen Victoria, died on the 21st instant, at St. James's Palace, in the 74th year of his age. He was the third son of the late William Wheatley, Esq., of Lesney House, Kent (High Sheriff of that county in 1769), by Margaretha, wife, daughter of John Randall, Esq., of Charlton. At the age of eighteen he entered the 1st Foot Guards, in the campaign in Holland, serving under the Duke of York, receiving a wound in the neck 19th September, 1799. In 1807 he was Aide-de-Camp to Sir Harry Burrard; during the siege of Copenhagen, in 1808, participated in the victory of Vimiera; in 1810 accompanied the Guards to Cadiz, and in 11 shared in the glory of Barossa. After the accession of William IV., Sir Henry was given the rank of Major General in Hanover, made Keeper of the Privy Purse, and Receiver General of the Duchy of Cornwall, and honoured with the insignia of a Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order. His official appointments rendered him a favourite with the Sovereign, through whom he was created that of Privy Purse, and was then created a Baronet. Sir Henry married, February 13, 1806, Louisa, daughter of George Edward Hawkins, Esq., and had two sons, who both died young, and five daughters, three of whom survives.

SIR CHARLES FERGUSSON FORBES, K.C.H.

The death of Sir Charles Forbes occurred on the 22d inst., at his residence in Argyll street, in the 74th year of his age.

This gentleman, Deputy Inspector of Military Hospitals, a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, a Knight Commander of the Guelphic Order, and a Knight of Hanover, entered the medical service of the Army in May, 1798, was appointed Staff Surgeon in 1808, and became deputy Inspector-General in 18 . Sir Charles accompanied the expedition to Ferrol in 1800, was in Egypt in 1801, was present at the capture of St. Lucia and Tobago in 1804, and served through the whole of the Peninsular campaigns.

CAPTAIN SIR SAMUEL BROWN, R.N., K.H.

THIS gentleman, the eldest son of William Brown, Esq., of Borland, county Galway, was born in 1776, and entered the Royal navy. In the Assistance, of 50 guns, he was present at the capture of the French frigate Surveillante, and, when Second Lieutenant of the Phœnix, took part in the capture of the Didon, another French frigate. In the same ship he fought as First Lieutenant, in Sir Richard Strachan's action off Ferrol, and received for that service the war medal.

Sir Samuel was the inventor of chain cables, chain bridges, and piers of suspension. "Of the latter (we quote O'Byrne's "Naval Biography") it may be sufficient to indicate, as standing monuments of his genius, the bridge across the river Tweed, which was commenced in 1819, and finished in 1820, and the Pier at Brighton."

In 1835 king William IV. gave him the third class of the Guelphic Order; and in 1838, her present Majesty conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. He married, in 1842, Mary, youngest daughter of the late John Home, Esq., W.S., which lady survives.

Sir Samuel's death occurred on the 13th inst., at his residence, Vanbrugh lodge, Blackheath.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION BILL.—The bill to abolish the property qualification for members of Parliament has been printed. It contains on y one clause, which repeals the former acts, or parts of acts, relating to this point, providing also, that, by so doing, it shall not be construed to revive any former acts repealed by the above acts or parts of acts.

SUBSTITUTE FOR FUEL.—On Saturday evening there was a private view, at the Polytechnic Institution, of the "new iron," recently patented by Dr Bachhoffner and Mr. Dairies. The process consists in substituting for coals in the ordinary grate thin lamina of iridescent ble metal, which, being acted upon by gas, instantly ignites, and expends a large amount of radiating surface, securing a cheerful bright open fire. It is proposed to employ a non-carbonaceous gas, obtained from the decomposition of water, which has no unpleasant smell or injurious effect incident to the use of any other gas. There is a complete absence of smoke, dust, ashes, and other annoyances which attend upon the present system of coal fires. It can be lighted at a moment's notice, and the material being indestructible, the only expense is that of the gas which can be supplied at the cost of 1s. 6d. per 1000 feet. The advantages are manifold. The gas is not open to the usual objections entertained against its adoption in private residences. It is perfectly clean, gives a great heat, capable of being regulated to the greatest nicety, and consequently well adapted for culinary purposes. For this reason it will prove a great boon to invalids. From experiments which have been made, the saving is about 30 per cent. over that of a coal fire, the cost for a single one in a large-sized room being about 3d per day. In a sanitary point, the benefit conferred will be immense; for, as is well known, the heat produced from the combustion of gas far exceeds that of any other material. We shall, at once be relieved from the injurious effects of smoke, either from dwelling houses, furnaces, or factories. There is no reason why the atmosphere of the metropolis and other densely crowded cities should not be rendered as clear and uncontaminated as that of the purest country district. It is the intention of the patentees to form a company to carry out this invention and to make application or an act of Parliament.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, THE RIGHT HON. B. DISRAELI, M.P.

THE career of Mr. Disraeli is the latest, and, all things considered, the most striking instance of the scope afforded to talent in the working of the British Constitution. Little more than twenty years have passed since Mr. Disraeli first commenced a public life, under circumstances that forbade the hope that he could ever reach great distinction. Scarcely fifteen years have passed since he first obtained a seat in the House of Commons; and, with the impetuosity which marked his earlier character, essayed at once to take captive the assembly by a high-flown style of eloquence. Perhaps there never occurred in that place a failure so utter and so hopeless as that which attended this maiden effort. Its consequences pursued Mr. Disraeli for years after; nor was he able for a considerable time to open his lips in debate, so keen was his recollection of the hootings and laughter which greeted his first speech. This occurred in the year 1837; yet, at the commencement of 1852, you find the perpetrator and victim of this fiasco elevated by his own talents alone to the highest post that can be enjoyed in the British Senate, that of Leader; and called by his Sovereign to her councils to fill the high and responsible office of Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The public life of Mr. Disraeli, though brief, has been so crowded with incidents, that we cannot hope to do more in this sketch than touch a few of the salient points. We shall, however, be enabled to indicate the main causes of his early failures, and of his subsequent success.

Mr. Disraeli, as probably all our readers already know, is the son of the late I. Disraeli, Esq., of Bradenham, Bucks, the author of the "Curiosities of Literature" and other valuable works, which have had the most beneficial effect on the public mind. He was the son of Mr. Benjamin Disraeli, a Venetian merchant. The subject of our Memoir was born in the year 1806; and those who remember him in childhood and youth speak of the vivacity, spirituality, and daring temperament, which promised that he would at least achieve something during his life. In a late speech to his constituents in Bucks, Mr. Disraeli, alluding to some of his earlier political follies, said that he had "sown his wild oats," and that he hoped he was none the worse for having done so. If we are to judge from the many records before us, the stock on hand must have been considerable, for the crop of follies was enormous.

After going through the present school routine, Mr. Disraeli was, we believe, for a short time placed in one of the large mercantile houses in the City; but, of course, more as an amateur than with any view to his adopting that class of pursuits. His destination was marked from the first. He commenced to wield his pen at a very early age; nor, as generally in such cases, were his effusions unworthy of publication. If we are not misinformed, some of the smaller and more fragmentary works published with his name attached in later years were reproductions, revised and pruned, of those boyish efforts.

Mr. Disraeli's first work gave promise of a most brilliant literary career. That a novel like "Vivian Grey" should have been written and produced at the age of twenty seems almost incredible. Amidst many extravagances, there is in it so much insight into character and motives; so much masterly satire; so new, fresh, and poetical an aspect is given to the commonplaces of society, that its author was at once hailed as a prodigy of genius. He became the "lion" of the hour; and there cannot be a doubt that the flattery he then received exercised an injurious influence on his character, causing much of the extravagance which marked the greater portion of his earlier career.

Our limits forbid our giving more than a mere enumeration of Mr. Disraeli's works. "Vivian Grey," which was written in London, was succeeded by "Contarini Fleming," an extraordinary attempt to develop the formation of the poetical character. Then came the second part of "Vivian Grey," closely followed by "The Young Duke," the "Wondrous Tale of Alroy," the "Revolutionary Epic," "Henrietta Temple" (published in November, 1836), "Venetia" (May, 1837), and "Alarcos," a tragedy, published in June, 1839. After these exertions, Mr. Disraeli rested in a great measure from literary labour. It was not until 1844 that he produced his "Coningsby," which was speedily followed by "The Sybil" and "Tancred." Besides these works of pure fiction, Mr. Disraeli has from time to time written some remarkable political pamphlets. Among these are the "Letters of Runnymede," originally published in the Times, and invariably attributed to Mr. Disraeli; and the "Vindication of the English Constitution," a work exhibiting very remarkable views, which Mr. Disraeli has from time to time enforced in other ways. He has also published a new edition of his father's "Commentaries on the Life and Reign of Charles I.;" and his latest work was the "Political Biography of Lord George Bentinck," which has already gone through several editions.

Willingly would we have lingered longer over these literary works of Mr. Disraeli, many of which furnish a key to the inconsistencies of his political career; but our space does not allow of any such analysis. We now come to the chief incidents of Mr. Disraeli's life.

Soon after the publication of "Vivian Grey," its youthful author left England, and proceeded on a tour. It was while in Egypt that he wrote "Contarini Fleming." Returning from this first tour, he remained a short time in England, and then started afresh, proceeding to Spain, Greece, the Ionian Isles, Constantinople, Asia Minor, Syria, and again to Egypt. Here he planned and wrote "The Revolutionary Epic."

It was while in Egypt that he received intelligence of the great movement on Reform which then agitated England. He decided to return and take part in the struggle. The line he took was eccentric; yet there was something of prophetic foresight in it, of which he himself was scarcely conscious. The Whigs had carried the Reform Bill, and their majority was enormous. The Tories were, for the time, completely hors de combat; or, as their present leader then described them, "in a state of ignorant stupefaction," "haunted with nervous apprehension of that great bugbear, the People—that bewildering title under which a miserable minority contrive to coerce and plunder a nation." Looking at the Whigs as oligarchical tyrants, and the Tories as a spiritless party, Mr. Disraeli resolved to attach himself to the Radicals. It was more from antagonism to the Whigs, however, than from any admiration of the Radicals, that he sought this alliance. He thought that the downfal of the former was to be attained with more certainty through their agency than that of the Tories. He obtained letters of recommendation from Mr. Hume and Mr. O'Connell, armed with which he went down and sought the suffrages of the electors of High Wycombe. This was in 1832. It appears, however, that in the interval between the granting of these letters and the election, the real character of Mr. Disraeli's Radicalism had transpired; and Mr. Hume transferred his influence to that gentleman's rivals, who were returned by a small majority.

It was about this time that Mr. Disraeli published a singular pamphlet, entitled "What is He?" Earl Grey, hearing of the desire of young Disraeli to get into Parliament, had asked the question, "What is He?" to which our hero replied in some twenty pages of powerful and bitter attack upon the Whigs, couched in the spirit of his addresses to the electors of High Wycombe. This pamphlet, long since out of print, is quite a curiosity in its way.

Foiled at High Wycombe, Mr. Disraeli next contemplated an attack on Marylebone; but the expected elec ion did not occur, and he did not renew the attempt. He still, however, stood before the public as one who had desired to ally himself with the Radical party. What, then, was their astonishment at finding him, in 1835, contesting Taunton with Mr. Labouchere on the Tory side! Of course, he did not succeed; but his apparent change of opinion, and the events of the contest, gave rise to some excitement at the time, in which Mr. Disraeli played the principal part. In a speech at Taunton he had violently attacked O'Connell, calling him an "incendiary," a "traitor," a "liar in action and in thought," and using other epithets of the same gross kind. To this Mr. O'Connell replied more suo, tearing off Mr. Disraeli's Tory and Radical disguises, and covering him with abuse of the order in which he so well knew how to indulge when addressing a Dublin mob. It was in this speech that O'Connell hazarded his celebrated guess that "Disraeli was the true heir-at-law of the impenitent thief who stoned for his crimes on the cross," a sarcasm which drove its victim to seek "satisfaction" from O'Connell's sons. They declined, and Mr. Disraeli was obliged to enter into recognizances to keep the peace. He revenged himself, however, in a long letter to Mr. O'Connell, in which he overpowered him with censure, and at the same time vindicated his own consistency. His great point of difference with Mr. O'Connell he proclaimed to be Repeal of the Union, his agitation for which would make it impossible for them to co-operate. In defending his own consistency, the point he mainly relied on was that we have already referred to—that his Radicalism was only antagonism to the Whigs, and that his Toryism was now no inconsistency. He wound up his letter by a promise that he and O'Connell would "meet at Philippi," where he would "inflict upon him castigation for his lavish insults"

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, THE RIGHT HON. BENJAMIN DISRAELI, M.P.
FROM AN ENGRAVING JUST PUBLISHED BY MESSRS COLNAGHI.

During the two following years Mr. Disraeli's name was constantly before the public. He became a mark for the Whig writers; nor was he at all slow to reply to them. During this interval he wrote the "Runnymede Letters," and published his "Vindication of the English Constitution"

At length, towards the close of the year 1837, Mr. Disraeli was returned to the House of Commons, as representative of the borough of Maidstone. His literary reputation had at one time stood so high, and his late self-exhibitions had rendered his name so notorious, that the utmost curios ty was felt to see how this unscrupulous satirist of the follies and weaknesses of others would conduct himself in Parliament. He very speedily furnished his innumerable enemies and detractors with the most agreeable materials for their criticisms and censures. His "maiden" speech had none of the modesty of maidhood; couched in the hyperbolical language of many of his earlier works and later political effusions, the style was utterly unsuited to an assembly essentially utilitarian. The manner of the speaker exaggerated the faults of his matter. It was so exactly what the House had expected, from his more recent proceedings, that convulsions of laughter followed almost every sentence. For nearly half an hour not a word could be heard; and it was only at the very close of the speech, when the speaker was almost frantic with rage at the rude and unseemly interruptions he experienced, that he at last succeeded in impressing the ears of the reporters with the concluding words:—"I have begun," he said, "several times, many things, and have often succeeded at last. I shall sit down now, but the time will come when you WILL hear me!" It was not very long before this prophecy was signally fulfilled.

This terrible fiasco seems to have taught Mr. Disraeli a lesson. For a long time his voice was not heard, nor did his pen plunge him in fresh difficulties. When next he addressed the House of Commons—and, at a guess, we should say he scarcely opened his lips for a year or more—a marked change had taken place There was no more exaggeration or bombastic inflation of style, nor any of that presumptuous manner which, at his first essay, had so provoked the House. In 1839 he first displayed the fruits of his self-training and discipline, in an admirable speech on the case of the Charuste, whose political movements he attributed to their deep sense of social wrong. In 1840 and 1841, speeches he made on the case of Levet and Collins, and on the education and copyright questions, gained great approbation, and the House began to perceive that their first judgment had been somewhat too conclusive.

He had for some time become identified with the ardent young men who were known as the "Young England" party. Smal as this party was, its members were men of talent. There were Lord John Manners, Mr. Smythe, Mr. Augustus Stafford, Mr. Hope, and some others; and it was a small proof of growing influence that Mr. Disraeli should by common consent have been regarded as their leader. It was of much service to him to be thus associated, because responsibility habituated him to a still more severe discipline of his powers. He gained much applause, too, by his elaborate speech on our consular establishments in 1842; and during that year and 1843 he was a frequent speaker in general defence of the Ministers, although taking higher ground than that assumed by the habitual supporters of Sir Robert Peel.

In 1844 it was that he first reached the vantage-ground from which he at last sprang into power. It was then that he commenced those attacks on Sir Robert Peel, continued through 1845 and up to the middle of 1846, which accelerated the downfal of that statesman, and established his assailant as the most powerful wielder of the weapon of sarcasm that the time had produced. According to their pol.tical tendencies, men will applaud or condemn the views and imputations put forth in those masterly speeches; but no man in his senses will deny—still less those whose good fortune it was to hear them—that they were the most remarkable oratorical efforts of the contemporary period. That they were personal to the last degree, that they were sometimes disfigured by a virulence almost intolerable, that the license of Parliamentary warfare was stretched to its limits, that they took a low and a party view of the public services of a great man, who was offering himself up as a sacrifice to avert a civil strife between classes—all these propositions are self-evident. But as to their masterly power, their keen wit, their withering sarcasm, there cannot be a second opinion. And, in justice to Mr. Disraeli, it must be added, that the later and the more severe of these speeches were delivered after Sir Robert Peel had openly defied his late followers, had challenged to a combat à outrance the party of which, conjointly with Lord George Bentinck, Mr. Disraeli was now the chosen leader. The laws of party warfare allow great license. In such extreme cases as that of the sudden adoption of Free Trade by Sir Robert Peel, in 1845-46, and as long as we have "party" in this country, we must expect these ebullitions of its feelings. It is to the honour and credit of Mr. Disraeli, that, from the hour of Sir R. Peel's downfal, he never uttered a disrespectful word in his regard.

The accession of the Whigs placed Lord George Bentinck and Mr. Disraeli on the Opposition side of the House, but scarcely in opposition. The lamented death of Lord George Bentinck left to his friend the leadership of the party; not, however, the undisputed leadership, for there were men in the Tory ranks who could not and never would distinguish Parliamentary genius, and who thought that they could better guide than be, with their antediluvian official standing and their worn-out principles. Time, however, solved the difficulty. A miraculous change had come over Mr. Disraeli of late years. All his youthful vanity and presumption had passed away; he took the leadership of the Opposition as naturally as if he had been unanimously elected thereto, and long trained in party strife. Lord J. Russell soon perceived the kind of man he had to deal with, and almost immediately treated with him on the footing of an equal. Mr. Disraeli at once proclaimed to his party the impossibility of attempting a pure reaction; he taught them a more cunning mode of winning. Into these matters it is not our province to enter, further than to say that between the beginning of 1849 and the commencement of 1851 he had by his system of tactics so rallied his party and propitiated the House, as to have reduced the Whig majority, on the question of "justice to agriculture," from 140 in the present year to 14 in the latter. That comes the resignation of the Whigs, the unavailing attempt of the Tories to arrange terms and offices among themselves, and the restoration of Lord John Russell to power. In the autumn of 1851 Mr. Disraeli received the formal support of some of the most influential of the county members on his own side to his new scheme of "compensation." On the assembling of Parliament in 1852 (we need scarcely recall the fact to our readers) the Whigs again resigned; Lord Derby formed a Ministry, and Mr. Disraeli received the well-earned reward of his great services to his party. He was honoured by his Sovereign with a seat in the Privy Council, and was nominated to the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer, with the Leadership of the House of Commons. Such an instance of rapid rise is unparalleled. It was not until 1844 that Mr. Disraeli began to make his power felt in the House. In less than eight years he had received the highest honours that House can bestow; and he was further gratified by the spontaneous tribute of Lord John Russell (a first-rate judge), that his talents and services fully entitle him to the office he holds.

In the foregoing sketch we have omitted to mention that Mr. Disraeli was returned for Shrewsbury from 1841 to 1847; that in 1839 he married the widow of Wyndham Lewis, the former member for Maidstone; that on the death (in 1848) of his father, Mr. I. Disraeli, he succeeded to the family estate at Bradenham, in Bucks; and that in 1847 he was elected for that county, which he continues to represent.

The "Disraeli the younger" of 1837, and the Right Honourable Benjamin Disraeli, M.P., F.C., and Chancellor of the Exchequer, are two different persons. The former was a vain, presumptuous, forward egotist, but crammed with talent to the gorge. The latter is a matured, steady-going Parliamentary leader and Minister, who has effaced from the public memory the "Disraeli the younger" of 1837 as completely as if he had drunk of St. Leon's elixir. Mr. Disraeli is a very Proteus. He shook off the troublesome and somewhat ridiculous disguise of his earlier years, and became, from 1839 to 1844, a modest, painstaking pupil; from 1844 to 1846 he suddenly burst out as a perfectly polished and powerful debater, who for a brief period ruled the House of Commons with a power not granted even to the burning eloquence of a Sheil; from 1846 to 1852 he so gracefully and easily assumed the functions of leader of Opposition, conducting his party with a firmness, dignity, and courtesy that won involuntary respect, and we now find him as naturally and as ably fulfilling the still more arduous and responsible duties of a Minister of the Crown and manager of the House of Commons. Whatever may be the political or party predilections of the reader, he will at once admit that such a man is entitled for his abilities to the respect and admiration even of his opponents. It is in this spirit that we have put together the foregoing facts, as a just tribute to the genius of a man who has achieved such distinction in the literary and political world.

GREAT GRIMSBY DOCKS.

Six years have now elapsed since a far-seeing mercantile company fastened upon the spot which the sagacity of the old roving sea-kings chose to give them the command of the Humber; and there they commenced planting, in defiance of all natural obstacles, a new commercial city, to become the great entrepôt of the trade between western and northern and eastern Europe.

The initial works are now approaching completion. The company have pushed out into the domain of the rolling waters, and amid the treacherous mud they have raised massive superstructures, and thus added nearly 140 acres of solid land to the occupation of man; and there, by the happy union of science, capital, and labour, has been founded the finest harbour on the eastern coast of England.

The new Docks, when completed, will present a striking example of the advantage to be derived from a union of railways, docks, and warehouses, executed under one complete plan, and worked under one management. Grimsby, at the mouth of the Humber, five miles from its confluence with the sea, has in front a deep roadstead with excellent anchorage in blue clay, protected from the ocean by the promontory of Spurn Point. Great Grimsby Roads afford the only refuge between the Thames and the Firth of Forth. The Old Dock was purchased by the Manchester and Sheffield and Lincolnshire Company, when they decided on their "Water Terminus." It has an entrance-lock of 150 feet in length and 37 feet in width, with 18 feet on its sill at high tide. In 1845 they obtained an act for the new dock; the first stone was laid by Prince Albert on 18th April, 1849, and the very interesting celebration of this event was represented in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 367.

The entrance tidal basin has an area of 15 acres. Its depth at low spring tides is 9 feet; low neaps, 12¼; high springs, 27½; high neaps, 24½; at landing slip within the tidal basin the largest steamers can lie-to safely at any time of tide. The Dock is entered from its tidal basin by two locks of massive masonry, with double gates for ebb and flood tides. The larger lock, constructed (by arrangement with Government) to admit the largest war-steamers, is in length between gates 200 feet; breadth from wall to wall, 70; depth on sill at low spring, 7 feet; neaps, 10½; high springs, 25½; high neaps, 22½; at half-tide the average depth on sill, 16 to 17 feet; at three-quarters tide, 20 to 22 feet. The small or second lock is for general purposes, and is in length between gates 300 feet, breadth from wall to wall 45, and its sill being 9 inches below the large lock, it will have at half-tide a depth of water of 17 to 18 feet, and at three-quarter tide from 21 to 22 feet. The Dock has a water area of upwards of 35 acres, including timber pond at the upper end, and it will never contain a less depth of pure fresh water than 25 feet at its entrance, shoaling gradually to 20 feet at the timber pond; the general depth will be two feet more.

In constructing these works, 135 acres have been reclaimed; wharves or quays extend 3600 feet in length, quays to be traversed by railways from the main lines and into sheds and warehouses. Sheds are close to the quays 750 feet in length, and 50 feet in breadth, affording a covered area of 4000 feet, and a vaulted warehouse 150 feet square for free and bonded goods. All the machinery and the accessories are on the newest and most perfect principles, and the arrangements for passenger traffic and light or perishable merchandise are on an equally complete scale; the railway extending to the edge of a low water landing stage in the outer tidal-basin, where a station is built provided with accommodation for passengers, who, without leaving the cover of the station, may be carried by trains in attendance, as goods also may, to any part of England or Scotland. The extent of the work is best seen from a brick tower, now in course of erection, 300 feet in height.

A communication is open to London, through Louth, Boston, and Peterborough, through Market Rasen to Lincoln, and, by the Midland Railway, with Nottingham and Derby, and the Great Northern Railway to Boston, through Gainsborough to Retford, where it communicates through the Great Northern with Doncaster and York, from Retford to Worksop, into Sheffield, where the Midland and Lancashire and Yorkshire Railways afford communication with Leeds, and all the Yorkshire clothing districts. The parent line completes a communication between Sheffield, Manchester, Liverpool, and all the hardware, iron, pottery, and cotton districts.

The works have been carried out from the beginning by Mr. Rendel, engineer-in-chief; Mr. Adam Smith, the resident engineer; and, for the last three years, by Messrs. Hutchings, Brown, and Wright, the contractors. The works are brought so nearly to a state of completion, that the piles of the cofferdam, which interpose between the lock-gates and the sea, only require to be removed to give access to the Dock.

To celebrate this important epoch in the history of the undertaking, the spirited contractors, Messrs. Hutchings, Brown, and Wright, gave on Thursday week, the 18th, a magnificent banquet, for the second and last time on which the lock-pit can be so occupied. The works and the shipping in the Old Dock were decked in their gayest colours. In the lock-pit a large marquee was erected, for the dining of more than 300 persons, for whom a sumptuous entertainment was provided by Mr. Longhurst, of the Yarborough Arms. Special trains were arranged to leave London and Manchester at 8 a.m., and to return in the evening, at the cost of the hospitable entertainers. The whole place was on the qui vive on the occasion. The London train reached Grimsby about half-past twelve, and the Manchester a little before one.

Soon after two o'clock the Earl of Yarborough took the chair, supported by the Earl of Powis, Lord A. Fagot, M.P., John Parker, Esq., M.P., J. A. Roebuck, Esq., M.P., E. Heneage, Esq., M.P., the Hon. Mr. Melville, J. M. Rendel, Esq., Mr. Adam Smith, and the following directors:—Messrs. John Chapman, C. Geach, M.P., S. Peto, M.P., W. Hutton, C. Gamble, W. H. Lees, S. Brook, C. F. Youngs, T. R. Barker, and T. Greig. Mr. Hutchings and Mr. Wright were vice-presidents.

The cloth having been withdrawn, the "Health of her Majesty" was drunk with loud cheers.

The noble chairman, in proposing the health of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, adverted to the speech made by the Prince when he laid the first stone of the Docks, and his Lordship hoped that some day his Royal Highness might persuade her Majesty to come with the Royal yacht to see these Docks after they were opened. (Cheers.) He thought it would be a very convenient way for her Majesty to go to Scotland, if the yacht were sent down to Grimsby, and at her Majesty coming down by the Great Northern, might embark at this Dock. (Cheers.) In no part of her dominions would her Majesty receive a more cordial welcome than in Lincolnshire. (Cheers.)

BANQUET IN THE LOCK-PIT, GREAT GRIMSBY NEW DOCK.

GREAT GRIMSBY NEW DOCK

The chairman next gave the "Health of the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal family." The vice-chairman gave the "Army and Navy." Lord A. Paget replying for the army, and Admiral Moresom for the navy. Mr. W. Hutton gave the "Bishop and Clergy of the Diocese;" and Mr. Hutchings gave the "Directors of the Railway with which these Docks were connected."

Lord Yarborough returned thanks for the latter toast, assuring the contractors that his colleagues and himself could not sufficiently express their thanks for the zeal and ability with which the works had been conducted (Cheers.) His Lordship then glanced at the difficulties of the works. They had excavated 140 acres from the sea. It was six years since the first pile was driven, and 60 000 trees had been used in the works. If those trees were set apart at the usual distance at which trees of such size ought to stand, they would occupy 500 acres. Among those trees were the largest oaks they could find. They could not find in England oaks large enough to make the great lock gates, and had to send to the Black Forest of Germany for them. If the engineer had calculated that the water they should be twenty-five feet below high water mark, they would understand that to keep out the water had been a source of no small labour and anxiety. They had seen to-day the masonry erected upon four-and-a-half acres; and the tower of brick-work, with the water in the tank, would weigh 6000 tons. These things tended to make Englishmen proud that in this country such stupendous works could be carried out, without being under the control or asking the aid of the Government. (Cheers.) His Lordship concluded by expressing the thanks of the board to the contractors, Messrs Hutchings, Brown, and Wright, and their gratification at the successful conduct of the works. They might congratulate themselves, also, on the choice of their engineer, Mr. Rendel—(Cheers) and of their resident engineer, Mr. Adam Smith—(Cheers)—as well as on the punctuality, perseverance, and indomitable energy of the contractors. (Cheers.)

Mr. Peto, M.P., said, that, to carry out such great works as these around them, they needed genius to design, and practical talent to execute. He knew that the engineer-in-chief and the resident engineer, having brought these works to a conclusion, were most anxious to see them prosper. They were within four hours of London and Manchester, and thirty-six hours of Hamburg, to reach which at this moment, by Ostend and railway, required forty-four hours. To Dresden and Berlin, by this route, they might reduce the time to seventy hours. The railways in connexion with these docks must afford to the principal towns of Lancashire and Yorkshire the nearest route they were looking to the north and east of Europe. If this were carried out, he believed the prosperity of the undertaking would be ensured. (Cheers.) He gave the "Health of Mr. Rendel, engineer-in-chief, and of Mr. Adam Smith, the resident engineer." (Cheers.)

Mr. Rendel returned thanks, and in the course of his address observed that the works above ground were only one-tenth of those sunk below it.

T. R. Barker, Esq., gave the "Health of John Fowler, Esq., engineer-in-chief of the railway."—(Cheers) who was unavoidably absent.

The Hon. Mr. Melville gave the "Health of Mr. Heneage, member for Grimsby," to which Mr. Heneage replied.

J. Chapman, Esq., gave the "Members for the borough of Sheffield." (Cheers.)

Mr. Parker returned thanks. Mr. Roebuck, who was loudly called for, and much cheered, also thanked the company in an eloquent speech, ably characterising the scientific skill of the Dock works.

Mr. Rendel then proposed the health of Messrs. Hutchings, Brown, and Wright, which was drunk with loud cheers.

Mr. Hutchings returned thanks, and stated several interesting facts as to the materials used in the works.

The Earl of Powis then gave the "Health of the noble Chairman," to which Lord Yarborough responded, giving "the Mayor and Corporation of Grimsby."

Mr. Greig then gave "the Officers of the Company," which was suitably acknowledged by Mr. Alport; and the proceedings closed, about half-past six, with the toast of "the Press," proposed by Mr. Geach, M.P.

The entertainment was provided by Mr. Longhurst, of the Yarborough Arms, and not by Messrs. Archer and Holt, as stated in our Journal of last week.

The water was let into the Dock on Tuesday morning, at half-past five, and the first boat was launched (for the resident engineers' amusement) before eleven o'clock The Dock gates answered far exceeding all anticipations, as they are in a technical sense waterproof.

LAW AND POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

Law Reform.—The supplement to the appendix to the first report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the process, practice, and system of pleading in the Court of Chancery has been printed this week. It contains the evidence of the Hon. Dudley Field, one of the commissioners on practice and pleadings, by whom the New York code of procedure was framed, and also the letters of seven of United States judges to that gentle man, giving the result of their observations on the practical operation of the blended system of law and equity practised in the American Republic. One of the judges (the Hon. L. H. Sandford) mentions the following equity cases, which it had become his duty to try with a jury:—

In one case, B. versus G. and E. M. S., the complaint stated a very lucrative partnership in the main octure of gold pens, which, in plaintiff's absence, and in direct violation of the articles, defendant G. fraudulently and excladed plaintiff from the concern. He prayed an injunction, a receiver, an account, and division of assets, and the damages by reason of the dissolution. The injunction was granted of course. Then came a motion for the appointment of a receiver. The former was denied, and the latter was appointed. Meantime defendants answered, justifying the dissolution by a legal misconduct, &c. for which the plaintiff claimed damages, and submitting to an account, &c. A judgment in part was entered by consent, directing the regular accounts to be taken, and a division made of the assets on hand. Both of these were done, and a report made and confirmed. The case was then tried before a jury, on the issues as to the dissolution and its causes, and the counter claims for damages. The trial occupied a week, and resulted in a verdict for plaintiff for 2500 dollars damages. This established the case in a final judgment, winding up the whole controversy. You will observe, that, under the old system, besides the Chancery suit for the account, a suit at law for the damages would have been inseparable.

Liberty in the "Model Republic!"—In the latter part of last week, William Bouston complained to the magistrate at the Thames Police-court, that he, a free-born British subject, had been sold into slavery by a sea captain, with whom he engaged as a steward for wages. Having obtained his register ticket as a seaman, he stated that he was born in Gibraltar in 1810. His father was a native of St Domingo, and his mother a London woman. An unfortunate years ago he shipped in the Brandt Cot, at Liverpool, as steward, for 3*l.* dollars a month. On the arrival of the ship at New Orleans, the vessel was sold, and the captain, Joseph M'Coy, sold him to an American, by whom he was taken to a place called Pelenpo, in St. Matthew county, where he remained in bondage five years. His owner having learned that measures were about being taken for his liberation, put him in irons, and sent him back to New Orleans, where he was again sold to the keeper of a negro pen. He was purchased by a British subject named Lynch, an Irishman, who hired him out to a Captain Wiles, by whom he was engaged to serve as a drummer in the army under Generals Taylor. He remained with the army for two years, received a severe wound in the head at the battle of Monterey, and a shot in the right eye at Buona Vista. When cured of his wounds, he was again sold to a boarding-house keeper in New Orleans, who would not detain him as a slave when discovered that he was a British subject but put him in gaol, and used Lynch for the purchase-money. Upon the expiration of fourteen months he was sold to another Irishman named Gardner, in New Orleans, and the purchase-money was apparently tendered to cover the expenses of his maintenance while in gaol. A lawyer named Howard, of Baker street, New Orleans, then became his purchaser, who soon afterwards transferred him, for a consideration, to Mr. Barber, a Scotchman, of Natchez. This person sold him to a Mr. Lapere, through whom he was enabled to communicate with Mr. Mayhew, the British Consul, who ultimately sent him to Liverpool, on board the ship Ann Doherty, and on the 1st of January he arrived at that port. He left Liverpool about the 13th inst., and was kept up to London, where he arrived in the early part of last week. The magistrate having ascertained that the captain who had first wronged him was not in his jurisdiction, and that complainant had no idea where he was, could give him no redress.

The Claychoss Collision on the Midland Railway.—At the last Derby Assizes, the widow of the late John Blake, Esq., obtained a verdict for 2*l.* 00 damages for the death of her husband, occasioned by a collision at Claycross in May last. The company have since steeds died in obtaining a new trial on the ground of misdirection by the judge. The case was to have been tried again at the present assizes, but a compromise has been effected, on the following terms:—The Midland Company to pay Mrs. Blake the sum of 2*l.*500. and each party to bear their own costs of the legal proceedings. It is stated that Mrs. Reynell, the widow of Wm. Reynell, Esq., a magistrate of the county of Derby, who was killed by the same collision, has accepted from the company the sum of 2*l.*000 in liquidation of all claims against them for the death of her husband.

On Saturday last, in the Marylebone County Court, before Mr. Amos and a jury, a Mr. Cutterbuck brought an action against a cab proprietor, named Rowtell, to recover the value of a box, estimated at 2*l.*6, which formed part of his luggage when he engaged the cab at the Paddington station, but which was not deposited with the other articles when he arrived at Hoxton. It was contended for the defendant, that, as cab proprietors only undertook to convey passengers, they were not liable for luggage which was taken gratuitously. The judge said it was evident that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, but left it to the jury to determine the value of the missing article. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages, 2*l.*

On Tuesday, a Mr. Joseph Tennyson, a surgeon in the Royal Navy, residing in Broughton-place, Hackney-road, was ordered by the magistrates at Worship street Police-office to find substantial bail for his good behaviour for the next three months, in consequence of having attempted, while in a state of great intoxication, to stab police-constable Arnold, who at the time was endeavouring to prevent him stabbing his wife in his surgery, on the previous day. The required sureties having been procured, the accused was liberated.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Mons—It is certainly easy to do, now you have a problem that it cannot be solved in less than the given number of moves; and you have only to find the "repeated solution, we are of opinion that you will have a very handsome problem in less

W S W—It is obvious at a glance that it will win, and how.

R D of Manchester—Your solution is correct in all but one variation. If you will score on the diagram again, it will be correct. 2. and the Black can gain nothing by 1 R takes P 2 K to Kt 5(ch) as White can mate in 3 moves, 2. K takes K, and gives Mate next move.

Two Members—You are favour'd with the name of the author.

H O'K, Liverpool—It is not necessary in this country to warn an adversary of his Queen's danger to saying "the Queen."

A Subscriber—The book of the Amateur Games, we understand, is now ready for delivery, and the supplies to subscribers will, no doubt, be duly transmitted

Delta—Send your communication early in the week.

An Old Subscriber—The Chess-Player's Chronicle is published monthly, at the office, 31, King William-street, Charing-cross. 2. Jaenisch's instructive work, the "Analyses Nouveaux," may be got of Williams and Norgate, the foreign booksellers. 3. The reprint of Nuswich's treatise has not yet reached this county.

J H H—The key moves in the eleven Enigma No 7 6 are, 1 Q to Q B 7th (ch) 2. Q to Q R 7th (ch) But you have omitted a Black P at Black's K Kt 6th

W L Y, Penzance—It shall have a corner next week in the section of Chess Readings.

Verity—It is self-evident that the letters (ch) to move # in the solution of Mr Bolton's problem are unnecessary

C M J—Of some of them we shall gladly avail ourselves. The others will require revision and amendment

J. E. B. added The "Chess-Player's Handbook," price 5*s*

Enquirer—The two chief clubs out of London are now those of Manchester and Glasgow. In both these meetings one Chess Periodical is regularly found on the tables of the gentlemen's Colonel—Your problem may be so read also by playing—1 Kt to Q B 3d. 2 Kt to Q 5th, and then the Q mates in two moves more. A White Pawn at Q B 3 would probably remedy that

R W. Monkton says

Turret Nist—1 We believe you are wrong See the Author's Solution 2 Both Enigmas, 732 and 733, can be solved in the number of moves stipulated Student—They shall be noticed in our next.

J F, F S, and others—The "(ch)" at move 8, in the solution of Mr Bolton's Problem, is clearly unnecessary, as "check" is not given, but it does not in any way invalidate the solution, which is perfect

F St of Hull—They shall be examined

Agnes should devote a few hours to some elementary work on the game. With respect to the solution in question, about which we are unnecessarily troubled, the Pawn does not cover the check: Black throws it forward to K 8 th, but it is taken in passing, and the King, being still in check, is obliged to move. We really have not time or space to explain such obvious matters.

Solutions of Problem No 425 by Tarit Nist, Two Mortales, M P, S—y, P P, L S D, C G P, Ardens, Sefton, Cabareno of Dublin, Arbuers, G R, Schalcrn

Solutions of Problem No 426, by Stevens, R D M, Ardens, Philo-Chess, Magnus, D D, Mors, Solon, S Edmund, Cecil, E H H of Hull

Solutions of Enigmas by Homer, M P, L S D, Rev T C, Rev G N, D D, are correct; all others are wrong

Solution of Problem No. 425.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK.
1. K to his 2d	K to his 4th (best)	5. P to K 8th (becoming a Rook)	K to his 4th
2. K to his B 3d	K to his B 4th	6. R to K R 8th—
3. P to K R 6th	K to his 4th	Mate.
4. P to K R 7th	K to his B 4th

Solution of Problem No. 426.

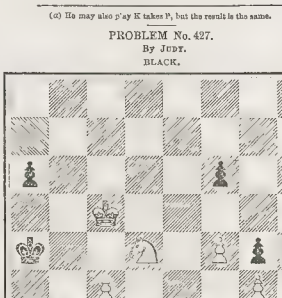
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q 8th (double ch)	K to B 5th	4. R takes R	Anything
2. R to K 8th	R to Q R 4th (a)	5. B to Q 2d	Anything
3. Kt to Q 3d (ch)	K takes P	6. R Mates.

(a) He may also play K takes P, but the result is the same.

PROBLEM No. 427.

By Judy.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN RUSSIA.

Finely contested Gambit between Mr. Petroff, the great Russian player, and Major Jaenisch *

(The Knight's Bishop's Gambit.)

WHITE (Major J.)	BLACK (Mr. P.)	WHITE (Major J.)	BLACK (Mr. P.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	34. h to Kt 3d	P to K B 3d
2 P to K B 4th	P takes P	35. R to K sq	P takes P
3 B to Q B 4th	Q to K R 5th (ch)	36. K takes P (ch)	R takes P
4 Kt to B sq	P to K Kt 4th	37. P takes R	K takes P
5 Kt to Q B 3d	B to K Kt 2d	38. K takes P	K to B 3d
6. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3d	39. P to K R 8th	P to Q R 4th
7. Kt to Q Kt 5th	Kt to Q R 3d	40. P to K R 6th	K to Kt 3d
8. B to K 2d	Q to K R 3d	41. K to B 4th	K takes P
9. P to K B 4th	P to Q B 4th (a)	42. K to K 5th	P to Q Kt 5th
10 Kt to Q B 3d	Kt to Q B 2d	43 K takes Q P (c)	P takes P
11. Kt to K B 3d	P to K Kt 5th	44. K takes P	K to Kt 4th
12 Kt to K sq	Q to K B 3d	45. K to Q 4th	K to B 5th
13. B takes h Kt P	Q takes Q P	46. K takes P	K to his 4th
14 Q takes Q	B takes Q	47. K to Q B 4th	K to Q 3d
15. B takes Q B	Q R takes B	48. K to K 5th	K to Q B 2d
16. B takes P	B takes Q Kt	49. K to Q B 5th	K to Q 2 l
17. P takes B	P to Q 4th	50. K to Q 5th	K to Q B 2d
18. P to K 5th	Kt to K 3 l	51. K to Q 6th	K to Q B 3d
19. Kt to Q 3d	Kt Kt to K 2d	52. K to Q Kt 7th	K to Q 2d (d)
20 Q R to Q Kt sq	P to Q Kt 3d	53. P to Q Kt 4th	K to Q Kt 2d
21 K to B 2d	Kt takes B	54. P to Q 5th	K to Q B 2d
22 R takes Kt	Kt to K Kt 3d	55. K to Q B 8th	K to Q 2d
23 P to K Kt 3d	K to Q 2d	56. K to Q Kt 8th	K to Q B 2d
24 Q R to K sq	Q R to K sq	57. K to Q R 6th	K to Q Kt sq
25 Kt to Q 3d	P to K R 4th	58. P to Q B 5th	K to Q Kt sq
26. K to Kt 2d	Q R to K 3d	59. K to Kt 5th	K to Kt 2d
27 R R to K B sq	Kt to Q B 4th	60. P to Q R 5th	K to Q B 2d
28 R to K R 4th	Kt takes Kt (ch)	61. P to Q B 5th	K to Kt sq
29. P takes Kt	K R to K R sq (ch)	62. K to Q Kt 5th	K to Kt 2d
30 K to B 3 l	K R to K Kt 5th	63. P to Q B 6th (ch)	K to Q B 2d
31. R B to his sq	R takes R (b)	64. K to Q 6th	K to B sq
32 Q R to K Kt sq	K to R 4th	65 K to Q 6th	K to Q sq
33. K takes R	P takes R (ch)	66 P to B 7th (ch)	K to Q B sq

And the game was drawn.

Notes by Mayor Jaenisch.

* Of all the games I played with Mr Petroff during my last sojourn in Warsaw (of which I naturally lost the greater part), I have only recorded this one; and this, although containing many remarkable features, is, alas, one of many grave errors. The reason of which errors is that we played so much for set games, but a series of mere experiments, parties, to establish a theory. Should the two attacks and defences in the Bishop's Gambit, One minor or side subject is now finished, but we reserve it for more careful revision, after which we shall hasten to close at the disposal of the editor

(a) This is not the proper move, as we subsequently found out. It would have been better to play 9 P to K B 3d, with which have enabled him to maintain the Gambit Pawn (though a most difficult position). It will be seen in our forthcoming article, that this defence may be much simplified by playing at the 8th move Kt to K 3d, instead of Q to K R 3d. The move adopted by Black leads to a very complicated game, as will be seen by the 20th Gambit Pawn.

(b) From the moment when the Queens were exchanged up to this point the game seems to be very correctly played, at least on the part of Black, but here he commits a notable fault in omitting to move, instead of 31. K to K 3d, 31. R to K sq which would have been followed by

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
32 Q R to K Kt sq	Q R to K Kt sq	33 R takes R	R takes R and would, I think, have ensured a drawn story; whilst in consequence of 31 Kto K 3d, the balance of advantage turns to White's favour

(c) After the 43th move of White, K 4 to K 5th he had an easy winning game; but here at move 43, by taking the Q Pawn with his king (instead of taking the Q Kt P with P), he falls into a grievous error, and a drawn game is the consequence. It is true that the mistake affords M Petroff a favourable opportunity of exhibiting the resources of a great master in making a down battle of a game so completely compromised The termination is an interesting one spite of a King and Pawn against a King and two Pawns

(d) These "opposition" manœuvres are highly instructive. The advance of the White Pawns can never be of any avail while Black persists in his policy of keeping his Q Kt Pawn removed

EPITOME OF NEWS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A committee of noblemen and gentlemen is being formed, having for its object to test public opinion upon the question of retaining or removing the Crystal Palace; and, should the former alternative be in a majority, decide upon, then the purposes to which the building should be applied, and the means of rendering it self supporting, will become subjects for consideration. The contractors have, within the last few days, had three applications from Paris for the purchase of the building, and its removal to the Champ de Mars. One of these is believed to be made on behalf of the French Government

The sight-seers who visit the new Houses of Parliament should be informed that the orders issued on Saturdays by the Lord Great Chamberlain now admit not only to the House of Peers, but to the Central Hall, St. Stephen's Hall, Westminster Hall, the Royal Gallery, the Victoria Tower, and the Royal Staircase.

We understand the King of Hanover is expected to arrive in this country at the latter end of May.

At Worms, on the evening of the 14th instant, as Father Danz was preaching in the Cathedral, and was setting forth the proofs of the divinity of Christ, a shot struck one of the doors of the church. Those of the congregation who sat near the entrance ran out, but the father admonishing all to tranquility and devout attention, the incident was allowed to pass. Nothing is known of the author of this interruption.

A fashionable dressmaker living near the Place Vendôme, at Paris, Mdlle. F., earned, a few days ago, an eagle bearing a crown to be painted on the windows of her shop. The next day mud and filth were thrown on it, and this was repeated for the same day. On the following morning a ball, apparently discharged from an air-gun, knocked the window to pieces, and penetrated some wood-work, near which the dressmaker was seated. Fortunately, she was not touched. The same night a fire broke out in the bedroom of the dressmaker, but it was soon extinguished.

The City Commissioners of Sewers have applied to the corporation of London to cause three markets weekly to be held at Leadenha.. and Bermondsey, in the new lanes now being built over the tanner's banks, instead of being scattered about the markets in wet weather, breeding vermin and engendering diseases.

The herring fishery would appear, have almost deserted the Shannon, as up to last week the take at Limerick and at Glin, Shanagolden, and the Cave side, did not number 100 fish since the season commenced. Samuel brings in this market the enormous price of 8*s* per lb.

The Gambius of Naples of the 4th states that the town of Bagnara, in Lower Calabria, has been visited of late by such violent shocks of earthquake, that the inhabitants have been obliged to leave their houses and live in barracks of wood made for the town.

A fine white heron was killed a few days ago, near Angers. Attached to the right leg was a small copper plate, with the inscription—"Walden Jagt Gasthaup, Loo, 1849." (Society of Falconers of Loo.) Loo is a seat of the King of Holland.

On Tuesday last, the keeper of the lighthouse at Cairnryan, in Scotland, observed a large number of porpoises coming into Lochryan; and on Wednesday they were seen playing about the loch, within a short distance of the quay.

A letter from Vienna, of the 15th inst., states that the Marianna, warsteamer, whose disappearance has already been noticed, has been wrecked, with her crew of about 140 men, off the Dalmatian coast

It appears from a Parliamentary document that the sum paid by the contractors for the London Corporation tolls, as rent, for the years 1849, 1850, 1851, was severally 2*l.*5616, 2*l.*9710, 2*l.*8810. The rents and profits are applicable, under the authority of an Act of Parliament, to the formation of a new street from Holborn-bridge, in the City, towards Clerkenwell-green.

In many places between Rugby, Watford, and London, the turf, shrubs, trees, &c. on the slopes of the North-Western line of railway, are either burnt, or are now burning, with alarming rapidity. In the early part of the week more than 100 burning patches were observed blazing, destroying everything in its course, and defying the utmost efforts of a number of men who were employed to extinguish the fire.

It is stated that Mr. Welby Pugin is in a state of mind at this time which presents any attention to professional pursuits.

William Kalabergo, the Italian who was convicted, at the late assizes for the murder of his uncle, was executed at Oxford Castle, at eight o'clock on Monday morning. As already stated, the unfortunate man had confessed his guilt.

The palace of Rheinardsbrunn, the favourite residence of the Duke of Saxe-Cobury-Gotha, brother of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, was burned to the ground on the night of the 14th. The cellars alone were saved in one of the most charming spots of the Thuringian Forest, and occupied the site of an ancient monastery. It was not long since built, at great cost, in the old German style, and contained treasures of art and antiquity of untold value. The disaster was purely accidental.

William Pamplin, who was convicted at the last Winchester Summer Assizes for being concerned in the great gold dust robbery on the South-Wes ern Railway, and sentenced to ten years' transportation, afterwards commuted to two years' imprisonment, has, in consequence of ill health, been granted a free pardon by the Secretary of State, and was released on Wed esday. It is said that he has rendered some important disclosures to the railway company, which have hastened his pardon.

From a return made by order of the House of Commons, it appears that the total number of voyages made by British steam-vessels entered inwards from foreign parts in the United Kingdom within the same year—two voyages from Prussia, with 149 tonnage; 136 from Holland, with 31,318 tonnage; and 88 from Belgium, with 22,151 tonnage.

The military commission of the Germanic Diet has granted the sum of 400*l.* florins to Professors Schlebein, of Basle, and Bottger, of Frankfort, as a reward for their invention of gun cotton

Rio de Janeiro will shortly be lighted with gas by an English company. The cast-iron pipes for the purpose will be shipped from Liverpool in a few days, and a gentleman proceeds to Rio by the next Brazilian mail packet from Southampton to superintend the arrangements

A parcel of pineapples has been received by Messrs. Keeling and Hunt by the Bosphorus steamer, from Sierra Leone, being the first importation to this country from our African possessions.

It is said that the Great Western are making arrangements with parties in London and Wales to bring large quantities of Welsh coals to London at one-halfpenny per ton per mile. The Great Western, as well as the Great Northern, and we might say the Berwick and other railway companies, know full well the advantage of conveying coals long distances, and in large quantities.

The Right Hon. the Speaker's fifth Parliamentary dinner took place on Saturday last. In the evening there was a brilliant soirée at the right Hon. gentleman's residence. The Speaker's second and last levee takes place this day.

By a return to the House of Commons, it appears that in the year ending the 5th of January last the duty on cigarettes was 81,160,080 lbs. 9*d.*, at Scotch snuff was 638 lbs. 4*d.*; in Great-Britain, 41 295 713 lbs. 10*d.*; and in Ireland, 259,666 lbs. 4*d.*; whilst on prunellas, substitutions, &c. for tea, of the amounts were respectively 2,926,012 lbs. 6*d.*; 271,314; 2,937,225 lbs. 6*d.*, and 256,670. In 1797 the duty on tea was 3,447,764,446 lbs. 9*d.*, and on prunellas, administrations, and testamentary inventories, to £38 260 557 15*s.* 8*d.*

The local papers say that so many Meltonians are appointed to the new Lords of the metropolis of the sporting world is in a most deplorable state of business.

The Liverpool Town Council held a special meeting on Monday, and some of the members became rather excited in their words and actions, whilst discussing the question of the election of a new head constable.

On Monday night, between eight and nine o'clock, some audacious thief entered the house of Inspector Ledsam, of the Salford police force, near Manchester, and completely opposite the principal entrance to the police-office, from it something under a dozen yards, and the inspector himself was on duty in the office at the very time!

His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland gave a farewell dinner party on Saturday, at Dublin Castle, to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge.

A grand musical commemoration in honour of the late poet Moore took place on Monday night, in the Ancient Concert Room, in Dublin. The compositions performed were all the e of the immortal bard himself.

A bill will shortly be submitted to Parliament for the purpose of forming a new station at Nine Elms, on the London bridge, so that the present tortuous and inconvenient approach may be altogether avoided, and thus effect an improvement that has, for years past, been considered wanting to connect these two great thoroughfares. The line proposed is a continuation of Stamford-street, as that when completed there will be a direct communication on the Surrey side of the river from London to Westminster-bridge. As a sum of money was some years ago granted by Government for this object, with the interest that has since accrued upon it a small sum only will be required to complete the work.

The Limerick papers state that there has not been a single labouring man or woman, able to work, unemployed in that part of the country for several weeks past. Emigration, nevertheless, proceeds at as great a rate as ever, and the price of berths in emigrant ships has been considerably raised in all the Irish ports.

The report read at the annual meeting of the directors of the Artists' Benevolent Fund, held on Saturday, at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, stated that during the past year 45 widows of deceased artists have been receiving pensions, of whom 44 were paid 2*l.*5, four 3*l.* 10*s.*, and one 2*l.*5 as per annum. In addition, 35 orphans had received sums varying from 5*l.* downwards. The receipts for the past year amounted to 2*l.*2342, and the disbursements were 2*l.*110 14*s.* 4*d.*

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

DURATION OF THE PARLIAMENTARY RECESS

Lord BROUGHAM laid upon the table a bill which was read a first time, for diminishing the interval between the proclamation of the Crown and the assembling of Parliament. To measure would save a fortnight in point of time, but it would not be compulsory. At the present time, fifty days must elapse between the issuing of the writ and the day for summoning a new Parliament. The law fixed for seven days, which enactment was rendered necessary by the 52nd article of the Act of Union with Scotland, and by various circumstances which had since ceased to be of any importance. He (Lord Brougham) was prepared to show that a period of three weeks was sufficient. The noble and learned Lord added a few observations on the necessity of resorting to some means to prevent a recurrence of the gross system of bribery, at the next general election, which had usually disturbed former ones.

The Earl of DERBY had no objection to the measure being read a first time, but he thought the whole subject introduced the whole Government would shortly be brought under the consideration of the House of Commons.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE MAILS TO AUSTRALIA

Mr FRENCH ask d the Secretary to the Admiralty—"Whether the Victoria Royal Mail Company have entered into and executed the contract with the Government for the carriage of the mails to Sydney? What security has been given for the due performance of the service contracted for? Has they been given a Royal charter, and upon what terms as to the amount of capital to be subscribed? When is the first steamer to sail with the mails from England?"

Mr. STAFFORD replied, that the Admiralty Mail Company had not yet entered into or executed any contract with the Government for the conveyance of the Australian mail, the reason for this being that the directors thought it better to wait for a charter, and to enter into the contract as a chartered rather than as an individual company. As to the second question, the charter enabled the company to raise at once £500,000; and the sum already paid in, or secured, was £350,000. With regard to the third question, it was impossible to say. No charter had yet been given. The Board of Trade had reported that the first steamer was the 3d of June, the issuing a postponement from the 1st to May, and no communication had been received from Mr. Cunard, from which he presumed to be no doubt that the time thus fixed would be punctually kept.

COUNTY COURTS EXTENSION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. PETRIE, this bill, sent down from the House of Lords, was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time that day fortnight.

MISSION TO SIAM.

Sir T. E. COLEBROOKE took the liberty of asking in what position the negotiations were at present, and whether they were continued to any extent, or were entirely suspended, in consequence of the withdrawal of the mission to Siam.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, there was an important aspect of the question, under the present circumstances of the country, which rendered it necessary that the Government should be prepared for the first steamer was the 3d of June, the issuing a postponement from the 1st to May, and no communication had been received from Mr. Cunard, from which he presumed to be no doubt that the time thus fixed would be punctually kept.

COUNTY COURTS EXTENSION BILL.

On the motion of Mr. PETRIE, this bill, sent down from the House of Lords, was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time that day fortnight.

MISSION TO SIAM.

Sir T. E. COLEBROOKE took the liberty of asking in what position the negotiations were at present, and whether they were continued to any extent, or were entirely suspended, in consequence of the withdrawal of the mission to Siam.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, there was an important aspect of the question, under the present circumstances of the country, which rendered it necessary that the Government should be prepared for the first steamer was the 3d of June, the issuing a postponement from the 1st to May, and no communication had been received from Mr. Cunard, from which he presumed to be no doubt that the time thus fixed would be punctually kept.

NEWSPAPER STAMPS.

Mr. SCHOLEFIELD asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, "whether it was Government intended to acquiesce in the decision of the judges in the case of the Queen v. the publishers of the "Household Narratives of Current events;" and, if not, what course the Government meant to pursue with regard to other publications issued under similar circumstances?"

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the case in question had been referred to the Crown officers, who believed they had conferred with the legal advisers of the late Government on the subject. When he was in possession of their opinion, he should be able to give a definite answer to the gentleman.

THE MILITIA.

Mr. WALPOLE said that it was his intention to move on Monday next that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and the Secretary at War be empowered to bring in a bill for the purpose of amending and consolidating the laws relating to the militia.

CONDUCT OF PUBLIC BUSINESS—EDUCATION IN IRELAND,

On the order of the day for going into the Committee of Supply being read,

Lord J. RUSSELL said, that after what had taken place on Friday night in the House of Lords, which was somewhat satisfactory, inasmuch as the Earl of Derby had said his intention were that the Parliament should be dissolved, with the view to the re-assembling of a new one before the close of the autumn, he thought it most advisable to allow the estimates to pass with as little discussion as possible. He also suggested that another day in the week should be given up to Government business, in order to facilitate its speedy transaction. The noble Lord deprecated as a great misfortune any change in the present system of national education in Ireland. He hoped that no proposition would be made in the present Parliament to interfere with it.

Mr. WALPOLE said there was no intention to make any alteration in the present system of national education in Ireland. He had intimated that some modification might be made, so as to render the system more satisfactory to the clergy of the Established Church, which would not go the length of upsetting the whole system of national education in Ireland. He agreed with Lord John Russell, that it would be the best course to get on with the public business as fast as possible.

Sir De Lacy EVANS moved the following resolution in the way of amendment on the motion for going into committee of supply: "That, in the opinion of this House, it is inconsistent on the part of the Government to propose an augmentation, however small, of the armed and paid forces of the country, while the [illegible] is at peace, and while discontinuance and discouragement, [illegible] and China rum offers of gratuitous service from [illegible] men, having for their object the formation of rifle companies and regiments for the nation's defence."

Mr. HUME said he was glad to hear the declaration of Lord John Russell; and no stronger was he impressed with the wisdom of the course he was about to adopt, that he (Mr. Hume), for the first time in his life, would offer no opposition to the estimates.

Mr. F. MASKELYNE said to trusting to volunteer corps, rather than to the regular army, was a [illegible] policy.

Mr. BRIGHT, Mr. S. HERBERT, Mr. Bright, and Sir J. Tyrrell then [illegible].

Mr. [illegible] was the last man in the House to [illegible] Government in [illegible] measures for the defence of the country, but he [illegible] Government had not taken the proper course in [illegible] Sir De Lacy Evans] had not been entitled to [illegible] he understood it impossible to attempt its revival by rousing the [illegible].

Mr. [illegible] said that the Government had [illegible] and [illegible] Sir De Lacy Evans] should not be the first to [illegible] Government. He [illegible] Sir De Lacy Evans] had [illegible] the [illegible] Lord John Russell] had [illegible] Mr. Hume] had [illegible] and more particularly so to those of that part of London.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he was glad to hear of Mr Hume's pacific intentions towards the Government; and added, that, as soon as the [illegible] measures for the good government of the country should be passed, a distinct [illegible] Parliament [illegible].

Mr. [illegible] had no objection to the rifle corps was not to discountenance [illegible] rifle corps; but, in the present state of the law, [illegible] the opinion of the House should be taken upon the Militia Bill introduced by Government before leading any sanction to those corps.

Sir De Lacy EVANS withdrew his amendment, and the House went into COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY.

Several votes for the army and navy estimates were taken after some discussion, and the House resumed.

CHANCERY REFORM.

On the motion for the House resolving itself into a committee on the Suitors in Chancery Relief bill

Mr. [illegible] stated that the present Government [illegible] Chancery Reform [illegible] Public Committee [illegible] in the administration of affairs. The fact was, that active steps had been taken to remodel the Court of Chancery, though there was not sufficient time to move the intended reformation into the shape of a bill.

Mr. J. STUART said that, as he had [illegible] from the hon. and learned gentleman proved the correctness of the statement, that no measure of the kind was prepared, notwithstanding the paragraph in her Majesty's Speech implying that [illegible].

Mr. [illegible] to [illegible] in her Majesty's Speech only went the length of saying [illegible] and created a bill to be prepared on the subject, and therefore [illegible] that steps had been taken with a view to carry out the [illegible] stated.

Mr. HADLEY said no doubt the sincerity of the late Government in their professions of [illegible] Bankes] it was a fact that delays had intervened, and that not [illegible] effectual had been done.

The bill then passed through committee.

The [illegible] bill went through committee.

The St. Alban's Disfranchisement Bill passed through committee.

The [illegible] for the second reading of the Sale of Beer Bill was then read and discharged.

Adjourned at twenty minutes past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

LAW OF WILLS.

The Lord CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Law of Wills Amendment Bill, the object of which was to remove some of the anomalies at present existing, particularly those connected with the system of signatures, which frequently prevented the intentions of the testator from being carried out, in consequence of some formal inaccuracy connected with the signature. He proposed that the bill, if it met with their Lordships' approbation, should be forwarded through all its stages as speedily as possible, in order that it might pass before Easter.

After some observations from Lord BROUGHAM, Lord CRANWORTH, and the Earl of ELLENBOROUGH, the bill was read a second time.

THE RIVER PLATE.

Lord BEAUMONT asked for information with respect to the present state of affairs in the Argentine Confederation, the Banda Oriental, and the other countries watered by the River Plate and its tributaries. The noble Lord also took occasion to press on the Government the necessity of vindicating themselves of the late fall of Rosas, the Dictator of Buenos Ayres, to enter into negotiations for the purpose of opening a path for British commerce in Bolivia, Brazil, and other districts of South America.

The Earl of ABERDEEN expressed his great gratification at the termination of the war.

A short conversation on the subject ensued between the Earl of HARROWBY, Lord STANLEY of Alderley, and Lord KINNAIRD; in the course of which

The Earl of MALMESBURY promised to furnish Lord Beaumont with a copy of the last despatch received by the Government relating to the expulsion of Rosas.

The subject then dropped.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

RE ELECTION.

Viscount GALWAY took the oaths and his seat for East Retford.

MINISTERS' MONEY—THE ANNUITY TAX.

Mr. WALPOLE announced, in reply to a question from Mr. Reynolds, that the Government intended to bring in a bill next session to settle the vexed question of ministers' money in Ireland. The right hon. gentleman, in answer to another question, said that he would go through the papers upon the subject, and see if he could not arrive at some means of disposing of the question of the annuity tax in Ireland.

EAST INDIA COMPANY'S CHARTER.

Mr. HUME, in answer to Mr. Bright, stated, that, in moving for a select committee to enquire into the affairs he should take the opportunity of stating the views of the Government upon the subject.

FASTER HOLIDAYS.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER announced that he should feel it to be his duty to move for an additional adjournment of the House for the Easter recess from the 8th to the 19th of April.

THE HOP DUTY.

Mr. FREWEN moved a resolution, that, in any remission of taxation, the repeal of the duty on hops ought to be taken into serious consideration. He found from notices upon the facts, that the amount paid into the Exchequer on account of the tax did not exceed, upon an average of three years, £269,000; that it was the only tax which had never been mitigated, and that it pressed with great severity upon the growers, and was producing distress and ruin in [illegible] districts.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER observed, it was admitted that it would be improper to press Government for any pledge upon this subject, which, when a revision of taxation would take place, would not escape their attention. Under the circumstances, he hoped Mr. Frewen would not require a more definite answer.

After some discussion, in which Mr. Hume, Mr. Drummond, and Mr. Cobden took part,

Mr. FREWEN said he was satisfied with the answer he had received, and would withdraw the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON moved for copies of all correspondence between her Majesty's Government, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, and our Consul-General in Egypt, relative to the attempted interference of the Porte in the internal administration of that country. He enlarged upon the injurious effects of the pretensions put forward by the Turkish Government, which would deprive the Pasha of Egypt of the hereditary independence which had been conceded to Mehemet Ali, and reduce his successors to dependence upon the Sultan, whose interference as ascribed to the machinations of discarded servants of the Pasha at Constantinople.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the motion referred to a most important and delicate question of foreign policy; viz. the relations between Turkey and Egypt; and it was quite impossible to accede to it. Negotiations were now going on for the adjustment of that question with a due regard to the interests of the two countries, and generally to the interests of the world. He must oppose the motion, therefore, on the grounds that the transactions were in an imperfect state; that negotiations were still going on at Constantinople upon the subject, and that the production of the papers would be attended with effects most injurious to the public service.

Lord J. RUSSELL concurred in this objection. We were on the most friendly terms with both the Sultan and the Pacha; but any interference on our part could only be received as the counsel of a friend, and he thought the publication of the correspondence would not further the object in view.

After some further conversation the motion was withdrawn.

The O'GORMAN MAHON called the attention of the Government to the subject of a petition from certain Commissioners of Emis, complaining with a motion for certain directions to the Board of Works in Ireland.

A short conversation followed; but the hon. gentleman ultimately withdrew his motion.

RAJAH BROOKE.

Mr. HUME moved for a copy of a letter from Mr. Burns to Lord Palmerston, complaining of observations received in the hands of Sir James Brooke, and of any answer thereto.

Mr. H. DRUMMOND objected to motions of this kind, invidiously worded, instead of direct charges.

The motion was agreed to.

DESERTERS FROM MERCHANT SHIPS.

Mr HENLEY obtained leave and brought in a bill to enable her Majesty to carry into effect the arrangements made with foreign powers for the apprehension of seamen who desert from their ships, which was read a first time.

CHURCH RATES.

On the motion of Mr. [illegible] a bill to [illegible] was read a first time, to promote the building [illegible] churches.

Mr. [illegible] that he would not trespass to any length upon the House at that late hour of the night, but he could not allow the present opportunity to pass without saying a few words from Mr. J. Bell, and a deputation from the Metropolitan Church Reform Association, consisting of Mr. Thomas Gibson, Mr. William [illegible], Mr. Bell, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Bell, Mr. Marquis of Bradford, Lord [illegible], Mr. Hall, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Cardwell, Mr. Fox, Mr. Kay Shuttleworth, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr. Child.

Mr. [illegible] objected to [illegible] ter, and the motion was postponed.

The report of the Committee of Supply was agreed to.

BOROUGH OF ST. ALBAN'S.

The report on the St Alban's Disfranchisement Bill, as amended, was considered and agreed to, after a few more words from Mr. J. Bell, and a declaration by Mr. Wigram that the Government intended to support the second reading of the Corrupt Practices Bill.

The Consolidated Fund (£8 000,000) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Bill to Consolidate and Enlarge the Acts relating to the Appointment and Pay of Parish Constables was brought in and read a first time.

Adjourned at half-past 6 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to a quarter before two o'clock.

Lord Newport took the oaths and his seat for South Shropshire.

Mr. FREWEN moved the second reading of the Protection from Dangerous Animals Bill. The hon. gentleman dilated on the public evils and [illegible] from the absence of sufficient legislation to prevent [illegible] dogs and savage animals, and from the enactment against draught dogs not being extended to the rural districts. The object of his bill was to remedy those defects in the law.

The Attorney-General gave a full and copious exposition of the proposed provisions for the destruction of mad dogs (already without the pale of the law), and for the better trying of irritable traits, and he urged that, though the subject of dog-carts might deserve consideration, there was no urgent necessity for Legislation. It would be better, he thought, to withdraw the bill; otherwise, he should oppose its rejection.

Sub-sequently the bill was withdrawn.

The County Rates Bill was referred to a select committee.

Mr VERNON SMITH (for Lord J. Russell) moved the second reading of the Corrupt Practices Bill.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL would not oppose the second reading, but reserved his observations as to details.

Colonel SIBTHORP entered a vigorous protest against the bill, which however, was read a second time.

The Common Law Fees Regulation Bill went through committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

EAST INDIA CHARTER.

The Earl of DERBY gave notice of his intention, on Friday the 2d of April, to move for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the Act under which the Charter had been granted to the East India Company.

The Common Inclosure Bill was read a second time.

The Law of Wills Amendment Bill passed through committee.

IRELAND.

Lord MONTEAGLE moved for a select committee to which shall be referred the Tenure Amendment Bill for the debts due from counties and municipal towns in Ireland, for the imposition of a consolidated annuity for a period not exceeding forty years.

The Earl of DERBY said he would not offer any opposition to the motion of the noble Lord; on the contrary, he thought that the subject was one that deserved a full and impartial investigation. By a committee of that House.

After a few words from the Earl of GLENGALL, the motion was agreed to. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

FASTER HOLIDAYS.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, in answer to Mr. Hume, said, that he would move the adjournment of the House for the Easter holidays from Thursday the 6th of April until Monday the 19th.

MAYNOOTH

In reply to Mr. Keogh, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said it was not the intention of the Government to bring in any bill to abolish the grant to Maynooth during the present session. In respect to the next session, he would only remark that it was generally very unwise for a Government to say what they would bring forward in a future Parliament, which was not even elected.

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM.

Mr. HUME then moved for leave to bring in a bill to amend the national representation by extending the election franchise in England and Wales, so that every man of full age, and [illegible] sanity, [illegible] of legal [illegible], should be entitled to vote for the election of a member of Parliament, and [illegible] to be registered as an elector, and to have a vote for a representative in Parliament. Also, by enacting that votes shall be taken by ballot, that the duration of Parliaments shall not exceed three years, and that the proportion of representatives be made more consistent with the amount of population and property.

Sir JOSHUA WALMSLEY seconded the motion.

Mr. H. DRUMMOND said it was absurd to bring forward such a motion in a condemned Parliament.

Sir W. FAGE WOOD said that the events which had taken place in France ought to be a warning to this country to confine in the people and extend the franchise. It was monstrous to say that there should be only 1,000,000 voters in that great country. He saw, however, no use in affirming the motion before the time when it could not lead to a result.

Mr. NAPIER opposed the motion, and repudiated the ballot-box as being inconsistent with the genius of the British character.

Mr. DISRAELI, in supporting the motion, contended that the time was most proper for discussing a question of such importance.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER entered into a series of statistical calculations, for the purpose of showing that the towns were better represented in proportion to their population than the rural districts. He contended that neither vote by ballot nor universal suffrage would prevent bribery; and in proof of this he quoted an extract of a letter he received from America, which stated that at the general election in New York the greatest bribery and violence were committed.

Mr. B. OSBORNE supported the motion.

Lord J. RUSSELL said that from the manner in which the motion was worded it was impossible that he could support it. He thought that if they established the ballot and universal suffrage it would be impossible for them to preserve the Constitution.

Mr. WALPOLE said he did not wish to be understood as being wholly opposed to an extension of the franchise to the education and industry of the country, but merely that, before making a change, its probable utility must be established, and also its practicability.

Mr. W. WILLIAMS moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. HORSMAN seconded the motion.

After some further discussion, Mr. WILLIAMS withdrew his motion.

The House then divided on the original proposition.

The numbers were—

For Mr. Hume's motion	..	89
Against it	..	241
Majority against the motion	..	—152

The Indemnity Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Copyright Amendment Acts passed through committee.

The Common Law Fees Regulation (Salaries) Bill was reported.

Adjourned at one o'clock.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—On Thursday the twenty-fifth anniversary of this excellent institution, founded to provide the aged printer or his widow in the hour of adversity, was celebrated at the London Tavern, Douglas Jerrold—himself once a printer—in the chair; when a collection amounting to upwards of £600 was made in aid of the funds, being one of the largest subscriptions ever yet realised at the anniversary of the institution.

EXECUTION BY PROXY.—At noon, on the 10th inst., just as the Exchange at Hamburg, crowded with merchants, presented its busiest aspect, two functionaries in the civic uniform came up and rolled their drums for the space of ten minutes, causing a great commotion both within and out of the Exchange. While this was going on, workmen were seen over the principal gateway of the building erecting a black board, on which was printed in white letters the name of a merchant of the city who had lately suspended payment and proceeded with all his assets. When the name had been fairly set up, a bell called the "schand glocke," or shame bell, only rung on such occasions, was sounded for two hours from a tower of the Bourse. This penalty of disgrace, called the "execution of a fraudulent bankrupt," is ordained by a law which can be traced to the fourteenth century, when the Hanseatic league was at the height of its greatness. At that period, however, the bankrupt's patent of citizenship and his certificate as a merchant were also burnt by the hangman.

EGHAUTUM.—The Engraving at page 236 of our Journal of last week contains, as there stated, represent Inscription Hill, in Natal, as taken from a View of Cradock's Pass, at the Cape, sketched and engraved by Lieut.-Colonel McNeil, prior to the construction, under his direction, of the excellent road which now passes round the mountain.

By the report of the Improvement Committee of the Corporation, it appears the claim from Lawrence Pountney-hill to Crooked-lane amounted to £87,060 10s. 8d., and the claim given amounted to £49,864. The claims from Gracechurch street amounted to £9738 10s. 8d., and were settled at £4114. The claims from Queen-street to Bread-street amounted to £113,090 10s., and were settled for £85,358 10s., and the claim for Cox, Chandler's Hall, Gresham-street, was £6500, and was settled at £4014.

FESTIVITIES AT AUDLEY END.

AUDLEY END, the noble domain of the Right Hon. Lord Braybrooke, has recently been the scene of a very interesting festivity, in commemoration of the arrival of the Hon. Richard Cornwallis Neville, eldest son of Lord Braybrooke, and his noble and accomplished bride, the Lady Charlotte Neville. Their reception on the 17th ult. was a right hearty welcome from the tenantry of Lord Braybrooke and the tradesmen of the town. The grounds in front of the mansion (over which flies the large and imposing Bay Neville arms) were gaily decked with banners and flags; while at the grand entrance to the lawn a triumphal arch had been erected with evergreens, &c., surmounted with the family arms of Neville and Toler, bearing the inscription "Welcome." Merry peals were rung at Littlebury and Saffron Waldren Church during the day; and nearly the whole population turned out to meet the happy couple.

While the crowd on the ground still continued to increase, the tenantry, principal tradesmen of the town, and a large number of the influential farmers residing in the neighbourhood, amounting to nearly 200, wearing white favours, proceeded on horseback to the Audley End station, a distance of rather more than a mile, to await the arrival of the train. They also arranged themselves on either side of the road leading to the station; and, on the appearance of the mob a pause in their cheering, they received them with enthusiastic cheering, and escorted them nearly to the entrance of the park, when the procession was formed in the following order:—

An orderly officer on horseback.
The Essex Standard.
Two flag-bearers
Tenantry, tradesmen, and farmers, two abreast.
Fiddles, cornets, drums, and vehicles.
Labourers, 140 employed by his Lordship in the estates, four abreast.
Grand military brass band.
The carriage containing the happy couple, three flag-bearers on each side
Private carriages, &c.

The children belonging to the Hon. Miss Neville's and Union Schools formed in line along the Cambridge road, and were much noticed.

The carriage having reached the grand entrance in the above order, the horses were taken off from the carriage, and drawn by the labourers, amid the vehement cheering and firing of cannon, to the grand portico of the mansion; here Lord Braybrooke and the Hon. Charles C. Neville were in waiting to receive their noble relatives. Lady Braybrooke, the Hon. Miss and the Hon. Lords Neville and Lucy Neville, were also in the grand portico, ready to receive the youthful bride and her noble husband. After congratulations had been exchanged, Mr. John Clayden, one of his Lordship's tenants, read a congratulatory address.

Mr. Neville replied in an emphatic speech, at the conclusion and during the delivery of which he was most lustily cheered. Lord Braybrooke then addressed the assembly, and hearty cheers were given for his Lordship, Lady Braybrooke and family, &c. Cake and wine, and abundance of old ale, were bountifully distributed. The multitude then peaceably returned to their homes.

The auspicious event was further commemorated by a grand dinner given by Lord Braybrooke, in the great hall of Audley End, on Thursday week, when a large company of his Lordship's tenants, the clergy of Saffron Walden and the surrounding village, the Mayor and Town Council of that ancient and loyal borough, and every one bearing office within it, including also several of Lord Braybrooke's friends and neighbours, partook of his Lordship's hospitable board. On the anniversary of the birthday of the Hon. R. C. Neville. The noble host, Lord Braybrooke, received his guests, 100 in number, with great cordiality; and the courtesy shown by him was warmly seconded by every member of his Lordship's family. Many too as were drunk; and the manner in which those were received that referred to any member of the family testified to the great respect in which they are held in the neighbourhood. The party did not break up until a late hour. The day will be long cherished and remembered, not only as an evidence of his Lordship's kindness and liberality, but as another proof how such associations tend to the honour of those who, high in rank, so generously condescend to entertain their friends and neighbours, as well as to the happiness of those who enjoy that hospitality and kindness. The ladies of the family remained throughout the banquet as spectators in the gallery above, evidently taking a lively interest in the joyous scene before them.

The fine old mansion and domain of Audley End are situated in a narrow valley, at the western extremity of the parish, and one mile from the town of Saffron Walden. The mansion was built for Howard Earl of Suffolk, afterwards Lord High Treasurer of England, from the designs of John Thorpe, whose drawings are preserved in Sir John Soane's Museum, in Lincoln's-inn-fields. The house is supposed to have been commenced in 1603, and to have occupied thirteen years in building; and the date 1616 still remains upon one of the gateways. Audley End was visited by James I. in 1610 and 1614, upon one of which occasions James happily remarked that the house was too large for a King, though it might do for a Lord Treasurer. It is stated to have cost, with the furniture, £200,000—an enormous sum in those times. Nor did the charge of maintaining the household prove less formidable, for none of the possessors of Audley End, after the death of the first Earl of Suffolk, were able to keep an establishment suitable to the size and magnificence of the house.

RECEPTION OF THE HON. R. C. AND LADY CHARLOTTE NEVILLE, AT AUDLEY END, THE SEAT OF LORD BRAYBROOKE.

The mansion, when completed, consisted, besides the offices, of buildings surrounding two spacious quadrangular courts. That to the westward was approached by a bridge across the Cam, through a double avenue of limes, terminating with a grand entrance gateway.

The edifice is a fine example of the intermediate style between Gothic and classical in which the great houses of England were built during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.; or, in the phrase of the present day, Italianized Gothic. The exterior exhibits three stories of wall, mostly plain, separated by projecting strings, and pierced by large windows. The whole range of the wall is surmounted by a stone parapet of open-work.

The lower storey on the south side, formerly an open cloister, has a range of Doric columns, with an entablature and arches between; and in the western front are two porches, composed of two storeys, of Roman architecture, with entablatures and arches—the lower storey Ionic, the upper Corinthian. The spandrils of the arches are sunk, and filled with ornament; and under the architrave are beautiful arabesques.

The outline of the house, when seen from the west, consists of two large square masses, with one of the square bows in the front of each, connected by the hall, at the extremities of which are the porches. The hall itself is lower than the wings; but over and contiguous to it appears the wall, with a range of windows, of a connecting gallery. The wings are finished at the top by square turrets at their corners, roofed with bell cupolas. The east front exhibits a half H, the projecting wings of which have bows in each of the faces of the wall. The lower story of the centre, at the back of the hall, is an open arcade of coupled Doric pilasters, with joint pedestals, entablature, imposts, and key-stones. The north front is of the same character with the others, but partly concealed by the offices.

The great hall, in which the banquet was given, is 90 feet long, 27 wide, and 29 high. The screen at the north end reaches nearly to the ceiling; is of oak, curiously carved, and ornamented with grotesque figures in bold relief. The chimney-piece is also enriched with ancient carvings. The hall is lighted by five windows, that in the centre having a large projecting bow extending from the cornice to the floor. There is also an open screen of stone, by Sir John Vanbrugh, who removed the south wall to enlarge the hall; but this screen and the iron railings of the staircase ill accord with the original design.

The ceiling is of plaster, divided into compartments by massive beams supported by boldly projecting brackets. The whole of the woodwork is of dark oak, relieved by pendants, heads, and various carving, the effect of which is rich and striking. The compartments are filled with the crests and cognizances of the Howard family, worked in raised stucco, and encircled by a border. From the brackets are suspended silken banners, upon which are emblazoned the heraldic bearings of the different possessors of the manor of Walden. Upon and above the wainscot, and upon the screen, is a very interesting collection of family portraits.

The various other apartments of the mansion, including drawingrooms, saloon libraries, picture-gallery, and chapel, are in sumptuous taste.

GRAND DINNER IN THE HALL AT AUDLEY END.

SCENE FROM THE NEW TRAGEDY OF "TIMOLEON," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE, EDINBURGH.

ADELPHI THEATRE, EDINBURGH.

Mr. Jameson's tragedy of "Timoleon," of which we gave a short announcement in our last, was produced at the Adelphi Theatre, on Wednesday, the 10th instant, in a style most creditable to the manager, Mr. Wyndham, and with complete success, before a crowded and fashionable audience. The author has made a romantic drama, of continuous and sustained interest, out of a purely classic subject. The story of Timoleon is well known. Devotedly attached to his brother, Timophanes, he was yet compelled by patriotism to destroy him to save his country, and then, after enduring all the agony arising from this compelled fratricide, and the frantic reproaches of his mother, Demeriste, he was restored to peace of mind by achieving the deliverance of Syracuse, and refusing those regal honours of which he had deprived his brother by the terrible act. This is, of course, the leading feature of the tragedy; but there is also a love story of deep interest interwoven with it. Electra, the favourite slave of their mother, awaits in a dungeon her death by burning for having attempted the liberation of her brother, who had been condemned to death. Timoleon's first words to Timophanes, on his return from victory are—

> Nay, dearest brother, trust me, richer far
> To me thy trophies that they're all thine own.

He then proceeds to announce Electra's fate, and confesses his own pure, unselfish affection for her. The unscrupulous tyrant, who also loves her, proposes a forcible rescue, and the crushing of the liberties of Corinth, in which he is supported by Demeride, who is devotedly attached to her eldest son, and shares in his ambitious views. Timoleon, in an interview with Electra in the dungeon, learns that his own love is hopeless, but is sustained in his lofty moral purpose by her serene fortitude and composure. In a following scene the different characters of the brothers are thus brought out:—

> Timophanes. Go, talk with women, boy! My slave I'll rescue,
> The rabble quell, make Corinth know its lord.
> ——————In vain a realm
> Seeks safety or increase in hundred tongues
> Of wrangling talkers. By a single head
> The state is disciplined—directed best
> For peace at home, or power abroad. That head,
> My comrades and my inborn energies
> Proclaim I am!
> * * * * * *
> Timoleon. Free Greek, enthroned in hearts whose free acclaim
> Tells to the world thy soul's supremacy—
> Would'st thou exchange it for the vulgar sway
> Which sets the despot on a heartless throne?
> Begirt by sullen slaves with bating souls,
> Or souls imbruted by abasement, till
> They learn to love the bondage they should loathe.

Electra is next brought out for execution; firm and placid she move to the stake, with a kind of holy rapture.

> Electra. Slaves, do your work!
> The fire shall wrap me in a radiant robe,
> And light me up to Heaven.

To this Scene our Illustration belongs. After a vain appeal to the people by Timoleon, Timophanes rushes in and commences the massacre, while Electra, "whose spirit would look calmly on coming torment," faints at the avowal that he designs her for his mistress. Timoleon, consigned to a dungeon, hears the appalling sounds of the butchery going on without; and, through the exhortations of the priest Orthagoras, resolves to save his country at whatever price. Meanwhile, Electra, maddened by the atrocities perpetrated by her lover, flies frantically from him, to find him, in the next scene, dead at his brother's feet.

THE SALE BY AUCTION IN THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The finest scene of the play follows, where the mother, by the bier of her dead son (denied, as a traitor, the rites of sepulture), imprecates curses upon his murderer.

The concluding act shows Timoleon as the deliverer of Syracuse, his crown his reward.

A Corinthian envoy announces, that, in recompense for Timoleon's noble conduct, his brother is to be absolved, and his corpse to receive a Grecian funeral pyre; and Electra, at last by the perfect character of Timoleon weaned from her misplaced love, receives and thus wards from Timoleon an assassin's blow, and dies in his arms, confessing a love which with her high-souled purity could only be confessed in death.

The language of this tragedy has the sin of inflation, but the characters of Timoleon and Electra are capable of great dramatic effect, and worthy of the highest talent, and were sustained by Mr. and Mrs. Wyndham with decided ability and unquestionable success. Mr. Powrie acted Timophanes with his usual energy and force; but by far the greatest performance was the Demaretè of Miss Cleaver. The costumes were classically correct; and the new scenery, by Mr. Channing, was loudly and deservedly applauded.

REMOVAL OF THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The following is the report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the cost and applicability of the Exhibition Building, in Hyde-park. The witnesses examined were only seven; viz. Sir Charles Fox; Mr. Dilke; Mr. Fleming, the Duke of Sutherland's gardener at Trentham; Sir Joseph Paxton; Mr. John Kelk, proprietor of some of the houses opposite the south side of the Building; Mr. Hawkins, head of the department of antiquities in the British Museum; and Mr. Cole.

Office of Works, &c., 19th February, 1852.

My Lords,—In compliance with your Lordships' directions, we have made inquiry into the several matters referred to us in the Treasury letter dated the 13th of December, 1851.

It will be most convenient that we should, in the first place, report upon those questions which will admit of distinct and definite replies; these are:

I. The price at which the Government could purchase the Exhibition Building.

It appears that since the 31st of December, 1851, the Building has been given up by the Commissioners appointed to superintend the Exhibition, and has become the sole property of the contractors. In order, therefore, to obtain a reply to this question, we applied to Sir C. Fox, and he has stated, on the part of the contractors, that the price of the Building as it now stands is £65,834 7s 11d, to which amount, however, must be added a sum for its maintenance since the 31st of December. Sir C. Fox has stated that he expects the Royal Commissioners to pay a sum of £20 912 4s 4d. beyond what he has already received; and if this expectation should be realized, the purchase-money would be reduced to that extent.

II. The cost at which it could be adapted for a permanent structure.

The works necessary for this purpose the contractors would undertake to execute for the sum of £26,000, assuming that it were determined to retain the building on its present site.

III. The cost of removing the building, and re-fixing it upon another site.

The answer to this question must, of course, depend upon the distance of the removal, and the nature of the soil upon which it may be proposed to re-fix the building, but, assuming it to be within a distance to which the materials could be carted, and that the site chosen for its re-construction were attended with no unfavourable circumstances, Sir C. Fox has stated the expense of removal and re-construction, including such improvements as would adapt it for a permanent building, to be £81,000. In other words, adding the cost of removal and re-construction to the price of the purchase, the building could be taken down, removed and refixed for the sum of £137,336, in a condition in which it could be permanently maintained.

IV. The probable cost which would be required for the maintenance of the building.

The contractors would undertake to maintain the structure, including the cost of painting it externally and internally every four years, for the sum of £5000 a year.

The other questions which your Lordships have submitted to our consideration must be matter of opinion, and will not allow of such easy solution These are—

V. The purposes to which the building could be most advantageously applied. Upon this point a variety of suggestions have been offered.

A large covered space affords, it is said, accommodation for innumerable objects and facilities for public amusement and instruction. These are advantages which, it is argued, should not be neglected, but should in some way or other be rendered available; and, accordingly, the Exhibition building which has been suggested, comprises within its ample area museums, exhibitions galleries, lecture-rooms, sheltered walks for invalids, places of recreation for the idle, and of scientific research for the studious.

It is impossible fairly to combine these various suggestions without at the same time considering another question; namely—

VI. The site which it may be desirable to select for this building.

Whether or not the Government could, consistently with former engagements, retain the building upon its present site, is a question into which we do not consider it our province to enter; but we have not deemed it right, in regard to this point, to exclude some evidence which appears to deserve your Lordships' attention

Assuming that the present site were deemed unobjectionable, it appears to us that a portion of Hyde Park should not be permanently appropriated, unless to an object of very general interest and advantage.

The British Museum affords undoubtedly insufficient space for its daily increasing collections; but we believe that the structure in Hyde Park could not be rendered subservient to its relief without extensive alterations, which, while they could impair the effect of the building, would ill satisfy persons who visited the collections.

The sculptures of Egypt, of Lycia, and of Nineveh might, it has been said, be advantageously seen under a roof which, from its lightness and transparency, resembles the open air The contrast of light and shade is, however, deemed advantageous to sculpture, the coloured character of the antiquities may be by other persons thought to accord best with massive architecture.

Mr. Hawkins, the head of the department of antiquities at the British Museum, thinks it objectionable to divide the collection, which he observes that articles of value could not be safely deposited in this building, unless the precautions resorted to during the time of the Exhibition were again adopted.

It is, moreover, obvious that rooms for the officers of the department must be provided; and it is probable that additional buildings, or additional alterations of the interior would prove the bad economy of appropriating this much-admired structure to a purpose for which it was not originally designed.

The force of these observations appears to have been in some measure admitted, even by persons who recommend this appropriation of, be building. It may be seen, for instance, that Mr Cole contemplates not only was temporary employment of the building as one more suitable, but even edifice shall have been constructed for the various institutions which he thinks it desirable to establish Amidst the various schemes that have been proposed, with a view of rendering the building permanently attractive on its present site, the plan recommended by Sir Joseph Paxton appears to us the most eligible. He submitted a very ingenious plan for converting the building into a garden, and, having estimated the cost of this conversion, he states that the entire outlay necessary for the purchase of the building, and its subsequent adaptation, would be £150,367 He also estimates the cost of its future maintenance at £12,000 a year. Upon further consideration of the subject, Sir Joseph has reduced this estimate, and stated the yearly charge for the maintenance of the fabric, and the renewal of the interior decorations required to render it permanently attractive, at £20,000 a year.

Even after making these extensive alterations in the present building, Sir Joseph Paxton has admitted that it will not be in all respects the best adapted to its purpose; and that for the sum of £150,000, he could put up a much more a more magnificent, and a more appropriate structure than the Exhibition building.

We are not prepared to say that the sum of £150,000 would cover the cost of adapting the building to the purposes of a garden. We should think it more prudent to assume £200,000 as the expenditure which would be necessary for these works.

Considering the large annual expenditure which will be required for the maintenance of the gardens when made, it appears to us to be inexpedient to commence the work upon a plan admitted to be imperfect.

Should your Lordships determine to recommend to Parliament an annual grant for the maintenance of an ornamental garden under glass within the precincts of the parks, the plan for such a structure should, we think, be destined with all the skill which science and experience can direct to this task; and it would be unfortunate that the architect should be fettered by an endeavour to employ old materials, and re-adapt former arrangements.

We believe that the remembrance of the late Exhibition would be unfavourable to a new appropriation of the building, as it would be impossible to reproduce the brilliant effect obtained from the rich collections which were temporarily placed there.

The evidence which we have taken induces us to believe that even if the building were removed to another site, such, for instance, as Battersea-park, it could not be rendered a self-supporting establishment, unless it were under the management of persons who might conduct it as a commercial speculation.

We do not suppose that the Government would purchase it for such an object, and therefore we have not inquired further into such an appropriation of the building.

We endeavoured to ascertain whether the Exhibition building, or any portion of the structure could be usefully employed at Kew, in connexion with the Botanic Gardens.

The palm house affords space for the exhibition of tropical plants, but a building for the growth of plants requiring shelter and moderate heat is much desired.

In those grounds there exists already an establishment which could be employed in the care of the plants, and it must be admitted that the height and beauty of the transept forming the most striking portion of the building, would be a great ornament to the gardens at Kew.

We inquired, therefore, of Sir C Fox the cost of removing the central portion to the extent of 33 bays, erecting this central piece together with two new ends, and completing the diminished building as a permanent structure.

From his reply, it appears that the price of this purchase and the charge for refixing it would amount to about £80,000. Some additional expense would have to be incurred for warming and ventilating apparatus.

The results of the evidence here collected appear to us to show, that, if it be proposed to retain the building on its present site, the best purpose to which it could be applied would be the formation of an ornamental garden, as suggested by Sir J. Paxton; if it were decided not to retain the building in Hyde-park, we do not know any other site upon which we can recommend its reconstruction as of a public expense.

If the expenditure of £80,000 were not deemed an insuperable objection, the principal portion of the building might be removed to Kew, where its future maintenance as a conservatory, free of all useful and ornamental, might be provided for with a comparatively small increase to the establishment of the Botanic Gardens.

In the event, however, of such a scheme meeting with the sanction of your Lordships and the approval of Parliament, we believe that it would be the most economical course of proceeding to purchase the entire structure, and again to dispose of those portions which might not be required for the purpose of the Botanic Gardens.—We have the honour to be, my Lords, your Lordships' very humble servants,

SEYMOUR,
W. CHARTT,
JOHN LINDLEY.

The Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty Treasury.

RE-OPENING OF THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

In conformity with a letter on the subject addressed to the paper by Messrs. Fox and Henderson, the Crystal Palace was thrown open to the public on Monday last, free of charge.

Messrs. Fox and Henderson in their letter state that the recommendation in the Report of the Commissioners (given above) to pull down the structure is Founded on a flagrant misconception of Sir Joseph Paxton's evidence, that it would be possible to construct a new building better adapted for a winter garden at less cost than would be required to render the Crystal Palace permanent, and to adapt it to Sir Joseph's plan. We have no hesitation in saying (they add) that this is a monstrous mistake, and that, if the present structure is throwaway, it is simply a wanton destruction of £150,000 worth of public property, which is not likely to be replaced except under an amount of excitement equal to that which prompted the Exhibition.

On Monday, as soon as the doors were thrown open, the building was filled by crowds of well-dressed people, who exhibited undiminished admiration of the unique structure. The architectural proportions were seen to great advantage, there being no objects to interfere with the various points of sight, and the eye having nothing to rest upon but the manifold beauties which combine to give to the structure the character it bears. The refreshment rooms, greatly modified in their proportions, were still objects of attraction, and the numerous seats which were placed throughout the building were much patronised. The trees, which form so conspicuous an adjunct to the grandeur of the transept, were not yet denuded of the last leaves of summer, and their branches, nursed by the warm atmosphere of the building, exhibited a freshness and vigour not possessed by their brethren out of doors. Scattered at distant intervals throughout the building were sundry relics of the Great Exhibition, and amongst them was the "cage" of the Koh-i-noor. One of the fountains in the transept also remained, and its waters were cast in play for the occasion; and a gigantic bell still hung in one of the aisles. Although nearly all the choice productions which once helped to decorate the building were removed, still, as a promenade, the Crystal Palace was pronounced to be a valuable desideratum to the pleasure-seeking public, and the visitors on the whole all were impressed with the conviction that the great boast of the year 1851 might be converted to many useful purposes.

The Engraving upon the previous page was sketched in the Crystal Palace upon one of the days of the recent sale of the fittings.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—The following appointments are, it is said, settled, and will take effect from the 1st of April: Major-General Simpson, from that command, to the Island of Gernsey, to relieve Major-General Love, to command the south-western district; Colonel Beresford, Assistant Adjutant-General at Cork, to succeed Major-General Simpson at Chatham; Major-General K. Kennedy to command the Portsmouth district, relieving Colonel Ideal, Assistant Adjutant-General in Scotland, to succeed Major-General Cocurane as, Deputy Adjutant-General in Dublin; Colonel Torrens, commanding the 1st battalion 72d Fusiliers, to be Assistant Adjutant-General at Colchester.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—The long-expected reduction of men on the 1st of April is abandoned, as it is found impossible to complete the orders required for foreign and home service. We may add that only those who join before the end of June can get the full bounty of £3 3s. and 2d. The casting of money to be adopted here next week will cause great dissatisfaction. There is no foundation for the rumour of reducing the labourers' wages, which is now only 1s per week RIFLE GUN-BOATS FOR JERSEY.—The Government have decided on sending some additional troops to the island of Jersey, and the Horse Guards authorities have selected the 7th Fusiliers for that service, to embark in April.

The Wilkinson projectile, weighing from 500 to 550 grains, and different from the Minié ball, was experimented with at the butt, in the Royal Arsenal, on Friday week, by the inventor. At 200 yards, 300 yards, and 400 yards, every shot struck the target—several hits in the bull's-eye and all close to it. At 500 yards, one out of the five fired went into the bull's eye Experiments were then made with a ball, which is the ball cartridge, each of these being charged with 3 drs of powder, and discharged from a rifle gun, which is known as the 12 lb. gun, which is the heaviest, weighing 7 lbs., with a bore for Lancaster 3210 lb. weight.

A rumour is in circulation, that Captain Penny, the gallant, but ill requited commander of the late Arctic expedition, and the discoverer of Queen Victoria Channel, has received the most flattering offers from the United States to serve in the next Arctic expedition, which it is expected will be sent out by that Government.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have given notice to such Lieutenants in her Majesty's service as are desirous of being recommended for the appointment of Naval Knights of Windsor under the will of the late Samuel Travers, Esq., that they must apply on or before the 1st day of May next, when they will be supplied with the necessary certificates and testimonials which must be returned to Lord Hatherton's office on or before the 1st day of June, which expresses that they are to be "unpersummated or disabled Lieutenants of English man-of-war," and shall be single men or widowers, and be inclined to lead a virtuous, studious, and devout life; to be removed if they give occasion for scandal.

A return just printed shows, that, on the 1st of January last, there were 791 midshipmen and cadets in the Royal Navy, and 235 mates. The number of midships as from cadets could not be given. On the 1st January, last year, there were 1 mates, 540 midshipmen, and 213 cadets.

The Duke of [illegible] has emblazoned his arms, having, since his appointment as First Lord of the Admiralty, taken up his residence in Northumberland House, that portion of the Admiralty formerly occupied by his predecessors has been devoted to the public service; and it is not, it is stated, intended that residences would be there given to any of the Lords.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.—On Monday the trial trip of this powerful steamer took place upon the Mersey. The screw was worked with reduced power in the Wellington Dock on the previous Friday. She went out of dock in good style, and proceeded on her way towards Cape Clear. A fresh breeze passed from the south-west, but her departure reported her speed at 15 miles an hour. Her departure for New York is fixed for the 1st of May, by which time accommodation will be ready for nearly 400 first and second-class passengers.

SEIZURE OF A BRITISH MAIL STEAMER IN THE UNITED STATES.—A letter from Boston, dated the 8th instant, states that the Royal mail steamship America, from Liverpool, had been seized by the United States authorities, in consequence of the discovery of twenty-nine packages of smuggled lace, which had been placed in the waggon sent for the ditty men, and were wrapped up in the clothes. An investigation by the agent showed that the ditty men were the owners on giving security, so that the transaction would not interfere with the sailing of the vessel. Joseph Beale, a steward of the ship, had absconded on Saturday on the discovery of the smuggling transaction, and a reward of 500 dollars was offered for his arrest.

The bill to legalize the formation of industrial and provident partnerships, which has been recently introduced into the House of Commons, was published on Tuesday, the object of it being to enable working men to form societies to carry on joint trades, and to legalise such societies already in existence.

An old man named Scott, an agricultural labourer, who was extremely deaf, while trespassing on the line of the Brighton, Chichester, and Portsmouth Railway, on Monday, was instantaneously killed by a train passing over him.

MUSIC.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first concert of the above novel undertaking was given at Exeter Hall on Wednesday night, under the direction of M. Berlioz, the eminent composer, who has been expressly engaged to conduct the series of six performances. For more reasons than one, it is to be regretted that the promoters of the present speculation had not assumed another title, because such as the one they have adopted, whilst it naturally may be regarded as invidious, affords no adequate notion of its real purpose, which is to extend the domain of art, by bringing to modern composers, without distinction of country, an opportunity hitherto denied to them, of producing their great orchestral works. As the [illegible] to the ancient Philharmonic Society insist that the eight annual concerts shall be exclusively devoted to the accepted instrumental masterpieces of the master-minds, it is quite clear that there is ample room for the establishing an institution at which living composers may have a chance of distinction, and, moreover, at which locality, artists of note, who have been excluded from appearing at the old society, owing to a spirit of partisanship and exclusiveness, may be presented before an enlightened public. It will, of course, entail great responsibility on the directors of the New Philharmonic Society, so to select the works and to constitute as to escape the charge of favouritism and of jobbery; but if art progress be the watchword, the moral courage to resist undue influences will, it is to be hoped, not be found wanting, and then success will be certain, whilst a contrary course can only bring about a series of discomfiture.

The opening programme is calculated to inspire confidence as to the future, commencing with the glorious "Jupiter" Symphony in C, of Mozart, there were also two noble overtures, Weber's "Oberon" and Rossini's "William Tell;" whilst as novelties must be specified the selection from Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauride," Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in C, for pianoforte (Mr. Silas), violin (Sevrin), and violoncello (Platti), and the first part of Berlioz's dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The orchestra, to give due effect to the above selections, comprised sixteen first violins, led by Sivori; fifteen second violins, Herr Jansa principal; twelve violas, Herr Goffrie the chief; twelve violoncelli, with Platti at the head; twelve double basses, with Bottesini as the general. Thus there are sixty-eight performers, amongst whom are Willy, Cooper, Thirlwall, Day, Cass, Baker, Pelitzer, Patey, Hill, N. Mori, Beseth, Kreutzer, J. Loder, Silberberg, Wendell Thomas, Watt, Gunz, Parry, Vogel, Trust, Westlake, Wand, Lütgen, Amberg, Hausmann, Goffrie (Senior), and Goffrie (Junior), Reed, Pratten, Mount, Flower, Castell, &c. Of the wood, brass, and percussion instruments, there are Rémusat, De Folly, Barret, Lazarus, Sommerlechner, Baumann, Ould, Harper, Jarrel, Jones, Cull, Antoine, Winterbottom, Frosyhr, Chipp, Isin, &c., the total band amounting to ninety performers.

In the work was the great feature of interest [illegible] origin is curious and romantic. Spohr, on his last visit to this country was [illegible] performing in Paris One evening, at the house of Madame Sabatier. In the course of the evening Spohr was introduced to a young Frenchman, filled with enthusiasm for the genius of our bard, and [illegible] with excitement at the acting of Miss Kemble in the character of Juliet. The amateur was Berlioz, and that the Juliet was Miss Smithson, [illegible] two strangers on that evening—first, that he would compose a [illegible] to tragedy; and, secondly, that he would marry Miss Smithson. Both these resolves he most rapturously announced. How it is that it has taken upwards of a dozen years before this sublime production should have been heard in this country, is another painful evidence of the enormous obstacles living genius has to contend with in this world of prejudice, bigotry, and intolerance against innovations in art. The breath had long quitted the earthly tenements of Mozart and Beethoven before their works were properly appreciated. It is only since Mendelssohn died, in the flower of his age, that Europe is doing him justice.

The dramatic symphony of Berlioz differs from any known composition: in form it approaches the nearest to Beethoven's choral symphony, the "Ode to Joy" of the latter; but the French composer has not sought to realise abstract theories of the passions, but has endeavoured without scenic adjuncts to portray to the mind's eye the poetic incidents of the play of the immortal bard—to convey, in a musical panorama of the principal situations. He employs the agency of a chorus of harmonised recitative, with solos for contralto and tenor, to supply the [illegible] orchestral painting, and to depict certain prominent incidents: thus, in the first part, the mutual hatred of the Montagues and the Capulets is the instrumental introduction; next, the fête given by Juliet's father; then the scene of the lovers at the balcony, and after words Mercutio's description of Queen Mab, in the scherzo. The second part of the symphony has not yet been given here, it commences with a funeral march of the Capulets to the tomb, and finally the in which is the funeral march of Juliet, the scene at its tomb, and finally the reconciliation of the contending families, through the influence of Friar Lawrence, over the inanimate bodies of the lovers.

The introduction, a fugued allegro in D minor, with the stringed and wind instruments in marked contrast, ends with a pompous phrase for the trombones in the recitative form, descriptive of the voice of the authorities of Verona putting an end to the tumult. In this prologue there is a beautiful melody in A, which time by the contrasting sung by [illegible] accompaniments of flutes, clarionets, cor-Anglais, harp, and violoncello are admirable; the modulation in the passage in which the chorus joins, "Heaven is love," is very effective. The characters of the rival houses in D, in the key of A, with the fanciful orchestration of piccolo, altos, violoncello, and flutes, will be much admired; the dying off to the passage, "Mab like a shadow glides away," is quite poetic. The musical description of the marvellous Queen Mab in recitative is confined solely to the instruments, and it represents Romeo alone in the garden, whilst the music of the ball-room is heard from Capulet's mansion. The oboe has a [illegible] somnambulic character, and the effect of the ma che danza is very pleasing, and the manner in which it is worked up in a succession of crescendoes, becoming more and more energetic, is colossal; the resumption of the lover's walk in the garden is managed with the highest order of orchestral effects. In the third movement, after a bacchanal chorus in six-eight time, of Capulets quitting the fête, is extremely characteristic, a lovely adagio, in A, in six-eight time, is heard, creating several new and original modes of orchestration, and the manner in which it is worked up in a succession of crescendoes, becoming more and more energetic, is colossal; the resumption of the lover's walk in the garden is managed with the highest order of orchestral effects. In the third movement, after a bacchanal chorus in six-eight time, of Capulets quitting the fête, is extremely characteristic, a lovely adagio, in A, in six-eight time, is heard, creating several new and original modes of treatment. The Queen Mab scherzo is one of the most powerful imaginings that ever emanated from the mind of a musician; it is in F, in three-eight time, presto, the strange instruments muted playing pianissimo, whilst the wood band discourses the Shakespearean description of the most capricious and dreamy phrases; herein has Berlioz developed the most extraordinary combinations and novel effects of sonorousness.

We have not a brief space to refer to the admirable execution of the entire programme: the slow movement and the fugue finale in Mozart's work, Weber's overture, and the highly dramatic chorus of Gluck, created quite a sensation in the first part; the repetition of the last-mentioned piece was insisted upon, but the conductor properly resisted the demands of encores for the former. His own work, despite of its enormous intricacies, was steadily performed; the most marked attention was paid, and the audience manifested a marked impression. Berlioz was unanimously called for at the close of his symphony.

Ellis, Sivori, and Platti, by a most polished and finished [illegible] delighted the audience in the [illegible] concerto, and Mr. Silas, in his trivial but pleasing [illegible] "Sabrina Zeloco" and "Sabrina waun," with Sontag's "Home Sweet Home," and Mr. Wagner's "Donna Anna." Costa's "Martha" will be produced for Madame Sontag. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg (brother of Prince Albert) has signified his permission for the production at his opera, Gotha, "Don Pasquale" has had great success at Berlin and Vienna. A new Spanish divertissement, "El Duende" (the Elf), will be brought out next Tuesday for Mdlle. Guy Stephan.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This establishment will be opened this evening (Saturday), with Donizetti's "Maria di Rohan," supported by Mdme. Castellan, Mdlle. Seguin the new contralto, Signori Tamberlik, Soldi, Polonini, and Ronconi. In the incidental divertissement will be sustained by Mdlle. Fanny and Mdlle. Robert; Piatti and Bottesini have been added to Costa's orchestra, and Mdme. Julienne, from the Grand Opera in Paris, and Mdlle. Bollini, must be added in the list of artistes already engaged in our columns. Mdlle. Bertrand's "Martyre" and Rossini's "William Tell" are in active preparation; the former for the début of Tamberlik and the latter for that of Herr Ander, the great German tenor. Ronconi will play William Tell, and Formeli will be included in the cast.

ST. JAMES'S.

M. Lemaître in "Buy Blue" has not so favourable a character as in Belphégor. It is more subordinate, and he has not worked out with the same truth to nature. The love of a footman for the Queen of Spain demonstrates that Victor Hugo had resorted to the romantic in a desperate fit of resolution. Disgusted with the matter as a whole, the first act of the drama plays courtier and accomplice to the life, until the Queen's heart is penetrated; and, like another Lord of Lyons, her reputation imperilled. But Ruy Blas is nobler than Claude Melnotte, and takes summary vengeance on his malignant employer, and then kills himself for having been made his tool, dying at the feet of the Sovereign whom he had deceived and so presumptuously dared to love. What could be done for a part so violently conceived and fantastically delineated, M. Lemaître did; but the audience were apparently little touched by the incidents of the play or the character of the hero.

MR. BUNN.—Next Wednesday the active and spirited lessee of Drury-lane Theatre will take his annual benefit, on which occasion "The Bohemian Girl" will be revived for Mr and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Mr. Whitworth, and Mr. Drayton. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley and other popular artists will assist Mr Bunn to form an attractive programme; and his exertions to establish an English opera house on a sound basis, if it cannot be pronounced difficulties, will no doubt secure for him the general support of the public.

PRINCESS'.—A report has been current some days that Mr. and Mrs. Keeley had left the season open for engagement, when naturally would have terminated last night. It is right to add that this report is false in every one of the specifications made of it, and is, we believe, entirely without foundation. We understand, is uncertain; but they are to appear, as our readers will perceive, at Drury-Lane, on the occasion of Mr. Bunn's benefit.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE.—The puppets continue to be very popular: the "Swiss Cottage" has been very successful; and the management announces a new piece called "A Night in Leader Haigh."

MR. ARTHUR SKETCHLY'S "ASCENT OF MONT BLANC" has proved very attractive, both as a mid-day and evening entertainment. Each performance is filled to overflowing nightly, and the morning performances are equally well attended.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY.—The annua meeting of this society was held on Monday night, at the London Tavern: Sir E. N. Buxton, Bart. M.P., in the chair. The secretary read a lengthy report, setting forth the labours of the society in securing to the American Indians, the New Zealanders, the Kaffirs, and the Hottentots their political and social rights. The financial statement showed an income of £967 19s 6d., and an expenditure of £323 18s., leaving a deficit of £29 2s. 7d. for the year 1851. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Wright, the Rev. E. C. Gribble, P. Bell, Esq., and other gentlemen.

ROYAL CALEDONIAN ASYLUM.—On Monday the annual general court of the guardians of this institution was held, in the hal. of the Scottish Hospital, Crane court; Sir John Heron Maxwell, Bart., in the chair. It was stated that although the asylum was built for the reception of 200 inmates, the children of sai ors, soldiers, and marines, natives of Scotland, yet that, from want of adequate support, only 108 pupils on the books, and these are maintained at the annual expense of £1 per head. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Wright, the Rev. E. C. Gribble, P. Bell, Esq., and other gentlemen

ROYAL CALEDONIAN ASYLUM.—On Monday the annual general court of the guardians of this institution was held, in the hal. of the Scottish Hospital, Crane court; Sir John Heron Maxwell, Bart., in the chair. It was stated that although the asylum was built for the reception of 200 inmates, the children of sai ors, soldiers, and marines, natives of Scotland, yet that, from want of adequate support, only 108 pupils on the books, and these are maintained at the annual expense of £1 per head. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Wright, the Rev. E. C. Gribble, P. Bell, Esq., and other gentlemen

FAIR IN THE THAMES TUNNEL.—Monday being the anniversary of the opening of the Thames Tunnel, it was celebrated by a fair and many sales in that remarkable thoroughfare. Rows of stalls, covered with a variety of useful and ornamental articles, extended the entire length of the tunnel. In either of the arches of the tunnel, the brilliancy of variegated lamps were arranged in a variety of fanciful devices under the vault.

CITY COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS.—An application was made to the Court, on Tuesday, by a firm in Cornhill for permission to lay along the public way a gutta percha tube, for the purpose of lighting the firm's premises by means of electricity or otherwise, with another of their establishments in the same street. The Court referred the subject to a committee of investigation, being of opinion that some favourable moment or less delightful ones from a precedent of the kind. Bude's patent lamp, for railway, nautical, and other purposes, was exhibited. It consists of a silvered concave reflector, the lamp, a parabolic silvered glass deflector, and a double silvered prismatic lens. The light was exceedingly brilliant. The superiority of these lamps was said to consist in their burning any kind of oil or fat, and giving double the usual light. The patentee was requested to place one of the lamps at the King William statue, and another under the middle arch of London-bridge.

GENERAL PENSION SOCIETY.—The annual dinner of this charity was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Wednesday, Mr. Cubitt in the chair. The report stated that since it was established in 1818, 892 poor pensioners were permanently received at a total cost of £56 994. The subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to about £4 0.. It also appears that the late James Thompson bequeathed the society £100, and Miss Wiles seldom £1000 2 per cent. stock, with a reversion contingent on one life of £2000.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—A ballot was taken on Tuesday to decide whether the dividend for the half year to the 5th of February should be increased to 4 per cent, and the decision was in the affirmative.

A meeting was held on Tuesday, at the London Tavern, of the proprietors of the Port Phillip and Colonial Gold Mining Company, to take into consideration the terms on which their application for a Royal charter of incorporation had been granted by the Board of Trade, when a resolution was unanimously passed to accept the same. It was mentioned at the meeting, that Mr. Evan H. Pikes and some associates had left Sydney for Port Phillip, and that for Port Phillip and that the first ship with masters and mechanics would leave Falmouth about Monday next.

EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.—On Tuesday evening a numerous meeting was held at Wornum's rooms, Store-street, over which the Rev. T. Dale presided. Resolutions were agreed to recommending the closing of houses of business at an hour in the evening during winter, and in the summer at seven o'clock, and in the during the summer. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. Short, the Rev. T. Nolan, the Rev. H T. Hughes, the Rev. G. S. Drew, and the Rev. O. Ambert Rogue.

METROPOLITAN COMMISSION OF SEWERS.—A special Court of Sewers was held on Wednesday, at the offices, Greek-street, S.o. The Chairman of Sewers, Mr. Alderman Lucas, presided. The business of the Court was of little interest to the general reader. It appeared that the sum to £926 6s. 6d. The general statement of public works showed that during the quarter a length of 53,769 feet of brick sewers, and 122,857 feet of pipe sewers, and other works of construction, had been carried in a cost of £7,555 5s. 1d. The total length of sewers at present is 1,000,140 lin. 7d. The number of houses drained during the past year was 8381.

PROFESSIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—The fifth annual meeting of this company was held on Wednesday, at the offices, 76, Cheapside; Major Henry Steele, LL.B., in the chair. The report, which was unanimously adopted, stated that the new premiums received during the past year amounted to £1,000 2s 6d. The total sum assured during the last year was £179,000, the number of policies issued, 6.1; and the increase of annual income from new premiums, £ 807 5s. 8d. The receipts for the year were £29,360.

SOCIETY OF THE FRIENDS OF ITALY.—The second conversazione of this society was held on Wednesday evening in the Freemasons' Tavern. The object of the society is to direct public attention to a class of facts affecting the opinions which may be formed in this country in reference to foreign politics, and to bring into direct communication active English politicians and the leading representative of what is popularly termed the "Italian cause." Professor Newman took the chair. Amongst the most prominent speakers on this occasion was M. Mazzini, who enunciated his well-known views on the subject.

THE CORPORATION REFORM BILL.—On Wednesday, a Common Hall, convened by requisition, was held at Guildhall. Duke Cubitt, the Lord Mayor presided. About 60 of the Liverymen were present, and upon the platform were Baron Rothschild, M.P.; Mr. Moffatt, M.P.; Mr. T. A Mitchell, M.P.; Aldermen Gibbs, M.P., Alderman Harvey, M.P., Alderman Humphery, M.P.; Sir James Duke, M.P., &c. Mr. Deputy Harrison and Mr. Deputy Salomons moved and seconded a resolution approving of the bill now before Parliament for the purpose of extending the municipal franchise, an amendment which was moved by Mr. Nathaniel Carter was carried by an overwhelming majority. It declared that the meeting viewed with alarm the proposed bill, which, if carried, would destroy the independence and jurisdiction of the body of liverymen. It was then agreed upon that a committee should be appointed to represent that meeting of Common Hall, to watch the interest of the Livery, and to adopt such steps as might be deemed desirable in reference to the bill before Parliament and to municipal elections in the City.

THE ENGINEERS' STRIKE.—On Wednesday night a conference of delegates from the various trades' associations in the metropolis was held at the Bell Inn, Holborn, whose resolutions were passed, inviting the workmen throughout the United Kingdom immediately to appoint delegates, to assemble in every district concurrently, to deliberate on the important subjects involved in the present industrial dispute; and on the motion of Mr. Allen, it was resolved that a conference of trades' delegates has been convened, or has assembled in any district of the United Kingdom, upon subjects connected with, or propositions referred to, the conference, shall be transmitted thereto for their examination and decision. That the various trades' societies represented at this conference should advance, by way of loan, to the Amalgamated Society of Engineers as much money as they can spare from their funds, in order that they may be supported in a resistance to the declaration they are called upon to sign before resuming employment; and the whole of the trades of England are recommended to make a weekly subscription in aid of the workmen thrown out of employment. About 70 delegates were present.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The births registered in the metropolis in the week ending on Saturday, March 20, were—Males, 897; females, 813; total, 1710. The deaths during the same period were—Males, 652; females, 580; total, 1208. The official report states that a high rate of mortality continues to prevail. In ten corresponding weeks of the years 1842-51, the average number of deaths was 1051, which, if raised in a certain proportion according to the increase of population, would be 1145. The number returned in the last week, therefore, exceeds the average by 63. The number registered in the last week of January was 1247, and in the last week of February 1247; the number in the last week ending last Saturday the number was 44; from tubercular diseases the respective numbers were 288 and 224; from diseases of the nerves, 134 and 143; from diseases of the heart, &c., 83 and 91; from diseases of the digestive organs, 75 and 74; from atrophy, 20 and 31; from age 60 and 62. The deaths from diseases of the respiratory organs last week were 209, the average being 249. Bronchitis was much more than in any corresponding week of ten years, the average number of 351, when it carried off 156 persons. Last week the number of deaths from it was 126. Pulmonary consumption fatal, though the number, which was 182 in the preceding week, has declined to 169. The deaths from croup were 18 children and 4 persons of mat re age; 9 children died of measles, 20 of scarlatina, 36 of hooping-cough, 11 of croup, and 0 of thrush. 22 persons died of diarrhœa and dysentery, 4 of influenza, 4 of typhus, &c., 1 of rheumatic fever, and 12 of erysipelas.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on every day, except Saturday; the mean of Monday was 30.316 in., the highest in the week. The mean of the week was 30.172 in. The mean temperature of the week was 40°5 deg., which is 1·7 deg. below the average of the same week in ten years. The wind was generally in the north-east.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We have only two meetings in the calendar for next week; viz Croxton-park on Tuesday and Wednesday, with barely an average list, and the "Great Metropolitan," or Epsom Downs, on Thursday, with a bumper programme. The "Peppercakes" on the other side of the town can do nothing worth saying; Lewes next will also be race by race the first shower is a marked improvement, and the New Steeplechase Course at Newmarket, on Tuesday, at Wednesday, and a grand Caledonian, on the west of Scotland; on Thursday, at Kendal; and on Saturday the Liverpool Hunt. The coursing calendar is "blank."

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—A pretty good attendance on this very dull afternoon, the only horses showing any disposition being Paddington for the Northamptonshire Stakes and Hobbie Noble for the Derby; the first showing a marked improvement, and the other a decline. We subjoin the latest prices:—

NORTHAMPTON TRIAL. 7 to 4 agst Cliveden.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Teddington	10 to 1 agst Ballet girl	25 to 1 agst Darkie
10 to 1 — Chief Justice	12 to 1 — Cotherstone	25 to 1 — Jack in the Corner
	25 to 1 agst Ray Day

METROPOLITAN.

10 to 1 agst Backhitter	15 to 1 agst Silkton

CHESTER CUP.

18 to 1 agst Scarecrow	30 to 1 agst Nancy	35 to 1 agst Cossack
20 to 1 — High Sheriff	33 to 1 — Curiosity	40 to 1 — Unity
	40 to 1 agst Mountain Deer

DERBY

6 to 1 agst Hobble Noble	18 to 1 agst Claverhouse	30 to 1 agst Chief Baron
12 to 1 — Orville	18 to 1 — Lapidist	Nicholson
14 to 1 — Cossack	25 to 1 — Kingston	40 to 1 — Phantom
16 to 1 — Alfred the Great	25 to 1 — Honeybrewed	40 to 1 — K. of Trumps (t)

THURSDAY.—No betting.

CATTERICK BRIDGE RACES.—MONDAY.

THE SHORTS SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. J. Dawson's b f Anteverta, 1. Mr. Ewbank's br f Sweetness, 2.

THE NORTHERN LASS SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Holloway's Edwards's b m Lodie (owner), by Alarm—Miss Wood, 1.

THE LASSES JUBILEE SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Mc Mackin's br f Evasive, 1. Mr. Sc Mercer's Cutsarra, 2.

THE REVIVAL STAKES of 20 sovs each.—Mr. Jaques nd Achyranthes, 1. Mr. Meikham's Italian, 2.

TUESDAY.

CHAMPAGNE STAKES of 20 sovs each.—Mr. Osborne's b c Bold Davie, 1. Mr. Mc Kinnon's b f Ada, 2.

FILLY STAKES of 15 sovs each.—Mr. Jacques nd br f Lady Agnes, 1. Mr. Meikham's b f Evadne, 2.

CLARET STAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Osborne's b f Merry Bird, 1. Mr. Jewsons nd b c Dalton, 2.

CUP STAKES of 10 guineas each.—Proctor, 1. Cyclops, 2.

SPECULATION PLATE of £50, added to a sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.—Parlan, 1. Child of the Mist, 2.

NORTHAMPTON RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

TRIAL STAKES of 10 sovs each, with 40 added Mr. Robinson's c by Venison out of Glen (Sergeant), 1. Mr. Barnet's Trinket (Flatman), 2

Second Year of the TRIENNIAL STAKES of 10 sovs each, with 80 added.—Mr. Greet.s's Frantic (Flatman), 1. Major Martin's Convt. sion (W Abdale), 2.

GREAT NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES of 25 sovs each, with 100 added Lord Chesterfield's Beadsman, aged (Abdale), 1. Mr. Williams's Prince of Day, 2

HER MAJESTY'S PLATE of 100 guineas.—Mr. Stephenson's Brother to Willingham (Chapman), 1. Mr Meikham's Paddy Bird (Aldcroft), 2

WHITTLEBURY STAKES of 10 sovs each, with 150 added. Lord Derby's Longbow (W Butler), 1. Mr. Halford's Peppermint (W. Sharpe), 2.

PECULIAR STAKES of 5 sovs each, with 40 added.—Mr. Armstrong's Equal (Osborne), 1. Duke of Bedford's Newport (Petit), 2.

THURSDAY.

THE DELAPRE STAKES Paddy Bird, 1. Dangerous, 2.

EARL SPENCER'S PLATE of £100 — Forester, 1. Prime Minister, 2.

THE ALTHORP PARK STAKES — Nathaniel, 1. Sister to Dreamland, 2.

THE INNKEEPERS' PLATE — Ballet Girl, 1. Mi k Boy, 2.

THE CUP — Brother to Willingham, 1. Proctor, 2.

CHELTENHAM RACES.—THURSDAY.

THE ARISTOCRATIC STAKES Maurice Daly, 1. Jack of all Trades, 2.

FARE HANDICAP STEEPLECHASE.—The Unknown, 1. Widow Machree, 2.

FOOT-RACE FOR THE CHAMPION'S BELT AND FIFTY POUNDS.—A spirited contest in a foot-race between John Levitt (of Battersea) and Thomas Troat (the Suffolk Stag) took place at the Copenhagen-fields, on Monday Fifteen were selected from the competitors who had entered the names, and many thousands outside, on every tree and mound that could raise them so far as to see over the fencing. The hour fixed for the race was three o'clock, P.M., yet it wanted but 21 minutes to 5 when the two pedestrians appeared on the ground, the 30 times round the ground for the 10 miles; and such interest was taken in the event that the betting was very brisk. The tenth and last mile was go to over as follows:—28th lap, Troat leading by yards; 29th, Troat 4 yards; and Levitt having a slight lead; 30th and last lap, time going the mile 3 min 12 sec. Levitt came in first by at least 20 yards, thus snatching the belt from Troat, and winning the stake of considerable sum. The whole of the 10 miles, 51 min. 5s sec.—the fastest race on record.

GERMAN EMIGRANTS TO AMERICA.

—The agents for the American line of packet ships, trading between London and New York, have recently had the revenue authorities from the adoption of more convenient regulations for the transhipment of the baggage of emigrants arriving by the steamers from the Continent en route to the United States, and at the same time to prevent those articles of apparel as they may actually require during their temporary sojourn here, on their way to their destination. A considerable number of emigrants are expected to arrive in the course of spring and summer from Germany, and Rotterdam, en route to the United States. The authorities have sanctioned arrangements for the desired purpose.

PUBLIC PETITIONS.—The following petitions have been presented to Parliament in the present session.—For reform of Parliamentary representation, 14, with 3031 signatures; for reform of Parliamentary Rules assumption Bill of last session, 11, with 46 2 signatures; for repealing the grant to Maynooth College, 7, with 10,741 signatures; for public inspection of nunneries, 6, with 5000 signatures; for abolition of the Penny Postage, 10, with 5257 signatures; for settlement of corn-law question, 1, with 79 signatures; for reappointment of committees on income and property tax and for extension of income, 15, with 9000 signatures; for repeal of the Penny Postage, 1, with 1 signature; against removal of Lunatic Asylum from the county of Cavan, 1, with 39 signatures; for a secret ballot, 1, with 10,000 signatures; against removal of Lunatic Asylum, Hollinwood, 1, with 50 signatures; for repeal of Ecclesiastical Titles Act, 1, with 1 signature; for repeal of Ecclesiastical Titles assumption Act, 19, with 1547 signatures; in favour of Tenant Right (Ireland) Bill, 38, with 3000 signatures.

REGULATIONS FOR STEAMBOATS.—On Saturday notice was issued by the Board of Trade, that the provisions of the amended steam Navigation Act, 14 and 15 Vic., c. 79, would be strictly enforced on and after the 31st inst. All the river steamers have been surveyed, and some considerable reductions made in the number of passengers they are allowed to carry; and no new steamer will be furnished with a safety valve free from the control of the engineer. Penalties will be enforced on masters and owners for carrying more than their number, and on passengers for forcing their way on board, or travelling beyond the distance for which they have paid. The Customs' officers on and after the 31st inst. will not grant transire or permit any vessels to put to sea, unless they are properly found in life-boats, fire-engines, signal-lights, and the other requirements for the preservation of life at sea.

PUBLIC INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—By a Parliamentary return just printed, it appears that in 1692 the revenue paid into the Exchequer was £564,435,143, and the expenditure amounted to £40 312,227, leaving a surplus of £4,744,918. In 1826 the revenue was £50,241,403, and the expenditure £50,241,278, leaving a deficiency of £645,929. In 1827 there was a deficiency of £2,491,301; in 1828, of £2,256,358; in 1829, of £2,202,760; in 1830, of £3,345,327; in 1831, £1,312,793; in 1840, of £1,853,801; in 1841, of £2,101,370; and in 1842 of £1 975,348. In 1811 there was a surplus of £1,145,304; in 1844, a surplus of £2,436,195; and in 1850, of £2,451,000. In 1847 there was again a deficiency of income of £4,9 4,000, and in 1848, of £7,076,419. In 1849 there was a surplus of £2,088,126; in 1850, of £2,978,8 6; and in 1851, of £2 5 0,0 0.

On Sunday night there was a fire broke out in the range of premises extending from the west front to the east court, some days roying in its progress a considerable amount of property and a valuable horse. It was not known whether the property was insured.

The weather in the north of England has been exceedingly mild—almost sultry, in fact, at present; and lambs are entered and of a recurrence of late almost in every field. Several of the gardens are in full bloom, and the whole of the sunny vegetated crops.

So extreme is the warmth, that, at three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, the thermometer stood in Market-street, Manchester, at 71 deg., the range of the same hour last day only 4 deg. higher.

Maria Roebuck, a single woman, who had been for eight years an inmate of the Marylebone workhouse, was suffocated last Friday week, in consequence of a large piece of mutton which she was eating having lodged at the back of her throat. Mr. Walker stated at the inquest, that her throat had been instantly opened, her life would have been saved.

The New York papers states that the case of N. P. Willis against Edwin Forrest, for the well-known assault and battery, terminated on the 3d ult., in a verdict for the plaintiff of 2500 dollars damages.

By a return just issued by order of the House of Lords, it appears that last year £135,482 was paid for shooting certificates in the United Kingdom.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English funds have shown considerable firmness during the week, with out much variation They were quoted, on Monday last, at 99⅜ to ⅝; and on Thursday evening, March 25, left off at 99⅜ to 99½. The premium on Exchequer bills is from 19 to 17 dis.

Foreign stocks are much quieter Mexican have not been higher than 32¼. Liquidor are 8⅜; Grenada, 21¼ and Peruvian Deferred, 68⅝. Spanish five per Cents have been done as high as 25½, and now realise 25⅜ to ⅝. The Deferred are only 19⅛ to ⅜, and the Certificates 2⅜ per cent. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents have been 60⅜ to ⅝; Sardinian Old Bonds are quoted 93⅜ to ⅝

Railway shares have become weaker, as on the last day or two as last week; but there are signs that they will improve. The French shares are steady. West Railways of France 3 to 2 premium Paris at Orleans are 3 to 4 premium. The English lines which have most declined are Eastern Counties, Shrewsbury, Birmingham, York and North Midland, North-Western, and Lancashire and Yorkshire. The arrangement for traffic with the London and North-Western Railway in connection with the Caledonian is expected to tend to the benefit of the latter company.

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Aberdeen, 18¾; Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston and Eastern Junction, 6⅞; Caledonian, 18¾ ex div.; Chester and Holyhead, 2⅜; Eastern Counties, 3⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 28 ex div.; Great North. ern, 99¾; Great Western, 85½; Lancaster and Carlisle, 78; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 72½ ex div.; Leeds Northern, 17; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 96; London and North-Western, 132⅜; London and South-Western, 87¾; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 34½; Midland, 63⅜; Norfolk, 34; North British, 7⅜; Scottish Central, 15⅜; Shropshire Union, 4⅜; South-Eastern, 21⅜ d. d.; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 18⅜; York and North Midland, 24.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE. Since our last report, the arrivals of English wheat up to this market coastwise and by land-carriage, have been on a very limited scale; receipts are, the demand for all kinds of grain has ruled extremely dull, and the currencies have undergone no change. Fine foreign wheats have changed hands slowly, at previous currencies; but low and middling qualities have been neglected, and must be quoted lower. Barley has [illegible] and the malting demand has been very limited. Malt has [illegible] Beans and peas are [illegible] Flour has become weaker, and is 6d to 1s per sack lower than last week.

ENGLISH WHEAT.—Essex and Kent, red, 38s to 44s; ditto, white, 42s to 50s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 36s to 42s; ditto, white, 42s to 46s; rye, 31s to 33s; grinding, 27s to 30s; chevalier, 34s to 36s; ditto, distilling, 28s to 30s; Lincoln and Yorkshire, red, 36s to 42s; ditto, white, 42s to 46s; Northumberland and Scotch, red, 34s to 38s; ditto, white, 38s to 42s; foreign, 30s to 36s; ditto, fine, 38s to 42s; Baltic, red, 32s to 36s; ditto, fine, 36s to 38s; Danzig and Konigsberg, 36s to 38s; ditto, fine, 38s to 42s; Pomeranian, Prussian, and Polish, 36s to 38s; ditto, fine, 38s to 42s; Marianopoli, 38s to 42s; Taganrog, 34s to 36s; white, 38s to 42s; Egyptian, 30s to 32s; Barbary, 32s to 34s; per qr.

BARLEY.—English, grinding, 22s to 24s; distilling, 25s to 27s; malting, 28s to 30s; chevalier, 30s to 32s; grinding, 22s to 24s; distilling, 25s to 27s; malting, 28s to 30s; chevalier, 30s to 32s; Scotch, 22s to 24s; Irish, 22s to 24s; Dutch, 22s to 24s; Danish, 22s to 24s; per qr.

OATS.—English, potato, 22s to 24s; ditto, Poland, 20s to 22s; ditto, feed, 18s to 20s; Scotch, potato, 22s to 24s; ditto, Poland, 20s to 22s; ditto, feed, 18s to 20s; Irish, potato, 22s to 24s; ditto, Poland, 20s to 22s; ditto, feed, 18s to 20s; Dutch, 18s to 20s; Danish, 18s to 20s; per qr.

The Seed Crops.—Linseed, rapeseed, and cakes are in fair request, at full prices. In all other articles very little doing.

Linseed.—English, sowing, 60s to 62s; Baltic crushing, 44s to 47s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Bombay, 42s to 43s per qr.; Calcutta, 46s to 48s per qr.; Egyptian, 46s to 48s per qr.

Rapeseed.—New, 37s to 38s per 1000; Maple cakes, £4 5s to £4 10s per ton. Canary, 38s to 40s per qr.; Hempseed, 32s to 34s per qr.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6½d to 7d. of household do. 5½d to 6d per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average. Wheat, 42s 7d; barley, 30s 3d; oats, 19s 9d; rye, 31s 11d; beans, 34s 4d; peas, 33s 10d

The Six Weeks' Average. Wheat, 42s 7d; barley, 30s 5d; oats, 19s 5d, rye, 30s 11d; beans 33s 1d; peas, 33s 9d

Flour.—Owing to the heavy arrivals, 2s to 3s per sack lower. Town-made flour, 37s to 39s; Essex and Suffolk, 35s to 37s; Kent and Essex, 36s to 38s; Norfolk and Suffolk, 34s to 36s; Yorkshire, 34s to 36s; Devonshire and Somersetshire, 36s to 38s; Irish, 30s to 32s; Dantzic, 34s to 36s; American, 30s to 32s per 280 lb. Foreign. American flour, 16s to 17s per barrel; French, 32s to 35s per 280 lb.

The Seed Markets.—Linseed, rapeseed, and cakes are in fair request, at full prices. In all other articles very little doing.

Linseed.—English, sowing, 60s to 62s; Baltic crushing, 44s to 47s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Bombay, 42s to 43s per qr.; Calcutta, 46s to 48s per qr.; Egyptian, 46s to 48s per qr.

Rapeseed.—New, 37s to 38s per 1000; Maple cakes, £4 5s to £4 10s per ton. Canary, 38s to 40s per qr.; Hempseed, 32s to 34s per qr.

Bread.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

The Fifth Edition, 3s 6d,
YOUNG LADY'S FRIEND; or, Manual of Practical Advice and Instruction to Young Females on their entering upon the Duties of Life, after leaving School. By A LADY.
London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

This day, fcap 8vo, 2s 6d,
THE EARTH and MAN; or, Physical Geography in its Relation to the History of Mankind. Slightly abridged from the Work of Professor Guyot; with Corrections and Notes.
London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

MR. BRODERIP'S NEW WORK
Post 8vo, 10s 6d
LEAVES from the NOTE-BOOK of a NATURALIST. By W J BRODERIP, Esq, F R S, Author of "Zoological Recreations." Reprinted from "Fraser's Magazine."
London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

This day, price 1s,
TIMOLEON: a Romantic Tragedy of Classic Times. By ROBERT W JAMESON, Esq, Author of "Rimrod," &c.
FORBES and WILSON, 37, Prince-street, Edinburgh; and sold by Robert B Blackader, 12 Paternoster row.

MISS STRICKLAND'S TALES FROM HISTORY.
Sixth and Cheaper Edition, 1 volume, with Illustrations, 5s
TALES and STORIES from HISTORY. By AGNES STRICKLAND.
London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

Fifth Edition, with numerous Illustrations, 5s
FAMILIAR HISTORY of BIRDS; their Nature, Habits, and Instincts. By E STANLEY, D D, Bishop of Norwich, President of the Linnæan Society.
London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

Fourth Edition, 8vo, price 2s 6d,
AFFECTIONS of the LUNGS, Air-passages, and Throat Successfully Treated. By ALFRED S HADDOCK, M D "We feel that we are doing an act of kindness to thousands of our fellow-creatures in recommending an immediate and careful perusal of this work."—Somerset Herald.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.

This day is published, price 3s 6d, cloth lettered, with frontispiece,
LABOUR STANDS on GOLDEN FEET; or, the Life of a Foreign Workman. A Holiday Story for sensible Apprentices, journeymen, and masters. By HEINRICH ZSCHOKKE.
London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster-row.

This day is published, price 6d,
REASONS for RIFLE CORPS, and the Policy of Government. By the SECRETARY of a RIFLE CLUB.
HARVEY, Doncaster; and sold by Longman and Co, London; Macmillan and Co, Cambridge; C Andrews, Cheltenham; and all Booksellers

Just published, price 3s 6d,
THE MASTER ENGINEERS and THEIR WORKMEN: Three Lectures on the Relations of Capital and Labour, delivered by request of the Society for Promoting Working Men's Associations, at the Marylebone Literary and Scientific Institution on the 13th, 20th, and 27th of February, 1852. By J. M. LUDLOW, Esq, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law
London: JOHN JAS BEZER, and all Booksellers

This day is published, price One Shilling,
INSTRUCTIONS in the Art of FIGURE DRAWING. By H C WIGAN, Queen's College, London, and Member of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours. With Seventeen Illustrations drawn on wood by the Author, and engraved by Walter G Mason
London: WIESON and HUTTON, 35, Bathbone-place, and sold by all Booksellers and Artists' Colourmen

Mr. Vernal on the Spine and Paralysis, sixth, 6s.,
THE SPINE: its Curvatures and other Diseases—their Symptoms, Treatment, and Cure, with numerous Cases and Engravings in Illustration. By CHARLES VERNAL, Surgeon to the Hospital for the Cure of Deformities, Portland-road, London
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Prince-street, Soho

FALLACIES of the FACULTY, price 2s 6d, cl. "This is a bold book, and we recommend persons who have been dosing themselves with drugs to kick out the apothecary and buy it."—Reader. "Almost as entertaining as a novel."—Westminster Review. By the same Author, "The Forbidden Book," 2s two volumes 5 6d cach; containing many original and startling revelations of modern practice, with a new mode of treating (without blood-letting) Fever, Apoplexy, Gout, Rheumatism, and other joint diseases, diseases of the liver, &c.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL Stationers-court; J OLLIVER, 59, Pall-Mall.

CONDUIT-STREET, HANOVER-SQUARE.
THE NEW and STANDARD WORKS may be obtained for perusal, in any quantity, at the BRITISH and FOREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, Conduit-street, Hanover-square, London. The great accommodations afforded by this extensive and valuable Library are now rendered as available in every part of the Kingdom as in the Metropolis, by means of the Parcels Delivery steam vessels, and the reduced postage. Catalogues and Library Rules gratis.
Terms of subscription sent (post free) on application to Messrs SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street, Hanover-square.

CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY.—A Quarterly Report of the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels is ready, and may be had at 7, Whitehall. It is illustrated by a View of St Michael's Church Gloucester, as restored

New Edition abridged, 6d; by post, 8d. Fourth Edition, much enlarged, 8vo, sixth, 9d; by post 3d.
SALT the FORBIDDEN FRUIT or FOOD, and the Chief Cause of Diseases of Body and Mind Simply Explained under this system of diet, the worst will arise, viz: Insanity, Bodily Perfection, and Power of Mind utterly unknown before. The Price of Salt now fully explained.
"We doubt not that this will make many converts."—Medico-Chirurgical Review
"It is worthy of immortality."—Lancet.
PYER and Co, 32, Paternoster-row; all Booksellers; and post free for 8 stamps of the Author, ROBERT HOWARD, M D, 6, Upper Gloucester-street, Dorset-square, London. The enlarged Edition post free for 16 stamps

Just out, 3s 6d; post paid, 3s,
SATURNIAN RELIGION the SHIELD of HEALTH. From the wisdom of Egypt, works, and laws of nature showing that diseases are propagated, and the rites of Christianity violated by the Modern System of Diet and Medicine. By ROBERT HOWARD, M D
PYER and Co, 32, Paternoster-row. Post-paid for 36 stamps, of the Author, 6, Upper Gloucester-street, Dorset-square, London.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORKS,
JUST PUBLISHED BY MESSRS. BELL AND DALDY, 186, FLEET-STREET, NEW, AT REDUCED PRICES.
In 2 vols post 8vo, cloth, price 24s, or handsomely bound in calf, price 30s,
THE POLITICAL WORKS of LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE; with an Original Memoir of his Life, brought down to the present date, drawn from authentic sources
These volumes possess great interest. Among the most important works of the Prince are many complete sets of his "Political Reveries," viz: the Scheme of a Constitution, published in 1831; "Ideas of Napoleonism," "The Existence of Napoleon," "Imperial Political Parallels between 1688 and 1830," &c.
"The volumes before us furnish ample materials for a sketch of Louis Napoleon. The satisfaction of curiosity, if not of sympathy, is provided for in this memorable collection of the writings of the President of the Republic."—The reading of the Memoir and the Works will awaken at once the laughing and the weeping philosopher.' Athenæum
"These well-edited volumes are introduced with a clever and comprehensive memoir of the public life of the President, and conclude with a resume of, and a variety of, important documents relating to Napoleon (First of 1815) and his adherents."—Morning Advertiser.
"To enable the public to form a proper conception of the man who is now the virtual dictator of 35 millions of souls, but only seven, we hope, to hold the destinies of Europe in his hands; who is now the object of more attention, and perhaps more thoughts, hopes, and fears, than any other man; by collecting and publishing all his works—in an 8ss guinea worthy of the enterprising publishers of the Illustrated London Library."—Economist

In 2 vols post 8vo, cloth, price 7s; or handsomely bound in calf, price 14s; 2nd Edition,
THE LIFE of GENERAL WASHINGTON. Written by Himself
With highly finished Engravings, and elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 2s,
THE PATHWAY of the FAITH: a Tale of the New Year. Second in blue and vermilion, price 2s, LADY FELICIA. A New Novel. By HENRY COCKTON, Author of "Valentine Vox," "Sylvester Sound," &c. &c. On March 1, Volumes I and II, (following five, 2s 6d each volume, of two volumes in one cloth, gilt edges, 5s, Unabridged Edition.
HUC'S TRAVELS in TARTARY, THIBET, and CHINA, in 1844, 1845 and 1846 The same, elegantly bound, two vols in one, 5s cach, half extra, marbled edges, price 5s
New Edition Duodecimo, cloth, price 5s,
WILLIAM HAZLITT'S MEN and MANNERS: Sketches and Essays Reading Books for Young Persons, with Hypocrite Tales; a Chapter on Editors, &c.
THE LILY and the ROSE: a Fine Engraving by ROBINSON, from a painting by KENNY MEADOWS.

Artists Proofs	..	..	.. 10s 6d
India Proofs	..	..	.. 7s 6d
Prints	..	..	.. 3s 6d

Office, 227, Strand

THE SYBIL.—Price 3s 6d; post-free, 4s 2d.—A Peak of Cards calculated to promote much mirth and amusement, and altogether of a reckoned description.
Sold by E L MITCHELL, Bookseller, 159, Oxford-street.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

TO POSSESSORS OF MANUSCRIPTS DESIROUS OF PUBLISHING
Now ready, in 8vo,
SELECT SPECIMENS of PRINTING, in HISTORY, Divinity, Biography, Travels, Novels, Poetry, the Drama, Pamphlets, &c., for the assistance of authors in the preparation of their Works for Publication. Sent post free to orders enclosing two stamps, addressed Messrs SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street

THE NEW NOVELS
Now ready at every Library, in 3 Vols,
ADVENTURES of a BEAUTY. By Mrs. CROWE. Author of "Susan Hop cy," &c.
"A fascinating interest pervades this tale of love betrayed and humbled pride. The characters are sketched to the life and sustained in the most telling manner."—John Bull.
"Far surpasses all its predecessors from the same pen."—Observer.
II
MR. WARBURTON'S DARIEN; or, the Merchant Prince. Second Edition. 3 vols.
"A crescendo unbending kindlings of intense interest. The love scenes are drawn by a master's hand."—Literary Gazette.
III
THE PERILS of FASHION. 3 vols.
On the 1st of April.
ADAM GRAEME of MOSSGRAY. A new Story of Scottish Life. By the Author of "Margaret Maitland," "Merkland," and "Caleb Field." 3 vols
COLBURN and Co, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

HOLMES' STEREOSCOPE.—A complete and portable instrument, just perfected, with Twelve Diagrams, as published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of Jan. 24. Price 5s. Post-office orders payable to FREDERICK HOLMES, 15, Alfred-street, Bedford-square, will have immediate attention. Opticians, Booksellers, and Toy dealers supplied CHESSMEN in Ivory, Bone, and Hard Wood cheap, at HALLETT'S Ivory Turnery Manufactory, 83, High Holborn. Try his 4s 6d set. The Trade supplied. N.B.—India and Chinese Chessmen. Ivory Turning executed to Drawings.

REEVES' WATER-COLOURS. REEVES CUMBERLAND LEAD DRAWING PENCILS. 11, Chapside, London.

INSANITY.—Messrs. LANE and LARA, Medical Agents, 14, John-street, Adelphi, beg to offer their advice gratuitously to the friends of patients seeking a fitting Retreat. Letters to remain post-paid. A number of Private Houses carefully described.
"Have pity on me, have pity on me, O my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me."—Job 19, verse 21.
Reading, Lincoln, 1845 1852

THE BRIGHTON SCHOOL.—Director, ROBERT WINTER, Jun., assisted by Fifteen Lecturers and Masters. This School was founded in January, 1849, and the unusual success of its pupils at the Universities, Examinations, and Masterships, is to show that such an institution was a demand of the age
The System combines the approved features of older establishments with others peculiar to itself, whereby thought and memory are duly exercised, the powers of the mind developed, and the bodily frame fortified and strengthened
The Educational Aim is not simply to accomplish much, but to do well and effectively that which is undertaken
The Discipline is based upon moral suasion, kind feeling, and sympathy with the pupil in every position
Recreation Hours are passed in the Play-ground, the Gymnasium, the Cricket-field, the Library, and the Lecture-room and Museum of Pursuits Practical Chemistry, Modelling, and similar amusements are an entertaining and useful character
The Pupils are thus taught to be habitually active, to work well, to play well, and to do all things heartily
The General Arrangements are upon a liberal scale, the Class-rooms and Dormitories extensive and airy, providing a separate study for each case, and a separate bed for each pupil
Examinations are conducted at the close of every half-year, by gentlemen of high literary standing and position, and the Terminal reports printed for the satisfaction of parents and friends
Home intercourse is carried on by correspondence at the close of each Term, of a report of progress and conduct, founded on a tabular summary compiled from a Weekly Register of the pupil's demeanour and Masters
Pupils prepared for the Queen's and H E I Company's Services. A Prospectus, and Terms of Residence, will be forwarded on application to the Director
Oxford-road, Brighton

THE BRIGHTON SCHOOL
THE EASTER TERM will commence on TUESDAY, the 6th of APRIL
Parents for the admission of New Pupils be completed by SATURDAY, the 10th of APRIL ROBERT WINTER, Jun., Director.
March, 1852.

CHELTENHAM GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—Established 1573 Number of Boarders limited to Thirty, under Fifteen Years of Age as Entrance.
Head Master, E R Humphreys, L.L.D, &c, Author of the "Lyra Hellenica," late Scholar of Trinity College, and formerly Head Master of Salisbury House School, Edinburgh. Dr Humphreys will RECEIVE the new SCHOOL (D V) on the 14th of APRIL, when it will be prepared to receive additional Boarders The domestic arrangements will be on the same plan as at Salisbury House, comprising everything calculated to promote the comfort, comprehensive and moral habits of the pupils A Matron and Drill-sergeant form part of the domestic establishment. Terms, Fifty Guineas per annum. Visitations at Oxford attended to the School. Prospectuses can be had of Dr Humphreys on and after the 1st of April
E R HUMPHREYS, L.L.D Ex Head Master

SALMON and TROUT FISHING.—CHARLES FARLOW, Fishing-tackle Manufacturer, 191, Strand, opposite St Clement Danes, near to Temple-bar (late of 221), invites Anglers to inspect his vast STOCK of SALMON and TROUT RODS, and all other gear for the same capture of river fish, at moderate prices. Best salmon rods, two guineas; best trout ditto, one guinea, lancewood rods from 5s a piece; best fly-hooks and lowest ditto, 1s a dozen; salmon gut from 8s a hank; trout ditto, 3s. Artificial bait of every description Catalogues forwarded gratis

NOTICE of REMOVAL.—Mr. JARRETT, the Engraving and Copying Press Manufacturer, begs to REMOVED from Lee-street, Kings-road, to 37, POULTRY, City, London. In the Premises late in the occupation of Messrs Coleman, Presses, with steel die and copper counterpart, including the engraving of initials or a crest, or name, business, and address, from 30s.

TO be GIVEN AWAY, 320 ACRES of FREEHOLD LAND to every Married Man, 160 Acres to every Single Man.—See the JOURNAL of the COLONIAL REFORM ASSOCIATION, a Monthly Epitome of Public Health, for April, price 3d, article, "Emigration." It will also contain "Letters to Italy in the Working Man" "Jack Yates' Phi osophy of Contradiction,' &c.
London: C. GILPIN 5 Bishopsgate street Without

ELEGANCE.—MACASSAR BALSAMINE, Organine—New Goods for the Spring Season.—The Proprietors of these unrivalled articles are now offering at 3s 1½d the flask (free of eight yards; or any length in that proportion), the Balsamine, Organine, fast colours, and cannot be replaced at is the yard. By sending 3s worth of postage stamps a flask in any of the fashionable colours—namely, chocolate, lilac, green, pink, blue, scarlet, or bath black—with an assortment of patterns, will be forwarded.—HOOPER, maker printer, 59, Oxford-street.

VITALISING FOOD.—Vitalism, the only known science for curing the sick, comprising all that is good in Allopathy, Homœopathy, Hydropathy, &c., and is the hope of the invalid, recommended to the afflicted with insanity, fear of the name, Sovereigns, Epileptic Fits (cured in a few days), Lowness of Spirits, Gout, and other acute diseases which Professional Colossus did not study, namely medical treatment Vitalising Food, in packets, for sale at the Vitalising Food Establishment, 37, Great Russel-street, opposite the British Museum.—J C LEE A Treatise on Vitalism, post free, 1s

RODGER'S IMPROVED SHIRTS, 26s, 31s 6d, and 37s 6d the Half-Dozen, are upon a new and improved principle, and combine the highest degree of excellence with the smallest cost. Satisfaction is, as usual, guaranteed, or the money returned
Printed Priced Lists, with full particulars and directions for self-measurement, and, if required, Patterns of the New Coloured Shirtings, at 26s the half-dozen. Gratis and post-free RODGER and CO, Improved Shirt-Makers, 59, St Martin's-lane, Charing-cross London Established 50 years.
The Trade supplied. All sizes, at very moderate prices.

TOWNSEND'S PARISIAN COSTUMES for APRIL contains Five Fates of Figures, being the best and cheapest work of this description Price only Eightpence Part I. is now published for MARCH, containing Plates of that period furnished Models for all the London Fashions.
Published by Messrs SIMPKIN and MARSHALL Stationers' Hall-court; Messrs PURR Receivers and Company, Paternoster-row; and may be had of all Booksellers

BERDOE'S Superior Light OVER-COAT.—This well-known garment combines, with every other quality essential to a perfect coat, that of being the most impermeable to rain, and has long enjoyed the reputation of the most convenient economical and valuable garment ever invented Price, 2ls and 25s Not waterproof, 8s less A very large Stock for selection, also, of Morning Coats, Shooting Jackets, &c.—39, New Bond-street, and 69, Cornhill (only).

NEW MUSIC &c.

"THE SLAVE GIRL'S LOVE;" sung with immense success by Miss M Williams at the concerts of the "Glee and Madrigal Union," composed for her by EDWARD LAND, is published at CRAMER, BEALE, and Co. 201, Regent-street.

"YOU'LL MEET ME, WON'T YOU?"—This extraordinary and lovely ballad, by HENRY WEBB, B A, the talented composer of "Jenny Jones," "Good Night," "Beautiful Dove, thou art welcome again," &c, is now published, price 3s.
"In a word, consecrated in its every strain to the heart's revelations."—Musical Review.
H TOLKIEN, King William-street, London-bridge.

MR. GEORGE BARKER'S BALLAD ENTERTAINMENT, given at the different Institutions throughout the United Kingdom, has met with the most triumphant success Nothing could exceed the success of his "Lays of the Foresters," Songs of Robin Hood, his popular Bacchanalian Song, "Wreath me a Chaplet of the Vine." "This song is of the true Bacchanalian character, and one of Mr. Barker's best productions: it is lyrical and flowing, and divested of the common-place too frequently to be found in drinking effusions"—Vide "Musical World" The Songs of the Forest and the Tree, and "The Jovial Friar" were nightly and enthusiastically encored The new and interesting patriotic Scena and Ballad, "Britons, will find a welcome with all who admire Mr Barker's sweet melodies.—Lee and CORNEY, 48, Albemarle-street.

MR. CRIVELLI begs to acquaint his Friends and the Public that a Third Edition of THE ART OF SINGING, adapted and arranged in the form of a Practical System of Rules for the Cultivation of the Voice, may be had at his Residence, 71, Upper Norton-st., and at all the principal Music-sellers.

PECHEY'S PIANOFORTES for HIRE, of every description and price (terms moderate) with the option of purchase in town or country (packed free).—G PECHEY (Maker to the Queen), City of London Pianoforte Manufactory, 75, Bishopsgate street Within, opposite the Marine Society

TOLKIEN'S 25-GUINEA ROYAL MINUTO PIANOFORTES, nearly 7 octaves, O G full, sensible plate, with all late improvements, the mahogany, rosewood, or walnut cases, of which the first model is the great peculiarity and worth of these Pianos is, that they will stand any climate without injuring the delicacy of touch, which is unrivalled. Manufactory, 27, 28, and 29, King William-street, London-bridge Drawings post free.

ARMORIAL BEARINGS.—ARMS ENGRAVED in the first style, on Office Seals, Signet Rings, &c. at the HERALDIC OFFICE.—Arms on Seals, 8s, 10s; Crest on ditto, 8s 6d. Arms with Name on Plate for Books, 10s. Arms and Crest painted and emblazoned, 8s. Pedigree and heraldry. Emblazoning for Banners, Flags, Needlework, &c. Observe—the LINWOOD HERALDIC OFFICE, 347, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Search for Family Arms as usual. Fee for search and sketch, 2s 6d or stamps. Direct to H SALT

TO all who value the blessing of Sight, Self-setting Portable Spring-pressure SPECTACLES for All Ages, inventions of the utmost importance for assisting and preserving the sight, are supplied by Scientific Silversmiths and Opticians. Patentee FANDERSON, Gravesend.

CORK HATS.—Classes 28, No. 125; and 6, No. 34. These Hats, shown at the Great Exhibition, by Messrs GAIMES, SANDERS, and NICOL, and which are now held in the highest estimation for their elasticity, lightness, general comfort in wear, may be obtained, wholesale or retail, of the manufacturers, at 23, Birchin-lane, Cornhill; at their Kendal Establishment, No. 111, Strand; at all the principal towns in England and Scotland, several of the continental cities, and at any of the British consuls. Cash or freight from London. Orders by post as with other hats Samples cases forwarded on receiving remittance.

CORK HATS.—The manufacture of these Hats was so defective last season on the part of most houses, as to induce the public in many cases to condemn one of the greatest improvements that has been effected since the introduction of silk hats, which is daily learning its value, and is now in every fashionable mercantile city dotters others of acknowledged reputation from attempting to produce them. It is, however, now in the power of the public to purchase these Hats from the best material for Hats, being durable from its toughness, and the only elastic and cool foundation for the silk or other covering needful in use. Also to purchase these Hats only of experienced makers. Exhibited at the Great Exhibition, Class 28, No. 125.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES of Brussels, Tapestry, and Velvet-pile CARPETS, of the choicest patterns, is per yard under the usual price, at DRUCE and CO.'s extensive Furnishing Warehouse, corner of Baker-street, Portman-market. Upholstery, and Cabinet Furniture, 63, 64, and 65, Baker street Portman-market, deer from the Portman-street Gate. Plans and prices, forwarded free, which, upon comparison, will be found the cheapest in London

PARISPRINTED MUSLINS and BAREGES, &c, at SHEATH'S, 264 Regent-street.

Elegant Organdie Muslins (fast in colours)	..	.. 2½d per yard
Beautiful do. do.	..	.. 10½d do. do.
Best Cambrics	do.	do. .. 8½d and 9½d do. do.
Superfine Barages	..	.. .. 9½d do. do.
Fancy ditto	..	.. .. 9½d do. do.
The Best Plain De Laines (not Wool)	..	.. .. 10½d do. do.

Patterns sent to any part post free.
Address W W SHEATH, 264, Regent-street, London.

MESSRS. NICOLL'S WAREROOMS are arranged for the convenience of the management of visitors, who practice the Best Materials at the most moderate prices, viz. the PALETOT, the TOGA, and other gentlemanly garments. The materials adapted for the season are Cheviots; Uniforms and Outfits, naval, military, or diplomatic; Robes, clerical, legal, or municipal; Gentlemen's Fashionable Dress and Riding Dress; Boys' Clothing, Servants, Liveries, &c.—H. J. and D NICOLL'S West-end address is 114, 115, 116, 118, 120, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill.

* * PATTERNS POST FREE

THE SPRING SILKS, &c., at KING'S, 243, Regent-street, 243.
1,000 new Patterns
Fancy Silks,
from 2s 6d to 3s the full Dress.
Brocaded and other costly Silks from 3s 6d to 4s the full Dress.
Muslins, Barages, Balzarines, Llamas, Cambries, &c, from 3s 9d
Address to KING and CO, Regent-street, London.
LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN.

INFANTS' BASSINETTES and BASKETS, and LADIES' WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITS, for HOME, INDIA, and the COLONIES, replete with every requisite, under competent Female Superintendence The prices are economical, and the workmanship and quality unrivalled.
BABY LINEN, of superior work, decidedly CHEAP.
Parents of Families about to proceed to the Colonies, or out of early marriage, SAMPLES, which may be returned, SENT for inspection, on receipt of a London reference or money-order.
LISTS, with PRICES, POST-PAID.

WATHERSTON and BROGDEN, Manufacturing GOLDSMITHS, established A D 1798, having been awarded a PRIZE MEDAL for their BRACELETS and CLASPS, and at the GREAT EXHIBITION, beg to announce, that, in obedience to the numerous calls made upon them for Bracelets and Clasps of the same description as their MANUFACTURERS' PRICES The system of weighing chains against sovereigns being one of the greatest evils in their practical working, Watherston and Brogden and their Gold at its bullion value; their profit being made on the workmanship alone, which is subject to no fluctuation in the intrinsic or relative value of the pattern. Watherston and Brogden's Stock consists of a general assortment of Jewellery, and is under the personal superintendence of Mr. Watherston, Manufacturer, 18, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London.

IMPORTANT to LADIES.—Mrs. NORTON, 79, Strand, has just prepared for the opening Season a new and elegant assortment of SPRING DRESSES, Chemisettes, Collars, and the Rotes Dressing Gowns, &c, made in the newest and most approved style. Mrs. Norton continues to carry out the system adopted so long as to enable her to offer at unprecedented low prices, and will feel obliged to her numerous friends and the public by an early inspection of her new and beautiful Stock, comprising baby linen, baskets, bassinettes, hoods, robes, stockings, gloves and caps, and Ladies' Outfits. Mrs. Norton's patterns in great variety, hosiery and under clothing; gentlemen's and youth's shirts; and the Victoria Long Cloth Shirt, which has received her gold medal; orders will now kindly make their own purchases and recommend their friends. A discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on all purchases above £1 sent to Mrs. Norton, 79, Strand, on Wednesday, 31st March. Wedding orders and general on the punctually attended to. Mrs. Norton is happy to say that she has received no notice of money order or references in town.—79, Strand, corner of Adam-street.

INFANTS' NEW FEEDING BOTTLES.—"From the Lancet.—" We have seldom seen anything so beautiful as the Nursing Bottles introduced by Mr Siam, of Oxford-street. They are adapted to milk and all kinds of food; and have an elastic nipple, which no infant will refuse: unequalled for cleanliness and durability." 6d, or per post, 1s 1d. Sent to any part of the UK, 19s. Oxford-street. Each is stamped with my name and address
DR. LOCOCK'S ANTIBILIOUS WAFERS, a mild and gentle Aperient Medicine, having a most agreeable taste, and of great efficacy for regulating the secretions and correcting the action of the stomach and liver Price 1s 1d. 2s 9d, and 11s per box. Also Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS give instant relief and a rapid cure of Asthma, Coughs, and all disorders of the breast and lungs.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY, Mesmerism, and such like Exposed, and the public mind disabused, by a Treatise on the ORIGIN of LIFE, which may be had, gratis, by post, on application to the BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New-road, London.

THE BEST BED for a CHILD is one of TRELOAR'S METALLIC COTS, 4 feet long, 2 feet wide, with a mattress of cocoa-nut fibre, complete for a guinea.—T TRELOAR, 39, Ludgate-hill and Bedding Manufactory, 43, Ludgate-hill, London.

COCKERELL & CO.'S BEST COALS ONLY, Purfleet Wharf, Earl-street, Blackfriars; Eaton Wharf, Lower Seagrave-place, Pimlico; and No. 1, Coal Exchange. Cash price, 21s per ton.

WEATHERLEY'S REGISTERED HONEY DROPS.—"Honorable Mention" awarded by the Jury to the Honey, Pear, Quince, Pine, Raspberry, and Lime Juice Drops. Weatherley, Brothers, and Co, Manufacturing Confectioner, 4, Theobald's-road, Holborn.—Observe, the only genuine are stamped "Weatherley," Retail of Chemists, chemists and others.

MONEY.—£25,000 READY to be ADVANCED upon the personal security of gentlemen of property, below to entailed estates, &c; also upon reversions, annuities, life interests, &c. Apply to MR ALLEN, 28A, Regent-street, Waterloo-place.

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRTS are not sold by any haberdasher or linen-draper, and can therefore be obtained only at 185, Strand. They are made in two qualities, the first of which is 40s the half-dozen, and the second quality 30s the half-dozen. The list of prices, containing an illustration, with directions for self-measurement, sent per post free.—RICHARD FORD, 185, Strand

PEEVES'S MOIST WATER-COLOURS, in cakes, warranted to keep in any climate. Also, their Cumberland and pure Cumberland Lead Pencils are now used by all artists Manufactory, 113, Cheapside, London

DAVIES'S SPERM CANDLES, 1s 8d and 1s 10d per lb; Belmontine wax, 1s 4d; German wax, 1s 8d; British wax or sperm, 1s 4d, patent sperm, 1s 6d; fine wax, 1s 8d; best wax, 2s 8d; transparent wax, 1s 6d to 2s; composite, 8d to 10d, 9d, and 9½d; fine mould, 7½d; mould, 6½d; and mould, 7d; pure candles, 4½d and 5d; waxed wick moulds, 6d; pure Argand oil, 4s 6d per gallon; best salad oil, 4s per gallon; lamps at same prices. Sent free on receipt of Post-office order, payable to JOHN DAVIES, 6, Cornhill. Cash. At DAVIES'S old-established Warehouse, 85, St Martin's-lane.

ALLSOPP'S EAST INDIA, PALE, and DOUBLE BROWN ALES.—These Ales are respectfully informed the Ales of this season's brewings are now ready for delivery, and may be obtained genuine in casks of 18 gallons and upwards, either direct from the Brewery, or of their regular stores, as under, where also a list of the bottlers may be had.—The Brewery, Burton-on-Trent; City of London Pale Ale Stores, 61, Mark-street, Liverpool; High-street, Birmingham, the Exchange, Manchester; Royal Brewery, Dudley; 35, Holborn-hill, Birmingham.

AT the IRISH LINEN COMPANY'S FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, 46, Hart-street, Bloomsbury-square, is always to be found a STOCK of HOUSEHOLD LINENS, in every variety, of the manufacture and Prices and Quality not equalled in London. Linen and Longcloth Shirts made to order, from the best Irish linens ready-made Established 1800

HAIR MEMENTOS.—ARTIST in HAIR.—DEWDNEY sends to Ladies resident in any part of the Kingdom a BOOK of SPECIMENS for two postage stamps. He also bracelets, Rings, Chains, &c, at charges the most moderate.—DEWDNEY, 244, Tottenham-court-road, London.

THOMAS BOULTON'S NEEDLES.—These Needles have been celebrated for the last half-century, and are unsurpassed as to elasticity and temper. They are sorted in packets of five sizes, have highly-finished taper points, and perfectly burnished drilled eyes Sold in papers, and in every variety of fancy boxes and cases adapted for carriage, by Dowse, 26, Cornhill; Mitchell, 161, Strand; Lecount, 42, Leadenhall-street, City; and by many drapers. "Thomas Boulton, needle manufacturer, London," on each paper

ARMS, CRESTS, CORONETS, or INITIALS, STAMPED on NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPPES, in gold, silver, and colours, in the most elegant style, at half the usual charge. LONDON-MADE CREAM LAID ADHESIVE ENVELOPES, 4s per 100, cream-laid note-paper, 3 quires for 3d, thick cream laid wove, 4s per quire; the new Victoria, bank-bordered envelopes, 1s per 100; bank-bordered note, 4d per quire, 6s per ream; finest satin-lined, 6d per quire; and the new Victoria bank-bordered note, 5s per ream, cards printed for 4s 6d. Observe—At Henry Rodrigues', 31, Piccadilly, Piccadilly.

COALS from the COUNTY of DURHAM brought to LONDON by the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.
JOSEPH PEASE and PARTNERS beg to inform their friends and the public that arrangements have been made to supply all respectable persons with their well-known and highly-esteemed ADELAIDE WALL'S-END COAL, at the Yards of the Great Northern Railway Company's King's-cross Station.
Their Coals are from the Adelaide Wall's-end Seam, leaving but little ash, and are equally adapted for drawing-room and kitchen purposes; they are, moreover, delivered at King's-cross from wrought iron skips, by which means they are kept perfectly free from wetting and the slight breakage of waggon between the pit's mouth and London, and so avoid the dust and waste so common at the railroad depôts. Their Coals are also twice screened, once at the colliery, and again at the railway station.
All orders will have immediate attention, by application in Mr. Adelaide Wall's-end Coals, at the agent for the sale of coals consigned to the King's-cross station of the Great Northern Railway
Office of Management, King's-cross, March 18, 1852.

REV. J. LANE, Saltash Parsonage, Plymouth, and many others, lately cured with the delicious and reasonable ALE brewed with the water from "Harry Hill's Well." By tradition, Harry Hill was a monk in the 16th century, by whom the well was discovered. The ale is pronounced by connoisseurs to be equal to any ale in England. Sold in casks of nine gallons and upwards, and in bottles, at 1s per dozen, by the sole agent, Mr. Jacob Gilbert, Wine Merchant, Tiverton. Also, the celebrated Tiverton Cider, in casks of nine gallons and upwards, and in bottles, at 1s per dozen. Observe—Harry Hill's Well, Tiverton.

PRESERVED SOUPS, &c.—PRIZE MEDAL, Great Exhibition of 1851.—At this season of the year a basin of really good soup is a luxury, and those descriptions of soup which are recommended to purchase RITCHIE and M'CALL'S PATENT HOUSEHOLD SOUPS, with various descriptions of made dishes &c, are put up in canisters hermetically sealed, so as to be ready for use at any moment. With a few of these canisters at hand, a first-rate dinner for the past upon the table as quickly as the kids can be laid Purée Soup, 1d per quart; Mock Turtle, Ox-tail, Julienne, Hare, Mulligatawny, Scotch Broth, Pea Soups, 2d per quart. Entrées, &c, at prices equally reasonable To be had of all the principal Oil and Italian Warehousemen in towns and country; and wholesale of Ritchie and M'Call, 137, Houndsditch, London. Sample canisters, 12 sorts, containing as many dozens, sent to any part of the Kingdom, on receipt of a Post-office order. Detailed price lists post free on application

THE ROYAL EXHIBITION.—Valuable Discovery.—The most useful, very small, powerful Waterproof Glass the size of a walnut, to discern minute objects at a distance of from four to five miles, and which is found to be invaluable for Tourists, Sportsmen, Gentlemen, and Gamekeepers. TELESCOPES, possessing such extraordinary powers, that some, 2½ inches, with an extra large object, will show distinctly the Time by a Church Clock at Three Double Stars. They supersede every other kind, and are of all sizes for the Military, Naval Officer, Military Surgeon, &c. Opera and Race-course Glasses, with wonderful powers; a minute object can be clearly discerned at 300 yards; and Vestry-room Glasses, to vary more invented preserving Spectacles; invisible and all kinds of Accurate Instruments for the use of Invalids and Aged Persons 5 and 8 HOLBORN Opticians, 29, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, and £10 10s GOLD LEVERS, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are respectfully solicited to call and examine the great reduction of price now made in the quality of these Watches Patentees or any other house, for those advertised at lower prices are foreign work. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, 338, Strand, one will be sent free. Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, free for 6d

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—17 and 18, CORNHILL.—This beautiful metal continues to stand unrivalled among the imitations of silver. In lustrous appearance, combined with brilliant appearance defies all competition. The process of producing it is entirely peculiar to the manufactory by SARL and SONS, to the public, and, notwithstanding the many spurious and unprincipled imitations, the present demand exceeds all former precedents, thus giving a convincing proof of its having answered the end proposed, which was to produce an article possessing the sparkling and appearance of solid silver at one-tenth its cost The magnificent stock has recently been enriched with many splendid novelties in Tea, Coffee, and Breakfast Services, which never possessed so many attractions as at the present time. The Public are cautioned against purchasing all the various patterns of manufactured in solid silver, and orders to any extent can be immediately executed. The present large stock are the most extensive in London A new and enlarged pamphlet of sketches and prices (not published) will be ready for circulation. It may be obtained gratis by applying at the manufactories.—SARL and SONS, 17 and 18 Cornhill.

Argentine Silver—Fiddle Pattern.			Argentine Silver—King's Pattern.
12 Table Forks	..	£2 16 0	12 Table Forks	..	£4 4 0
12 Table Spoons	..	2 16 0	12 Table Spoons	..	4 4 0
12 Dessert Forks	..	2 0 0	12 Dessert Forks	..	3 10 0
12 Dessert Spoons	..	2 0 0	12 Dessert Spoons	..	3 10 0
12 Teaspoons	..	1 7 0	12 Teaspoons	..	2 8 0
4 Sauce Ladles	..	0 18 0	4 Sauce Ladles	..	1 12 0
1 Gravy Spoon	..	0 14 0	1 Gravy Spoon	..	1

MUSICAL SUPPLEMENT TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

ENGLISH SONGS AND MELODIES.

THE POETRY BY CHARLES MACKAY.

THE SYMPHONIES AND ACCOMPANIMENTS BY SIR H. R. BISHOP, KNT.

PROFESSOR OF MUSIC AT THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

MUSICAL SUPPLEMENT, V.] SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1852. [GRATIS.

WORDS OF THE SONGS.

DERWENTWATER.

I.

SWEET lake of the mountains! how happy was I
When life's sunny morn had no cloud on its sky,
And I roam'd with my love on thy beautiful shore,
To hear the deep music that gush'd from Lodore!

II.

We sail'd on thy waters, rejoicing, alone,
Or trod thy green islands, and call'd them our own,
And built, 'mid the hills that encircle thy breast,
A bower and a home in the wilds of the West.

III.

But sorrow has darken'd the noon of our day,
And peril and doubt have encompass'd our way;
My heart's only love in captivity lies,
And thy glory, oh Derwent! is dimm'd in mine eyes

IV.

Sad lake of the mountains, through dangers I roam,
With a pang in my heart and a blight on my home,
To dream of the joys that shall bless me no more,
And mingle my sighs with the moan of Lodore.

[The sad story of the Earl of Derwentwater, executed in 1716 for participation in the rebellion of the previous year, is well known. The beautiful lake from which he derived his title is surrounded by some of the grandest scenery in England. Few persons will need to be reminded of the beauty of the small cataract of Lodore. The memory of the misfortunes of Lord Derwentwater, and of the beauty of his disconsolate countess, is still preserved in the traditions of the neighbourhood.]

FAIR AND TRUE.

I.

RIPE as peaches, fresh as morning,
Ellen's cheeks with crimson glow;
On her lips the clustering kisses
Woo the wind to taste and go.

When she breathes, the jealous roses
Long to share a fragrance new;
Lurking smiles and artless meanings
Slumber in her eyes of blue.

But though beautiful is Ellen,
She has charms all charms above;
Bright good-humour never failing,
Goodness, gentleness, and love.

II.

Ye who doubt the worth of woman,
Look on Ellen, and be wise;
Virtue beams in every feature,
Truth's the sunlight of her eyes.

NOTES ON THE MELODIES BY SIR H. R. BISHOP.

DERWENTWATER.

THE present Series of Songs will contain ample proof that the English have not only a music which is distinctly their own, but that it is peculiarly adaptable to the varied passions and emotions of the mind; and the song of "Derwentwater" is but one of the numerous instances of that happy union of the true purposes of Poetry and Music which it is the object of this Collection to elucidate. This simple but charming air was originally adapted to a foolish song called "PRETTY POLLY OLIVER." Among many others sung to it, the most noted was written by Lord Cantelupe, about 1720, entitled "Fair Hebe," in reply to one called "Hebe," the music of which was composed by Dr. Arne.

FAIR AND TRUE.

"STREPHON WITH HIS FLORA."—This air was published in The Convivial Songster, 1782; but the name of its author is not mentioned, nor have I been able to meet with it in any other book of English songs. It is probably of a much earlier date than the above collection, and is one among those melodies written in a minor key with which the national music of almost every country abounds, and to which words have frequently been adapted, either of a mournful or a cheerful expression. This universal use of the minor key, however, has not been confined alone to national melody; numerous instances of it, and of its application to the various sentiments of poetry, are to be found in the more elaborated compositions of the great masters, from a far distant period until the beginning of the present century, at which time its adoption in music of even a grave description appears to have been on the decline, and in music of an opposite character to have been nearly altogether discontinued.

LONG-PARTED FRIENDS.

[Air, "The King shall enjoy his own again."]

I.

LONG-PARTED friends, when far away,
We thought upon you many a day;
And when the wine in healths was pour'd,
We miss'd your faces at the board.
When the laughter rung,
And the song was sung,
Remembrance saddened all the strain,
And we check'd our mirth
Around the hearth,
To wish you safely home again.

II.

Till parting came we never knew
What joy we lost in losing you,
How much you mingled with our thought,
What charms of life your presence brought.
But you've come at last,
All danger pass'd,
And joy shall follow in your train:
Our hearts shall glow,
And the wine shall flow;
You're welcome, welcome home again!

THE WOODLAND STREAM.

[Air, "The streamlet that flow'd round her cot."]

I.

HOW oft along thy woodland way,
Fair streamlet of the hills,
We've listen'd to the murmuring voice
Of all thy gushing rills;
And gazing on thy lucid breast,
Beneath thy groves of pine,
Have wish'd the current of our joys
To flow as clear as thine.

II.

We saw the verdure on thy brink,
The grass, the fern, the flowers,
We heard the song of happy birds
That sported in thy bowers;
And fondly hoped that round our hearts
Such calm delights might twine,
And that the blessings of our hearts
Might be as pure as thine.

III.

And when thy constant ripple shewed,
In morn or evening bright,
The glory of the rising sun,
Or moon's serener light,
We prayed that Love on us might beam
With radiance as divine,
And that the lustre of our lives
Might come from Heaven, like thine.

OUR SWORDS ARE SHEATHED.

[Air, "Let's drink and sing."]

I.

OUR swords are sheathed,
The flag droops idly down,
Our shields are laurel-wreathed—
There's peace in bower and town.
But should a foreign tyrant
Insult us where we stand,
Or foes invade, we'll draw the blade,
And sweep them from the land.
Blessed are our swords if Justice
Have made them keen and strong,
But shame shall be their portion
Who battle in the wrong!

II.

Our fame and might
Have rung throughout the world,
And ever in the right
Our flag has been unfurled.
And if our foes, forgetful,
Should tempt our guardian wave,
We'll find for each, upon the beach,
Destruction and a grave.
So let them come!—we care not!
'Tis freedom makes us strong;
And shame shall be their portion
Who battle in the wrong!

LONG-PARTED FRIENDS.

"The King shall Enjoy His Own Again."—This tune seems to have been adapted to the words of a great number of songs, that were altered from the original, or written to suit the various political circumstances of the times in which they were produced, from the days of the Cavaliers and Roundheads down to the period of 1716, when it was used in connexion with "An excellent new Ballad called 'Illustrious George shall come,'" another new song entitled "Since Hanover is come," and again, "A Song for the 28th of May, the birthday of our glorious sovereign King George." In the course of its long career of service, the air itself appears also to have undergone some alterations; but the version which, through the kindness of a friend, I have been enabled to insert in this collection, is probably the latest, and is decidedly the best. A small quarto volume in the British Museum, inscribed "Elizabeth Rogers, her Virginall Book," contains what is no doubt the original tune to which the old song was written, "When the king enjoys his owne againe." We have no proof, however, that the tune is of a more ancient date than the middle of the seventeenth century.

THE WOODLAND STREAM.

"The Streamlet that Flowed round her Cot."—A graceful and flowing melody, composed by William Shield for his opera of The Woodman, which was first performed at Covent Garden Theatre in the year 1791. It is related in Dr. Busby's "Concert Room Anecdotes," that Shield received one thousand guineas from Messrs. Longman and Broderip for this opera. However worthy of such a recompense, this must have been an enormous sum to be paid for an English opera in those days. The only parallel instance that has come to our knowledge is that of The English Fleet, for the music of which opera (in 1802) it is said that Mr. Braham received the same amount. Dr. Arne, in 1762, sold the copyright of Artaxerxes for sixty guineas, which was in his time reckoned "a ruinous sum for such a property;" and Charles Dibdin declared that for the entire copyright of his operatic afterpiece entitled The Padlock (which was first produced in 1768, and of which, in the course of a few years, it has been computed that more than ten thousand copies of the music were sold), he received only forty-five pounds. Shield, therefore, was peculiarly fortunate in having to compose his opera of The Woodman at a period when dramatic music was better patronised, and certainly better remunerated, than it had previously been; while the great and richly-deserved reputation he had gained may in some degree have influenced Messrs. Longman in making so liberal a purchase of his work. The opera itself contains several charming pieces of a pastoral character, and in Shield's best style, among which may be instanced the glees, "For all thy boons below," "What is love?" "Hard is the task," and "Hark! the bugle's sylvan strain." It was immediately after its production that Shield visited Italy, in company with Mr. Ritson, to whom we are indebted for the restoration of many excellent specimens of British lyric poetry. Shield's avowed object in undertaking this journey was to improve his taste, not in composition, but in singing,—and we are told that for this purpose he received lessons from the best masters at Rome every day during his two months' residence in that city. Shield had already begun to introduce some Italian bravura songs into his operas (there is one of them in The Woodman, by Sacchini); but though his more recent works possess a few further evidences of his "leaning" towards foreign graces in his composition, he never forsook that pure and simple style of English melody by means of which he had first raised the unassuming temple of his fame. The present song, "The Streamlet," was composed by Shield for his friend and pupil Incledon, by whom it was sung with extraordinary success,—a success almost equal to that of his later song, "The Thorn."

OUR SWORDS ARE SHEATHED.

"Let's Drink and Sing."—We find this remarkably energetic and spirited air in The Convivial Songster of 1782. That it was partly founded upon a composition of which Handel claimed the authorship, cannot be disputed. Handel, however, was notorious for taking advantage of every musical subject that he admired, and openly confessed that he considered it quite fair to do so. The mere fact of the excellence of a melody seemed to him amply sufficient to warrant his appropriating it to his own use; and when he first came to England, perceiving that Purcell's works, as well as those of the more ancient English composers, were still in high estimation, he did not scruple to copy as largely from them in his secular productions as he afterwards borrowed in his oratorios from the subjects of some of the most eminent foreign masters. The beautiful pastoral symphony in the "Messiah" so closely resembles the old English melody of Parthenia, popular in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, as to render it impossible to believe that the resemblance was accidental. Many other instances, quite as palpable, could also be brought forward of Handel's numerous and skilful appropriations of what are distinctively called English national tunes; and those parts of the present air which may appear to belong to him afford such unquestionable proofs of their English origin as to justify its being included in this series of English melodies.

DERWENTWATER.

Plaintively, and moderately slow. AIR, "PRETTY POLLY OLIVER."

p e sosten. f p

Sweet lake of the moun-tains! how hap - py was I When life's sun - ny morn had no pp e sosten.

cloud on its sky, And I roam'd with my love on thy beau - ti - ful shore, To cres. p

rall.
hear the deep - mu - sic that gush'd from Lo - dore!
a tempo
dol.
mf
p
We sail'd on thy wa - ters, re - joic - ing, a - lone, Or trod thy green is - lands, and
pp e sosten.
call'd them our own, And built, 'mid the hills that en - cir - cle thy breast, A cres.
p
rall.
bower and a home in the wilds of the West.
a tempo
dol.
mf
p
But sor - row has dark - en'd the noon of our day, And pe - ril and doubt have en -
pp e sosten.
com - pass'd our way; My heart's on - ly love in cap - ti - vi - ty lies, And thy cres.
p

rall.

glo - ry, O Der - went! is dimm'd in mine eyes.

a tempo

dol. mf p

Sad lake of the moun - tains, through dan - gers I roam, With a pang in my heart and a pp e sosten.

blight on my home, To dream of the joys that shall bless me no more, And rall. slower

min - gle my sighs with the moan of Lo - dore.

tempo primo

f vf

FAIR AND TRUE.

With vivacity, but not too quick.

Air, "Strephon with his Flora."

p cres. f

Ripe as peach - es, fresh as morn - ing, El - len's cheeks with rf p

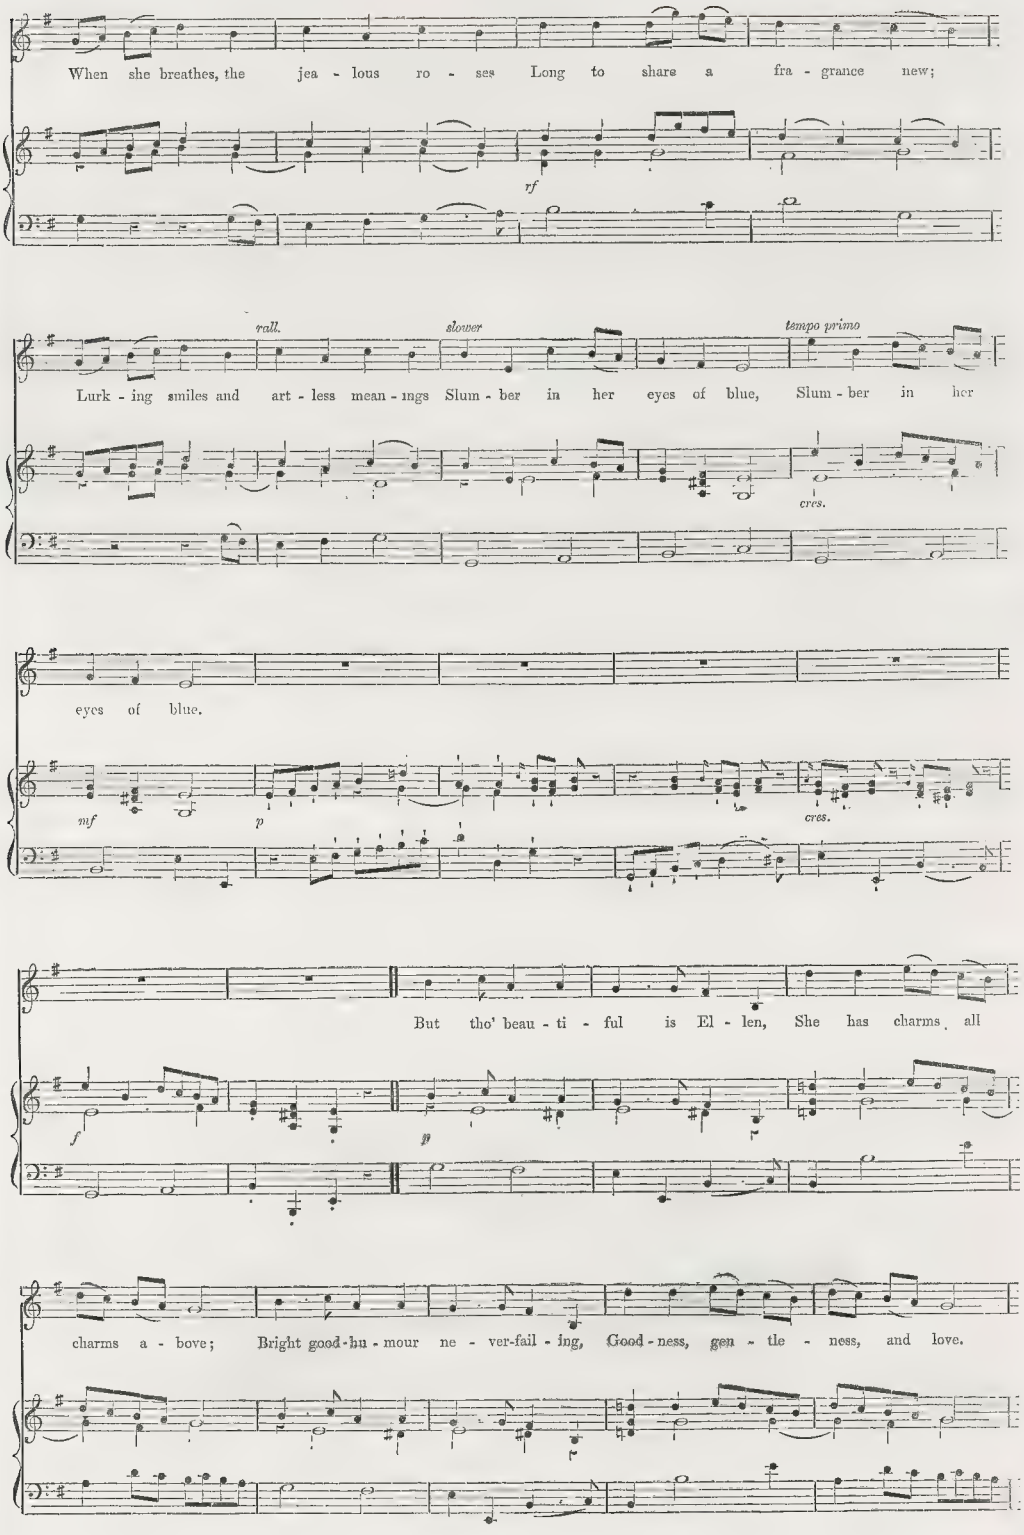
crim - son glow; On her lips the clus-t'ring kiss - es Woo the wind to taste and go.



When she breathes, the jea - lous ro - ses Long to share a fra - grance new;
rf
rall.
slower
tempo primo
Lurk - ing smiles and art - less mean - ings Slum - ber in her eyes of blue, Slum - ber in her
cres.
eyes of blue.
mf
p
cres.
But tho' beau - ti - ful is El - len, She has charms all f
p
charms a - bove; Bright good - hu - mour ne - ver-fail - ing, Good - ness, gen - tle - ness, and love.

Ye who doubt the worth or wo - man, Look on El - len, and be wise;

rf

rall. slower tempo primo

Vir - tue beams in ev' - ry fea - ture, Truth's the sun - light of her eyes, Truth's the sun - light of her eyes.

cres.

mf f

THE WOODLAND STREAM.

Air, "The Streamlet that flowed round her Cot."

Rather slow, and with expression.

p e sosten. mf cres. f

How oft a - long thy wood - land way, Fair pp p e sosten.

stream - let of the Lills, We've lis - ten'd to the mur - muring voice Of all thy gush - ing

cres. p

rills, And gaz - ing on thy lu - cid breast, Be - neath thy groves of pine Have cres.
p rall.
a tempo.
wish'd the cur - rent of our joys To flow as clear as thine.
cres.
mf
p
cres.
f
We saw the ver - dure on thy brink, The p
pp
p e sosten.
grass, the fern, the flowers, We heard the song of hap - py birds That sport - ed in thy cres.
mf
p bowers, And fond - ly hoped that round our heads Such calm de - lights might twine, And cres.
p

all the bless - ings of our hearts Might be as pure as thine.
cres.
mf
p
cres.
f
And when thy con - stant rip - ple shew'd, In p
pp
p e sosten.
morn or eve - ning bright, The glo - ry of the ris - ing sun, Or moon's se - re - ner
cres.
mf
p light, We pray'd that Love on us might beam With ra - diance as di - vine, And cres.
p
that the lus - tre of our lives Might come from heav'n, like thine.
cres.
mf
p
cres.
p dim.
rall.
pp

LONG-PARTED FRIENDS.

Air, "The King shall enjoy his own again."

In moderate time.

p f ff

Long - part - ed friends, when far a - way, We thought up - on you ma - ny a day; And when the win in

p

healths was pour'd, We miss'd your fa - ces at the board. When the laugh - ter rung, And the song was sung, Re - mem - brance sad - den'd all the strain, And we check'd our mirth A - round the hearth, To wish you safe - ly home a - gain, To wish you safe - ly home a - gain.

cres.
mf
f
cres.
ff
Till part - ing came we ne - ver knew What joy we lost in los - ing you, How much you min - gled
p with our thought, What charms of life your pre - sence brought. But you've come at last, All dan - ger past, And joy shall fol - low in your train; Our hearts shall glow, And the wine shall flow; You're wel - come, wel - come home a - gain! You're wel - come, wel - come home a - gain!
cres.
mf
f
cres.
ff

OUR SWORDS ARE SHEATHED.

With martial spirit. AIR, "LET'S DRINK AND SING."

f
rf
rf
Our swords are sheath'd, The flag droops i - dly down, Our brows are lau - rel -
mf wreath'd, There's peace in bower and town. But should a fo - reign ty - rant In - sult us where we p
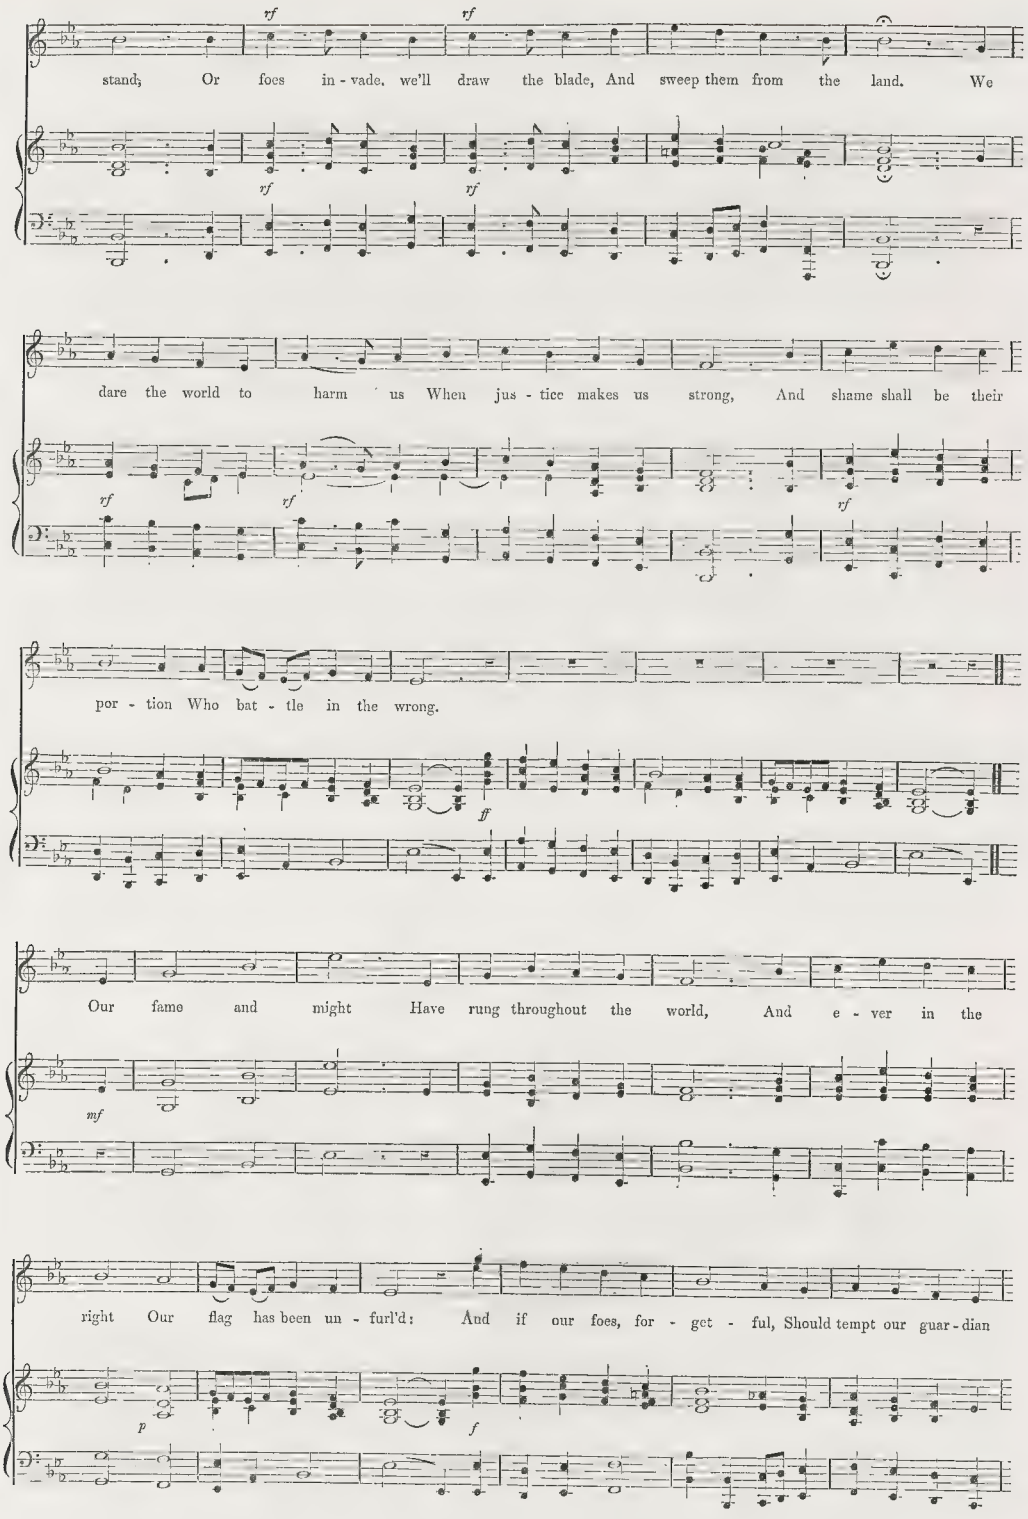
f



rf
rf
stand; Or foes in - vade, we'll draw the blade, And sweep them from the land. We dare the world to harm us When jus - tice makes us strong, And shame shall be their por - tion Who bat - tle in the wrong.
ff
Our fame and might Have rung throughout the world, And e - ver in the
mf
right Our flag has been un - furl'd: And if our foes, for - get - ful, Should tempt our guar - dian
p
f

wave, We'll find for each, up - on the beach, De - struc - tion and a grave. So let them come, we care not; 'Tis free - dom makes us strong; And shame shall be their por - tion Who bat - tle in the wrong.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198 Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198 Strand aforesaid. SATURDAY March 27, 1852.—MUSICAL SUPPLEMENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 552.—VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1852. [SIXPENCE.

THE DISTRESSED HEBRIDES.

WHAT has been called the "Exodus of the Celtic races" continues. The return of spring has witnessed once more the flux of the emigrational tide towards the shores of the New World. The quays of Dublin, Cork, and Liverpool are crowded with Irish emigrants, departing to other lands, and carrying with them, in too many instances we are afraid, a feeling of bitter hatred to this country. They blame England for the evils that have befallen them in their own land, instead of blaming, as they ought to do, their own landlords, their own indolence, their own religious and party feuds, and their own listless reliance upon the easily raised but miserable root, the potato. Year after year the efflux continues. Strong men that are the very life-blood of a nation, and that will become so to that great kindred nation of America, which is destined in due time to overshadow the world with its power and glory, leave our shores in countless multitudes. The greater the numbers who emigrate in any one year, the larger the amount of funds received in Ireland in the next, to enable friends and relatives to follow to the land of plenty and independence. The potato failure is thus working a mighty revolution. It has caused the property of the Irish landlords to change hands; it has converted proprietors into paupers; it has caused England to spend ten millions of money for the relief of the people with as little real benefit as if the sum had been sunk into the sea; it has consigned upwards of one million of human beings—some accounts say upwards of two millions—to a premature death by famine and fever; and it has driven the very flower of the Celtic race across the Atlantic, to subdue and to cultivate the forests and prairies of the almost illimitable regions of the Far West, and thus to open up the long-buried East, and to menace Japan and China with a European invasion. This mighty emigration pays for itself. It seeks no aid from the public purse, but it should be remembered that it establishes itself in regions that own no fealty to the Crown of England.

The same, or, at all events, very similar causes have produced similar results in those other portions of the United Kingdom, which, like Ireland, are inhabited by a Celtic race, and which, like Ireland, has had no other resources for the support of the population than a very backward and undeveloped system of agriculture. The Western Highlands and Islands of Scotland, with a moist, uncertain climate and a barren soil, far removed from the highways of trade, possessing no manufactures, and inhabited by a population that from the very earliest periods of their history have always increased faster than the means of subsistence, and which have been in consequence reduced to depend exclusively upon the very lowest and most easily raised diet on which human beings can subsist and propagate, have been visited with the same affliction as Ireland. The potato has failed, and the people have been brought to starvation. The owners of the soil have endeavoured to the very utmost extent to alleviate a misery which they were alike powerless to prevent and to remedy; but their kind sympathies and good wishes have far exceeded their means of being useful. Many of them are merely the nominal owners of their estates, and others are but little removed from pauperism themselves. The State, it is true, has granted relief, but such relief has either been slight and inefficient, or it has been demoralising. Private and public charity have come to the rescue, but with the same demoralising effects, they have simply been enabled to preserve the people alive, without in the least degree bettering their condition, or affording them the smallest reasonable ground for the hope that their worst evils had passed away. The establishment of an amended Poor-law has proved as utter a failure as everything else that has been tried to cope with the mighty misery; and the Western Highlands and Isles of Scotland have suffered, always with patience, and sometimes with despair.

The Scottish Highlanders are a simple and quiet people. They have no religious feuds to distract the attention of the empire. They have no blatant and unprincipled agitators to thunder in our ears, and exaggerate undoubted evils till the tale exceeds belief. They have no one to make political capital out of their undoubted sufferings; scarcely any one even to allude to their unhappy condition, and to suggest a remedy. But, although they have suffered like the Irish, they are unlike the Irish in one respect—they have never nourished against their mother country any other sentiments than those of loyalty and affection. The Highlanders love their country. They also love the England for which their ancestors have fought, and for the battles of which they have provided, not only some of the bravest soldiers of the rank and file, but some of the most distinguished and illustrious generals which the nation has produced When they emigrate, to escape the miseries that too surely await them in their own land, they do not transfer their allegiance to a rival state. They go in preference to Canada, to Nova Scotia, to New Brunswick, and to Australia, and carry with them their loyalty to the British crown, and their affection to the laws, institutions, and religion of their birth-place. This feeling among them is as old as their misery, which dates back for at least eighty years. Mr. Carruthers, of Inverness, in his valuable introduction to the new edition of "Boswell's Tour to the Hebrides with Dr. Johnson," which has just been published in the "National Illustrated Library," states that subsequently to Johnson's visit in 1773, the Celtic "exodus continued for many years. Even the war in America had little effect in checking the tide of emigration. Carolina was the favorite colony of the men of Skye and Mull; and when hostilities broke out, some hundreds of the exiles formed themselves into the 'Royal Highland Emigrant Regiment,' which continued in active service during the remainder of the war. There was scarcely an instance of the emigrant Highlanders joining the revolted colonists. True to their native instincts and hereditary faith (which, even in rebellion, was a mistaken principle of loyalty), they adhered to the British Monarchy, and justified the eulogium which Chatham had pronounced on a former generation of their countrymen, that they served with fidelity and fought with valour." The same principle still animates this high-hearted but unfortunate people. Their loyalty follows them wherever they go; and, what is equally creditable to them, success attends their efforts immediately that "they are placed on a favourable soil, and find in the certainty of an honest independence the stimulus and the reward of their enterprise and exertions.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP, REFITTED. (SEE NEXT PAGE.)

It is possible, and, indeed, highly probable, that means might be taken to improve the condition of the Western Highlands and of the Hebrides without the expatriation of the people; but measures sufficiently remedial to remove the effects of past errors, and to develop the resources of a soil by no means the finest in the world, are necessarily slow. The evils produced by the misgovernment or the mistakes of ages are not to be cured in a day, or a year, or a generation; and in the meantime the people die of starvation, or live on without hope and without stimulus, a burthen to themselves and their neighbours. Thousands of them would gladly emigrate if they had the means, and would seek in Canada or Australia new homes and better fortunes; and thus, while improving their own condition, diminish the pressure of misery upon those they leave behind them. But, as we have already said, the landlords are, for the most part, too poor to assist them in emigration. One of those islands has had the good fortune to come into the possession of a solvent proprietor, of a man of great wealth and untiring benevolence, who in a time of unparalleled distress has nobly exerted himself, not simply to alleviate the temporary misery, but permanently to improve the condition of the people. Sir James Matheson has expended a princely fortune in the island of Lewis, and has recently, at his own cost, provided the means for conveying to Canada no less than one thousand poor people, who were starving on the soil of that island. The letters received from these voluntary emigrants, extracts of which are now lying before us, prove the vast extent of good that has been in his manner effected. But the other islands of the Hebridean group are not so fortunate in their chiefs. There are no such landlords as Sir James Matheson in Mull or Skye, or the countless smaller islands that cluster along the western coast of Scotland; and it has therefore become necessary to make an appeal to the public on behalf of the people, who are willing and anxious to emigrate to Australia, if the means be afforded them. Australia urgently needs labour, and the labourers of Skye and Mull urgently need Australia. Shall not the two be brought together? At the present time a vigorous effort is being made on behalf of the poor people of Skye, an island that has perhaps suffered more than any of the Hebrides from the disastrous consequences of the potato famine. "Nearly the whole of that island," as we learn from a document issued by the Edinburgh committee for the promotion of emigration from Skye to Australia, "is held in trust for behoof of creditors, who, up to this time, have given no assistance; and the landlords, receiving no revenue from those properties, are quite unable to give the necessary aid." An appeal has therefore been made to the public in behalf of 400 families, amounting to 2000 persons, for such assistance as will enable them to transport themselves to Australia. We earnestly direct the attention of our readers to this important subject, of which they will find full details in the report of the speech of Mr. Sheriff Fraser, at a recent meeting in Edinburgh. The speech of Mr. Fraser refers exclusively to Skye, but the subject is one of national concern. The future fate of the Hebrides deserves the consideration of all our statesmen and philosophers; and if we can more fully develop the wealth and resources of our most valuable colonies, rescue thousands of people from starvation and death, transform them into independent labourers or comfortable landed proprietors, and improve the condition of large districts at home, and all by one simultaneous operation, we should surely lose no time in setting about it.

HIGHLAND DESTITUTION AND EMIGRATION.

A public meeting was recently held in the Hopetoun Rooms, Queen street, Edinburgh, "to promote measures for aiding persons in the Island of Skye, who desire to emigrate to the British colonies, but who are prevented by the want of sufficient means." The Lord Provost presided; and among the gentlemen present were noticed Sir John M'Neil (Chairman of the Board of Supervision), Sir J. D. Elphinstone, Sir William Johnston, the Solicitor-General, the Hon. Bouverie Primrose, Mr. Currie, Sheriff of Banffshire, Mr. Fraser, Sheriff-Substitute of Skye, Mr. Makgill of Kemback, Mr. Colquhoun of Killermont, Mr. William Bowrie, Agent to her Majesty's Emigration Commissioners, &c.

The Lord Provost stated that the object of the meeting was to promote emigration from the Island of Skye. The committee were sure one that it should be understood that the present movement had no connection with any scheme of compulsory emigration, and that it had no other object in view than the benefit of individuals who themselves were desirous to emigrate. His Lordship then introduced

Mr. Fraser, Sheriff Substitute of Skye, who explained in detail the steps which had been already taken in prosecution of the scheme. The Skye Emigration Society he stated, was established in Skye four or five months ago. Its object was to aid and assist, purely voluntary; and it had come to that support, not for any emigration movement generally, but for the help of those who had already applied to their society at Portree. They had in Skye a population which, compared with the extent of the country, so far as they were at present developed, was too large for the island to maintain. For several years back public munificence had been turned to avert from that population the horrors of famine. Large sums had been collected, and benevolence had remain and great object for which they were intended, namely, the prevention of death from famine; but they had failed in doing that which they were not, perhaps, primarily intending to do, namely, the permanent relief of the people's own resources; and now, after five years' suffering on the part of the people, and five years of contributions on the part of the public, the poor atom of Skye were not one whit better prepared for meeting a famine than they were before. When the Emigration Society was established, it was resolved, if possible, to place it on such a footing as, while it would have the confidence of the proprietors of the island, it would also have the confidence of the people, and bid fair for that of the public at large, and they circulated a short document, in which they told the people it was a question which each individual was to determine for himself; the scheme not being proposed on the part of his being a necessary remedial measure for the population collectively, but simply as a question of advantage or disadvantage to individuals. The result of that address, which, in addition, invited meetings of the society, had once a fortnight, to give information to all who chose to attend, formed the only agitation of the movement to which the society had resorted, had been that already 400 families, including upwards of 2000 souls, had applied for the aid of the society, and he had no hesitation in saying, that had there been any assurance of the society obtaining the means of affording sufficient aid, a much greater number would have been upon their lists. The society felt that when the people came forward to enroll, and frankly, they were involved in a grave and serious responsibility; for, if they were unable to procure sufficient funds to give effective assistance to intending emigrants, they might be exposed to the reflection, that, in a matter of such vast importance to the people they had excited hopes only to be disappointed. They had, accordingly, resolved to appeal to the public for aid. They were desirous that the emigration from Skye should be to Australia, not only because of the proximity of that country, but because for that field of occupation, but because her Majesty's Emigration Commissioners afforded great and special facilities for emigration to that country. It might be said that almost the whole expense of the passage was borne by the Commissioners, and that from their funds they could procure the means of effecting a change in the condition of the people of Skye which would be beneficial both to the emigrants and to those who remained at home. (Cheers.) A very important difficulty, however, existed in the want of proper clothing for the passage, and the inability of many of the intending emigrants to purchase any. It was chiefly to a grip this deficiency, and to provide for the extra expense attending the emigration of aged members of families, that further assistance was required. Mr Fraser concluded by expressing a hope that efficient pecuniary support would not be withheld from a scheme which promised to be so beneficial that it had been favoured with the approval of persons of all classes and of every shade of opinion.

On Wednesday a return was printed from the House of Lords, showing the gross revenue of the Court of Bankruptcy last year, and the amount of charges thereon. The revenue was £70,794 3s. 8d., and the deficiency income £14,186 2s. 4d., making £93,980 6s. 10d. which had been expended in salaries, compensations, annuities, expenses, &c.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP.

IN various Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS we have engraved the magnificent steam-ship the Great Britain, in the several stages of her history, from the commencement of her building at Bristol, and her leaving that port in 1845, to her release from Dundrum Bay, and her arrival at Liverpool, in 1847. The ill success which had attended the vessel despatched her owners from further proceedings, and the Great Britain lay in the north docks literally "a sheer hulk" To the eye of a sailor, however, and the lover of a fine ship there was much to admire under her unsightly exterior. Her beautiful lines and evident capabilities were so apparent to the practised eye, that it was felt to be a pity that she should lie a wreck in port. Messrs. Gibbs, Bright, and Co., of Liverpool, who had formerly acted as agents for the company, then became the owners of the vessel. Three large contracts were immediately entered into for the principal part of the work required. The services of Mr. Patterson, the naval architect of the ship, were secured, as was the assistance of Mr. Creuze, her Majesty's surveyor for the Bristol steam-boats, who has acted as inspecting engineer of the work. The contractors for the work were Messrs. Mackay and Miller for the deck-house; Messrs. Thomas Vernon and Son for the iron-work and shipwrights' alterations; and Messrs. Penn and Co., of London, for the engines. For the shipwrights work a steam-engine was erected, and 350 men employed during the time the vessel lay in the graving dock.

It is not, however, to be supposed that the Great Britain has undergone any alteration in her form: that is precisely as it was before. The only alteration as regards the hull is the removal of the sailing plate formerly attached to her sides, which were found insufficient for their object. And whereas she had formerly nothing more than an iron plate about two inches deep for a keel, she has had an oak keel seventeen inches deep added, and bolted through with iron bolts: this is covered with zinc, to neutralise the effects of the water, and to make its surface smooth. The object of this keel is to prevent rolling, which it is believed it will accomplish. Her bottom sheathing, for about 150 feet in length, is entirely new; and wherever there has been any chafing, new plates of the best iron have been substituted. The bows and stern of the vessel have been strengthened by the addition of double angle, iron framing; and this has again been further secured by three tiers of iron stringers, two feet three inches wide and five-eighths of an inch thick, riveted to the beams at right angles. There have been seven iron bulkheads placed in the ship, running fore and aft for the entire length of the ship, half as deep again as those formerly in her; and there are box lessons to support the engines, made of inch and a quarter plate iron, and three feet six inches deep.

The Great Britain will now be able to carry a much larger cargo than before—probably to the extent of 1000 tons additional. This capacity will be gained partly through the space occupied by new boilers, and partly through the construction of a deck-house, 300 feet long, and 7 feet 6 inch high. New bulwarks have also been erected around the ship at an elevation of 4 feet 6 inches above those she previously had; and these will be of further use to protect the deck-house in severe weather, whilst the roof of the house will form a promenade 300 feet long, and perfect protection from any seas the vessel may ship.

The dimensions of the Great Britain are now as follow:—

Length over all ..	..	..	..	330 feet
Beam ..	..	..	..	51 feet 6 inches
Depth from promenade deck	..	..	..	40 feet 10½ inches
Capacity for cargo, about	..	..	..	3000 tons
Burthen ditto	..	..	..	1200 tons

An alteration has been made in the masts of the ship, the number being reduced to four instead of five, as she formerly had; but this in nowise affects her sailing power, as she will be able to spread 10,000 square yards of canvas. Two of her lower masts, we should say, are iron cylinders, especially constructed with a view to giving them lightness and strength. The two centre masts are rigged as a ship, carrying sails as high as "royals," and the first and last masts are rigged with fore and-aft sails, as in a schooner.

The next and one of the most important considerations in the vessel is her motive power. The old engines were nominally of 1000 horse-power; but it is a question if they ever worked over 500 horse-power: the new engines, on the other hand, are nominally of 500 horse-power, but there is every reason to hope that they will work up to a much higher power.

The Great Britain has been fitted with a pair of oscillating engines, by John Penn and son, engineers, Greenwich, and are of the collective power of 500 horses. The cylinders are 89 inches in diameter, and six feet length of stroke, and by the intervention of gearing the screw shaft makes three revolutions to one of the engine. The screw or fan has three arms or blades, and is 15 feet 6 inches diameter, and 19 feet pitch. There are six boilers, either of which can be used independently of the other, if necessary. About 700 tons of coal can be stowed in the bunkers in the engine-room, and provision has been made to take about 800 tons in other parts of the vessel in all, more than enough to take the ship to New York and back. The engines are of the most beautiful workmanship, and do credit to their constructors

To lessen the vibration formerly experienced from the motion of the screw and machinery, eight iron beams have been placed transversely through the vessel, which lock her sides firmly together. The basis on which the machinery rests are much stronger than formerly, and she has further been strengthened by four additional iron diagonals, so far as they were to the engines, which again are buttressed by a framing of teakwood, each piece being 20 inches deep and 3 feet wide, running on each side of the engines, transversely, and diagonally, to the sides of the ship (the distance in which the solid timber extends being 17 feet 6 inches on each side of the engine), and the whole of this framing being bolted together, and through the sides of the ship, by wrought iron bolts, so as to form a solid mass of timber.

The trial trip made with the Great Britain on Monday and Tuesday week, and noticed in our Journal of last week, was most successful: the compasses were as correct as in any wooden vessel

The accompanying Sketch is by W. Williams, of Liverpool: it shows the vast steamer, with the Atlantic vessel, in the distance.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE DEFENCE OF THE COAST.—When the Prince Regent, 90, Capt. Harris, and Hogue, 60, screw-ship, Capt Macdougall, have reached Spithead, the naval force at Portsmouth will amount to 7000 men, with a fleet of steamers in commission whose aggregate horse-power is 3700. Giving a cruising range of ten miles to each vessel, with the eight sea-going steamers in commission, and the half-steam gunboats squadron ready for service at the shortest notice, the whole coast of England, from Sheerness to the Isle of Wight, could be efficiently covered by the Portsmouth force of steamers alone. 36 engineers, 30 warrant-officers such as gunners, boatswains, carpenters, and some 50 stokers, have been attached for some time to the steam reserve at Portsmouth. The crew of the Excellent and other ships at that port, with the available marines, could man at sea steamer enough to cover 50 miles of coast.

THE NEW RECRUITING DISTRICTS IN ENGLAND.—In consequence of the abolition of the Coventry district, the Commander-in-Chief has re-arranged the following districts and limits, and the arrangement takes effect from the 1st inst.: District No. 1, Head-quarters, York (lately Leeds), extent—East and North Northumberland, Durham, York, Lincoln, Nottingham, Leicester, and Rutland. District No. 2, Head-quarters, Liverpool; extent—counties of Lancashire, Cheshire, Westmoreland, Cumberland, Isle of Man, and Scotland. District No. 3, Head-quarters, Bristol; extent—counties of Gloucester, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, Wilts, Hereford, Worcester, Warwick, Monmouth, and South Wales. District No. 4, Head-quarters, London; extent—counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Sussex, Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, Bedford, Bucks, Oxford, Berks, Hants, and Herts.

THE MILITIA.—During the present week the practice was continued at Woolwich, under the superintendence of Major Brownrigg, of the Grenadier Guards. Among the visitors on Monday to witness it were his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Lieutenant-General C. W. Pasley, K.C.B., Royal Engineers, and a number of officers of her Majesty's service. The firing was most excellent. Every depôt and every regiment at home will be furnished by the Ordnance department with 100 Minié rifles this year.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—In addition to the appointments mentioned lately, we have now to announce that Major-General Cochrane, late Deputy-Adjutant-General in Dublin, is to command the Dublin district, vice the Duke of Cambridge; Major-General Mansell, K.H., to command the Curragh district; Major-General M'Dowall remains at Kilkenny; Major-General Thomas is to command the Belfast district; Major General Napier continues in command at London; Colonel Wemyss is to command the Scottish district. We believe that Major General Somerset is to go to India, from the Cape, to succeed Lieutenant-General Ashmuty. Colonel Pennefather is to be Deputy-Quartermaster-General in Dublin, and Major-General Love, from South Wales, takes the command in Jersey.

CHALLENGE TO AMERICAN YACHT BUILDERS.—Mr. Mare, of Blackwall, has invited the Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, or any gentleman in America, to build with a view to competition, a vessel similar to that in which the America was successful last year, to come off at Cowes in next August or September; the conditions to be referred to umpires chosen by the respective parties. Mr. Mare has staked £1000 on the issue.

Messrs. Shaw, Maxwell, and Co. have contracted with the Admiralty department for the supply of about 300 gallons of sherry for the service of the expedition about to proceed to the Arctic seas, which supply is ordered by the Treasury to be delivered duty free.

A lengthened survey was held on Monday at the Victualling-yard, Deptford, on the preserved meats and vegetables served by Hogarth, of Aberdeen, for Sir E. Belcher's expedition to the Arctic seas, with, to the gratification of every one, a list of stores, on examination, proved to be most excellent, and were received accordingly.

It is reported that the Hon. Capt. Ross, naval aide-de-camp to the Queen, was appointed to the command of the Sceptre, 120, on the 1st inst., vice Capt. Yates

It has been finally settled that Lieutenant-Colonel Clark, late of the 54th Regiment, shall succeed Major-General Brown as Commandant of the Royal Military Asylum at Chelsea.

The officers and men belonging to regiments quartered at Chatham and in its vicinity are to attend and receive practical instructions from the engineer officers in the art of constructing field-works for the purposes of attack and defence.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The inauguration of Louis Napoleon's new Parliament—the Grand Corps de l'Etat, as it is called—took place on Monday, in the Palace of the Tuileries. The ceremony was of a very grand and imposing character, and perfectly regal in its magnificence

The Salle des Maréchaux, in which the installation was held, is the principal saloon of the central compartment of the Tuileries, known as the Pavillon de l'Horloge, and, though not of very large dimensions, is of such lofty height, that half way up towards the ceiling there is a second story, beneath the windows of which, a cornice with caryatides supports a spacious gallery that runs round the whole apartment This gallery was occupied on the present occasion chiefly by ladies, whilst the floor and body of the hall was set apart for the functionaries and the "Great Bodies of the State," whom the Prince President was to address. The side of the room opposite the window looking into the Place du Carrousel was fitted up with an estrade, on which was placed a chair of state for the Prince President. At his right was another chair of state, not quite so elevated in its position, for the ex King Jerome, the President of the Senate, and only surviving brother of the Emperor Napoleon. At each side of the President's chair of state, and extending to the side walls, were placed seats for the members of the Council of State, the military household of the Prince, and the numerous staff which accompanied him. All the centre of the room was occupied with seats covered with crimson velvet; those on the right of the President's chair being set apart for the corps diplomatique, the Senate, and the limited number of persons invited; and those on the left for the Legislative Body.

The whole of the hangings and ornaments of the salle were of crimson velvet, richly embroidered with gold, the curtains and the draperies between the portraits of the Emperor and France, from which the room takes its name, being all of the same rich material. High above the President's chair rose a magnificent canopy of crimson velvet. The gallieries round the room were also hung with velvet of the same colour, serving to throw in strong relief the gay toilettes of the ladies seated there. To add to the effect gigantic candelabras of cry-tal and gilt bronze hung from the roof, and reflected back in variegated tints the rays of light from the windows above them.

The Salle des Maréchaux, or waiting-room of the Salle des Marchaux was reserved as an ante-chamber, or place for the preliminary assembling of the Legislative Body, whilst that on the right received the members of the Senate; a third room was set apart for the Council of State The diplomatic body, and such persons as had received tickets of invitation to witness the ceremony, proceeded at once to their places in the Salle des Marchaux.

The doors were thrown open at eleven o'clock, but at a much earlier hour a vast crowd had assembled in the immediate vicinity of the Tuileries, particularly in the Place du Carrousel. The 4th Regiment of the Line was drawn up in the court before the Palace, and pockets of the mounted Republican Guard were on duty in the streets outside. The members of the various bodies of the State began to arrive about half-past seven, their carriages setting by two breaches made in the iron railing which hems in the Court of Honour of the Tuileries; and before one o'clock the carriages drawn up in the court occupied ten lines at each side of the grand entrance, each line containing twenty carriages. Before twelve o'clock the seats reserved for strangers were all filled, and by that hour nearly all the persons composing the great bodies of the State had arrived. Not more than sixty or seventy of the 261 members of the Lower Chamber, or Corps Législatif, were provided with the uniform prescribed for the body. But the members of the Council of State and of the Senate were all in the grande tenue as to dress, and their appearance was very brilliant, the profusion of gold embroidery on their collars, cuffs, breasts, and skirts having a very gorgeous effect.

The diplomatic corps attended in large numbers, presenting a perfect blaze of orders, stars, ribbons, and embroidery, the ample dress of the Pope's Nuncio exhibited a striking contrast to the magnificent display made by the various ambassadors; viz the Marquis de Valdegamas (Spain); M. Mavrocordito (Greece), Chevalier de Collegno (Sardinia), Baron (Hollinshead) Brunnow (Russia), Count Colloredo (Tuscany), Lord Cowley (England), who sat next the Nuncio; M. Rives (United States), &c

The Council of State entered the saloon at a few minutes before one o'clock, and immediately the sound of cannon was heard, intimating that the President of the Republic was approaching; the drums instantly beat to arms, the troops saluted as the Prince alighted from his carriage, coming from the Elysée by the quays, and entering the court by the guichet next to the bridge. He was attended by a numerous staff of generals and aides-de-camp, the ministers of state, &c., amongst whom were Generals Magnan, de St. Arnaud, Canrobert, Gouyon, and Roguette de Co.te; Colonels de Fleury, Ivelin, de Beville, and E. Ney; Count Bacciochi, M. de Casabianca, Minister of State; M. de Maupas, Minister of Police; M. de Persigny, Minister of the Interior; M. Turgot, Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Lefebvre Duruflé, Minister of Public Works; M. Bineau, Minister of Finance, &c.

The President at five minutes past one o'clock entered the Salle des Marechaux at the head of this staff, and accompanied by his uncle Jerome, the President of the Senate. The whole assemblage immediately rose, and, as he advanced, bowing on both sides, towards the Presidential throne, he stopped once or twice to shake hands with some persons he recognised. He wore the costume of Lieutenant-General in the army, with the usual cordon and star of the Legion of Honour. When he reached the fauteuil he was greeted with applause, to which he responded by bowing his acknowledgments; and, when silence was restored, he said, "Gentlemen, be seated." All having accordingly taken their places, Louis Napoleon, who remained standing, read in a loud and distinct voice, from a paper which he held in his hand, the following address:—

"Messieurs les Senateurs: Messieurs les Députés,—The Di[illegible] the people intrusted to me ceases from this day. It is with a [illegible] faction that I come to proclaim the truth to the assembled representatives of the nation. Calumny has [illegible] that I had [illegible] to establish a throne [illegible] giving to France institutions similar to those which [illegible]. That calumny seeks to [illegible] functions, the future will attempt to [illegible] movements and of satisfaction. Often deceived, I [illegible] the people remains always [illegible] that provoked me was, that I foresaw the occurrence of one thing—anarchy. In fact, for many years past, parties became more exalted, and incapable of founding anything Nowhere was there a right that was not disputed—an organisation of any kind—a system capable of realisation.

"In this manner, when, thanks to the assistance of some courageous men, thanks especially to the energetic attitude of the army, every danger was banished in a few hours, my first care was to demand institutions for the people. For a long time society resembled a pyramid attempted to be turned upside down, and set on its summit. I have replaced it on its base. The universal suffrage, the only source of right in such conjunctures, was immediately re-established; authority regained its ascendancy; at length, France adopting the principal provisions of the Constitution I submitted to it, I was allowed to create the political bodies whose influence and weight will be all the greater as their functions will have been wisely regulated. Among political institutions those are in fact the only ones that endure, and which fix in an equitable manner the limit at which each power ought to stop. There is no other way to arrive at a useful and beneficial application of liberty The examples of most nations are not lost upon us. Since 1814 was the commencement of a parliamentary régime, in spite of all our reverses, seen with satisfaction? It was because the Emperor—let us not fear to avow it—was then, on account of the war, led into the too absolute exercise of power. Why, on the contrary, in 1851, did France applaud the fall of that same parliamentary régime? It was because the Chamber abused the influence that had been given it, and that, wishing to rule over all, it endangered the general equilibrium In fine, why does the present moment succeed in the restrictions on the liberty of the press and of individuals? Because the one had generated into licence, and the other, in place of being the regulated exercise of the right of each, had by odious attacks menaced the rights of all. This extreme danger, especially for Democracies, of incessantly acting institutions, ill defined, sacrifice by turns authority or liberty, was perhaps apportioned by our fathers half a century since, when, on issuing from the revolutionary storm, and after a fruitless essay of every kind of régime, they proclaimed the Constitution of the year VIII., which served as the model for 1852. Doubtless it does not sanction all the principles which the abuse of power has perverted, but it consecrates many of them. On the day after a revolution the first of the guarantees for a people does not consist in the immoderate use of the tribune and the press; it is in the right of choosing the Government that suits it. Now the French nation has given (perhaps for the first time) to the world the imposing spectacle of a great people voting in all liberty the form of its Government. Thus, the Chief of the Nation, whom you have to proclaim, is but the expression of the popular will. And here me what do I see? Two chambers the one elected in virtue of the most liberal law existing in the world; the other named by me, it is true, but also independent, inasmuch as it is irremovable. Around me you observe men of known patriotism and merit, always ready to support me with their councils, and to enlighten me on the necessities of the country. Finally, the Council of State, from this day forward, is to be put in execution, is not, then, the work of a vain theory and of deputies; it is the work [illegible] ce and of reason. You will a time, gentlemen, to consolidate, to extend, and to ameliorate it. I will communicate to the senate and to the Corps Législatif the situation of the Republic. They will see there that confidence has been everywhere re-established, that labour has been resumed everywhere; and that, for the first time after a great political change, the public fortune has increased in place of diminishing. For the last four months it has been possible for my Government to encourage many useful enterprises, to reward many services, to relieve much distress, even to create in the position of the greatest number of the principal functionaries—and all that without increasing the taxes or deranging the budget, which we are happy to present you in equilibrium

"Such facts and the attitude of Europe, who has accepted the changes that have taken place with satisfaction, inspire us with a just hope of security for the future. For if peace is guaranteed at home, it is equally so abroad. Foreign powers respect our independence; and we have every interest in preserving with them the most amicable relations with them. So long as the honour of France is not compromised, the duty of the Government shall be to care only about calm and of perturbation in Europe, and to direct all our efforts towards the ameliorations which alone can insure comfort for the laborious classes, and secure the prosperity of the country

"And now, gentlemen, at the moment when you are associating yourselves with my labours, I will explain to you frankly what my conduct shall be

"It has been frequently repeated, when I was seen to re-establish the institutions and the recollections of the Empire, that I desired to re-establish the Empire itself. If such had been my constant anxiety, that transformation might have been accomplished long since. Neither means nor opportunities have been wanting to me

"Thus, in 1848, when 6 000,000 of suffrages named me, in spite of the Constituent Assembly, I was not ignorant that the simple refusal to acquiesce in the Constitution might give me a throne, but I was not seduced by an elevation which could only be rightly produced across disturbing the country

"It was equally easy for me to change the form of the government on the 13th of June, 1849; I would not do so

"In fine, on the 2d of December, if personal considerations had prevailed over the supreme interests of the country, I might at first have demanded a pompous title of the people, which they would not have refused me. I contented myself with that which I had

"Consequently, when I borrow examples from the Consulate and Empire, it is because I find them there particularly stamped with nationality and grandeur. Being determined now, as before, to do everything for France, and nothing for myself, I shall accept no modification of the present state of things, unless I was forced to do so by evident necessity. Were can it arise? Solely from the conduct of parties. If they resign themselves, nobody shall be troubled; but if, by their underhand intrigues, they endeavour to sap the bases of my Government, if, in their blindness, they contest the legitimacy of the popular election; if, finally, by evil and open by their incessant attacks the future prospects of the country—then, and only then it may be reasonable to demand from the people, in the name of the repose of France, a new title, which will irrevocably fix upon my head the power with which I am invested me.

"But let us not pre-occupy ourselves with difficulties, which, no doubt, have no probability. Let us rally to the Republic. It menaces nobody, and may reassure everybody. Under its banner I wish to inaugurate anew an era of calmness and consolation; and I call, without distinction, on all those who wish to co-operate with me in forwarding the public good.

"Providence, which has hitherto so visibly blessed my exertions, will not leave its work unfinished. It will animate me with its inspirations, and give us the wisdom and power necessary to consolidate an order of things which will ensure the happiness of our country and the repose of Europe."

Several passages in the address, especially those comparing the state of society to a revered pyramid, and referring to the maintenance of peace, and the situation of the Empire, were applauded; and at its conclusion the applause was renewed with some warmth, accompanied with cries of "Vive Napoleon!"

M. de Casabianca, the Minister of State, next rose, and announced that he was about to administer to the members of the Senate and of the Legislative Body the oath of allegiance to the President and to the Constitution. Having read aloud the words of the oath, the Minister of State proceeded to call over the names of the Senate, each member responding to the call by rising in his place, stretching forth his hand, and saying "Je le jure." The Cardinal-Archbishops (five of whom were present—of Lyons, Bourges, Bordeaux, Cambrai, and Rheims) merely repeated the words without stretching out the hand. Nothing of note occurred during the solemn act of taking the oath, except that the Count Portalis interrupted the Minister to remark that his name had been inadvertently passed over, and then swore allegiance; and on the Minister calling out the name of "General Pelet," an officer rose and said, "My name is not Pelletet, but Pelet de la Lozère." The latter incident caused some merriment, as the gallant General's oath appeared to refer to the correcting the error with respect to his own name.

On the names of General Cavaignac and M. Carnot, the opposition representatives for two of the districts of Paris, and of M. Henon, the democratic member for Lyons, being called out, there was a short pause at each, those gentlemen not being present.

The oath having been administered to the whole of the persons present belonging to the Senate and the Legislative Body, M. de Casabianca said, "I have now to declare the session of 1852 to be regularly opened;" and the ceremony terminated

The President then withdrew amidst loud cheers, and returned to the Elysée. His reception outside was also favourable. The whole proceedings did not occupy an hour.

The Senate and Legislative Body met on Tuesday, in their respective Chambers, at the former Palace of the Representatives.

In the latter, the President, Marshal Jerome Bonaparte, opened the proceedings with an address, in which he took a retrospective view of the past, and stated that the régime of the Empire was so powerfully constituted that its overthrow could only be brought about by a general coalition of the European powers, which in their turn were aided by treachery. He spoke of the coup d'état of 1851, and explained it by the prestige of the name of Napoleon, which name, according to his ideas, is the personification of order and of liberty at home, of independence, of national dignity, and of greatness abroad. The act of the 20th December sprang from respect for the only sovereign—the people—and for the advantage of the people alone it was consummated. He declared further that the period of the Dictatorship had now reached its termination, and he pointed out that the Constitution was based upon three elements. It contained but a limited number of principles, which sprang from the various institutions of France. He next pointed out the duties of the Senate. That Assembly was not called upon to make the laws; its character, influence, and functions were essentially conservative and moderating. Nevertheless, that Assembly possessed a right of proposing drafts of laws of great national interest. He entreated the members of the Senate to show energy, and he laid great stress upon that word, but he exhorted them also to moderation and constancy. (It is remarked that these words refer to a demand for an amnesty, which it is supposed is to be preferred by the Senate.) He concluded his speech by stating that he believed that his political career was terminated; but when the President appealed to his patriotism and his devotion, and that too, after so many years of exile and of vicissitudes, and when Providence seemed to decree that he, the last of the Senators of the Empire, should be the first among the senators of the new reign (régime), he had felt happy to accept the place, and to be, as it were, the connecting link which chains the past to the present.

In the Legislative Body the business of the day was opened by the President, M. Billault, with a short speech, in which he said:—

Placed under the invocation of the great principles of 1719, ratified by that Government spirit which marked the Consulate, these institutions have received an evident consecration by the scrutin by which we are elected—ours is the duty to infuse into them practical life. This is the commencement of our mission; and that mission, whatever may be said of it, is certainly not alleged or without grandeur and authority.

We shall not, indeed, see the Legislature surrounded by parties which incessantly hold the Ministry in check, compelling it to concentrate all its forces upon its own preservation and defence, and by so doing not unfrequently enervating the power of the State. Whenever, as Ministers or Deputies, we may employ these parliamentary tactics, it is to business now that we shall be obliged to consecrate them—serious and practical business. This is our part in the Constitution. It consists in voting the taxes, the discussion of the budget and of the laws. It implies not merely the right of deliberating freely and publicly, of adopting or rejecting, but also that of amendment, no longer, undoubtedly, with the same facility of improvisation against which previous Assemblies vainly endeavoured to defend themselves, but with a degree of maturity which can only proceed from repose and reflection.

M. Billault then read the following collective letter addressed by General Cavaignac, M. Carnot, and M. Henon to the President of the Legislative Corps:—

M. le Président,—The electors of Paris and Lyons sought us in our retreat, or in our exile. We thank them for having thought that our names would serve as a protest against the destruction of public liberties and the rigours of despotism. But we do not admit that they meant to send us to sit in a legislative body whose powers do not extend to the point of repairing the violation of rights. We repudiate the immoral doctrine of silence, or of mental reservation; and we refuse to take the oath required on admission to the Legislative Corps. We pray you, M. le Président, to be so good as to communicate to the Assembly this declaration.

(Signed) CAVAIGNAC.
CARNOT.
HENON.

Paris, March 29 1852.

M. Billault, at the conclusion of the note, intimated that the determination expressed by the writers of it must be considered as tantamount to giving in their resignations.

The proceedings in the Chambers on the remaining days of the week excited no interest, as they are regarded as mere registry offices for the acts of the President of the Republic

In the opposition papers little or no reference is made to the speech of the President on Monday. The Assemblée Nationale, however, ventures to state its opinion that the Empire is at hand. M. de Girardin, who had got leave to return to Paris on private business, has re-commenced writing in the Presse, from which it is inferred that the Government do not intend to send him into exile again.

On Sunday and Monday, notwithstanding the immediate assembling of the Legislative Chambers seemed to render "legislation by decree" a work of supererogation, these Dictatorial ordinances were issued in numerous more.

The decrees of Sunday extended over a large field of objects The first of these abolishes the state of siege, or martial law, in all departments of continental France. For the future, therefore, no arrest will be made, no prosecution allowed, but in conformity with the laws. The departmental mixed commissions cease their functions; the "commissione of grace," which sit at the Ministry of Justice, will, however, continue to exist for some time longer.

A second decree authorises the Minister of Finance, in accordance with the decree confiscating the Orleans property to the State, to sell a portion of it (forests), to the amount of 35,000,000 francs, in order to devote the produce to the aid of societies of mutual aid, of healthy lodgings of credit, and for the aid of the poor curates' fund. The decree likewise orders that 2,000,000 francs a year, at 4½ per cent., shall be inscribed in the "Grand Livre," in the place of the properties which the decree of the 22d of January devotes to the Legion of Honour. The Château Rambouillet is to be appropriated as a residence for the daughters of the members of the order who shall die in a military medal, as directed by the decree of the 22d of January.

A third decree declares that the Civil Code—the work of the Emperor —shall henceforth be termed the "Code Napoléon" seven new senators are named in addition to the Duke de Montemart, General Delfin, the Archbishop of Paris, General Pyat, M. Bineau, the Marquis de Barbançois, and M. de Heckeren

The libraries of the fulleries, of the Louvre, of Fontainbleau, of Compiegne, of Versailles, of Trianon, of St. Cloud, of Meudon, of the Elysée, and of the Château of Pau, are by a fourth decree subjected to the authority and supervision of the Minister of State.

By a fifth decree a new organisation is created of the consistory of Protestant worship, and the former members of the Central Council of the Reformed Churches are named. Admiral Baudin is president, and M. Charles Read secretary. Further decrees regulate the jurisdiction in the navy; fix the period of a month from the 29th ult. for the members of the law courts to take the oath of allegiance; organise the Commission de Surveillance of the Sinking Fund, under the presidency of Count d'Argout; create and organise societies of mutual relief; authorise and approve the Statutes of the Lyons and Avignon Railroad Company, and approve the fusion of the Paris and Orleans, Centre, Orleans and Bordeaux, and Tours and Nantes Railways, and the convention between them and the Minister of Public Works.

The decrees issued on Monday were confined to subjects of immediate domestic interest. By these decrees Messrs Léon Faucher and others are authorised to open a loan on mortgage bank, in conformity with the late law on the subject. The decree applies to the seven departments in the jurisdiction of the Paris Court of Appeal.

The prefects of the departments have their salaries raised, and they are divided into three classes—members of the first of which will receive a salary of 40 000 francs; of the second, 30,000 francs; and of the third, 20,000 francs

The sugar duties are thus modified: Native sugar, equal to the first type, 45 francs; foreign, 75 francs, the 100 kilogrammes; superior sugar to pay 3 francs more; colonial sugars to pay during four years 7 francs less than native; refined sugar to pay 10 per cent. more than sugars superior to the first type; foreign refined sugar is prohibited.

Tuesday likewise brought forth its crop of regulating decrees, one of which directs that an edifice is to be erected in the Champs Elysées similar to the Crystal Palace, and intended for public ceremonies, military and civil fêtes, and national exhibitions. By another decree the Councellors of State are ordered to take the oath of allegiance before the Vice-President of Council. The remaining decrees of Tuesday refer to the subject of emigration.

The President held a brilliant review on Sunday in the courtyard of the Tuileries, and distributed crosses and medals to the 28th, 33d, and 68 h regiments of the line, the 8th Hussars, and the 6th Cuirassiers. He was received with enthusiasm by the troops and the assembled crowds.

According to the Patrie, France and England are each going to send an extraordinary envoy to Brazil and La Plata, with the view of opening the commerce of the latter river and its tributary streams to the whole world.

Louis Napoleon, on the proposition of the Military and Civil Commission of the department of the Gers, has pardoned 40 persons condemned to transportation, who were on their way to Algeria.

UNITED STATES.

Accounts dated the 20th ult. from New York state that at Washington letters had been received from Japan, in which it was announced that the Japanese had applied to the Dutch to aid them in enforcing what they regard as their version of the political doctrine of "non-intervention" with respect to the contemplated expedition from the United States to their country.

In Congress, petitions had been presented in favour of an augmented grant of money to the Collins line of mail steamers from Liverpool.

From California there are advices to the 18th of February. They were accompanied by two millions of dollars in gold dust. Nevertheless had been discovered at Butte Calaveras county, and the dust averages from two dollars to three dollars per pan. Two men—an Englishman and an Irishman—had been hanged according to "Lynch law" for robbery. There had been an excessive drought throughout California, which prevented miners working as successfully as they would otherwise have done. A steamer had been lost off the coast of Oregon. Forty-two persons had perished.

From Central America we learn, under date Panama the 4th ult., that much distress prevailed there among persons who had taken through tickets to California by the Independent line, there having been no steamer for the preceding two months. The Panama Railroad is opened to about forty miles above Chagres. Her Britannic Majesty's Vice-Consul at Panama was dead

From Honduras we have an account of a fearful storm in the bay of that name, in which five British vessels were lost; one is the barque Bathurst, of London, with all on board. The names of the others are not given.

The advices from Northern Mexico confirm the accounts of the retreat of Caravajal. He was subsequently taken prisoner by General Harney.

From Bolivia, in South America, we have a change of Ministry announced. The forces of General Cruz were defeated with terrible slaughter near Longamillo, and a subsequent revolt and total dispersion of his army followed.

By this arrival we have dates also from Jamaica, of the 2nd ult. The weather was healthy, and agriculture progressing encouraging. The young cane crop was thriving well, and bid fair to exceed last year's.

The Kingston Journal states it learns with regret that Grey Town is regarded as being likely to be made the seat of misunderstanding between Great Britain and the United States, by a somewhat similar attempt being made there to that which was made on Cuba a short time ago.

INDIA.

The accounts by the overland mail this week are dated Bombay, March 3, and Calcutta, Feb. 21. From them we learn that the war with the Burmese was about to be immediately prosecuted with vigour. Negotiations having failed, and the Burmese continuing their insults, a force of 6000 men, 3000 from Calcutta, and the same number from Madras—are to set out for Burmah on or about the 15th of March. A squadron, consisting of war-steamers, had already left Bombay for the same destination, and will transport the troops from Madras to Rangoon.

Sir C. Campbell's force returned to Peshawur from Michnee on the 15th of February. Sir Henry Lawrence had just visited the station. The tribes around were as mischievously inclined as ever, and plundered us whenever opportunity afforded.

The troops forming a corps ordered to rendezvous at Sukkur have returned to their cantonments, and all is quiet in Scinde.

Sir John Grey, having resigned the command of the Bengal army, was on his way home to England.

The Messrs. Osler have sent to Egypt, by the Viceroy's orders, two pairs of crystal glass candelabra, ten feet high. His Highness sent them to the tomb of the prophet at Medina, where they will be admired by hundreds of thousands of pilgrim worshippers.

OXFORD DIOCESAN BOARD OF EDUCATION.

At an adjourned meeting of the Diocesan Board of Education, held at Oxford on Wednesday, the following address to the committee of the National Society was adopted:—

TO THE COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR EDUCATING THE POOR IN THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH

1. We beg to record our grateful sense of the service done to the Church by the committee of the National Society in its correspondence with the Council tee of Council, through its Grace the Lord President, in the years 1848-9, which obtained from the Committee of Council several important concessions to the Church.

2. That, while the board considers it the duty of all managers of national schools to teach the children of the Church the whole catechism, it does not deem it expedient to call upon the committee of the National Society to make any fresh declaration on the subject, considering the terms if known, sufficiently explicit.

3. That this meeting deems it expedient to claim as a right that the founders of Church schools should be entitled to pecuniary aid from the public grant towards the establishment of schools, from a share in the management of which all lay members of the Church are, as a matter of right, for ever excluded by the trust deed.

4. That in the opinion of this board it would be highly expedient that another form or forms of trust deeds should be added to those now adopted by the Privy Council, with a view to secure all reasonable liberty to the founders of Church schools, and which should allow of the following variations, amongst others, to be embodied in the trust deeds of schools at the desire of the promoters:—

A. An appeal on all matters to the bishop of the diocese.

B. A power analogous to that granted to members of the Church of Rome, for the effectual removal, with the sanction of the bishop to dismiss a master or mistress, or to exclude any book, on moral and religious grounds, the bishop deciding whether the matter is one of morals or religion.

C. To allow not to require the master or mistress to be communicants.

5. This board is of opinion that power should be conceded to the promoters of Church schools to decide for themselves which of the various management clauses they will adopt.

6. Resolved that the first resolution, of which notice has been given by the Rev. S. Robins, concerning the "national" character of the society, is ambiguous in its expression, and would be mischievous in its results, inasmuch as society professes to be national only in the sense of educating the poor in the principles of the national Church.

7. That this board rejoices that the committee of the National Society have obtained from the Council tee of Council such alteration of their original clauses as greatly remove their objectionable character, they strongly deprecate cause they with the National Society any general resolution of confidence in the Committee of Council.

8. That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the Secretary of the National Society, with an expression of an earnest hope that the committee would re-open negotiations with the committee of Council, with a view—

A.—To securing the provisions enumerated in the fourth and fifth resolutions.

B.—To obtain some participation of the powers of the Committee of Council for the diocesan boards.

C.—To giving the parochial clergyman such a voice in the appointment of pupil teachers as shall give greater weight to religious and moral character and general capacity for teaching.

D.—To give a diocesan character to the Government inspection, and providing the necessary securities for its exercise.

INSTALLATION OF THE DUKE OF ARGYLL AS CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREW'S.—On Thursday week his Grace he Duke of Argyll was installed as Chancellor of the University of St. Andrew's. The ceremony took place in the library of the College of St. Mary's, which was crowded on the occasion by upwards of 700 auditors, including students. The noble Duke addressed the assembly at great length, and concluded by requesting the senatus to grant the studies Friday as a holiday. The request was received and pronounced the benediction, and the meeting separated. His Grace was subsequently presented with the freedom of the city.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.—From the reports of the registrars of friendly societies in Scotland and Ireland, just printed, it appears, that in Scotland the registered societies do not obtain about £20 000 annually in sickness, and that about 30 000 persons in population are enrolled as members. In Ireland there had been expended by them in respect of deaths the sum of £110 2s. 4d. sickness, £13 0s. 6d.; and a total expenditure of £225 18s. 7d. One society has paid £72 in respect of deaths, but does not provide relief in cases of sickness.

NORTHUMBERLAND HOUSE.

IN our Journal, No. 511, we gave representations of the very elegant staircase and the magnificent saloon in Northumberland House. The Engraving upon the ensuing page represents the soirée held in this magnificent mansion on Saturday last, with the company assembled in the drawingroom. The room itself is a fine apartment, though in decoration it is simple and unassuming; the walls are covered with crimson satin, and there are a few pictures, chiefly portraits. The furniture, in the style of the Empire, is gilded, the coverings corresponding with the damask on the walls; and on the pier tables are some specimens of Sèvres china. The chandelier is of ormolu, and extremely massive. Amongst the suite of state apartments in Northumberland House is a small room hung with curious tapestry, made in Soho-square about a century since. One of the rooms shows a good specimen of the style of decorations adopted by the brothers Adam, by whom much of the building was altered, and the appearance is rich though quant, and somewhat stiff in character.

At the Duchess' Assembly on Saturday, the members of the corps diplomatique were present in great numbers, and the réunion was also attended by a very numerous circle of the aristocracy. His Grace the Duke of Wellington was among the early arrivals.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE WILLIAM BERESFORD,
SECRETARY-AT-WAR, M.P. FOR NORTH ESSEX

THE Secretary-at-War in the new Administration, second son of Marcus Beresford, for many years member for Dungarvan in the Irish Parliament, and of Lady Frances his wife, youngest daughter of Joseph first Earl of Mintown, born in 1798, was educated at Eton, and went at a very early age to Ox ord, where he took a second class in classics, and immediately after entered the army as a Cornet in the 9th Lancers.

In 1826 he was gazetted to an unattached company, by purchase; and in the beginning of the following year he exchanged to full pay as a Captain in the 12th Lancers, then under the command of that distinguished officer, Colonel (now General) Rotherton. In December of that year he marched out of Hounslow Barracks in command of a squadron of that regiment, en route to Portugal, in the expedition sent out by Mr. Canning, and was the first cavalry officer that landed at Lisbon.

He remained in the 9th Lancers till Jan., 1831, when he received his promotion as Major Unattached; at the end of which period he obtained for the next seven years upon his property in the county of Wicklow, attending to the duties of a country gentleman and magistrate.

In the year 1833 he married Catherine, youngest daughter of G. R. Hunter, Esq., of Hinton, in Lincolnshire, and has two sons and one daughter.

In 1837 he contested the city of Waterford against Messrs. Wyse and Winston Barron, but, after an arduous struggle, was defeated.

In 1841 he was returned for the borough of Harwich; and during the time that he represented that borough he gained the character for consistent principles and determined energy which induced the Protectionist party in North Essex to select him as their candidate, when Mr. G. G. Round consented to be put in nomination for the University of Oxford. He fought a severe and determined contest for the northern division of Essex in 1847, against Mr Grandon Berlow, of Wavertree Park, and gained that election by a majority of 725.

In 1848, 1849, and 1850, he took a prominent part in opposing Sir R. Peel's permanent endowment of Maynooth; and in 1846, when the same Minister brought forward his measure for the repeal of the Corn-laws, he immediately attached himself to his old brother officer, Lord G. Bentinck, and proved himself instrumental in forming that party in the House of Commons which so determinedly and unflinchingly resisted every Free-trade measure, and finally expelled Sir R. Peel from power. The party, when formed, unanimously requested Mr. Beresford to undertake the parliamentary management of that opposition; and he performed the laborious and energetic exertions in that position as head of the staff during six successive and arduous sessions.

On the formation of the present Administration, Lord Derby at once nominated him to the office of Secretary at War, and we believe that few appointments could have given more satisfaction to the Conservative party, as they consider it a good reward for consistent principle, and for a rigorous discharge of a laborious and difficult task for such a length of time

The Right Hon. Secretary's elder brother fell at Ciudad Rodrigo, and was especially mentioned for his gallant conduct in the Duke of Wellington's despatch.

HENRY JAMES BAILLIE, ESQ., M.P. FOR INVERNESS-SHIRE, SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF CONTROL

MR. H. J. BAILLIE, eldest son of Colonel Hugh Baillie, of Redcastle and Tarradale, born March 15th, 1804, was educated at Eton and Christchurch, Oxford. He spent a considerable time abroad, and in MAJOR WILLIAM BERESFORD, M.P., SECRETARY-AT-WAR.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

HENRY JAMES BAILLIE, ESQ., M.P., SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF CONTROL.—(FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY CLAUDET.

1840 was returned to Parliament for the county of Inverness without opposition, and for which, at the subsequent elections, he has also been returned unopposed.

Early in the session of 1841 he obtained a committee to consider the subject of the distress then so severely felt, and which had so frequently visited the inhabitants of the western districts of the Highlands of Scotland; and, as the only means capable of affording complete relief, and effecting a permanent improvement of the condition of the people, he recommended a system of emigration, to be carried on and regulated by the Government.

In 1842 he called the attention of the House to the subject of the war in Affghanistan, dwelt upon the injustice and purely aggressive nature of the war, and complained of the garbled and imperfect information which had been afforded by the Ministry to justify British interference in the affairs of that country.

In the tariff debates of 1842 Mr. Baillie was a frequent speaker. In 1844 he seconded the amendment of Mr. Philip Miles, M.P. for Bristol (as to clayed sugars), and, for the time, defeated Sir Robert Peel's Government: the point was, however, afterwards regained by the Free-traders, and the overthrow of the Administration prevented.

Mr. Baillie has been a strenuous opponent of the policy of maintaining the cruising squadron upon the coast of Africa, maintaining that it has served only, at an enormous cost of money and life, to heighten the horrors of the slave trade.

Except as to sugar, Mr. Baillie was a supporter of the Free-trade measures of Sir Robert Peel, and, of late, has chiefly devoted himself, and with no small earnestness, to questions of colonial policy, as to which he on many occasions proposed votes of censure upon the late Administration.

The honourable member married, in 1840, the eldest daughter of the sixth Viscount Strangford, well known as the author of "Historic Fancies."

Our Portrait is from a Daguerreotype by Claudet.

HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF NORTHUMBERLAND'S ASSEMBLY, AT NORTHUMBERLAND HOUSE.—THE DRAWING-ROOM.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

WALKING DRESS.

At length the fine weather enables us to give the Spring Fashions in all their freshness. The Champs Elysées have put forth their full splendour, and the open carriages allow us to estimate the toilettes of the opening season. That which first strikes us is the prevalence of light shades for dresses and bonnets: white particularly prevails. In bonnets, blue, rose-colour, mauve, light green, and indeed all the lightest hues, are greatly in vogue: they are generally en crêpe, and of the capote form. The crown is usually flat, instead of being rounded as they were last winter; the leaf is very open, and not very large, and the inside trimmings are worn lower than formerly. For this summer, the fashion for bonnets will be, first, white chip (paille de riz blanch ; then open-worked straw (dcoffe et paille a jour). This will suit every one, and the shade of the straw combines admirably with all the light shades of the season, especially with the rose, the blue, and the mauve. The dresses which we have hitherto noticed are, owing to the season, in alpaca, barpour, valencias, and taffetas of every kind. The valencias especially are very recherché. The latest style is to wear them Chintz, with Albanian stripes; satinés, of marked colours, as blue or cherry-colour, upon a grey Chiné ground, or black upon a green ground, or dark cherry glacé de noir. These are the favourite nuances; but there is a great variety to select from. Taffeta dresses are very much worn, generally with three flounces, the ground of which is white, with light-coloured patterns, usually green, the shade being darker at the edge of the flounce, and growing lighter near the top: others are covered with flounces of every shade, running patterns, or single bouquets of fresh and brilliant colours. Many of these stuffs somewhat resemble the Persian patterns, which made such an impression when first introduced to Europe. The plain stuffs (of one colour) are generally trimmed with velvet, either black or of the same colour with the stuff, or trimmed with embroidery. The new dresses, of light and plain materials, as nankeen, pique blanc, &c., will be trimmed with broderies galons of the same colour—a hint for ladies to prepare themselves for the coming season. There is a new style, also, which consists in replacing the three flounces by one flounce as large as the other three, reaching to the bottom of the dress, and ending with large mitres, not very deep; the top of the flounce is also indented with smaller mitres. Indian cashmeres are most worn at present.

WAISTCOATS.

Of mantelets, the three shapes now used are the form Chambord, the scarf mantelet, and the plain mantelet. We have seen one lately in a new colour, called bleuette (between bleu de France and light blue), made entirely of bandes bouillonnées joined together by rows of small plaited ribbons No. 4. This was a very new style, too new perhaps. Another mantelet imitates behind a long shawl, with two pointes falling one over the other, encased with black velvet bands, upon a ground of taffetas marron.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Girl's capote of white taffetas, with a single knot of flat bows, plain ribbons, and the capote rather open; a little velvet jacket, à revers, in the waistcoat shape, rather tight to the waist, with a single row of buttons in front, forming a kind of point behind; the jupe of Scotch poplin, reaching to the knee, pantaloon of percale, with English embroidery; buttons in English leather, edged with Turkish satin.

WALKING DRESS.

Waistcoat of white baxin, embroidered in front, cut straight, and ornamented with English broderie, bent so as to imitate pockets; muslin sleeves furnished with a lace flounce, ending in a little mitred broderie; the top of the flounce furnished with a little valenciennc, about an inch wide. Waistcoat in baxin, with imitation revers, and the centre with embossed column, the inside of the revers in muslin, two rows of Malines lace, and pockets to match.

Capotes of white crape, with a willow feather, rather short; furnished inside with trimmings of white roses slightly tinted and green foliage.

Mantelet of black taffetas, ornamented with velvet arabesques running round; two rows of lace; robe a disposition, three flounces, wide sleeves, under-sleeves in muslin.

Walking-dress worn buttoned, with wide skirts, and coming more forward than the evening cost; a shawl waistcoat in cashmere, a single row of buttons; trowsers without straps, in woollen stuff, Scotch plaid pattern.

Bonnet of pearl-grey taffetas; the leaf ornamented with two rows of velvet; the crown covered in velvet, with a slight fringe of about a quarter of an inch; the crown flat. Mantelet of taffetas bleuette with two mitred flounces, furnished in front and at the top of the upper flounce with a row of ruche à la vieille and with four other ruches, with intervals of from one inch and a half to two inches, according to the figure of the wearer.

Boys' Russian Costume.—Hat with the leaf turned up; the feather fixed in the leaf and almost flat. Blouse in light brown (marron) cloth, fitting tight to the waist, furnished with buttons, wide sleeves reaching a little below the elbow, allowing sleeves of white baxin, a little tightened to the arm, to be seen. Trowsers to match, with long gaiters. This costume may be made for the summer also; in nankeen and other light stuffs suitable to the season.

Open-worked Straw Bonnet.—The crown a little rounded, furnished with tufts of white roses, the last of which are joined together behind, between the curtain and the crown.

Morning Cap, with embroidered and twisted bands, furnished on the top with little knots of rose ribbons.

Little House-cap, in taffetas rose, with velvet galon, ornamented with black lace, and with flat bows of rose ribbons underneath.

Coiffure in ribbons of green satin, flat upon the top of the head, with flat bows upon the side, and large and falling on one side. The dress of moire antique, ami noir, ornamented with a flat velvet berthe, and also with a flat black velvet basque, wide sleeves, with a falling garniture of lace, and furnished with a broad velvet ribbon, terminated by a knot.

GIRL'S DRESS.

The following is from Le Follet:—

The robes de chambre are exceedingly beautiful. First is one of white cashmere, with a border of large palms; the fronts have large palms reaching to the waist. It is closed with bows of chiné ribbon to match the colour of the palms. The body is drawn and high; the pagodes sleeves have two frills with bows of ribbon. A large pelerine falls over the body, very deep behind, pointed in front, and sloped over the arms; it is trimmed with frills to match the sleeves. The other robe, destined for the trousseau of a fashionable lady, is of Napoléon blue, gros d'Alsaces, slightly wadded and lined, with china rose-coloured surnent. The back is plain, without side-seams; the fronts have five large flat plaits from the shoulder to the waist; the skirt is floating and open, showing the under-skirt trimmed with a broad insertion, with a Valenciennes lace on each side. The under sleeves are closed at the wrists with a narrow insertion band, edged with Valenciennes. A small hood, similar to a pelerine, is trimmed with a scolloped ribbon. A blue silk cord fastens the whole round the waist.

The fanchonnettes are very becoming with the morning dress; they are both graceful and youthful. Embroidered muslin waistcoats with four frills of Valenciennes are much worn, with a light silk shirt, with twelve flounces trimmed with narrow velvets, galons, or a row of fringe, resembling ruches more than flounces. Silk dresses are woven with stripes of a darker shade or contrasted colours on the flounces. Brocaded dresses are much worn; dark rich colours with bright flowers are generally preferred. The skirts are made plain; the bodies high; full behind at the waist; open in front, with bands crossing the chest, and barquines cut in dents round the waist; the sleeves cut to match, and trimmed with a deep fringe to match the dress. Some of these dresses are made with a waistcoat and jacket of the same material, trimmed with galons or narrow velvets.

EVENING DRESS.

Some elegant dresses have lately been seen at a distinguished ball, among which was a robe of white moire antique, with a double skirt; above each hem was placed a broad open plait of pearl beads. The body and sleeves à la grecque were edged, a narrow plait to match. A pearl cord with four tassels completes this beautiful toilette. The coiffure was a résille of pearls, from which escape two white feathers, passing over the bandeaux and falling behind the ears. A single row of pearls round the neck; a cameo bracelet on one arm, and a miniature set with brilliants on the other. The sleeves were raised with small pearl broaches, and a much larger one was fixed on the front of the body.

Another robe was of azvie-coloured lampas with white wreaths. Two point d'Alencon flounces, with basque and berthe to match. An échelle of diamonds and rubies upon the body; ornaments on the sleeves to match. Bouquet of tea roses in the hand; a wreath of the same flowers in the hair. Robe of lilac tulle; five skirts worked with silver, the bottom of each edged with a "Tom Thumb" fringe of silver. Pompadour body, with five bouillonnés on the front piece, with passementerie of silver between each; sleeves to match. The coiffure is a wreath of velvet oak leaves and silver tassels.

BONNET AND CAP.

Among the toilettes embroidered in gold or silver we have seen one of new design; it was a robe of white crape, trimmed with five flounces, edged with a waved silk and gold fringe; above each of these fringes were five rows of dull and brilliant braid plaited. A berthe composed of five frills matching the flounces; short sleeves to correspond.

BOY'S RUSSIAN DRESS.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 4.—Sixth Sunday in Lent. Palm Sunday.
MONDAY, 5.—Goldsmith died, 1774.
TUESDAY, 6.—O d Lady Day.
WEDNESDAY, 7.—Sun rises 5h. 23m., sets 6h. 42m.
THURSDAY, 8.—Maundav Thursday.
FRIDAY, 9.—Good Friday.
SATURDAY, 10.—Catholic Emancipation Bill passed, 1829.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 10, 1852.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m
1 40	2 8	2 25	2 45	3 6	3 30	3 60	4 10	4 30	4 55	5 15	5 35	6 0	6 25

ROYAL PRINCESS' THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr CHARLES KEAN—This Theatre will RE-OPEN on EASTER MONDAY, APRIL the 12th, with the Dramatic Romance of the CORSICAN BROTHERS. After which will be produced, for the first time, a Fairy Tale, in Two Acts, entitled WITTIKIND AND HIS BROTHERS; or, the Seven Swan Princes and the Fair Maiden.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Mr. MITCHELL begs respectfully to announce that on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 12, the following eminent artistes:—MM. Regnier, Lafont, and Mdlle. Lia. Mdlle. Desmain and Margaret, will, a-par together in the popular new Comedy of MADEMOISELLE DE LA SEIGLIERE. Written by M. Jules Sandeau and Emile Augier. On We nesday Evening April 14 h, will be produced for the first time, in th's country, Scribe's celebrated Comedy of LE FAUTEUIL DE SERVICE. On Tuesday next the Box-office will be open from Ten Till Four o'clock, and Mons. Mitchell and Mons. Mayer will commence on the 1st of May.—Boxes and Stalls may be secured at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33 Old Bond-street.

THEATRE ROYAL, ADELPHI.—During PASSION WEEK.—C. E. ADAMS's CHERRY, 430 years in London—to-day MONDAY, APRIL 5, and during the Week, Good Friday excepted. Mr. ADAMS will, by the honour to de ver his ANNUAL LECTURE on ARTFUL DODGES, every Evening at Eight o'clock, precisely 2s 6d. Private Boxes, Half a Guinea and One Guinea at the Box-office, or at the principal Librarie s.

ASLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—On MONDAY Evening, Wednesday, and Thursday will be produced the most extraordinary feats of Equestrianism, introducing the stupendous company of Olympian competitors. In addition to the SCENES in the CIRQUE the celebrated MASQUIN ARABS will execute their pleasing and wonderful performances, together with Senor HENNINO, the celebrated Flight rope Dancer; commencing precisely at 7. On Easter Monday the Theatre will re-open, with a new Grand Military Spectacle, entitled "Bonaparte in Egypt; or, the Battle of Aboukir."—Box-office open from 11 till 4 daily

HENRY SMITH at the SURREY THEATRE.—Mr. HENRY SMITH will give his celebrated VOCAL ENTERTAINMENT at the SURREY THEATRE on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday next, April 5th, 6th, and 10th.—Boxes, 3s; pit, 1s; gallery, 6d. Doors open at half-past seven, commence at Eight.—At the Eyre Arms St. John's Wood, on Monday, April 12th; Tuesday the 13th; and April 15 h.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.—LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS. These celebrated and well-established Entertainments are nightly attended by crowded and fashionable audiences. Mr. Love will appear at Sadler's Wells Theatre on TUESDAY, APRIL 6, Wednesday, April 7, Thursday, April 8, and Saturday, April 10. He will present his Entertainment entitled LOVE'S LENTEN LUCUBRATIONS;—with Vocal Experiments, &c. To be followed by the 6th Edition of "Paris Two O'Clock; or, the Watchman," who will be heard proclaiming the hour of four-light at a distance of at least a quarter of a mile from the theatre, with a few extraneous. Places to be had at Mary Turpin, Ann Trounce—doors open at seven; begin at Half-past seven. Dress circle, 3s; Boxes 2s; Pit, 1s. Gallery, 6d. Private Boxes, 21s and 31s 6d.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—THE SECOND CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY in EASTER WEEK.—Conductors, M. Berlioz and Dr Wylde. In compliance with a numerous requisites, the Directors beg to announce that the Dramatic SYMPHONY of ROMEO and JULIET, by Hector Berlioz, will be repeated as soon as the necessary arrangements will admit.
WILLERT BEALE, Secretary

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—Conductor, Mr. COSTA. Next WEDNESDAY, 7th of APRIL, Handel's MESSIAH. Vocalists—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr Bodda Reeves, and Herr Formes. The Chorus, the most numerous ever assembled in Exeter Hall, will consist of upwards of 600 vocalists, nearly 700 Performers. Tickets 3s; Reserved seats 5s, Central Area, numbered seats 10s 6d each, at the Society's Office, 6, in Exeter Hall.

MRS. GIBBS (formerly Miss Graddon) will by request give one more MUSICAL LECTURE on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 5, at the WITTINGTON CLUB, which, owing to other engagements, will positively be the last This night, at Seven o'clock, 3s. To commence at 8 o'clock. Communications to 19, Lisson-grove, Regent's park

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S ASCENT of MONT BLANC, Lies rested by Mr WILLIS'S, EVERY EVENING at Eight o'clock.—Stalls, numb red and reserved (which can be taken from a plan at the Hall every day from Eleven to Four), 3 and 2s; gen ral admission, 1s. Children under 10 years, half-price.
A MORNING PERFORMANCE every TUESDAY and SATURDAY, at Three o'clock.
EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly

EXETER-HALL.—Mr. ALLCROFT'S GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL, TUESDAY EVENING next, APRIL 6, when will appear.—Vocalists—Mesdames L. Pyne, Sims Reeves, Favanti, Duby Poole, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Alaye, Sims Reeves, Phillips, Lawler, and Weiss. Principal Violoncello, Mr. Hill. Pianoforte, Mr. Charles Halle. Conductor, Mr. Benedict. Instrumentalists—Miss Goddard, Messrs. Nicholson, Case, Do Munck, Hill, Bottesini, Herr Sommer, Messrs. Blagrove and Hausmann. Full Orchestra and Chorus. Conductor, Mr. Benedict. Tickets, 1s, 2s, 3s, 5s; Stalls, 7s, at 15, New Bond street, and at Musical Warehouses.

MR. J. L. TOOLE'S SECOND DRAWINGROOM ENTERTAINMENT.—Mr. T. OLE, assisted by the FIFTY SIXTH CORPS DRAMATIQUE, will have the honour of presenting at the WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St James's, (by kind permission of the worth-read), on TUESDAY Evening next, APRIL 7, Pope's and Humorous Sketches, in his MONOPOLYLOGUE, "Trying a Magistrate;" the ELECTION, Something at Last, and other characters in Sketches from the Life. Commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Stalls, Seven Tickets 1s; Reserved Seats 2s. To be had at the Library, 21, Manor-place, Walworth-road, or KEITH PROWSE and Co, 48, Cheapside.

CALDWELL'S ASSEMBLY-ROOMS, DEAN-STREET, SOHO, capable of accommodating 2000 persons.—SOIREES DANSANTES every Night. Admission, 6d per quarter, 2s 6d.—Mr Caldwell, undertakes to teach any lady or Gentleman unacquainted with the routine of the Ball-room to correct with grace and freedom and take part in this Fashionable Amusement, in six private lessons, for £1 1s. Close Nights are formed twice a week. The next LONG QUADRILLE NIGHT will take place on EASTER MONDAY, April 12. Admission, 1s.

PANORAMA of the ANCIENT CITY of SALZBURG, in UPPER AUSTRIA, will be OPENED at HUDSON'S GREAT ROTUNDA, Leicester-square, on SATURDAY the 10th inst., with the grand view exhibited at the recent Levée, and the Panorama of the Rhine from Mayence to Cologne. Open from Ten till Four. Admission, 1s; Stalls, 2s; Children under 10 years of age, half-price. A new exhibition on the 26th of April.

HINDOSTAN.—This GRAND MOVING DIORAMA is now OPEN DAILY, at 12 and 8 o'clock, at the ALFRED GALLERY, Bond-street next Regent-street. Admission, 1s, 2s, and 3s 6d. Point of View, Fort William, Calcutta. Views of Benares, Futtehpore, Agra, Delhi, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Lucknow, Dinapore, Rajmahal, Moorshedabad, Plassey, Chandernagore, Hooghly, Barrackpore, Serampore, Kedgeree, Saugor Island, and the Sandheads. The Diorama is painted by Messrs. Grieve, Roberts, Stanfield, Cattermole, and Haghe, and Mr Bell. The Scenes arranged by Lieutenant Colonel Laird, from his own and other Original Sketches.—The Museum is open half an hour before each Exhibition.

PASSION WEEK.—BARNETT'S GREAT DIORAMA of JERUSALEM and the HOLY LAND, painted under the direction of Mr. W. Bennett from drawings made on the spot, exhibiting Mount Sion, Lake of Sodom, Mount Hor, Dead Sea, River Jordan, Bethlehem, Nazareth, Jericho, Mount Carmel, Valley of Ajalon, Grand Gothic cathedral, Pool of Siloam, Jews' Place of Wailing and the Holy Sepulchre. A grandeur of effect and impression is produced by the introduction of sacred vocal music, every Night attempted at any other Panorama, by an organ and powerful choir. Open DAILY at 12, 3, and 8 o'clock. Admission 1s, 2s, and 2s 6d.—ST GEORGE'S GALLERY, Hyde Park corner.

PATRON—H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—PREVENTION OF FORGERY.—A Lecture by J. H. Pepper, Esq., on Copper and Steel Plate Paper for the prevention of Piracy and Forgery by the Action of Prussic Acid, daily at Two o'clock; and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday Evenings at Nine. Lecture on Astronomy, illustrated by beautiful Diagrams, by Mr. Cheverton, every Evening, at Eight o'clock, except on Saturday Week, except Friday and Saturday. An Explanatory Description, by Mr Pepper, of the various Works of Manufacture, Science, &c. Lectures on Electricity, Chemistry, &c. Extensive Exhibition of the Micro-scope. Dissolving Views, &c. Admission, 1s; Schools and Children under ten years of age, half-price. A new edition of the Guide now out.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S PARK.—The HIPPOPOTAMUS presented by H. H. the Viceroy of Egypt, the BABIRUSSA-CAMEL and several rare animals are daily to be seen. Admission 1s; on Monday, 6d

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL-MALL.—The GALLERY for the EXHIBITION and SALE of the WORKS of BRITISH ARTISTS is OPEN DAILY from Ten Till Five. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.
GEORGE NICOL, Secretary.

NOTICE.—The Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS are hereby informed that the Volumes bound in the appropriate Covers, One Shilling and Sixpence each, may be had of all Booksellers and Newsvendors in the United Kingdom, and Ireland, and Scotland.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE CAPE.—Our especial thanks are tendered to Captain Hall, of the Sisyphus, for copies of several Cape journals.
TALITUMUS.—In the first form of address is preferable.
A CONSTANT READER, Liverpool.—The difference of time that the sun attains its meridian at Liverpool and Buenos Ayres is the same at all places of the year.
G. H. Chatto-house. We cannot undertake to ascertain.
W. H. G., Shrewsbury.—A work on Etiquette has been lately announced.
J. S., Bristol.—The Melodists of England has been published by the Messrs. Novello.
C. W., Bristol.—Raleigh's "On fines" may be had of Williams and Norgate. German booksellers—Hamburgh-street, Covent-garden.
A YEAR OLD SUBSCRIBER.—Apply to a stockbroker.
AN INVALID.—We do not give medical advice.
HARRIATT, Cashel.—The "Guide to photography," published by Knight, Foster-lane, Cheapside.
MICAH PEAT.—See the "Handbook of Courtship and Marriage," published at 86, Fleet-street.
R. K.—Between April 1 and December 31, 1851, appeared 23 Supplementary Supplements to our Journal.
AN IRISHMAN.—Since October 18 we have published three Exhibition Supplements—December 6, 13, and 20.
ELLEN Greenhorough.—See Forster's work on "Atmospheric Phenomena."
AN OLD READER.—We do not recommend the application.
ZEMULON, Newcastle-on-Tyne, should order the late edition of our Journal

NEW READING-CASE FOR THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."—We have issued a convenient and elegant Reading Case, for protecting the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS during perusal, and we recommend our Subscribers, who are desirous to have their Numbers bound at the expiration of each half-year, to provide themselves with this desideratum. The price is 2s., and it may be had of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

The Student's Wife. 3 vols.—Labour Stands on Golden Feet.—School for Fathers.—The Lily of St. Paul's. 3 vols. Record of the Great Exhibition.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1852.

NEVER has a Parliamentary majority proved itself more docile and forgiving to its opponents than the three-headed opposition, which, but a few weeks ago, breathed defiance from all its mouths against the Ministry of Lord Derby. It has shown itself satisfied with the vaguest of vague promises, and has manifested an inclination to go through with the business before it with a zeal and a dispatch beyond all praise. It would be very desirable to see half as much of either in Parliaments that are not moribund. The Ministry is in the full enjoyment of its honeymoon days—that period of rest between the storms of the past and those which are preparing for the future. If Mr. Disraeli had a decided majority in his favour, and if every member of it were obedient to the behest or the whip of Major Beresford, he could not carry matters more triumphantly than he is carrying them at present. The estimates excite no lenthened discussions. They are taken up as they were prepared by the late Ministry, and are passed as a matter of course, and almost without criticism or cavil. St. Alban's has been as quietly and coolly disfranchised by the House of Commons as Lord John Russell proposed it should be; a Militia Bill has been introduced without danger to Ministerial stability, is not likely to pass without affording frequent opportunities for the display of all the belligerent discontent which never fails to manifest itself among the friends of defenceleseness, whenever soldiers, sailors, or militia-men are mentioned. The bill introduced by the Home Secretary is a very creditable speech, which elicited the approbation of Lord Palmerston, proposes to raise 80,000 volunteers—50,000 men for the first year and 30,000 the second. The period of service to be five years; the ages of the men to range between 18 and 3 ; their stature to be five feet two inches—an inch in excess of the standard of the French army , and the cost to the country for the whole period to be £1,200,000. We judge from the expressions of the Minister, that the Government will not refuse to make the measure, in obedience to the wishes of the House, and that, in fact, it is not disposed to stake its existence upon it, or to resign in a huff, should friend or foe aim a fatal thrust against its principle or its details. In the meantime Mr. Disraeli is preparing his Budget, and every interest which was snubbed, neglected, or pooh-poohed by Sir Charles Wood, is exerting itself to secure his favourable consideration. The Budget will evidently be the touchstone of the Ministerial capacity to manage the country in safety through present and future difficulties; and until the Budget is produced, the interest of all other questions—even the militia, and the enfranchisement of new towns and boroughs—will be of comparatively minor importance. If Mr. Disraeli and Lord Derby will leave our bread alone, untax literature, education, and knowledge, make the Property and Income-tax an equitable one, and so adjust the public burdens, that no class shall suffer an undue and injurious pressure, they will have performed their functions and convert many of those who now distrust and oppose them into firm friends and supporters. In the meantime, however, it does not augur well of the Ministry, or of their fair play, that there should be such a discrepancy between Lord Derby's implied promise, on the 19th of March, of a dissolution in or before June, and the explanation which he made on Tuesday last, and in which he led to the belief that the session would not be closed much, if at all, before the usual period. This is tampering with the Opposition, and it remains to be seen whether the present truce between them will not, in consequence, be brought to a speedy and violent termination.

The mock Parliament of France has assembled, and Louis Napoleon, though still entitled to say with Louis XIV., but more emphatically than that Monarch, "L'état c'est moi," is no longer the Dictator. The semblance of representative government has commenced; the state of siege in which three-fourths of the country has been placed since the memorable 2d of December has been raised; the trial of the offenders and of suspected persons has been left to the ordinary tribunals, and France has relapsed into what Louis Napoleon wishes to be considered its normal state. The speech read by the President in the Salle des Marechaux, on the installation of the Legislative Body, the Senate and the Council of State, was a clever and remarkable document; the coolness of the President—his apparently firm, unshaken, and unshakeable faith in his own destiny, and in his right divine to govern the French people, are characteristic. If the French people like the master they have got, it is no business of the rest of the world—at least, as long as the mastership is confined to the internal affairs of the country. The President seems, in the meantime, to wish to restrain it within those limits, and to be afraid of assuming the tire of Emperor, for which it is notorious that he pants. He is not thus self-denying because he is afraid of any opposition from the French people, but because he remembers, that, according to the stipulations of the treaty of Vienna, no member of the Bonaparte family can hold the Kingly or Imperial office in France. Though a President such as he is may be considered de facto an Emperor, and might well be called so, it is not quite certain that Great Britain, Austria, and Prussia, the parties to the treaty of Vienna, would acquiesce in the title; and as their refusal might be inconvenient, the President has postponed the gratification of his wish. In this he has, doubtless, acted wisely; but it is evident from the tone of menace which he employs in speaking of the parties opposed to him, that he will sooner or later make a pretext for assuming the much-coveted title of Emperor, or taking another which he may consider second best—that of Consul for life. He evidently expects that he is not to stop short in his career. "Providence," he says, "has visibly blessed his efforts, and will not leave the work unfinished." Such a commentary upon the means by which he has made himself successful, would, in some countries, be considered blasphemous; but it seems to have excited but little remark and less disapprobation among our neighbours. It is worthy of note, too, that, although the President committed one of the most stupendous perjuries upon record, he has exacted an oath of fidelity, not simply to the Constitution, but to himself, from all the functionaries he has appointed, and from all the legislators he has allowed to be elected. It would be curious to ascertain how many of these persons, in taking that oath, remembered the fact that the President had broken his. The future alone will clear up that mystery—not perhaps by words, but by events. In the meantime, the President has it all his own way, and France lies at his feet, his submissive if not his satisfied slave.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort have been dispensing a regal hospitality during the past week at Buckingham Palace. On Saturday and on Tuesday a distinguished circle of the aristocracy had the honour of dining at the Royal table. On the former day the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cambridge were among the guests. On Tuesday the Duchess of Kent and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar dined with her Majesty.

On Monday the Queen and the Prince Consort honoured the Philharmonic Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, with their presence.

On Tuesday the Queen held a Court at Buckingham Palace, at which the Royal Highness the Count d'Aquila, brother of his Majesty the King of the Two Sicilies, and the Countess d'Aquila, accompanied by his Excellency the Prince of Carini, Sicilian Minister, had an audience of her Majesty. In the evening the Queen went to the Haymarket Theatre. The Prince Consort honoured the Opera with Arts with His presence, and afterwards joined her Majesty at the theatre

On Wednesday, her Majesty, accompanied by the Princess Helena, the Princess Louisa, and Prince Arthur, and attended by the Marchioness of Ely and Major-General Buckley, visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester House, Piccadilly.

THE QUEEN'S DRAWINGROOM.

The Queen held a Drawingroom (the first this season) on Thursday afternoon, in the Throne-room at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty visited Prince Albert, attended by the Royal suite, arrived from Buckingham Palace about two o'clock.

Before the Draw ngroom, her Majesty, according to annual custom, received a deputation from Christ's Hospital in the Throne-room.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, his Royal Highness the Count d'Aquila, his Serene Highness Prince Nicholas of Nassau, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, attended the Drawingroom.

The Queen wore a train of white poplin, embroidered with small wreaths of the rose, thistle, and shamrock, in silver, and was dress with frime to correspond, and gold blond. The petticoat was of white satin, covered with tulle and trimmed with gold blond. Her Majesty's head-dress was composed of feathers, and a wreath of red roses ornamented with diamonds.

Her Majesty on his Royal Highness Prince Albert were attended in the Throne-room by the Mistress of the Robes, the Marchioness of Ely (in waiting), the Countess of Mount Edgcumbe, the Viscountess Canning, and the Countess of Desart. Ladies of the Bedchamber; Hon. Eleanor Stanley (in waiting), Hon. Beatrice Byng (in waiting), and a brilliant court.

The diplomatic circle was first introduced, and several presentations took place.

The general circle was next ushered into the Royal presence, and a number of presentations took place.

The Earl of Verulam has relieved the Earl of Morton in his duties as Lord in Waiting to the Queen. Colonel the Hon. A. Nelson Hood has relieved the Hon J. Denman, R.N., in his duties as Groom in Waiting to her Majesty

Her Majesty will hold a Privy Council on Monday next, the 5th inst., at Buckingham Palace.

We understand that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the youthful members of the Royal family, purpose leaving Buckingham Palace early in the ensuing week, for Osborne, where the Court will remain about three weeks.

The Queen of Derby had a brilliant "reception" on Wednesday evening at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing-street

---

Prince de Joinville arrived at Cruise's Hotel, Limerick, on Wednesday week, and left next morning for Galway, on a fishing excursion.

The Earl of Hopetoun has accepted the mastership of the Pytcheley Hunt for the next season, in the room of the Hon. Captain Frederick Villiers, who has given up the management.

COLLODION SUN PICTURES.—The beautiful and marvellous science of photography is gradually progressing towards a higher decree of perfection amongst scientific amateurs. We have recently been favoured with an inspection of some exquisite specimens of the art as practised on glass by Dr Diamond, of Wandsworth. When the absurd not on of an existing monopoly is removed, and the full development of positive and negative is operable, we may expect very soon to be convinced this science is at present in its infancy. Many poor discoverers are only waiting for a settlement of the question of the patented rights, to admit of their being applied to the future development of photographic art.

ENGINEERS' STRIKE.—During the present week, a full meeting of the executive committee of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers has been held at their house of call in the vicinity of Great Windmill-street, Haymarket. The result was a determination to endeavour to procure a withdrawal of the "declaration" which the Employers' Associat on must upon being signed by their men, in order that the strike hands may return to their work, it being understood that the general temper of the operat ves throughout the country is favourable to such an effort towards producing a reconciliation with their employers. The following is a return of the number of persons who have signed the declaration of the Central Association of Employers of Operative Engineers up to, and inclusive of 22nd March, 1852:—Vincennes, 1068; Turners, 1211; smiths and strikers, 1235; smoothers, 892; dressers, 498; millwrights, 234; pattern-makers, 262; carpenters, 326; machine-men, planers, slotters, &c., 852; boiler-makers, 715; labourers, 1480; others, 1093: total, 10,217. Return up to the 15th March, 9034; increase, 1183.

GREENHEAD AND DAVIS' STRAITS FISHERIES.—The following table, recently printed by Messrs. T. and C. Lawrence, oil-merchants, Peterhead, shows the total results of the fishing for the last three seasons:—

Year	No of ships	Whales.	Seals.	Tuns.	Oil. Tons.	Whalebone. Cwt.
1850	32	28	402 873	2544	1,116	19
1851	32	88	74 038	1872	5. 9
1852	36	98	83 038	2303	7 17

The seal-fishing is being more fully developed year by year. There is a large increase in the number of vessels sent from Peterhead this year: 10 vessels sailed from that port last year, on the present occasion the number is 22. The other ports sailed thus for the season of 1852: Hull, 14; Dundee, 4; Aberdeen, 2; Kirkaldy, 2; Berwick, 1; Fraserburgh, 1; Banff, 1: total, 47—of which number 12 go to Davis' Straits. The total tonnage is 13,496; the largest vessel being the Royal Arch, of Peterhead, 400 tons; and the smallest, the Fehr, of Banff, 90 tons. Most of the vessels have sailed.

THE ABERDEEN CLIPPER "WALTER HOOD."—On Saturday last a large party was invited by Captain Symon, the well-known commander of successful British merchant ships, to inspect the fine new clipper ship Walter Hood (now loading in the West India Docks), built at Aberdeen, to compete with the Yankee built merchant ships, for Prowse Thompson, of Aberdeen. She is 104 feet over all, 33 feet in breadth, and 21 feet in depth. Her registered tonnage is 918, and it is calculated she will carry 1400 tons or cargo. In hull and rigging she is a handsome ship. She is well formed, has most capacious decks, and ample berthing for both officers and crew. Although built for speed, she is also constructed to stow a good cargo; and, like the Stormoway the famous Aberdeen clipper that so signally beat that much-vaunted American ship Invincible. Here is another proof that Aberdeen will acquire additional credit for the old country. About 100 gentlemen on the occasion partook of a handsome déjeuner, given by Capt. Symon. The noble vessel will start in a few days with passengers and goods for Bombay, and will return from the East with silk and teas.

ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.—The 8 A.M. express train from Dover ran off the rails on Thursday morning, while passing the Shrubbery Bridge, but luckily the engine-driver was enabled to put up before any injury was done to the passengers, who, after a little delay, were forwarded to their respective destinations.

BI-SPATIAL FOR WOMEN.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this institution was held in the new premises of the charity, Soho-square: the Earl of Waldegrave presiding. It appears from the report of the committee that the expenses incident to the purchase and fitting up of the new freehold premises have amounted to nearly £5000; of this sum only one moiety had been contributed, and a strong appeal was made to the ladies and gentlemen present to exert themselves to raise the remaining moiety during the present season. Contributions to the amount of £2.45 were received at the close of the meeting.

ALARMING ACCIDENT.—As Lord Burghley's carriage, drawn by a pair of spirited horses, was coming up Hamilton-place, Piccadilly, on Monday afternoon, about half-past four o'clock, and was turning into Hamilton-terrace, the off-horse became unmanageable, and dashed against a stone window, tearing away the iron railing. In doing this, the animal reared and plunged violently, and in so doing, the coachman was thrown from his box upon the pole of the carriage, to which he clung, not losing his hold of the reins. The horses started off at a fearful pace, the coachman all the while holding on by the pole and making the strongest efforts to stop them, but without effect. The animals were at length arrested by a cabman, who rushed from a by-street and hung to the horses' heads at great personal risk to himself. The horses were but little injured, though the carriage sustained considerable damage.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—A lecture, forming one of the series on the results of the Great Exhibition, was delivered on Wednesday night, under the presidency of His Royal Highness Prince Albert, the president of the society. Among those present were Earl Granville the Earl of Harrowby, Sir James Emerson Tennent, Mr. M. Gibson, M.P.; Mr. Cobden, M.P.; Mr. Bright, M.P.; Mr. Thomas Baring, M.P., &c. His Royal Highness having introduced Mr Barry as the lecturer on the occasion, it at first seemed as if the interesting paper on the origin and progress of the cotton manufacture in this country, and the supply of the raw material, and showing that this country far exceeded any other in regard to the machinery for cotton manufacture, &c. A vote of thanks to Mr Bazley having been moved and seconded by Earl Granville and Sir John Bowring, his Royal Highness Prince Albert expressed the great pleasure with which he had listened to the reading of the paper, and bore strongest appreciation of the value of Mr. Bazley's services to the Great Exhibition. The resolution having been unanimously passed, and hearty acknowledged by Mr Bazley, Mr Milner Gibson, M.P., moved a vote of thanks to his Royal Highness for his kindness and condescension in presiding over their meeting that evening. Mr. Hume M.P., seconded the resolution, which was carried by acclamation. His Royal Highness Prince Albert thanked the ladies and gentlemen present for the compliment, and assured them that it gave him great pleasure in again meeting the members of the society of Arts on their return after the successful carrying out of the Great Exhibition, which had originated with them. He should always look back to that Exhibition with pride and pleasure, feeling, as he did, that a great portion of its success a owing to the exertions of the members of the society. His Royal Highness then retired, amid loud cheers, and the meeting broke up.

SCOTTISH HOSPITAL.—On Wednesday the quarterly general court of governors of this charity was held at the house of the Scottish corporation, Crane-court, Fleet-street, the Duke of Montrose in the chair. The report acknowledged the receipt of the title-deeds of two houses, which had been purchased from the funds of the institution. The financial statement showed that the annual receipts—including a former balance of £286 18s. 11d; donations, £448 16s.; proceeds of the Guildhall ball, £52 10s.; and subscriptions, £313 9s.—had been £1100 13s. 8d. The expenditure amounted to £886 10s. 3d., leaving a balance in the hands of the treasurer of £214 2s. 6d.

LAND-TAX.—The annual meeting of the Land-tax Commissioners for the county of Middlesex to fix the quotas for the divisions was held on Wednesday, at the Sessions-house, Clerkenwell; Mr. Hargrave Mann in the chair. The following recommended resolution was agreed to:—"That the Commissioners of Land-tax for the county of Middlesex, having taken into consideration the several acts of Parliament regarding the assessment of the land-tax, and having also considered the several decisions of the courts of law on the subject of such assessments, and the opinions of the Board of Inland Revenue regarding the same, are of opinion that they do not possess the power by law to vary the quotas which have been hitherto assessed within the several districts of the county, and that the quota to be assessed within the several divisions of the county be the same sum as were assessed and respectively for the last year."

THE CO-OPERATIVE LEAGUE.—On Tuesday the first evening meeting of this association was held at the Craven Hotel; Mr Cowinham in the chair. In referring to the object of the League, it was stated that we tend to and shade the partizan or even medium towards the principles of co-operative association in direct, frequent, and permanent intercommunication, so that they might acquire a perfect knowledge and clear comprehension of each others views and ordinations, and thus be enabled to form an active centre for the diffusion and propagation of co-operative principles. The attainment of general happiness was the basis of all social theories. To found a new science, that of co-operating, was their great object. They were to collect books, papers, and facts, and all general information which might be useful for that purpose. All persons, without distinction of nation and creed, political or religious, might be admitted members. If they should succeed in establishing a new science, it would be the crowning science—one which would truly produce as its fruits "peace on earth and good-will towards men." An animated discussion was kept up during the evening.

THE CORPORATION REFORM BILL.—At a meeting of the liverymen belonging to the Cooks' Company, he d on Monday, at Guildhall, it was resolved that a petition be presented to Parliament against the proposed Corporation Reform Bill

GOVERNESSES' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—At a special general court, held on Saturday last, at the offices of the institution, No. 23, Sackville-street, in pursuance of the board of management, for the removal of one of the inmates of the asylum for general insubordination, was confirmed; but it being the practice of the institution to regard the wants rather than the merits of those whom it assists, it was agreed to grant her an annuity of £20, payable quarterly.

CHARING-CROSS BRIDGE.—On Saturday last, at a special meeting of the commissioners, the following resolution was agreed to: viz—"That this highly desirable, for the due development of the trade of the bridge, that a good approach be made forthwith on the Surrey side, from the York-road."

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—On Saturday last, a meeting of gentlemen connected with Gresham Trust was held at the Mercers' Hall, for the consideration of business connected with the Royal Exchange, &c. The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presided. In consequence of applications to the trustees of the Gresham property, a proposition was made and agreed to, to improve the shops range of road in the east and south fronts of the Royal Exchange. At the above meeting tenders for bringing out the fronts in accordance with a specimen front now erected, in Cornhill, were received, the offer of Mr. Scarborough, the builder, was accepted. He offered to perform the works for £1195. It is said that these alterations will give considerable additional accommodation to the numerous tenants who occupy the basement arrangements of the various parts of the building. It was decided that the bells and the clock-tower should be re-hung on a new framework.

THE ADDITION OF GAS TO DOMESTIC PURPOSES.—On Tuesday evening, upwards of 100 gentlemen, principally connected with the gas-fitting trade, dined together at the Freemasons' Tavern, upon the invitation of Mr. D-ries, the inventor of the dry gas meter, and various gas stoves, &c. The host of the evening, and, in the course of the entertainment, delivered an explanation was given of Dr. Bachhoffner and Mr Defries' new-invented gas stove, or a superseding the use of coals in private dwellings, the stove being shown in operation in the room adjoined

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The very general desire on the part of the public to preserve the Crystal Palace has found expression in two public resolutions held this week—the one on Monday, at the house of Mr. Ol veira, at which were present Lieut.-Gen. Delamotte, Col. Sykes, Col. Austruther, Sir J. Paxton, the Hon. T. D'Eyncourt, M.P., Mr. Muskinson, M.P., Mr. Williams, M.P., Mr Caulfield, M.P., Dr Daniel, and Mr Oliveira himself; and the other, on Tuesday, in one of the committee-rooms of the northern transept of the Building, at which were present Sir Joseph Paxton, who was called to the chair, Mr Cubitt, Sir Henry Webb, Sir G. S rgeria, &c. It will be seen, however, by reference to a report of the House of Lords on Tuesday, that Government have decided that the Crystal Palace shall be taken down

FATAL ACCIDENT AT THE LONDON-BRIDGE RAILWAY TERMINUS.—On Monday morning, shortly after nine o'clock, a serious accident occurred at the above railway terminus, to Mr John Giles Pilcher, merchant and wharfinger, of Morgan's-lane, Tooley-street, St. Olave's, Southwark. While this gentleman was in the act of crossing the carriage-way in front of the terminus, he was knocked face downw rds on the ground by a Paddington omnibus, the off fore-wheel pass ng along his back. He was immed ate y carried to the surgery of St. Thomas's Hospital, when it was discovered that five of his ribs were broken, the right shoulder d slocated, and the face, body, &c. much contu d After his wounds had been dressed, he was conveyed in A dr man Humphrey's carriage to his residence at Stockwell. On Tuesday night, at eight o'clock, he expired. When the accident occurred he had £60,000 of property on his person.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The births during the week ending on last Saturday were—Boys, 814; girls, 780; making in all 1607 registered in London. The deaths during the same period were—Males, 618; females, 604: total, 1219. The official report states, that mortality was been great in the London districts during the whole month of March. Excluding from the returns deaths from poison, injury, and violence, the numbers in the last three weeks of March stand thu. 1160, 1183, and 1161. The effect of the c ldness of the season is still very apparent in the mortality produced by diseases o. the respiratory organs This embraces bronchitis pneumonia, asthma, &c., for each of the last three weeks of maladies numbers this week 242 while the average is only 193. In the week preceding the number was 269. While pneumonia and asthma have decreased from 83 and 22, bronchitis continues quite as fatal, the numbers this week being 126 and 128. Consumption (in the tubercular class) is also fatal at present: 151 lives have been destroyed by the disease in the previous week, and 160 in the last. There were 3 from hydrophobia and 5 from lazy-jaw; 4 from fever, 17 children and 6 persons of fifteen years and upwards died of small-pox: in three cases, at the ages of 14, 19, and 29 years, vaccination is reported to have been previously performed. 36 children died of hooping-cough, and 20 of croup. 31 deaths occurred from scarlatina, and 47 from typhus, remittent fever &c

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on Monday; the mean of the week was 29 814 in. The mean daily temperature was above the average on the following days of the week, viz., on the first day of the week, and below it on the last three days. It was highest on Monday and Tuesday, when it was about 84 degrees, or about 11 degrees above the average. It fell from the Saturday's temperature of 39·7 degrees to 29·7 degrees on Saturday. On the last day of the week the highest temperature was only 44 deg., the lowest 27·3 deg., whilst the mean was 5·6 deg. below the average of corresponding days. The mean temperature of the week was 43 deg., which was 2·6 deg. below the average. In the earlier part of the week the wind was from the south-east, on Thursday and Friday from the north-east, and on Saturday from the south. No rain has been recorded in the Greenwich tables since the 1st of March.

The directors of the South-Western Railway, in order to encourage the erection of cheap suburban dwellings, have, it is under-tood, resolved to contract with persons building such houses in the vicinity of the line for the issue of residential tickets for any given number of years, the same to be transferable with the key of the house to the occupier, for the conveyance of himself and family.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

LONDON UNION ON CHURCH MATTERS.—EDUCATION.

The sub-committee on education of the London Union on Church Matters have presented their second report, in which they refer to their former report on the same subject (education), dated August 16th, 1849, the object of which document was

To call attention to the danger, both to the Church and State of England, from the centralization of the education of the country in a Ministerial department of public instruction, and for that purpose to exhibit a summary of the history of public education for the poor since the constitution of the Committee of Council for Education, April 10, 1839.

In the present report they reiterate the prominent features of the former document, and repeat their objections to the system of national education, as carried out under the auspices of the "Committee of Council on Education" Reviewing, first, the operation of the "management clauses," they insist that they are justified in making the following propositions:

1. That the Committee of Council claim to themselves the power of framing a constitution for all Church schools, and of inflicting a penalty (by the denial of building grants out of the common fund) for the non-acceptance of such a constitution.

2. That the assumption of such a power by any administrative body, without the concurrence of both Houses of Parliament, is inconsistent with the spirit of the constitution.

3. That the power claimed by the Committee of Council to prescribe a constitution for Church schools cannot be admitted consistently with the recognition of the divine office and duty of the Church.

4. That the constitutions actually prescribed by the Committee of Council offer no sufficient security against the violation of vital points of the principles and practice of the Church.

5. That the committee, therefore, cannot concur with those who apprehend no danger from the compulsory imposition of the management clauses by the Committee of Council. On the contrary, they feel it their bounden duty to reiterate the demand embodied in the resolution of the National Society (June 5, 1849), on the part of the clergy and laity, for "full freedom to constitute schools upon such principles and models as are both sanctioned and recommended by the order and practice of the Church of England;" and they cannot consider themselves justified in relaxing their endeavours on that behalf till the claim had been conceded.

Secondly, under the head of "Inspection," they contend—

That the reports of the inspector, considered as criteria of education, are necessarily defective. That they tend to propagate misapprehension and misrepresentation, to mislead teachers, scholars, and the public; to deprive the highest functions of education, and elevate the e which are subordina e That subordinate merit is likely to be rewarded, and intellectual pride fostered. That, indeed, the State system of inspection may readily become an engine, subservient for sacrificing wisdom to knowledge, for supplanting education by instruction

They go on to say—

That they distinctly disclaim any intention of questioning the necessity of an inspection which shall not interfere with the rights and duties of the Church. On the contrary, their full conviction is that such an inspection is required, not only for the satisfaction of the State, but the efficiency of the school That the objections urged apply to the existing system of inspection, the authority on which is based, and the manner in which it is conducted.

They declare that—

To remedy the evils complained of, and to set the system of education in this respect upon a proper basis, means should, if possible, be devised which should give the State that security which it has a right to claim in return for money given to and accepted by the Church for education, and at the same time to reserve to the Church herself the exercise of her own indienable functions That, therefore, they ought to look to the restoration of the Church's Boards as a necessary means for the solution of the educational question, as well as of the ot ser questions which at the present time perplex the relations of Church and State

Under the third head of "School Books," the committee claim to be relieved from the necessity of being bound to use in their schools only those books which the inspector recommends. They say that they are—

Strongly impressed with a conviction of the necessity that steps should be taken to secure to the schools of the Church the free use of the best books, especially on religious subjects, irrespectively of the opinions of any Government functionary, and without prejudice to the attainment of public rewards, and to protect herein the just exercise of a discretionary power by the minister of the parish and the bishop of the diocese, to whom the spiritual charge of schools in their respective spheres belongs.

CAMBRIDGE.

THE BURNEY PRIZE.—The late Mr. Richard Burney, M.A., of Christ's College, Cambridge, having signified his intention of founding an annual prize, not exceeding £105, for the best Essay "on some critical or metaphysical subject, on the Existence, Nature, and Attributes of God, or on the Truth and Evidences of the Christian Religion," and his intention having been carried into effect by his testator and executrix, Miss Jane Caroline Burney, the Vice-Chancellor has given notice that the subject for the present year is—"To compare, the doctrine of the Love of God and of our Neighbour, as described in the Parable of the Good Samaritan, with the principles of the candidates for the prize are to be Bachelors of Arts in their first year of standing; and the essays are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor on or before the 12th of November, 1852, with the names of the respective writers sealed up. The author of the essay best approved is to print it at his own expense, and to deliver, or cause to be delivered, a copy of it to the University library, to the Public Library to Emmanuel College, to the Advocates' Library in Oxford, Dublin, and Edinburgh, and to each of the adjudicators of the prize, who are the Vice-Chancellor, the Master of Christ's College, and the Norrisian Professor of Divinity

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.—The under-mentioned gentlemen were on Monday elected Fellows of St. John's College:—Joseph Wolstenholme, B.A.; Robert Baldwin Hayward, B.A.; J. Bickersteth Mayor, B.A.; W. C. Evans, B.A.

LENT ORDINATIONS.—The following summary shows that 197 persons have been admitted to the offices of deacon and priest

Ordaining Prelate.	Deacons.	Priests.
Bishop of Chester ..	20 ..	23
" Ely	6 ..	4
" Exeter	4 ..	4
" Lincoln	8 ..	9
" Oxford	13 ..	10
" Peterborough	6 ..	9
" Ripon	5 ..	9
" St. Asaph ..	1 ..	1
" Worcester ..	31 ..	20
" Down, &c. ..	14 ..	4
" Killaloe, &c. ..	6 ..	9
Total	115	95

Of these there were, of—

	Deacons.	Priests.
Cambridge University	37 ..	31
Oxford	34 ..	23
Durham	2 ..	1
London	0 ..	3
Dublin	20 ..	22
Berkenhead	2 ..	0
Lampeter	1 ..	0
St. Begh's	3 ..	8
Literate persons ..	2 ..	8
—	—
Total	101 ..	96

The Bishop of Landaff held an ordination, but no list has been given of the candidates.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following preferments and appointments have recently taken place:—Canonry: The Rev. John Jackson, Rector of Stanhope, Durham.—Rectories: The Rev. William Hay Mackworth, Cambridgeshire; the Rev. F. G. Bartlett, to Kingstone, near Canterbury; the Rev E. H Barkersteth, to Barton Mersell, Dorset; the Rev. A. P. Purchas, to Bucklesham, Suffolk; the Rev. T. H Gribble, to Papworth St. Everards Cambridgeshire. Vicarages: The Rev. H. L. Davies, to Kenarth, Carmarthenshire; the Rev. C. B. Rodwell, to Toller Fratrum, with Wynford Eagle annexed

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently received testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev Thomas S Coles, from his friends, upon his vacating the curacy of Christ Church, Dover, and a second from the children of the schools; the Rev William J Hall, from his former parishioners of St. Benet and St. Peter, Paul's Wharf, London, of whom he had charge for more than twenty five years as their rector; the Rev. John Lovelace Bacheler, late curate of Woodbury, Devon, from 180 of the inhabitants, chiefly poor; the Rev J. J. Reynolds, late curate of St. John the Baptist, Bristol, on his departure from the parishioners; the Rev. Edward Griffith, late curate of Llanvetlas and Llanvair-Dyffryn-Aled, Montgomery, from the parishioners; the Rev. E. D. Hammond, on his leaving the curacy, from the parishioners of Chesham.

A memorial stained glass window has been erected in the parish church or Edgeware, as an affectionate token of regard for the exemplary character and truly apostolical discharge of his parochial duties by the late Rev. Benjamin Samuel Hughes, B.A., formerly Fellow of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The expense of the window is £75, and is defrayed by a voluntary subscription amongst the parishioners. The subject of it is "The Ascension of our Lord"

PROPOSED NEW BISHOPRICK OF CYFARTHFA.—At the quarterly meeting of the society for the Increase of Church Accommodation in the Diocese of Llandaff, held at Cardiff last week, the president (the Bishop of Llandaff) mentioned that some unknown friend of the Church had presented him with £1000 to be expended in building a church in some part of the diocese where it was most required, provided that no part of the sum to spent in the purchase of a site His Lordship had suggested Cyfarthfa (Merthyr), where a population of about 9000 is utterly unprovided with church accommodation; and to this recommendation the unknown benefactor had acceded. The contract price of the building, it was stated, would be about £1,000, and the whole not under £2000 Cyfarthfa is an ecclesiastical district under Sir Robert Peel's Act, with a present stipend of £190, which, on the completion of the church, will be increased to £180.

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

The approaching elections continue to be regarded as an anxious subject of consideration by both constituencies and candidates. Addresses are issued; meetings are held in boroughs, cities, and counties, at which explanations are demanded or volunteered; and every means are taken to sift opinions on all the prominent questions of the day. especially that of Free Trade, so as to secure something like conscientious feeling between the representatives and the constituency in Parliament, where it is thought the question of the unrestricted supply of food to the people will be again raised.

ARMAGH BOROUGH.—Colonel Rawdon has commenced an active canvass of the electors The Ulster Gazette says:—"We understand that the Most Rev. Dr. Beresford has an interest in the gallant Colonel's success."

ATHLONE.—The Hon. George Hancock, brother of Lord Castlemaine, is likely, it is said, to contest the representation of Athlone with Mr. Keogh.

BANBRIDGE.—The present Conservative member, Mr Brownlow; Sir William Fraser, Conservative; and Viscount Ebrington, who comes forward on the Whig interest, in the room of his brother, the Hon. John Forbes ne, are the candidates in the field.

BERKSHIRE.—Mr. George Henry Vansittart, of Bisham Abbey, is the first to break ground for the county, the contest for which has already commenced in good earnest. Mr. George Vansittart is a Tory of the old school, a Protectionist a supporter of Lord Derby, and a decided opponent of the Manchester school of politicians. It is said that the object of the youthful candidate is to secure the rejection of Philip Pusey, Esq.

CARLISLE.—Sir J. Graham has met this constituency in public meeting, with a view to becoming a candidate at the next election. The right hon. Baronet's address was of the most liberal character, and appeared to satisfy his hearers completely. The only exception he seemed to make in the adoption of the most liberal views was the ballot, and on that he expressed himself open to conviction, if experience showed his present opinion respecting it was wrong.

CORNWALL.—It is stated by the Coventry Standard, that, at a meeting of Mr. Geach's supporters in that city on Wednesday last, a strong desire was manifested to unite that gentleman's cause with he canvass of the other member; but that Mr. J. Bice, while offering himself for re-election, declines to endorse the nomination of his colleague, or, indeed, of any one else.

DUDLEY.—Mr Benbow will offer himself again; and, being brought forward under the influence of Lord Ward, he will no doubt be re-elected.

EXETER.—Mr. Divett has issued an address, in which he expresses his determination to come forward again for re-election on Free-trade principles. It is understood that Sir Stafford Henry Northcote will oppose him.

FORFARSHIRE.—J. F. G Hal yburton, the present member for Forfarshire, having re olved to retire at the next election, the Right Hon. Fox Maule has agreed to stand for that county

GALWAY COUNTY.—Captain Bellew, son of Sir Michael Dillon Bellew, has issued an address to the electors of the county of Galway, a prominent feature of which is, that he will oppose any Government that does not bring forward as a Cabinet measure the disappropriation of the church temporalities to the primitive purposes—the erection of useful public establishments, and the relief and education of the poor. He must also have liberal grants of public money, to be applied to the purposes of education, and a thorough and ex Tensari Right Bill

HONITON.—A new candidate has made his appearance here in the person of Mr. Richard Somers Gard, of Exeter. He comes forward on Protectionist principles

ISLE OF WIGHT.—Col. F. V. Harcourt, late of the Coldstream Guards, has offered himself as a candidate for the representation of the county of the Isle of Wight at the ensuing election, in opposition to Mr. Dawes, the present Radical member.

KILDARE COUNTY.—The Marquis of Kildare having announced his intention of retiring from the representation of the county of Clare, at the dissolution of Parliament, Mr David O'Connor Hendy has addressed the constituency, on the principles of supporting the Maynooth grant, repealing the Ecclesiastical Titles Act, and a settlement of the landed and tenant question.

KING'S COUNTY. It is said that both Sir Andrew Armstrong and Colonel Westenra will return from the representation of the King's County, the latter on account of ill health, and the former on account of the resignation of the office

LANCASHIRE (SOUTH).—The following list of candidates for the representation of the county South-east and before a number of influential electors, at their meeting on Wednesday (last week).—Mr Robert Porter, Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, Mr J. D. Lewis Fogg, Q.C.; Mr Carlton, of Dungarry, county Wicklow; Sir Edward Cunard, chairman of the Great Northern and Western Railway Company; and Mr. Sheriff Swift, of London.

LIVERPOOL.—The requisition to Mr. Forbes Mackenzie and Mr Chas. Turner, to stand, upwards of 2000 signatures are attached, has since been presented to these gentlemen, and they addressed a meeting of their friends on Thursday.

MANCHESTER.—A report that Mr. William Entwistle would become a candidate for the city he denied. His present members, Mr. Bright and Mr. Gibson, will be returned without opposition

MERTHYR.—In consequence of Sir John Guest's continued indisposition, it is rumoured that Dr Layard will be a candidate for the representation of Merthyr at the approaching election. Dr. Layard is, we believe, related to Lady Charlotte Guest NEWCASTLE.—Mr. Watson, Q.C., in his address to the electors, denies being a supporter of Popery, or that he was backed by any Roman Catholic in the town, as was alleged in a placard signed "A Protestant." It is said that both the sitting members will again offer themselves.

NORWICH.—Mr. Wodehouse, a Reformer, has been selected in conjunction with Mr. Peel, as one of the Liberal candidates for this city OLDHAM.—The friends of Messrs. Fox, Duncuft, and Colbett, the candidates for the representation, are actively canvassing the borough, and the coming election will rely to be severely contested.

PLYMOUTH.—The electors of Plymouth have no less than four candidates for their suffrages. Lord Ebrington, one of the present members, will retire, as already announced, while ever a dividation of Parliament takes place, his Lordship preferring the family borough of Barnstaple. Mr Rounded Palmer, the Conservative member, will, however, again come forward; and the three candidates for the honour of filling the place which his colleague will vacate are Mr. R. P. Collier, a Radical; Mr. G. T Bruce (Deputy Chairman of the Eastern Steam Navigation Company), a moderate Whig; and Mr. Bickham Escott, once a Conservative, but now a Radical Each of the candidates has addressed the electors at large public meetings convened for that purpose

SALISBURY.—Sir Brotherton has sent round to the houses of his friends that he also stands and is a candidate for the representation of Salford.

SLIGO COUNTY. Sir Robert Gore Booth has issued an address to the electors of the county Sligo, offering himself as a candidate at the next election. The Sligo Chronicle states, that Mr. Jones, for the present, has abandoned his intention of seeking the representation of the county

SOUTH ESSEX.—It is understood that Sir George T. Staunton, at present representing the borough of Portsmouth, will offer himself as a candidate for the southern division of Hants at the next election. He has similar his intention of not again offering himself for Portsmouth, but, having been elected for six years, he will not resign his seat unless he be subject to do so. He has been returned for the county before, in conjunction with Lord Palmerston

SOUTH LANCASHIRE.—It is expected that Mr Alderman Watkins will be brought forward to plead for Mr. Henry Mr. Watkins is a Manchester merchant of Free-trade and Liberal politics, and is highly respected in the county

STAFFORD.—In addition to Mr. Serjeant Allen, two other gentlemen are announced as candidates for the representation of Stafford. An address to the electors has been published from Mr Arthur Otway, who is a Free-trader; a friend of moderate reform, in favour of shortening the duration of Parliament, the free exercise of the franchise, and an alteration in the manner of levying the Income-tax. Another candidate is Mr. Phillips, a barrister on the Oxford circuit, who intends immediately to address the electors on the principles of Free Trade, &c.

STOCKPORT. Mr. Heald has issued an address, in which he declares that he is strenuously opposed to any attempt to impose an import duty on corn, and will support any measures of reform based on sound constitutional principles.

TAVISTOCK.—Mr. Samuel Carter, of the Western Circuit, has issued an address to the electors of Tavistock, announcing his intention of coming forward as a candidate for the next vacancy in the representation at the coming election. Mr. Carter is a Radical Reformer; he advocates Free Trade and general Parliamentary and financial reform, as embodied in Mr. Hume's late motion

THE TOWER HAMLETS.—Mr. Charles Salisbury Butler, a magistrate of the county, and a resident in the Tower Hamlets, has signified his intention of becoming a candidate for the borough at the ensuing election.

WICKLOW COUNTY. Mr Putin, of Bray, is spoken of, amongst others, for the county Wicklow in opposition to Sir Ralph Howard, who retires.

WINCHESTER.—Sir James Buller East, Bart., M.P., the Conservative member for Winchester, has declared to his principal supporters that he will not vote for a return to Protection though in other respects he will support Lord Derby. It is not improbable but that Mr. Andrews, the Member for Southampton, who has a seat once at Winchester, will be nominated in opposition to Sir J. B. East when a general election takes place WESTMINSTER CONTEST.—In county of Westminster, too, is overrun with candidates—Sir Percy Nugent, Mr. Magan. Mr. Mostyn, the son of Lord Vaux of Harrowden, Sir R. Lewis, &c., Mr. John Ennis, &c.

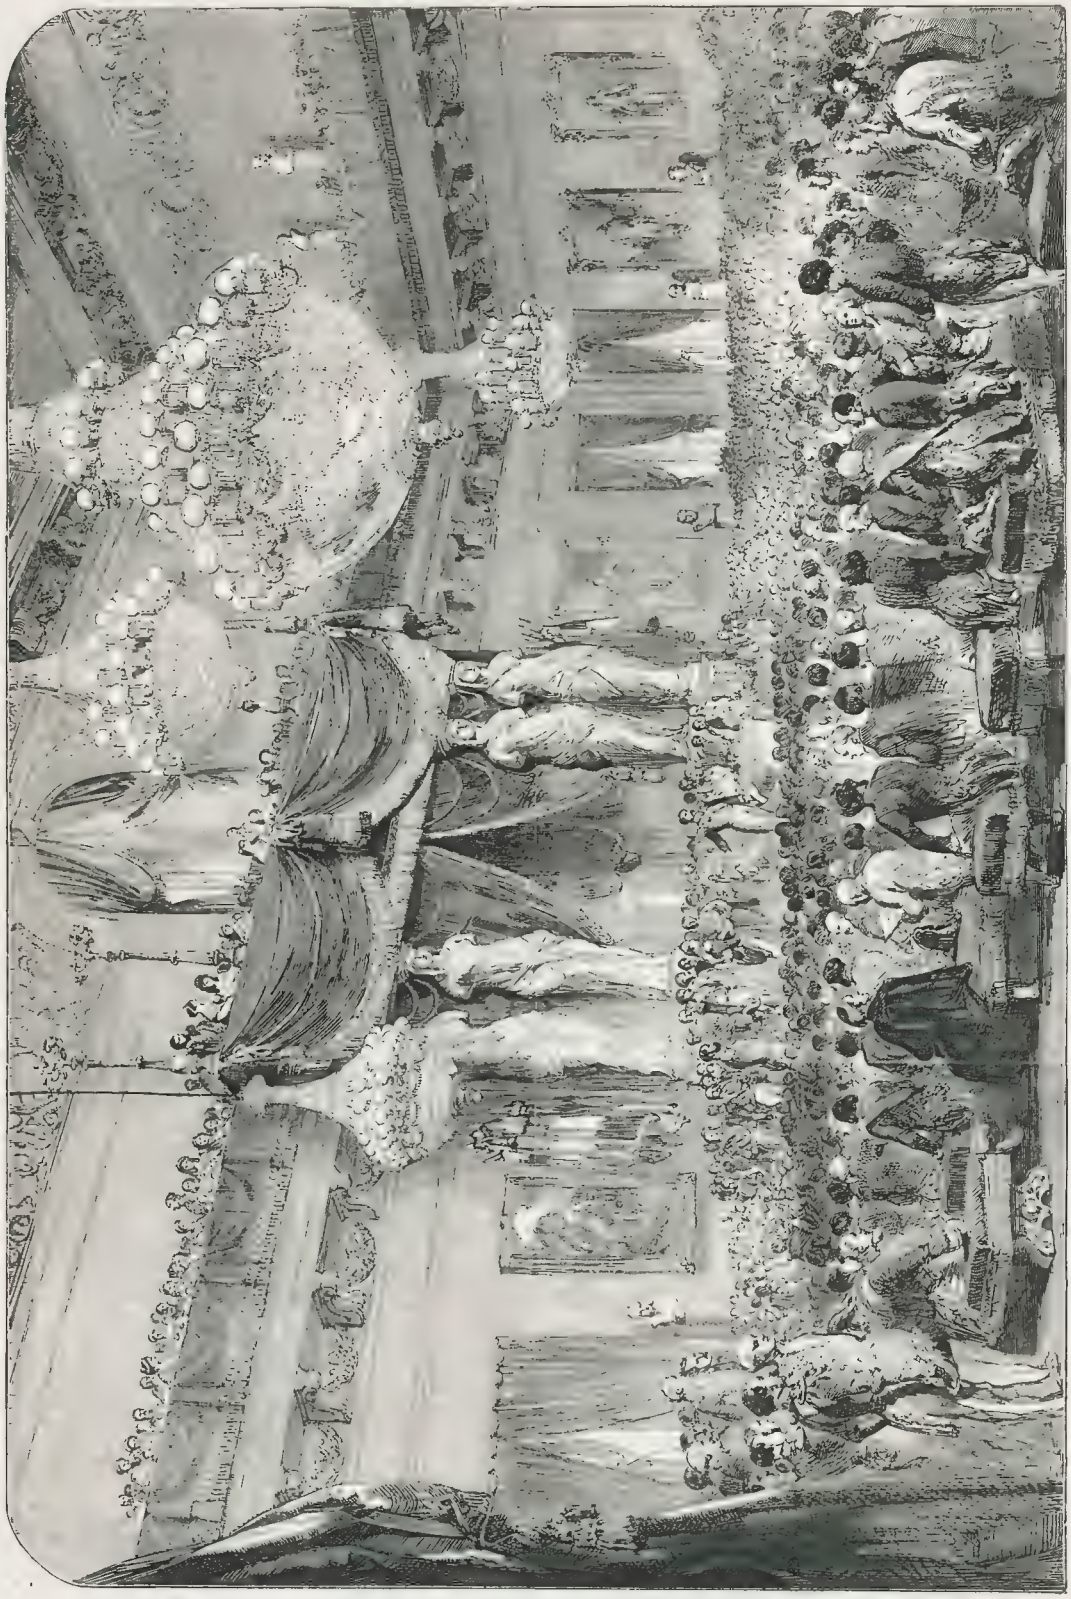
WEXFORD BOROUGH.—Mr. Devereux has consented, on the request of a large deputation of electors, to be again put in nomination for the borough of Wexford.

WEXFORD COUNTY.—There are four candidates announced for the county of Wexford; viz. Mr. Edward W. Nunn, on Protectionist principles; Mr C. F. Wadding, a "tenant right" candidate; G. Morgan, Esq., the present member; the Hon. R. S. Jarew, son of Lord Carew; and Mr. James Fagan, one of the present members.

YOUGHAL.—Mr. Anstey has informed the electors of Youghal that he will not again seek their suffrages.



INSTALLATION OF THE SENATE AND LEGISLATIVE CORPS, IN THE SALLE DES MARECHAUX PALACE OF THE TUILERIES.—(See page 265.)

THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE.

To the rule that it is difficult to write with impartiality the biography of living men, may be adduced at the present time two striking exceptions: the one in the case of the most eminent military genius of the age; the other, in that of a nobleman, who, without laying claim to a corresponding position as a civilian, is yet identified with almost all the great political events of the last half-century, and whose public career has been a model for statesmen of Liberal opinions in a country of free institutions. In each case, the public mind would be prepared for an impartial verdict. The Duke of Wellington could not now be misjudged. So, we think, with the Marquess of Lansdowne. Time, no less than long public services, has raised both to an eminence where they stand far above contemporary passions and prejudices; and the task of the biographer is the more simplified in each instance from those distinguished men having practically abandoned the political arena, except on those rare and great occasions when their experience and wisdom are sought as arbiters, mediators, or guides, rather than their aid as combatants in the strife.

Turning to the Peerage-books for the origin and honours of the subject of this memoir, we find that Henry Petty Fitzmaurice, Marquess of Lansdowne, is descended from an old Irish family, who were Barons of Kerry and Lixnaw, in Ireland, as far back as the year 1181; that he is the son of the first Marquess (the celebrated Lord Shelburne), by his second wife, a daughter of the Earl of Upper Ossory; that he was born in the year 1780; and that, besides his Marquisate, he holds the other titles of Earl of Wycombe and Viscount Calne (1784), Baron Wycombe (1760), Earl of Kerry (1722), Earl of Shelburne (1753), Viscount Clanmaurice (1723), Viscount Fitzmaurice and Baron Dunkeron (1751): together with the two ancient Irish Baronies already named. It is evident, therefore, that there are few families more ancient or illustrious than that of Lord Lansdowne.

It is stated to have been in accordance with the personal wishes of the noble Marquess while yet a child, that he was sent to a public school. His father, like many other men anxious for the moral training of their children, entertained great objections to those establishments. His sons by his first marriage were educated by private tutors—the Rev. Mr. Jarvis and Dr. Priestley. But the subject of this memoir is said to have preferred a public school, and he was accordingly sent to Westminster.

Like so many others of our most distinguished Reformers, Lord Lansdowne next went to Dugald Stewart, the celebrated Edinburgh Professor. Here, in the habit of intimate association with some of the most able and ardent of the rising minds of the age, he strengthened, not only that love of constitutional freedom and of liberal and enlightened political principles which may almost be said to be inherent in his race, but also that devotion to literature and science, and that habitual preference for the society of men of literary and scientific eminence, which afterwards lent so much of its lustre to his private and social life, and rendered Lansdowne House the resort of the most gifted and intellectual of the age.

In almost every memoir of contemporary Liberal politicians of great eminence—at least, of those whose public life dates from a period not far removed from the close of the last century—will be found mention of the celebrated "Speculative Society." It was here that Lord Brougham first fleshed his sword in oratorial combat: it was here that the founders of the Edinburgh Review graduated in dialectics, and most of the men who afterwards effected those peaceful revolutions in opinion and legislation which have so mainly contributed to make this nation great and happy; it was here, too, that Lord Lansdowne first practised, in a sort of mimic senate, as a debater, and stamped himself in the memory of his associates and future rivals as a man of more than ordinary mark, and destined to sustain the dignity of his order as a parliamentary leader and statesman. Lord Lansdowne was one of the most active and earnest of those young and ardent spirits, who, even at that period, the peculiar dignity and courtesy which ever characterised his eloquence was developed, though yet imperfectly, and he brought among the fiery young debaters, of whom Henry Brougham was afterwards the master, the traditions of a school of oratory which even then was dying away, and of which Lord Lansdowne long remained almost the sole living representative.

Having finished his course of studies at Edinburgh, Lord Lansdowne then went to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated (in 1801) as M.A.

After having travelled for some time on the Continent, in the company of M. Dumont, the subject of our memoir prepared for his public political career. As soon as he was of legal age, he was returned to the House of Commons for the family borough of Calne. The first three years of his parliamentary life were spent in becoming quiescence. He had carefully to study the assembly he had entered, and to note the means by which it was to be influenced, ere he could hope with any prospect of success to commence his legislative labours. It is remarkable that his maiden speech should have been devoted to the affairs of Ireland. It is, of course, unnecessary to state that a very considerable proportion of the property of the noble Marquess is situated in that country. What may not be so generally known, is that he is one of the very best landlords in Ireland. His property, like that of Lord Derby, the Duke of Devonshire, and some other landowners of the same class, is an oasis in the desert of Irish misery and misrule. But to this sound and practical claim on the good-will of the Irish, Lord Lansdowne has always superadded another—that he has ever been the firm and consistent friend of rational freedom; that he has, throughout the whole of a long, an active, and a useful life, invariably supported that policy which was calculated to advance the social and material prosperity of Ireland, by removing the causes of political and religious discord. It was quite natural, then, that his first speech in Parliament should have been on an Irish question. The Whig party was in opposition at the time; and under the working of the Bank Restriction Act, the Irish community were threatened with a very serious calamity in consequence of the excessive issues of paper money by private banks. The speech of Lord Henry Petty, as he was then called, as coming from a young man, scarcely four and twenty years of age, was remarkable for the clearness and soundness of the views it expressed on the general economic bearings of the currency question. In those days a knowledge of the principles of political economy was as rare as now it is common; and Lord Henry Petty, in displaying such knowledge, was unconsciously offering a tribute of respect to the memory of his celebrated ancestor, Sir William Petty, of whom it is said, and justly, that he was the "father" of the science of political economy in England.

It was on the debate on Lord Melville's case, in April, 1806, that Lord Henry Petty achieved a sudden and deserved reputation as an orator, starting into a retrospective rivalry with Pitt at the same age. The occasion was one to inspire a man of high principle and honourable mind. The Prime Minister, yielding to the claims of party and of private friendship, had defended his colleague with an earnestness not justified by the circumstances of the case; while Lord Henry Petty, in assailing him, was not only discharging his duty to his party, but also responding to the noble impulses of his own nature, which revolt from the idea of official corruption. This speech took the House completely by storm. The young nobleman was known to have great talents, but they were not supposed to be exactly in the direction in which they now developed themselves; and the admiration of the House was not less grudgingly expressed than its astonishment at so startling and powerful an assault on the Minister, from one who hitherto had exhibited no very marked tendency to the more active warfare of party.

Within less than a year from the date of this speech Mr. Pitt died and with his death came the dissolution of the Administration. Then came the Fox-Grenville Administration, in which Lord Henry Petty was nominated to the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, the same that had been held by the distinguished man with whom he had maintained so sudden and brief a rivalry. It must not, however, be supposed that Lord Henry Petty's Parliamentary services were confined to occasional party speeches. On the contary, having once commenced, he became a frequent speaker, but chiefly on subjects connected with finance. He was now, too, elected for the University of Cambridge.

The Whigs, however, were not then destined to continue long in power. The Ministry (known as that of "All the Talents") gave up office in less than thirteen months; so that Lord Henry Petty's capabilities as a financier were not very severely tried. Enough was done, however, to prove that he was a man of great natural talents, highly trained and disciplined; and he was destined from that time by his party and political contemporaries to hold still more important and trying posts as a Minister.

Looking back to the history of that period, we find the name of Lord Lansdowne actively associated with some of the measures of the day when the Whigs were still great and vigorous from their recent contact with the people. He continued with Lord Melbourne's Ministry, in the same capacity, till November, 1834; rejoined it in April, 1835, and went out in 1841, on the accession of Sir R. Peel. From the retirement of Earl Grey, Lord Lansdowne became the leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords—a position in which his manly courtesy, dignity, and native nobility of soul found full scope for their display. The debates were never conducted with more of senatorial calmness and chivalrous respect for the courtesies, than when Lord Lansdowne led the way and gave the tone. Lord Lansdowne resumed office, and his functions as leader, till the recent resignation of Lord John Russell, when he resigned both,—accompanying his abandonment of the leadership of the Senate with a speech of touching dignity, which will long be remembered as the appropriate farewell of one who had now become almost the Nestor of the Assembly.

THE MOST NOBLE THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE, K.G.

(FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY KILBURN.)

Lord Henry Petty's Parliamentary services were confined to occasional party speeches. On the contary, having once commenced, he became a frequent speaker, but chiefly on subjects connected with finance. He was now, too, elected for the University of Cambridge.

The Whigs, however, were not then destined to continue long in power. The Ministry (known as that of "All the Talents") gave up office in less than thirteen months; so that Lord Henry Petty's capabilities as a financier were not very severely tried. Enough was done, however, to prove that he was a man of great natural talents, highly trained and disciplined; and he was destined from that time by his party and political contemporaries to hold still more important and trying posts as a Minister.

Looking back to the history of that period, we find the name of Lord Lansdowne actively associated with some of the measures of the day when the Whigs were still great and vigorous from their recent contact with the people. He continued with Lord Melbourne's Ministry, in the same capacity, till November, 1834; rejoined it in April, 1835, and went out in 1841, on the accession of Sir R. Peel. From the retirement of Earl Grey, Lord Lansdowne became the leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords—a position in which his manly courtesy, dignity, and native nobility of soul found full scope for their display. The debates were never conducted with more of senatorial calmness and chivalrous respect for the courtesies, than when Lord Lansdowne led the way and gave the tone. Lord Lansdowne resumed office, and his functions as leader, till the recent resignation of Lord John Russell, when he resigned both,—accompanying his abandonment of the leadership of the Senate with a speech of touching dignity, which will long be remembered as the appropriate farewell of one who had now become almost the Nestor of the Assembly.

Few contemporary statesmen can look back with so much satisfaction as that which must be felt by the Marquess of Lansdowne when he contemplates his past political career. At the close of half a century he sees that the principles which he advocated almost without hope at its commencement, have not merely made progress in the national mind, but have also become embodied in the laws of the empire. As in the earlier part of his public life he advocated those principles from a deep and sincere conviction of their necessity and applicability to the growing wants and opinions of the age, so for some years past, and now at the close of his career, his past services and his position and influence derived from them enable him to speak with a degree of authority denied to any other member of his own party, and only wielded in that of his opponents by the illustrious warrior and scarcely less illustrious civilian, whose name we have already, by way of parallel, associated with his. It may or it may not have been for the advantage of the country, that younger colleagues in the Whig Government and party should have been by the influence and advice of the noble Marquess taught the wisdom of a policy of steady and gradual progress, as distinguished from an impulsive and fitful advance to the object sought. We do not here enter into the question between the two modes of managing the Liberal party, but we believe there is no doubt as to the fact, that the Marquess of Lansdowne did exercise over his party a moderating influence which made itself sensibly felt in their measures. The Conservative turn of his mind—we don't use the political term in a party sense—the conservative character of his mind was peculiarly suited to the position in which, during the last fifteen or sixteen years, he found himself placed. The same moderating influence which served to modify the measures of the Ministry of which from time to time he formed a part, also helped to render them acceptable in the Upper House of Parliament. Aided by the moral dignity of his bearing and the courteous gravity of his manners, that influence propitiated support, while it disarmed party opposition. The similitude of his position to that of the Duke of Wellington was frequently developed in the course of his long leadership of the Whigs in the House of Lords. It is needless to say that a deliberate pause of the noble Duke in the face of some hasty measure, which might have passed the Commons under temporary excitement, did exercise a kind of moral influence on his opponents, while on the other hand a concession of opinion on the part of the illustrious Duke was at once accepted by his party as a necessity. In like manner, the Marquess of Lansdowne, if he advanced somewhat with the ultras of his party, did not alarm the prejudices of his opponents as the liberalism of a younger and less trusted Whig would have done; while his own followers, if he held back, felt that such hesitation, if not actually necessary, was at least politic. Such influence is at once the natural consequence and the honourable reward of a long life of public usefulness. Whether it be a tribute paid to age or to wisdom, it matters little, seeing that the great advantage is secured of having some responsable arbiter to whom in the excitement of political strife parties will bow. The Marquess of Lansdowne was removed, in the natural course of things, to the Upper House at a time when his public and private character rendered his presence there of more consequence to his party than if he had remained a Commoner.

We say his private character, because, in addition to his services to his party as a statesman, a legislator, and an orator, he also fulfilled a most important function—one which the Whigs have always found to render solid service to their cause, as well as to invest it with honour.

In the case of Lord Lansdowne, to be the rallying point of all men of genius attached to Liberal principles, was a source of pleasure. His early associations, and a natural tendency of his mind, drew him into an association with men of eminence in literature, science, and art, not as a matter of policy, but as an intellectual enjoyment. At Lansdowne House, it was his pride and happiness to assemble around him all those whose genius lends lustre to an era; and, in thus becoming the patron and the friend of such men, he acted with an unaffected love and admiration for their talents, and a keen enjoyment of their society. There are few contemporary workers in creative art, who have developed genius or attained eminence, who do not with pleasure acknowledge the gentle and graceful encouragement they received from the noble hosts of Lansdowne House.

If the private hospitalities of Lord Lansdowne, and his discerning friendship for men of talent, were thus unconsciously and unintentionally the means of consolidating the influence of the Whigs, still more so has been his public conduct in the House of Lords. His peculiar style of eloquence is especially suited to the task he has had for so many years to fulfil—that of proposing measures of a Liberal character in an assembly where the majority is composed of antagonists to legislative change. It was formed in a school which now belongs to the past, but which will again revive in a modified form, when the political atmosphere shall be more clear, and men can bestow more time on the ornamental part of oratory. Yet it is eminently impressive, not only in an oratorical, but also in a moral point of view. Its choice diction, measured periods, lofty tone, and classical dignity, speak of a mind trained in the ancient ways, and, by negativing the idea of crudity or empiricism, blunt the keen edge of opposition. Those who are in the habit of observing the effect on public assemblies of popular leaders, will readily understand how far the characteristics of Lord Lansdowne's oratory must have silently consolidated the natural influence he derived from his position. Hereafter, as he may interpose an impartial discussion in the debates of the Upper House, his ancient influence will in no way have been impaired by the infrequency of its exercise.

As a statesman, the devoted friend of rational freedom, and the advocate of gradual progress; as a senator, the Nestor of his party, and a mediator in moments of trial, a moderator even in the hour of triumph; as a private member of society, the warm friend and discriminating (often the munificent) patron of men of genius, Lord Lansdowne stands in a position which the most illustrious of his contemporaries might envy. His worth is so eagerly and warmly acknowledged by those who through life have been his public opponents, as the continuance of his countenance and support is prized and desired by those who have always been his political and private friends.

of duties appertaining to the Secretaryship for Foreign Affairs; but the impression he left was most favourable. His was, of course, in opposition to the Government of the Duke of Wellington. Some of his most eloquent speeches were delivered in this last campaign of the Whigs against the expiring Toryism of the old absolute school. He pressed on the Administration the repeal of the Test Acts, and the Catholic relief question; and, when those measures were finally carried, he was one of the most earnest and exultant of their supporters.

With the accession of Earl Grey to power came another term of official life to Lord Lansdowne. He accepted the post of President of the Council, one to which his services fully entitled him, and in which his experience and wisdom rendered him especially valuable. Of course, he supported the Reform Bill and the other great measures of the days

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

ACCOMMODATION OF STRANGERS.

Lord CAMPBELL called their Lordships' attention to the inconvenient practice of standing strangers at the bar, whereby they had taken their places in the galleries when their Lordships commenced prayers. Persons, who were frequently present, on the occasion of Lord Derby being installed in office, were kept out of the gallery, and also persons in the ordinary dress, to avoid the indecency of the weather. He pronounced that to have been an unseemly as well as an unnecessary matter. There was no standing order on the subject. There was no rule of that House which could restrain persons at the gallery when their Lordships prayed to Almighty God. He trusted their Lordships would come to some resolution on the subject. On the occasion of her Majesty proroguing Parliament ladies were allowed to remain, and when prayers were read they knelt down and j in in prayer with the House.

SINDE ALI MOORAD.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH moved for the production of a proclamation issued by the Commander-in-Chief of Sinde, under the direction of the Governor-General of India, declaring the forfeiture of all the territories held by Prince Ali Moorad, with the exception of what he received from his father, on the ground of his having been guilty of forgery and fraud in obtaining possession of them.

The motion was agreed to after a conversation in which Lord Broughton and the Earl of Derby defended the conduct of the Government with regard to the matter.

The following bills were respectively read a third time and passed: The Commons Exchequer Bill, the Consolidated Fund Bill, and the Law of Wills Amendment Bill.

The Personal Estates of Intestates Bill was read a second time.

The Proclamation for Assembling Parliament Bill was passed through committee, and ordered for third reading.

The Manchester House of Recovery Estate Bill, and Watson's Hospital (Edinburgh) Estate Bill, were read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

MR. W MEMBER.

Mr. V. SCULLY took the oath of his seat for Cork county.

The Edinburgh Annuity Tax Abolition Bill was read a second time.

METROPOLITAN WATER SUPPLY.

Viscount EBRINGTON presented a petition from the Metropolitan Sanitary Association, praying for an unlimited supply of pure water to the metropolis, and against the Metropolitan Water Supply Bill. The noble Lord then moved that it be an instruction to the committee on the Metropolis Water Supply Bill, to cause inquiry to be made into the cost of bringing into the metropolis a supply of soft water from the sources recommended by the Earl of Carlisle and his colleagues of the Board of Health, and to report thereon, before they proceed to consider that bill. A division on either bill would be taken on them."

Lord J. MANNERS opposed the motion, on the ground that its adoption would render it impossible to effect any settlement of that question in the course of the present year

The motion was negatived without a division.

THE POOR-LAW COMMISSION.

In reply to a question from Lord D. O STUART,

Sir J. TROLLOPE said it was his intention on the part of the Government to bring in a bill during the present session for the renewal of the Poor-law Commission for a limited period.

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

Mr. HUTT said he wished to put a question to the right hon. gentleman the President of the Board of Trade on the subject of agricultural statistics. The right hon. gentleman was no doubt aware that a very general and earnest desire existed in the country for some means of obtaining accurate information with respect to the quantity of corn produced on our own soil, and the quantity which was necessary for the support of our population. The question he wished to put to the right hon. gentleman was, whether he was prepared to take any measure for obtaining those agricultural statistics of which he dept red the want, and whether her Majesty's Government contemplated the introduction of any measure for the purpose of collecting information with respect to the several productions of Great Britain similar to that which was already obtained in the case of Ireland?

Mr. HEADLEY said that that important subject, as the hon. gentleman had stated, had all along occupied more or less of public attention for several years. Attempts had been made at various times to obtain a solution of the question, but it had not occurred to him at any other period or since he had come into office. But the only answer he could then give the hon gentleman was, that although the subject was so important that it could not escape the attention of her Majesty's Government, he was not at present prepared to state that he saw his way to any measure which could attain that desirable end.

THE MILITIA

Several petitions having been presented against the enrolment of the Militia from Birmingham, Sheffield, Worcester, Norwich, and other places.

Mr WALPOLE rose and moved for leave to bring in a bill on the subject, viz. a Bill to amend and consolidate the laws relating to the Militia. The right hon. gentleman observed that forty years of peace tended to lull the people of this country into a feeling of security, upon which it was by no means safe to leave them; but although there was nothing immediately alarming in the present aspect of affairs, and although we were placed in a most satisfactory footing, yet the elements of danger were abroad, and true wisdom dictated that the best security against an attack was to be prepared to meet it. The ablest authorities, both naval and military, had declared that our combined forces was not sufficient to meet a sudden emergency, and that it was absolutely necessary that some efficient measures should be adopted for the defence of the country. There were strong reasons for adding to the present establishment of our army and navy, and it appeared to him to be clear that by far the best mode of providing for our national defence was by resorting to our regular militia force. Although there had been a wish that the militia should be called out in 1831, nevertheless the militia, though not called out, cost the country about £83,000 per annum, and this was a sum too large for them not to try and avail themselves of it to the utmost. He thought it possible that a sufficient force might be obtained by means of volunteers without resorting to the ballot, to be rendered by drilling and training efficient to act upon any sudden emergency. First, it was proposed to raise 30,000 men by means of a bounty having recourse to the ballot, a force of 80,000 volunteers, to be drilled and trained under the regulations of the 43 George 3; 50,000 only to be raised the first year, and 30,000 the second year; the period of service to be five years. Secondly it was proposed to raise these men by bounties of £3 or £4 either to be paid down at the time, or at the rate of 2s. or 2s. 6d. per month, the volunteer being at liberty to take it in one way or the other. Thirdly, with respect to the officers, it was proposed to dispense with the qualification required by the 43 George 3 in regard to all officers below the rank of major, and generally to consider the having been in the army equivalent to qualification. Fourthly, the bill provided that the number of days drilling required in the year should be twenty one, the Crown having the power to extend the period to seven weeks, or to reduce it to five days. Lastly, with respect to the embodiment of the men, it was not proposed to make any alteration in the existing law. The case at which persons were to be liable to the ballot or voluntary service was that between eighteen and thirty-five years of age, and the standard of height was to be 5ft. 2in. The estimated annual charge for the proposed measure would be about £1 200,000; but if spread over five years, it would be about £240,000 a year; except that during the first year the cost of equipment would raise the expense to £400,000, including the clothing. The expense of the militia was to be borne by the public, but if any district failed to furnish its proper quota of men, it seemed only fair in such cases to enforce the ballot, and to make them also pay the expense of arms and equipments. The right hon. gentleman concluded by moving for leave to bring in the bill.

Mr. HOME considered the measure unnecessary, but would not oppose its introduction

Sir DE LACY EVANS also thought the measure unnecessary, but he did think the militia laws required consolidation and amendment

Mr. M GIBBON suggested that further progress of this measure should be postponed until after the appeal which was about to be made to the country.

Lord PALMERSTON gave his entire approval to the measure of the right hon. gentleman, with a statement he considered would be satisfactory to the country one. He thought it was impossible to over-rate the necessity of having a permanent force of this description; and, with respect to the expense, he believed that 60,000 men thus assembled for 28 days would not cost so much as an addition of 8000 men to the army. The plan of the right hon. gentleman he thought, generally, a good one, and well deserving the sanction of the House. With respect to the extension of the measure to the Scottish Highlands, the understanding was that the raising chiefly by voluntary enlistment in any part of the kingdom, and liable to be sent to any part of the three kingdoms.

Colonel THOMPSON thought that while there was a chance of attack from abroad we ought to be prepared in most it, but he confessed that the danger appeared to him to be passing away; for, as the star of the President of France was waning, so were the chances of an invasion diminishing.

Lord J RUSSELL had heard with much pleasure the very able statement of Mr. Wapole, although he must say that several parts of it required explanation The right hon gentleman had not been very clear upon the question of balloting for the militia. He (Lord J. Russell) was opposed to the principle of the ballot to be paid at once, it might be very difficult to find your militiamen after the first year. The noble Lord (Palmerston) had expressed his satisfaction with the plan of the right hon. gentleman, although the plan did not extend to Scotland and Ireland, the very points upon which he had opposed the bill of the late Government For his own part, there were some portions of the plan of which he could form but an imperfect notion, but he should nevertheless not throw any difficulty in the way of the introduction of the bill.

Mr. COBDEN strongly condemned the proposed expenditure as wanton and unnecessary, and dwelt at much length on the inactivity which had been going on in our naval dockyard establishments since the year 1822. The people throughout the country did not think there was any danger of attack, and many of them looked upon the public which was set up as a mere hoax.

Mr BERESFORD replied to the arguments of Mr. Cobden, contending that they were fallacious, and that although danger was denied was considered by the highest authorities as anything but chimerical. With respect to Ireland and Scotland not being named in the bill, he reminded the House that the Militia Bills of the three kingdoms never had been brought forward at the same time. In fact they could not well be so, for in Ireland they never had the ballot, the militia being always called out in a way which was never known to fail—namely, by beat of drum.

Admiral BERKELEY believed that Mr. Cobden had derived all his knowledge of naval affairs from a gallant officer in the navy who was very fond of writing in the newspapers and [illegible] acquainted for his lamentable ignorance of anything connected with the subject. He did not think that the defence of the country should be left to a fleet of observation in the Channel; not so efficient was the Admiralty service, that he would undertake that in twenty-four hours a sufficient number of men and steamers would be placed so as to form an efficient look-out from the North Foreland to the Channel Islands.

Mr FOX MAULE said that a regular militia, constituted by ballot, would, in his opinion, be the most unpopular force in the country, and therefore it was that in the bill of the late Government it was sought to make the duties to be performed as little as possible. The bill proposed by the present Government went much further, but he would, nevertheless, not offer any opposition to its introduction.

After some further discussion,

Mr. HORSMAN thought they were taking most extensive and expensive measures to meet a danger which was absolutely imaginary. He therefore opposed the motion.

After some observations from Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Horsman, Captain Boldero, and Colonel Sibthorp,

The O GORMAN MAHON bore testimony to the loyalty of the Irish, and should support the motion before the House.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the arguments of Mr. Cobden went the length of saying that we should have no defences whatever, and he could not, therefore, agree with him, though he always listened to him with pleasure. He defended the measure on the part of the Government, which, he believed, the House would prove to be the best which, under the circumstances, could be adopted

Mr. BRIGHT said the representation made of Mr. Cobden's argument was not fair, for it assumed, as he did not, that there was no defence, when the fact was were sufficiently defended already. If the ballot for the militia were to be applied to the manufacturing districts they would derange all the operations of the mills, and cause the greatest inconvenience to all those who were likely to suffer by its operation The question was one of such importance that the decision upon it ought to be left to a new Parliament

Mr. WHITESIDE wished to ask if every important quest on was to be submitted to Ministers—if they were to be merely delegates in that house, bound to carry out the wishes of their constituents, without in any way exercising their judgments? He did not regard the dangers as infinitesimal, and the safest course was to be at all times prepared for the worst

Mr. ROEBUCK was anxious that this bill should be brought in and laid upon the table, and that the Government should then go to the country upon this as well as upon some of their other measures.

Mr B. OSBORNE supported the suggestion of Mr. Roebuck

The Secretary WALPOLE said that they would not bring it in by an express order of the House; and if every one were given to bring in the bill, he would not move the second reading until after Easter.

Leave was then given to bring in the bill.

The report of the committee of Ways and Means, granting £17,742,000 for the issue of Exchequer Bills, was agreed to.

The Mutiny Bill and the Marine Mutiny Bill passed through committee.

NEW BILLS

Leave was given to Mr. Bouverie to bring in a bill to abolish the criminal jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in certain cases (the hon. member referred to cases of brawling and defamation); to Sir W. Joliffe, to bring a bill to continue for a fifth year of her present Majesty, to prevent the spreading of contagious or infectious disorders among sheep, cattle, and other animals; to Lord Naas, to bring in a bill to enact certain acts relating to linen, hempen, and other manufactures in Ireland.

MANCHESTER SCHEME OF EDUCATION.

Mr KERSHAW moved that the select Committee on Manchester and Salford Education do consist of 18 members, and that Mr. Pilkington be added to the committee

Mr. WALPOLE objected to the constitution of the committee being altered; it would create great confusion from being late in session.

The House then divided—

For Mr. Kershaw's motion	..	..	..	51
Against it	..	..	..	54
Majority	..	..	..	3

Adjourned at twenty minutes past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Royal consent was given by commission to the Consolidated Fund Bill.

The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Lonsdale, and the Marquis of Salisbury.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Lord CAMPBELL begged to put a question to the noble Earl opposite on the subject of the Crystal Palace. He need not again repeat his sincere admiration of that structure, and of Sir Joseph Paxton, its immortal author, but he was anxious to know the intentions of the Government with reference to the building.

The Earl of DERBY said the Government had taken into consideration the report of the commissioners lately appointed to inquire into the subject, and they had come to the conclusion that, the beautiful structure having accomplished all the objects for which it was intended, the contractors should now be called upon to remove it. (Hear)

THE COMMON LAW COMMISSION.

Lord BROUGHAM, on presenting a petition in favour of the continuance of the Common Law Commission, said he wished to make an observation with respect to the Law Commission. He moved for certain returns relative to the admeasuration of their labours which referred to a digest of the criminal law. The commission had cost the country between £50,000 and £60,000, and the changes which had been proposed by it were but few. He had not had the result of the report of the learned commissioners. But he wished to see completed a digest, first, of the statutory law, and then of the whole body of the criminal law. He begged to remind the noble and learned Lord opposite (the Earl of Derby) the expediency of continuing the commission for a limited time, in order to complete their labours, which he believed might be done at the cost of about £2000, and which would render all the expenditure already incurred available.

THE EXPECTED DISSOLUTION.

In reply to the Earl of Minto, the Earl of DERBY said it was a misapprehension on the part of the noble Earl to suppose that he (the Earl of Derby) had pledged himself to advise a dissolution of Parliament at or within any specific period, or that the ensuing session of the new Parliament was to be followed by an almost immediate prorogation. What he had stated was, that he believed the autumn should not pass away without the new Parliament having an opportunity of discussing various questions of importance, and that he thought it expedient that those questions should be decided before the ordinary period of assembling Parliament in 1853

Lord LYNDHURST moved for certain returns relative to the administration of justice in cases of lunacy, which led to a conversation, in which the Lord Chancellor and Lord Truro took part, on the expenses of lunacy commissions, and the necessity of reducing their cost.

The motion was agreed to.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. PIGOTT asked the President of the Board of Trade, whether, in conformity with a motion he submitted to the House in session 1850, he has any intention of proposing a reduction in the salaries and wages paid in every department of the public service. (A laugh.)

Mr. HENLEY had no hesitation in answering the question. It was true that, in the exercise of the functions appertaining to the House, he two sessions ago raised the question; but on that occasion he failed to obtain that amount of support he thought he had a right to look for, especially from those hon. gentlemen who were on that side of the House. (Hear, hear.) He was told, he remembered, that the Government of the day considered it more desirable to amalgamate various offices, and to increase the duties of the officers, rather than to reduce their salaries. This was the decision come to two years ago, and, considering himself bound by it, he did not propose to disturb it. (Hear, hear.)

RESERVE FORCE OF COMMERCIAL STEAM MARINE

Mr. ANDERSON called attention to the report of the select committee of 1845, appointed to inquire into the practicability of providing, by means of the commercial steam marine of the country, a reserve steam navy available for the national defence when required, and moved the following resolution:—"That it is the opinion of this House, that, in order the better to provide for the public safety, to economise the public resources, and to preserve peace, it is desirable that measures should be adopted with a view to render the commercial steam navy promptly available for the national defence in case of emergency."

Mr MACLEOD seconded the motion.

Mr. STAFFORD entered into a comparative statement of the naval forces of England, France, and Russia, deducing the inference that it might be difficult, if a powerful enemy, however, no danger to augment to prevent an invasion, and that, therefore, a militia, or some other military force on shore, was necessary The Admiralty already adopted in the mail packet contracts the principle of the resolution now proposed. In regard to that proposal to that service, to the number of 55 steamers—registering in the gross 53,243 tons—were by the terms of the agreement built to carry guns, and to be available as war steamers, should it be necessary so to employ them. The Board of Admiralty were further fully prepared to accede to the motion, reserving to themselves, however, the management of the details of the plan; but they desired sincerely to carry it into effect The difficulty, however, was, that, as the navy estimates had passed, there was no fund at present for the purpose.

Captain SCOBELL adverted to the difficulty of an hostile force, however strong, effecting a landing on the coast, and considered that to the Admiralty had shown that our fleet, if properly manned, was sufficient for the protection of our coasts, and that therefore the Militia Bill was unnecessary.

Admiral STEWART approved of the plan suggested, but considered a militia necessary

Captain HARRIS took the same view, but doubted whether there would not be considerable difficulty in manning the proposed auxiliary naval force, should its services be wanted

Mr HUME thought the Government had shown a wise discretion in adopting the motion; but advised it to judge of its own resources before it rushed into engagements which might be very expensive, and which might also prove unnecessary.

Mr. COWPER expressed his gratification that the motion had been acceded to. The motion was accordingly agreed to.

DUTY ON WINES.

Mr. ANSTEY moved for a select committee to inquire into the causes of the decline in the revenue derived from the 1m ort duty on wines The present high rate of differential duties levied on fore n wines was productive of fraud on the consumer and fraud on the revenue, and the returns of entries for consumption and revenue at the several rates of duty, from the Methuen Treaty down to the last altera ion in 1840, showed that at the low duty the consumption was increased and the revenue lessened. He suggested an equal duty of 1s. a gallon. If this duty on French wines were so reduced, Portugal would see the necessity of making such commercial arrangements as would bring about a reduction of duty on her wines. In conclusion, he urged the advantages of the measure as proposed in preserving peace between England and France by unity in the terms in other commercial relations.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER acquiesced in the principle laid down by Mr. Pitt when he reduced the scale of duties established by the Methuen Treaty —the principle of reciprocity—but he reminded the House that though we had reduced the duties on French wines there had been no reciprocity on the part of France. Without a moment's doubt, reduction of duty led to increased consumption as a general rule, but in this case the loss occasioned by the reduction made in 1831 was not retained until 1844. He denied that there had been any falling off either in the consumption or the revenue, and showed, by a reference to the official returns, that there had been rather an increase than otherwise He had no objection to grant a committee of inquiry into the import duties on wines, but not into the causes of the decline in the revenue.

Lord PALMERSTON—adverting to a promise made by the Portuguese government before he left office, that steps would be taken to make the regulations of the Oporto Company consonant with the interpretation put by the British ministry on the treaty of 1842—asked the present Ministers what was the state of the negotiations on the subject.

Mr. HENLEY said the matter had been the subject of official communication since the accession of the present Government to office as well as before, and he begged to assure the noble Lord that every attention should be given to it.

Mr. ANSTEY then altered the terms of his motion according to the suggestion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and it was agreed to without a division.

THE BALLOT.

Mr H. BERKELEY moved for leave to bring in a bill to cause the votes of Parliamentary electors to be taken by way of ballot. They were, he said, on the eve of a general election, and on the last occasion some steps were taken to prevent it, hords of low attorneys would, as heretofore, rush from the police courts and the courts of bankruptcy to become electioneering agents—their trade the elector's conscience. Their cause the elector's pocket—their employers, the House of Lords —and the result, the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman then proceeded to address all the usual arguments in support of the ballot, and intimated his belief that the measure would not have to encounter much opposition, but because its opponents be saved that it would prove too successful for its object.

Mr. BARROW also supported the bill. He had been long opposed to the introduction of the ballot.

Sir B. HALL also urged the introduction of the bill.

Mr W. WILLIAMS also supported the bill.

Mr. B. COCHRANE opposed the measure.

Mr. GORING said the object was utterly exhausted in argument than any other which had ever come before Parliament, for Mr Grote had left little new to be said upon the subject. There were, however, moral aspects now in which the question might be viewed, which had not presented themselves seventeen years ago when Mr. Grote brought the subject forward. In proof of this, he pointed to the elections by ballot in France, at which not the slightest turbulence took place on the part of any party that passed off so quietly as to form a perfect contrast to many of our elections in this country. He was for giving to the voter protection against landlords, against millowners, against priests, and against, in fact, every undue influence, and he warned Lord John Russell that to extend the franchise without the ballot would be to inflict the greatest possible curse upon the operatives of the country.

Mr. WARD contended that the ballot, if adopted, so far from remedying the mora evils he complained of, would be much more likely to aggravate them. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cobden) thought the extension of the franchise would be a measure without any value by itself, and if the vote by ballot should not be carried, he believed it would not, he should then claim the vote of the honourable gentleman against the motion which stood next on the paper for an extension of the franchise. The right honourable gentleman triumphantly replied to an attack made by Mr. Cobden on Lord Derby, and contended that, should bribery and corruption be carried on under the ballot, it would be impossible to detect and punish them. He had no confidence in a system of espionage, but trust was to be exercised in this country, it ought to be so exercised under the control and supervision of public opinion.

Lord D. STUART supported the motion

The House divided, and the numbers were—

For the motion	..	..	..	144
Against it	..	..	..	214
Majority against it	..	..	..	—102

Mr. HUTT said it was his intention to vote for the motion, but by mistake he had voted against it.—Adjourned at half-past five o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met at noon.

TENANT RIGHT (IRELAND).

Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD moved the second reading of the Tenant Right (Ireland.) Bill. The object was to give to the tenant a claim of tenant right prevailing in various districts of Ireland; and to secure, amongst other things, to the occupiers of land a full and fair compensation for such assisted improvements. He regretted that the Government had not brought forward a bill. If the Government would undertake to bring forward a just measure upon the subject.

Mr. NAPIER approved of compensation being given for improvements, but objected to the present bill, which, he thought, would introduce additional restrictions upon encumbered estates, and strengthen the existing system, instead of endeavouring to introduce one still better. He was unwilling to entertain any proposal to arrange the whole matter of private contract, or to interfere by enactments with the free course of the letting of land. But, although he considered that, where the negotiating parties were unable to agree in a matter of fair, liberal, legislation was useless, it might be advantageously interposed where entails encumbered the letting with the land, as it might get rid of the restrictions against leasing. Reminding the House that in England and in Scotland a tenant could lay no claim to compensation for improvements after he had availed himself of them without any one to be reimbursed in expenditure, he pointed out as an objection to the bill that it provided no limit to the period of claims. Compensation should be granted only where a tenant's just and reasonable enjoyment of his improvement should be interrupted. After objecting to other details in the bill, he said that early in the session he had made some progress in framing a measure on the subject, but this he conceived ought now to be made a Government bill, and he promised that it should be introduced as soon as early as possible, though he could not promise it this session. The object of that measure would not only be the consolidation of the laws at present in existence, but the making provision for investigation and appeal in cases of dispute, for the definition of agreements where no special agreement had been entered into, and for the protection of tenants from encumbrances upon the land. The hon. and learned gentleman proceeded to denounce the widely spread agrarian conspiracy so productive of outrage, and dec ared that no effort should be wanting on the part of the Government to crush so miserable an organisation.

Mr. ROEBUCK was upon the necessity of the measure.

Viscount CASTLEREAGH thought the bill ought to be referred to a committee. He was by no means satisfied with some of its provisions, but both landlord and tenant required the interference of the Legislature.

Other speakers took part in the debate, Mr. SCULLY in support of the bill, Sir EMERSON TENNENT argued at considerable length against the details of the bill, discerning them as to compel us to render its working impossible; and, although not opposed to the principle of giving to tenants compensation to tenants for improvements not absolutely necessary for the purpose of cultivation, he signified his opposition to the bill.

Mr. S. HERBERT entered at considerable length upon the last speaker, drew a melancholy picture of the miserable system under which the Irish cultivator was crushed, and implored the House not to lose that opportunity of remedying evils which were destroying the land and prostrating the people. The late Government had traded with the miseries of Ireland as political capital, but he called upon the present Administration to take a nobler course.

Mr. GRATTAN and Mr. B. OSBORNE supported the bill.

Mr. WHITESIDE said that legislation on so important a subject ought to be comprehensive, just, and harmonious, and the House ought, irrespective of other considerations, to decide whether the bill were of such a character. He raised various objections to the measure, to which, as it was not its character.

Mr. BUTLER moved the adjournment of the debate, but subsequently withdrew his motion

Mr. CONOLLY spoke in opposition to the bill; and six o'clock having arrived before the hon. gentleman concluded, an adjournment took place.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their Lordships sat for a few minutes, and received some petitions.

The Testators' Persons Estate Bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

FOREIGN REFUGEES.

Mr M. MILNES moved a resolution to the effect that this House has observed with regret, in the correspondence respecting foreign refugees laid upon the table, a menace on the part of a friendly power to visit upon unoffending British travellers the displeasure of that power on the rights of asylum which it accedes to the laws, the customs, and the feelings of the people of Great Britain, and which in recent times has afforded refuge and security to persons of va ious nations, without any distinction of political opinions. The hon. member referred to the reception which had been given to Kossuth, at which Prince Schwartzenburg and the Austrian Government took such offence that they threatened that British subjects sojourning in Austria might be exposed to annoyance without having any claim to the interference of the Austrian Government in their behalf, and this, although the British Government had taken no part whatever in the reception of Kossuth, and had not the power of preventing his being well received by the people. It appeared to him that the tone of the Earl of Malmesbury's correspondence had established a sort of sympathy with America grateful to the feelings of the people of this country. To refuse such an impression was one of the objects of his motion; the other was still more important, that of securing good treatment for unoffending English travellers in foreign countries.

Lord DUDLEY STUART seconded the motion.

Mr. WALPOLE said he was at a loss to know whether the object of the motion was to cast blame upon the present Government or to make it a reservation or upon both. But he hoped by a short explanation to induce the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion. The fair inference to be drawn from the papers laid on the table was that the Governments unconnected with the laws of this country and the rights of asylum, which were never refused to political refugees. Those rights, however, had been explained by the late Government, and the consolatory assurance of the present Government had so far operated that no disinclination which had prevailed, that he thought it would be extreme unadvisable to give a new stimulus to the matter by passing a positive resolution of that House.

Mr ANSTEY supported the motion.

Lord PALMERSTON said he thought that the hon. member for Pontfret (Mr. Milnes) had acted quite right in bringing this subject under the consideration of the House; and he was of opinion that the right hon gentleman the Secretary for the Home Department did not satisfactorily state that it was the intention of the Government to enforce those rights in respect to British travellers abroad for which they were entitled. The Austrian Government seemed disposed to retaliate in their conduct towards British travellers, for not obtaining an acquiescence to their wishes from the British Government in reference to foreign refugees in this country, which they ought to have known this Government by law could not give. He would, however, suggest to his hon. friend the propriety of not pressing his motion, as the object of it was in a considerable degree achieved by the discussion that had already taken place upon the subject.

Sir JOHN WALSH said that discussions of this character, in the present aspect of Europe, were at all events to promote the cause of peace and amity between the country and foreign nations.

Mr. V. SMITH congratulated that British travellers were placed in a worse position than they were in before the recent correspondence had taken place.

Mr HALLIE DICKINSON thought it was much to be regretted that the motion had been brought forward, as the result of it was likely to be most mischievous.

Sir HARRY VERNEY said, that when he was abroad he was put under surveillance for three weeks by the Austrian Government, in consequence, he was informed, of relatives of his having spoken and voted in the House in favor of compelling the settlement of the Austrian loan.

Mr. HENLEY said, that he was not aware of any inconvenience having been suffered in consequence of the writing of the despatch that had been so frequently referred to. He concluded by moving, as an amendment, "that the previous question," which was immediately carried without a division.

BRIBERY AT HARWICH.

Sir DE LACY EVANS moved for leave to bring in a bill for appointing Commissioners to inquire into the existence of bribery in the borough of Harwich.

Mr. WALPOLE was opposed to the motion, because the powers vested in such commissions were of an exorbitant and unconstitutional character, and afforded an instrument to a majority in that House to get rid of constituencies who might be opposed to their views. Such commissions should not be issued unless when the bribery and corruption had been proved to be very gross and when it had been of recent occurrence; but this was not the position of Harwich, the case of which had not been opened for the last twelve months. And as they were on the eve of a general election, he thought it inexpedient to issue such a commission.

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE supported the motion, and said if it were not acceded to, a writ should at once issue for the election of a member for Harwich.

Mr. BARNES had voted against the commission for St. Alban's, and would also vote against this; but, if the hon member had moved for a committee of inquiry, composed of members of that House, he would not have opposed it.

Mr. ROEBUCK stated why the writ had ever been suspended. If they were not prepared to institute an inquiry? He thought that this inquiry should have been entered into long ago.

The House then divided—

For the motion	.. ..	95
Against it	.. ..	137
Majority against the motion	..	—42

The motion was accordingly lost.

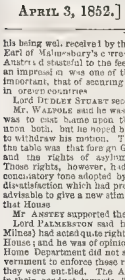
Mr T. DUNCOMBE then moved that the Speaker do issue his warrant for the election of a member for the borough of Harwich.

After a few discussion, in which Mr. Bright, Sir John Tyrrell, Mr Newdegate, and other hon members took part,

Mr. WALPOLE said he would prefer that one notice should be given, so that no unfair advantage should be given to any party.

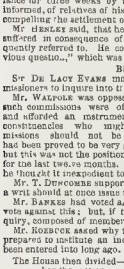
Mr T. DUNCOMBE then withdrew his motion, and gave notice that he would move it on the following day.—Adjourned

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.



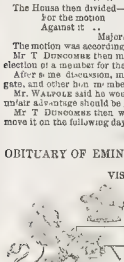
VISCOUNTESS HAWARDEN.

The death of this lady, Jane Crawford, wife of Colonel Viscount Hawarden, and daughter of Patrick Crawford Bruce, Esq., of Taplow Lodge Bucks, occurred at Calais, on the 24 h ult. By her marriage with Lord Hawarden, which was solemnized July 8, 1811, she had one son, the Hon Cornwallis Maude, Captain of a Life Guards, and four daughters—Isabella, married to Captain Charles Aynsley Tottenham, 21 Life Guards; Adelaide Countess of Yarborough; Florence-Priscilla-Alicia, wife of the Hon. Charles Cornwallis Neville, and Augusta.



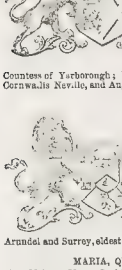
LADY LYONS.

AUGUSTA-LOUISA, wife of Rear-Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons, Bart., G.C.B., her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Sweden, died at Stockholm, on the 10th ult. Her Ladyship was the daughter and co-heir of the late Captain Josias Rogers, R.N. Her marriage took place in 1814, and its issue consists of two sons and two daughters, the younger of the latter being the wife of the present Earl of Arundel and Surrey, eldest son of the Duke of Norfolk.



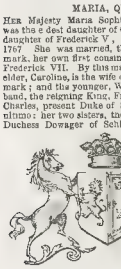
MARIA, QUEEN DOWAGER OF DENMARK.

Her Majesty Maria Sophia Frederica, senior Queen Dowager of Denmark, was the eldest daughter of Charles Landgrave of Hesse, by his consort Louisa, daughter of Frederick V., King of Denmark, and was born the 28th October, 1767 She was married, the 31st July, 1790, to Frederick VI., King of Denmark, her own first cousin, and cousin also of the present reigning Monarch Frederick VII. By this marriage her Majesty had two daughters, of whom the elder, Caroline, is the wife of Frederick, the present hereditary Prince of Denmark; and the younger, Wilhelmina, having been divorced from her first husband, the reigning King, Frederick VII., when Princess, was married secondly to Charles, present Duke of Schleswig-Holstein. Queen Maria died on the 22d ultimo: her two sisters, the Princess Juliana, Abbess of Itzehoe, and Louisa Duchess Dowager of Schleswig-Holstein, survive her. There is now living another and younger Queen Dowager of Denmark, Caroline, widow of the late King Christian VIII., and step-mother of his present Danish Majesty.



BARONESS MILFORD.

ELIZA LADY MILFORD, wife of Richard Lord Milford, was only daughter of the late John Gordon, Esq., of Hanwell. Her Ladyship died on the 24th ult., at Pau in Gascle, after a long and painful illness. She had no child.



SIR JOHN SHELLEY, BART., OF MARESFIELD PARK, SUSSEX.

This Baronet, the head of the ancient Sussex family of Shelley, of which Sir Percy Shelley, Bart., and Lord De Lisle are junior branches, died on the 28th ult., at Lonsdale House, Fulham, in his 81st year. He was born 3d Mar h, 1772, the only son of Sir John Shelley, fifth baronet, of Michelgrove, M.P., by Wilhelmina, his first wife, daughter of John Newnham, Esq., of Maresfield Park He inherited the title at the early age of eleven, and has, consequently, enjoyed it for no less a period than sixty-nine years. He married, 8th June, 1807, Frances, only daughter and heiress of Thomas Winckley, Esq., of Brockholes, county Lancaster, and had four sons and two daughters. Of the former, the eldest is now Sir John Villiers Shelley, seventh Baronet. The late Sir John Shelley had claim to the old barony of Shelley, as represented lative of Alice Be kenap one of the co-heirs.

The Rev. Henry Brown is appoin
Australia.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NOTICE. If Black takes the Kt with his King at the 3rd move, in Problem No. 428, or plays in any other way, White mates by taking the Q with his bishop, through the uncovered check of the Kt.

CHESS.—Sale's book on the St George's Chess Club is three guin as per annum for town members, and half-a-guinea per annum for country members. Subscriptions for the ensuing year should be forwarded without delay to Captain Kennedy, 2, Cleveland-row, St. James's.

QUIZ.—We know no rule you speak of was enacted, and it is by no rules by which the secret object can be achieved.

LANDGRAVE.—For us, as well as ornament, we prefer the "Terrace" Chess-board of Mechanic's Magazine.

STEVENS.—Your problem we have each two solutions, and are much too easy to admit.

ETTO.—The move in question is be Mr, or Jack sch. We can only say it is impossible danger that could occur from Bacon's moving his King to its Queen's second square.

HASTINGS, Stettin.—In the position given, the White Knight, which might prevented moving, is not deprived of his protective power; and, consequently, the White King cannot capture Bishop.

SAM SLICK.—We cannot understand the question as you put it. Try again, and express yourself in plain English.

F. K. H. Cambridge, U.S.—See our Number for February 21

J. F. Shrewsbury.—In such a case you could, of course, insist upon your discovering what your Rook with the pawn became first on the 8th.

F—l. In the solution of Mr Bolton's problem, at move 4 the Pawn takes Pawn in passing, and has discovers check with the Queen. We should have thought it unnecessary to point out so much as to misunderstand the move. 2 In the other instance, the word "check" is obviously superfluous.

VETO.—A player is not "stalemated" while he can move a piece or Pawn; and in the position given, what is to hinder White from playing the Bishop or Kt at his own or at his Pawn?

J. B. Northwood.—The one publi hed last instant y admits of another evident solution That of 3 moves can be done as well as that of 2 moves can be done in 2 or 1 that in 6 or 3 as 40.

J. W. I. O. H. S. of Wrotham.—Your unbound edly in the right Having copied our last game from your notes and all from the M s of Major Jenkins, we omit both observe, and it was pointed out by our friends at last meeting at our rooms. JUDY, that the two great Russian masters gave up their hard fight as a drawn battle at the very moment Major Jenkins had the game in all hands. The position of the moves have been accurately recorded in the original hands.

White's Kts. at Queen's 6th, Pawns at Q B 7th and Q R 6th. Black's: King at Q R square, Pawns at Q B 2d.

E. D. (Ia ross).—The prob em in question admits unfortunately, of at least two solutions, one of them so obvious as to deprive it of all merit.

AMELIA.—It is quite correct

JUDY.—Kindly favor us with more problems to solve her Problem called "Stella," in the April Number of the Chess Players' Chronicle, will set up at the pieces one square more to the left than they are placed on the diagram

P. ROBINSON.—It shall be attended to.

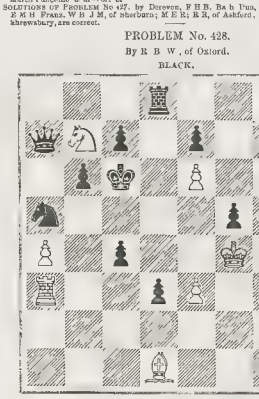
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 426 by D'Or Alva, Gambitto, Phile, Judy, Argus, Toby, Punch, Mercy, Pacifico and another.

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 427, by Dereven, F H B, Ba b Tun, Sr Edmund, P S, Viola, A Fen, Frank, W J M, of Shrobury, M E R, E, of Ashford, Amelia, W B I, Jack of Shrewsbury, are correct.

PROBLEM No. 428.

By R B W, of Oxford.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN RUSSIA.

Game played last month at St. Petersburgh, between Messrs. SHUMOFF and JAENISCH.

(King's Bishop's Gambit)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. J)	WHITE (Mr S)	BLACK (Mr. J.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	15. B to Q R 3d (ch)	K to Q 3d (e)
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P	16. Kt to K 5th (ch)	B takes Kt.
3. B to Q B 4th	Q to K R 5th (ch)	17. Q takes Q	Q Kt takes K B
4. K to B sq	P to K Kt 4th	18. B takes Q Kt (d)	Kt to K 6th (ch)
5. Kt to K B 3d	B to K Kt 2d	19. K to B 2d	K takes B
6. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3d	20 P takes K Kt P	B to K Kt 5th
7. K to Q Bth	K to Q sq	21. Q to K R 4th	B takes Q P
8. P to K 5th	Kt to Q B 3d (a)	22. P takes P (disch)	K to K sq
9 Kt to K B 3d	Q to K R 4th	23. Q to K Kt 5th	Kt to K B 4th (disch)
10. P to K R 4th	P to K R 3d		Q R to K sq
11. P to Q Kt 4th (b)	K Kt to K 2d	24. K to his sq (e)	(ch)
12. Kt takes Q B P	K takes Kt		B to K Kt sq
13. P takes P (ch)	K takes P	25 K to Q 2d	B to K 6th (ch)
14. P to Q Kt 5th	Kt to Q R 4th	26. Q takes Kt (f)

And wins.

Notes by M. Jaenisch.

(a) This, in our opinion, is the best defence in the present variation of the Bishop's Gambit for if instead we play Black to Q B 2d (an inferior, for it would be if White by 9 White to Q B 3d. Black P to Q Kt 4th. 10. White B to K 2d, and the defence of the Gambit Pawn would become extremely difficult in the ex.

(b) An enormous and subtle pre para tion for the sacrifice of the Kt on the 12th move.

(c) An obvious error, which, however, we were afterwards enabled to re-em, in a manner subtle enough to disc. I will be seen, however, the proper th. to Q B 2d as we have been attended by consequences anything but favorable to Black. For suppose 13. Black K to K B 2d; 14. White to K Kt 5th, and the Queen has no resource save to retire to Kt sq, when Black K Kt to K 4th instead of Q Kt to Q R 4th. It is, however, difficult to foresee the issue of so complex an op

(d) If White Q also Kt P, or P takes B, would have given White the victory The fatal

(e) White K to his Kt 3d as a necessity to the loss of the game.

(f) White K to B sq would have been answered by 21 Black Kt to his 8th (ch) 22 White K to his sq Black B to Q 4th (ch) 23 White K to B 2d. Black Kt to K B 5th. &c

(g) If White to K R 5th would have been of no avail, on account of 25 Black R takes Q 27. White P Queens. Black B takes Q &c

CHESS ENIGMAS

No 724.—This curious position is by R. B. W., of Oxford.

White's: K at Q 8th, R at Q 5th, Kts at K B 4th and K 8th; Pa at K Kt 4th and 6th, K B 2d, Q R 3d, and Q R 4th and 6th.

Black's: K at K 8th; Pa at K B 6th, Q 3d, 5th, and 6th, and Q B 6th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No 725.—By Mr TORTON.

White's: K at h B 3d, Q a K 8 7th, Rs at Q Kt. and Q B 3d, B at Q 7th, Kt at Q R 4th

Black's: K at Q 5th, Q at Q Kt sq, R at K 4th, B at Q Kt's 3d, Kt at K R 6th and Q 3d.

White to play, and mate in three moves

No. 726.—By JUDY

White's. K at his 6th, R at K 2d, B at K Kt 4th, Kt at K Kt 2d.

Black's: K at K 8th; P at K 6th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 727.—By JUDY.

White's: K at K B 8th, B at Q sq, Kt at K R sq; Pa at K Kt 2d, K B 3d, and K 4th.

Black's: K at K R 8th; Pa at K R 2d and 3d, and K 6th.

White to play, and mate in six moves.

No. 728.—By E. B. C., an American Amateur.

White's: K at Q R sq, R at K 3d, Bs at K R 3d and Q R 7th, Pa at K R 4th and Q 3d.

Black's. K at K B 5th, Pa at K R 2d and K R 3d.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 729 By the Same.

White's: K at Q 3d, Q at Q Kt 7th, R at K R 5th, Kt at K Kt 5th, P at K Kt 4th.

Black's: K at Q 3d, R at K 3d and Q B 3d, B at K sq, P at Q Kt 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

THE NEW BRIDGE OVER THE THAMES AT WESTMINSTER.—The following are the resolutions which conclude the report of the Westminster Bridge commission just issued:—1. That the present bridge should be used as a temporary bridge until a new bridge shall have been constructed. 2. That a new bridge should be constructed adjoining, or as near as possible to the present bridge, on the north side—that is, lower down the river. 3 That the new bridge should not be less than 60 feet in width, including the footways. 4. That it be constructed of iron, with stone piers. 5 That it consist of no more than five arches. 6. That the height of the headway of the centre arch above Trinity datum be not less than 25 ft. 6 in. 7. That it is desirable that no time should be lost in making preparations for the commencement of the work.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from Berlin state that Professor Rauch has just completed his statue of Immanuel Kant, the author of the "Transcendental Philosophy." It is to serve as a model for the memorial which it is proposed to erect on the Put o phian grave at Königsberg, so called as having been Kant's favourite promenade. The figure represents the philosopher in a standing posture, holding a book in one hand, and with the right hand raised in the act of demonstration.

On the 9th ult., at the assizes of Ostrowo, in Prussia, eight robbers were in one day condemned to three years' term of beheading.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ship Montrose, for a long time employed in the Peninsular mail service, has been sold to the Portuguese Government. She is to be fitted with new boilers, and undergo a thorough refit, after which she will be turned over to her new owners. She is to be employed in running between Lisbon and the Portuguese settlements on the east and west Africa.

A fatal accident occurred on Friday week, on the railway between Brighton and Hastings. A Mrs. Edwards, between fifty and sixty years of age, residing with her son, a pastrycook, in Steine-road, St. Leonard's, jumped from a third-class carriage, and received injuries which speedily terminated in death. It is supposed that the unfortunate was not committed the rash act in consequence of having inadvertently passed the Bexhill Station, at which she meant to have stopped.

The bill to enable her Majesty to abolish otherwise than by treaty, on condition of free prodity, different tial duties on for eign sh pa, was printed on Saturday. It provides, that when the trade and shipping of Great Britain have been placed in the ports of any foreign power on a footing of reciprocity, her Majesty may issue an order in council; and thereupon the provisions of the 9th Geo. 4, c. 88, shall be applicable

Information has been given that the parish church of Kilgarran, near Cardigan, had been opened, and robbed of a silver communion cup, very old, and bearing the Latin inscription, "Poculum ecclesiæ de Kilgerran."

On Saturday morning the High Sheriff's state carriage being in waiting in the Castle-yard, at Exeter, to convey the Hon. Justice Erle to his lodgings on the termination of a trial, and just as the coachman was about to mount the box, the horses being frightened at the rush of people from the court, dashed down Castle-street at a furious rate, and against the shop front of Mr. Courti, jeweller, in High-street. The shutters and windows were smashed, and property damaged to the amount it is said, of from £200 to £300 The pole of the carriage was broken, and one of the horses much cut; but the carriage was uninjured

During the forthcoming season large transhipments of continental emigrants via Liverpool to New York are expected, caused by the low fare from that port From Bremen to New York the fare is about £5; while from Liverpool the charge is only from 50s. to £3; and the passengers from Bremen to the latter port are under 30s. Bodies of emigrants from Cob ents, Hamburg, Leipsic, &c., have arrived at and departed from Liverpool during the past week.

The Earl of Derby has accepted (says the Preston Chronicle) the office of President of the Royal North Lancas hi e Agricultural Society, and has promised to attend the annual meeting at Preston, in S ptember.

A "Ragged-school" shoe-black society has been formed in Dublin, in connexion with the London society Several boys are now stationed in different parts of the city. It is proposed, also, to place others in connex on with private houses, to clean down the steps and pathways before the hall-doors, and to be employed in other useful ways

Mr. Sheriff Swift, of London, with his chaplain, the Rev. Dr. O'Connor, is on a visit at Tuam, with Archbishop Macha e.

Dr. Rae, who has for some years been engaged in command of an exp dition on the north coast of North America, in search of Franklin and his lost ship or papers, has arrived in England, and has had interviews with the Admiralty and the Hudson's Bay Company

Glasgow is about to petition the House of Commons for one of the four seats now unoccupied in that assembly. Shieldridge is also in the field. The Gorbals side of the Clyde, says a Glasgow paper, contains a larger population than dozens of boroughs which now return two members.

In accordance with orders issued by his Grace the Duke of Wellington, as Constable of the Tower, the whole of the menagerie buildings, guardhouse, and other erections opposite the west entrance fronting to Thames-street have been removed, and on Saturday the space, which had been stockaded and laid down with gravel walks and a meadamised pavement, was opened to the public.

A schoolmaster at Stockton, named Harker, has been committed for trial on a charge of manslaughter, in having caused the death of one of his scholars by beating

The Notts Guardian states that Mr. Roger O'Connor, the nephew of Mr. Feargus O'Connor, M.P., has appealed to the English Chartists to raise funds for his "unfortunate relative."

Two Belgian Franciscan friars, Father Louis de Weist, and Father Robert Vanderyst, are about to proceed to Palestine, by Marseilles, the French Government granting them a free passage in one of the mail steamers.

A portion of a large parcel of foreign watches imported for the purpose of delivery for use in this country, on payment of the duties, has been seized by the officers of the revenue as forfeited, under the act 5 and 6 Vict., c. 85, s. 43, in consequence of their being illegally marked with the name and address of a British manufacturer, with the obvious intent of passing them off as British made articles.

Notwithstanding some opposition from the American Institute, the act of Legislature incorporating the association for the exhibition of the Industry of All Nations at New York, in its final stage, received the signature of the Governor of the state on the 14th ult. The site has unanimously passed by the senate. Sir Joseph Paxton's design is to be carried out in the building.

On Saturday last intelligence reached Lloyd's that several bundles of printed papers of instructions from the directors of the Royal West India Mail Steam Packet Company to the officers of the steamer Amazon had been picked up by the Monkey fishing-boat, three miles S.E. of Penlee Point, coast of Cornwall.

Accounts have been received of the melancholy shipwreck and total loss of the ship Amy, of London, while on her passage from Bombay, Bay of Biscaise, for Cork, on the coast of Ireland. At the time of the wreck, the exception of three, part with water, gave the ship was a fine vessel, 400 tons burthen.

A poor widow, named Ellicombe, residing at Teignmouth, was standing near the top of the beach, when, startled by another attack of the pestilent, she fled headlong, and severely fractured her thigh, but bone protruding through the skin. She is not expected to live.

The Royal Australian Mail Steam Navigation Company received on Tuesday the grant of a charter of incorporation.

A Clonakilty (Cork and Dublin) committees of the Cork Exhibition held in the Corn with Lord Lighton on Tuesday. His Excellency promised his departmental his warmest support.

On Tuesday his Royal Highness the Duke d'Aquila (brother of the King of Naples), accompanied by H. R. H. the Duchess (sister to the Emperor of Brazil), arrived at Mivart's Hotel, attended by a numerous suite.

The following dividends are now in the Bank, with engraints:—The Great Western Shipping, on Sea shares, 10s. per share; the Argyle, of 384 tons, 5s. per share per day; and the Sir Robert Sale of 741 tons, 5s. per day.

From Bres au, in Prussia, under date the 23d ult., we learn that a nearly new threatens to spe dily in Gen. The prices have been leaving for the next fortnight:—Rye 8 silver groschen per scheffel, wheat 10 ditto, and barley two ditto, per bushe lower than in February. Oats alone keep up. This last is caused chiefly by reports from abroad, of the market there being badly supplied, and the large exports, both by land and by the rivers of the country, would certainly occasion a rise were it not for the favourable reports from foreign markets

St. Brelon, a colonist in Algeria, has started up as a rival to Gerard, the celebrated lion-killer. An enormous lion having called great destruction, and done considerable injury to the colony of Sandivi, near Bona, by carrying off several of the domestic animals belonging to M. Brelon took the field against this monarch of the forest, and a short time since succeeded in killing him. The lion measures two metres fifty centimetres in length. The neighbouring Arab tribes came in numbers to examine the fortunate conqueror, as they regard the lion who is in a sense as a superior being

The strike of the shipwrights belonging to the yards at Hylton on the Wear terminated on Saturday last, having lasted twenty weeks. The masters and men have come to a compromise

Lord Brougham's bill, in reference to the assembling of Parliament, declares, "that, so often as her Majesty shall by her Royal proclamation appoint a time for the first meeting of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland after a dissolution thereof, the House not to be appointed may be at any time not less than thirty-five days after the date of the proclamation," the act of the fifth year of Queen Anne, c. 8, or the act of the 7th and 8th years of William 3, c. 25, or any other law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

On Tuesday evening, as James Buckmaster, a well known whip, and a driver of a Waterloo omnibus, was seated on the box seat at the York and Albany, Regent's Park, he fell to the ground a corpse.

It is stated that extensive arrangements are being made for giving facilities to tourists to visit Ireland next summer, and it is highly probable that a more than usual number of the personal pleasure travellers will now prefer Ireland to the Continent.

The Board of Ordnance have determined upon erecting a battery of guns on the eastern point of Brownsea Island, near Dorset, as a party of the Royal Engineers have been engaged in examining and inspecting the land and the adjacent coast, for the construction of defences for the better protection of the Brownsea Channel at that point. The battery at Poole Park, Mudeford Haven, is likewise to be altered, at an expense of nearly £4,000, and it is said that additional defences in the Haven are to be erected at a cost of £5,000.

On the morning of the 23d ult., the ship Emma, of London, 450 tons register, from Honduras to Queenstown for orders, with a valuable cargo of mahogany, logwood, &c., struck on a sunken rock a little to the east of Flaraves Bay, Dunworly, on the south coast of Ireland, and instantly became a total wreck, when, the anxiety to relate, fifteen out of the eighteen hands on board met with a watery grave.

THE LAMBETH WATER COMPANY'S NEW WORKS.

OPENING OF THE NEW WORKS OF THE LAMBETH WATER COMPANY, SEETHING WELLS, DITTON.

On Tuesday, the Lambeth Water Company celebrated the opening of their new works at Seething Wells by a well-appointed déjeûner upon the premises. The great utility of the works, and the liberal and enterprising spirit which characterise their construction, merit an extended notice.

The object of the Lambeth Water Company is to meet the objections that have been raised against the alleged impurity of the source (near Hungerford-bridge) whence they have heretofore derived their supply of water. In the year 1848 they obtained an act to enable them to construct new works; and, as soon as they could procure the necessary funds, they commenced the prosecution of the works in question, which they have carried out at their own sole cost and risk; abandoning the present source of supply, and conveying the water from the Thames at Ditton to their reservoirs at Brixton and Streatham, where it is to be distributed to new districts, and also supplied to their present tenants.

The works adjoin the Surrey bank of the Thames, parallel with which are four filtering basins, covering several acres of ground, and into which the water is admitted through two sluices. These sluices have each an iron grating, to prevent the passage of weeds, &c., and a frame of fine gauze-wire, which effectually shuts out from the filtering reservoirs the more minute impurities of the parent source of supply. The water, having passed through these "sieves," finds its way into the filters by the following process:—The bottom of the filters consists of several brick channels, through which the water, when purified, flows into a well, whence it is pumped into the supply pipe. Over these channels are placed, transversely, slabs of slate, some half-inch apart, to admit of a free passage of the water through the filtering materials. These are, first, a stratum of coarse gravel; next fine gravel; then shells, and on the top a layer of fine sand. The supply pipe is 30 inches in diameter, and extends from the works at Ditton to the reservoirs at Brixton and Streatham, by the way of Merton and Tooting, a considerable length of it running along the north side of the South-Western Railway. The site of the new works at Ditton is about 23 miles by the course of the river above London-bridge, and upwards of three miles beyond the range of the tide; but the length of the supply pipe from the works to Brixton is 10¾ miles.

The steam pumping-engines are of 600 horse-power, and are equal to the supply of about 10,000,000 gallons of water daily into the Company's reservoirs at Brixton. They have been constructed from the designs of Mr. James Simpson, the Company's engineer, and are most efficient for the purposes, and of admirable workmanship.

The money powers of the Company's act enable them to raise £200,000 for the purpose of carrying out these important works and matters connected with them; and it is stated that the works themselves have cost about £150,000. The Company do not, however, confine their operations to laying down one 30-inch aquaduct or supply pipe. They have taken ground sufficient for laying down four pipes, and they have, with a due regard to economy, already carried a couple of pipes over some small water-ways; so that when a second through main pipe shall become necessary, the work may be carried out at the least possible cost of time and money. The engineer has, by embankments and cuttings, preserved a uniform gradient for the passage of the water through the pipe.

THE FILTERING BASINS OF THE LAMBETH WATER COMPANY'S NEW WORKS, DITTON

With regard to the purity of the water to be supplied by means of these new works of the Lambeth Water Company, it is worth notice that the Act of Parliament requires that the whole of the water pumped from them shall be filtered; and not a drop of water can find its way into the purifying well except through the filters.

The engines working at full power would force the water from Ditton, through the pipe, to Brixton, in about eight hours. A pressure of about eight feet is required to force the water through the filtering beds into the channel below.

A large and highly-respectable company (about 250 in number) were present on Tuesday at the déjeûner, amongst whom we observed Mr. J. C. Peache, the chairman of the Lambeth Water-works Company; Lieutenant-Colonel Sir J. Wilson, Sir J. Duke, M.P.; Mr. Geach, M.P.; Mr. C. H. Gregory, Mr. Hawkshaw, Mr. Pepper, the Mayor of Kingston; Mr. W. C. Myine, of the New River Company; Mr. Dakin, Mr. Horsley Palmer, Mr. A. B. Cochrane, Mr. C. Wordsworth, standing counsel of the Institution of Civil Engineers; Mr. J. Simpson, the engineer of the works; Mr. W. Simpson, the Rev. J. H. Randolph, &c.

The guests were shown over the works, and the water was let into the filtering reservoirs, in one of which the whole method of filtering was exhibited. They afterwards visited the engine-house, and the chairman having started the engines, the ceremony of naming the engines the "James and William Simpson" was performed amidst hearty cheering.

The chairman of the Lambeth Water-works Company presided at the déjeûner, at which some excellent speeches were delivered on the beneficial results of a private enterprise as compared with "Government works." The déjeûner was creditably managed by Mr. Hart, of the Swan, at Thames Ditton; and Mr. Harker was, as usual, a very efficient toastmaster.

TESTIMONIAL TO P. W. S. MILES, ESQ., M.P.

This elegant Casket, containing the freedom[1] of the Society of Merchant Venturers of the city of Bristol, has lately been presented to CASKET, CONTAINING THE FREEDOM OF THE SOCIETY OF MERCHANT VENTURERS OF BRISTOL, PRESENTED TO P. W. S. MILES, ESQ., M.P.

P. W. S. Miles, Esq., M.P. for that city in 1851. The groundwork of the casket is ebony, with elaborate silver gilt scrolls in the cinque cento style mounted upon it. The arms of the company are on the cover in high relief, surrounded by engravings in the compartments, symbolising the quarters of the globe, while the dolphins composing the feet are the crest of the celebrated Edward Colston, who, being of the fraternity, constituted the Society of Merchant Venturers the trustees and almoners of his noble charities in the city of Bristol. This unique drawingroom ornament was manufactured by Messrs. Charles Taylor and Son, of Bristol, and reflects the very highest credit on their taste in the design, and skill in the workmanship of it.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

"THE MOTHER'S HOPE." BY J. SANT.

We have already, in our notices of the pictures in the British Institution, made mention of the two very effective pieces exhibited by Mr. Sant. That of "Music" we have already engraved; and in now presenting our readers with the companion picture, entitled "The Mother's Hope," we need hardly repeat the praise which we bestowed upon the composition, which is here re-embodied to speak for itself. The attitude of the child is bold, original, and natural withal; and the face of the young mother beams with innocent pride and fullness of joy, as she gazes upon a scene the magnificent poetry of which none but mothers can truly and deeply appreciate:

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH ARTISTS.—"OLIVIA AND SOPHIA" (SCENE FROM "VICAR OF WAKEFIELD"). PAINTED BY C. BAXTER

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.—"THE MOTHER'S HOPE."—PAINTED BY J. SANT.

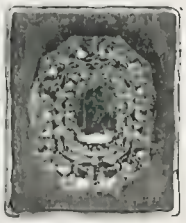
> Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
> Calls back the lovely April of her prime.

STEREOSCOPIC DAGUERREOTYPES.

The Emperor of Russia has recently transmitted to M. Claudet, the eminent photographer, of Regent-street, a magnificent diamond ring, in acknowledgment of the pleasure which his Majesty has experienced in examining by the aid of Mr. Wheatstone's ingenious invention, called the Stereoscope, a series of Daguerreotype views of the Great Exhibition, taken by M. Claudet, and forwarded by him to St. Petersburg for the Emperor's inspection. The present is accompanied by a very complimentary letter, in which it is stated that the Emperor has been enabled, by these views, and by the marvellous phenomenon of plane surfaces producing representations of objects in perfect relief, "to form a correct idea of the Great Exhibition." It is also stated that the present is made in acknowledgment of M. Claudet's "constant endeavours ever since 1839 to improve the interesting art of photography."



RING, PRESENTED BY THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA TO M. CLAUDET.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

The 29th Exhibition of the Society of British Artists was opened to the public on Monday last. The collection consists of 667 pieces, of which the members of the society claim the "lion's share," W. West sending 17; Zeitter, 16; H. Hurlstone, 14; Boddington and Clint, 12 each; and several others 11, 10, &c. The contributions from without are generally in modest ones and twos. This fact, though one naturally to be expected, and easily explained in reference to a self-supporting institution, certainly deprives the Suffolk-street annual Exhibition of much of the interest that would otherwise attach to it, and makes us wish that some other arrangement might be adopted which should afford a more open field to the pictorial talent of the country. The favouritism of the Trafalgar-square aristocracy has long been matter of complaint with artists and the public, and it is high time that their monopoly, so woefully misused, should be broken up. Of the numerous other institutions established as harbours of refuge for genius struggling in neglect, the Society of British Artists, by priority of date, as well as by convenience of site, and other advantages, would claim to stand first in order in the good work of asserting the principles of free trade in art. Perhaps a very small amount of public assistance (which, by the way, has been talked of at times) might enable them to take up this position with advantage; and, if we thought so, we should have no objection to see it afforded to them. Our own convictions, however, are decidedly in favour of the self-supporting principle; and, looking at the experience of the first attempts of the Society of Arts, now nearly a century ago, and the enormous and increasing income derived from the public in shillings by the Royal Academy, looking at the jealousies and misgivings which attend the struggle for fame and fortune in the aristocratic emporium of Trafalgar square, we are convinced that if the walls of the Suffolk-street, or any other conveniently situated gallery, were thrown open on a free competition of talent, the highest merit of the kind would gladly avail itself of the opportunity thus afforded it, whilst the public with their shillings would amply repay the outlay incurred, and give a handsome profit on the investment.

It is really astonishing and perplexing that artists will not look upon the subject in this light; but, until they do so, the monopoly of Trafalgar-square must continue to flourish, and art to languish in the trammels of fashion and authority. The jealousies of artists are unfortunately proverbial, and it is in the dissension that the fault

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The second concert, on Monday night, was honoured with the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the officers of state. The room was crowded to excess with a fashionable company, amongst whom was the Duke of Wellington. The Queen was received by the directors of the society, and on her Majesty's entrance, the band, under Costa's guidance, performed the National Anthem. The programme comprised one symphony, the "Pastorale" of Beethoven, three overtures—the "Calm and Prosperous Voyage" of Mendelssohn, the "Deux Journées" of Cherubini, and the "Ruler of the Spirits" of Weber; and a duetto concertante for violoncello and contrabasso, executed with great skill by Piatti and Howell. It is needless to add that the instrumental pieces were played with the highest precision and spirit: the storm movement in the symphony never went more astonishingly.

The vocal gleanings were equally delightful and varied. Philharmonic science. Mr. Sims Reeves had to open with the trying scena of Florestan in the dungeon, from Beethoven's "Fidelio" the symphonies, forming the long entr'acte and the full accompaniments, rather than their most impressionable for the concert-room. Mozart's duo, "La dove prende," from "Il Flauto Magico" (known as the "Manly Leart"), was nicely given by Madame Castellan and Signor Ronconi, though the inaction of the latter at starting was very perceptible in the air by Stradella, "Se in mie sospiri," the great baritone made a deep impression, by profound pathos and intellectual interpretation. Madame Castellan sang the air, "Ah ritorno," with Mr. Blagrove's violin obligato, composed for the society by Mendelssohn, being the same music she gave at the first concert: the interest of this composition is more in the orchestration than in the vocal passages, the difficulties of which were artistically conquered by the fair vocalist, who is always heard to the best advantage in a concert-room. Mr. Sims Reeves and Signor Ronconi dashed off in admirable style Rossini's beautiful duetto "I Mariani," to which Costa has added such exquisitely picturesque and descriptive accompaniments.

The Royal amateurs remained until the conclusion of the performance (the selection of which was due to the classic taste of Prince Albert), and were much cheered on their departure.

The third concert will be on the 19th of April.

WINTER MUSICAL EVENINGS.

At the fifth concert, M. Léonard, the celebrated Belgian violinist, made his first appearance in this country. He led in Mozart's quintet in C Minor; in Beethoven's trio in B flat, Op 97, Mr. Aguilar and Piatti taking the pianoforte and violoncello parts, and in Mendelssohn's quartet No 5, Op. 44, in E minor, M. Léonard also performed a solo, taking for his text Haydn's national melody, "God preserve the Emperor." The instrumental pieces were relieved by the singing of Herr Formes, I forget the consul (Vardot and Malvolan), who visited this country in 1848, and gained distinction in Spanish melodies.

The sixth and last concert of the series was given last night at Willis's Rooms, bringing to a conclusion these delightful entertainments. M. Léonard was the lion of the programme: he has established himself as one of the first of violinists. Herr Pauer, the pianist, in her Beethoven, M de Munck, the violoncellist, M. Ganz, and M. Léonard afforded their aid: and Madame Sainton Dolby, Signor Marras were the vocalists. Hummel's pianoforte quintet, Haydn's quartet in C minor, Beethoven's duet in E flat, Op 12. for pianoforte and violin, were included in the scheme, as also a concerto by Léonard.

THE WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The 13th anniversary festival was celebrated on the 26th ult., in Freemasons' Hall: 2 Evening, the regular festival performance, in two chapters. There were upwards of 150 amateurs and professors, besides the ladies who were in the gallery, at this occasion banquet. Amongst the former were—Sir John Harrington, Sir H. R. Bishop, Dr. Rimbault, Dr. King, music, Shoubridge, Foster, Bradbury, Montem Smith, Spencer, Cusins, Hill, Mr. Jones, Hobbs, Hawkins, Townsend, Longhurst, Lord, Wadeson, R. J. Wilkinson, Perry, Forbes, Wamsley, Hutchins, Cain, Addison, Sapio, Sykes, Hunting, H. Smith, Chorley, Grimshaw, Bishop, Rippingham, Saumer, G. Budd, Professor Taylor, &c.

The choir consisted of 17 boys (from the Chapel Royal, St. Andrew's, Wellsstreet, the Temple, and Westminster Abbey), 8 altos, 36 tenors, and 38 basses —109 voices in all, whose leading parts were—"Non nobis Domine" and Dr. Cooke's "Amen" was extremely imposing.

The programme comprised W. Byrd's pathetic motett. "How thine ear" (1589). Orlando Gibbons's three part madrigal, "Silver Swanne" (1612), and "Dainty fine bird" (1620); and the following madrigals:—"Sweet Philome," by J. Ward (1613); "I will go die," by Luca Marenzio (1590); "Come, clap thy hands," by T. Weelkes (1597); "Hark! ev. sweet night," and "Now O now have I vowed," by J. Wilsye (1598); "Singing alone," by T. Morley (1595); "Sister awake," by T. Bateson (1604); "Within a green wood." by Ferrabi (1850), "Come, gentle swains," by R. Carrye (1601); and "Sleep, sleep" by Watts" (1667). Under Mr. Turle's judicious direction, the general execution was steady and satisfactory. The occasional toasts, complimentary to the exertions of the chairman and the officers in upholding the society, and the society, were cordially greeted.

CONCERTS.

Under the direction of M. Ronsselot, the first meeting of the Beethoven Quartett Society took place on Friday week, at the Queen Anne street Rooms. Works finely executed by Sainton and Cooper, Hill a Ronsselot, were—No. 3, in D. Op. 18; and No 12, in E flat, Op 127. Mr. Lindsay Sloper also performed Beethoven's Sonata in D with much ability. At Mr. Lindsay's second musical evening, the quartetts were Haydn's No. 71; Spohr's No 4, Op. 45; and Beethoven's Op. 132 as also Mozart's quartett, true in G: the executants were Sainton, Bagrove, Hill, Lindsay Sloper.—On Monday last, the first of a series of "Grand National Concerts," for the encouragement of Musical Talent, in Exeter Hall, was given at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Herr Anschutz, with Mr. Thirlwall as leader of the band, and Messrs. T. Hagen and John Wily as conductors. The vocalists were Miss Dolby, Miss Poole, Miss Williams, Thirlwall, Lawler, Phillips, Poole, Mrs. T. Distin: Messrs. Harrison, G Tedder, Weiss, and Wilbye Cooke. The solo instrumentalists were Miss Goddard (piano), Mr. Richardson (flute), Mr. Distin, and Mr. Lazarus harpists, the Jackson's wood family. The entertainment was precisely of the same quality and quantity as those of the London Wednesday Concerts, at similar prices.—Mr. Butler's sixteenth annual musical entertainment took place at Freemasons' Hall, on Monday.—On Tuesday, Mr. Henry Smith, at Crosby Hall, and Mr. Lindsay Sloper, at the gave concerts—Mr. Neate, the pianist, presented, on Wednesday, in the Queen Anne street Rooms, his fourth quartet and pianoforte soirée, assisted by Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti.—The last of Ella's City Wednesday Concerts took place, at Crosby Hall on the 31st ult., under M. Ella's direction.—On the same evening was the third of the London Wednesday concerts at Exeter Hall, at which Braham, Sivori, Piatti, Reichardt (the German tenor), the Misses Lowe, Stabbach Durand, R. Braham, Lascelles, Maskell, M. Bishop, Brougham, Williams, Baxter, Messent, Jacobs, Messrs. Brandt, G. Tedder, Bernard, Waylett, Smith, H. Smith, Benn, Arbon, and Aguilar appeared.—The Cecilian Society performed Handel's "Israel in Egypt" on Thursday.——Mdlle. Speyer, the pianiste, had a soirée musicale on Thursday, at the Queen Anne-street Rooms, aided by Mr. Aguilar, Miss Dolby, and Mr. Swift.—Mr. Ransonnet, the violinist, gave a soirée last night in the same locality, with the co-operation of Herr Molique, Signor Onorati, and Miss Cundell.——The Sacred Harmonic Society performed last night at Exeter Hall Haydn's "Creation," conducted by Costa; Mdlle. Clara Novello making her first appearance this season, and Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Weiss, and Herr Formes singing in the same oratorio.

MUSICAL EVENTS.

There will be a musical performance at Drury-lane Theatre on Monday night, at which Mendel's oratorio of "Joseph" will be performed. On Tuesday Mr. Allcroft will give a monster concert at Exeter Hall. Herr Jaell (on Thursday), Mr. Billet (on Tuesday) will give musical soirées. The Sacred Harmonic Society will perform the "Messiah" at Exeter Hall on Wednesday. M. Emile Prudent, the pianist, has arrived in London.

NINEVEH, BABYLON, AND LONDON COMPARED.

The area of Babylon was 225 square miles, that of Nineveh 215 square miles, while that of London and its environs is but 114 square miles; so that, with an area of little more than half that of Nineveh, and considerably more than that of Babylon, there is nearly four times greater This may, at first sight, appear a disappointing calculation, considering the great antiquity to which the greatness of "Imperial Nineveh, the earth's pride" has been referred, but upon a closer view of the Eastern and ancient from the Western and modern, or pride in the crowded towns and high streets as types of these arrangements which 3000 years ago prevailed in Asia.—Nineveh and its Palaces," by Joseph Bonomi, F.R.S.A. ("Illustrated London Library"), just published.

LONDON MODEL YACHT CLUB.—The Challenge Cup, value eight guineas, given by this club for the purpose of encouraging model building and sailing, was finally contested for on Monday last, the 29th ult., upon the Serpentine, in Hyde Park, by the following models:—

1st heat: Mr Ackroyd's Alarm, Mr G Sanderson's Caroline, Mr H Ireland's Volante, Mr Cox's Accent, Mr Richard's America, Mr J Bell's Wanderer, Mr Bell's Rival, Mr Caulfield's Mr Taylor's Alligator, Mr Curry's Go, Mr R Richardson's British Tar, Mr Dalton's Commerce, Mr Ackroyd's Alarm, Mr S Taylor's Ocean Queen, Mr Bingham's Corsair, Mr Penn's Pearl, Mr Brooks's Intrepid.

The first heat was won by the Accent, Mr Cox; the British Tar and Alligator; the sixth and seventh heats, by the Ocean Queen, Alligator, and Rose and the British Tar, Alarm, and Caroline. The final heat was decided in favour of the British Tar and Alligator. The Unicorn and Unknown belong to Greenwich, the Corsair to Lambeth, and the rest to London. A model of the America (brought from Brighton, but too late to enter for the match) challenged any five schooners belonging to the club (the Alligator) to sail on the following day (Tuesday). The challenge was accepted, and the match took place at the appointed time, and ended in favour of the Alligator.

The Armagh Guardian states that preparations are making on a magnificent scale for an entertainment in the course of the autumn in Armagh, far exceeding that given in 1840, at Grand Cast. Some Excellent Theatrical Talent has been secured, which will be brought forward during the present season, and no pains or expense will be spared to render the entertainment in every respect worthy of the ancient city.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The ensuing long Passion week, the racing, coursing, and steeple-chase calendars are blank; with Easter commences the Newmarket campaign, when at present odds not promise to be very brilliant until the autumn.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—A very large attendance this afternoon, but chiefly for the purpose of settling on the Northampton meeting: the betting, nevertheless, took rather a wide range, enabling us to make out a more elaborate price current than for some time past.

4 to 1 agst Sirdon	METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.	15 to 1 agst Eichton
10 to 1 —— Rose	10 to 1 agst Backover	25 to 1 —— Officious (c)
16 to 1 —— Miss Anne	14 to 1 —— Kate by the Dart (taken)
	SURBURBAN HANDICAP.
4 to 1 agst Mary Ann (t)	6 to 1 agst Kilkenney (c)	8 to 1 agst Kilkenney (f)
6 to 1 —— Surprise
9 to 2 agst Homebrewed	TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.
	5 to 1 agst Daniel O Rourke	6 to 1 agst Filus
	10 to 1 agst Ambrose
	CHESTER CUP.
16 to 1 agst Scarecrow (t)	25 to 1 agst Surprise	25 to 1 agst Merry Bird (t)
	30 to 1 agst Backover
	DERBY.
5 to 1 agst Hobble Nobis	15 to 1 agst Alfred the Great	17 to 1 agst Claverhouse
12 to 1 —— Augur (t)	16 to 1 —— Orello	20 to 1 —— Lapidist

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.—THURSDAY.

These races came off on Thursday. The weather was very fine, the sun shining as on a May-day, and the course was well attended. The success of the favourite for the great race proved that it was not "April Fool-day" for his backers.

TRIAL STAKES.—Stapleton (Holloway), 1. Puritan, 2.

CITY AND SUBURBAN HANDICAP.—Butterfly (Kendall), 1. Xanthe, 2.

TWO YEAR OLD STAKES.—Senior to Inexhaustible, 1. Gold Dust, 2.

GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES.—Stilton (Carroll), 1. Joe Miller, 2. Nineteen started. A good start was effected. Kate, who had been in much favour for some days before the race, took a strong lead at starting, making the running about eight lengths ahead. At the last turn, Stilton, the favourite, who had been waiting handy, came up, had the race safe at the stand, and won easy by a length.

SELLING STAKES.—Hellotrope, 1. Cesachia, 2.

RAILWAY PLATE.—Timid Fawn, 1. Butterfly, 2.

CROXTON PARK RACES.—TUESDAY.

THE FARMERS' PLATE of £50, and 10 sovs for the second.—Mr. R. Burrows's b. m by Banksman, dam by Sir Gilbert, 1. Mr. G. Parr's Cropwell, 2.

THE SECOND CROXTON CUP, 25 sovs each, and 40 added.—Mr. J. Osborne's Lady Agnes, 1. Mr. Parkinson's Odessus, 2.

THE GRAND HANDICAP, of 20 sovs each, and 5 only if declared.—Mr. Crawford's Rosina, 1. Lord Vane's Nace Jane, 2.

THE BILLESDON COPLOW STAKES.—Proceed, 1. Voltigeur, 2.

HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES.—The Incurable walked over.

THE BATH STAGHOUNDS. — SINGULAR INCIDENT. — Warminster market-place was suddenly disturbed on Friday mid-day week, by the unexpected appearance of a fine stag, which flew panting up the High-street, having escaped from Captain West's staghounds, after a capital run across the downs from Ashook anowle. The animal was secured, and safely lodged in the stables of the King's Arms, where the gallant Captain had a narrow escape from serious injury upon his return, by approaching the infuriated animal.

GREAT RUNNING MATCH.—A race, over twenty miles, took place on Monday last, for a purse, given by Mr. Which twelve of the best pedestrians of the day were engaged. The prizes were for the first man, £20, the second, £5; the third £3; and the fourth £2 The names of the candidates were—Levitt (the champion), Jackson (American Deer), Cook (Greenwich Cow-boy), Adams (Mitcham), Kelley (Chalvey), Murdock (Lanarkshire), Stone (of Pimlico), Martin (Maidstone), Welham (Pancras Cow-boy), Bond (of Whitechapel), Bailey (of Mile-end), and Smith (of Turnham-green). At the seventeenth mile Levitt, Cook, and Adams were left alone to contend, and those three walked over the rest of the distance to a hair's length, Levitt winning the first prize, Cook the second, and Adams the third. The first ten miles were done in 53 minutes 38 seconds, and the first fifteen miles in 1 hour 22 minutes 40 seconds. There were about 15,000 spectators.

PUBLIC BATHS AND WASHHOUSES.—The return for the quarter ending Lady day shows that at the model, Whitechapel, St Martin's-in-the-fields, St. Marylebone, St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster, and Greenwich, the number of baths has been 57,207, and the receipts £1440 11s. 6d.; that the number of washers has been 55,961; the number of hours' washing, &c., 120,967¾; and the receipts, £620 4s. 9d. At Liverpool, Hull, Bristol, Preston, and Birmingham, the number of bathers has been 47,536; the receipts £624 18s.; the number of washers, 12,284; the number of hours of washing, &c., 45,866; and the receipts, £196 3s. 9d. The sum of the combined receipts of five establishments in the provinces which as yet yield no reports, during the past quarter (winter season), is £2065 16s. 1d.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

With the exception of a purchase of about £100 000 Consols on account of the Government, there is no amount of money business doing in the National securities this week has been comparatively small. Prices, however, have been well supported, and very few fluctuations of moment have been officially marked. Considering the immense amount of bullion in the Bank of England, now about £20,000,000 sterling, the fact that the whole of the exchanges are favourable, and that large sums in funds are held by private bankers waiting for profitable investment, the chances are more in favour of a rise than a decline in present rates. Some surprise has been expressed in the City that the three s'eamers from the United States brought no specie; but it must be understood that some heavy investments, exceeding £1,000,000, have lately been made in America for large operators in Cape-court and elsewhere. Should these purchases (off-cted, be it observed, in United States Bonds, which, at present quotations, yield an annual interest of about 8 per cent) be continued, it is probable that the contents of the Illinois Trojan will follow a falling off; yet, on the other hand, it is clear that the large consignments of British manufactured goods to the American continent, and the ready market there found for them, will cause heavy balances to accumulate in favour of parties here. Again, we must not lose sight of the important fact that the produce of gold in California, as well as in Australia, is still rapidly increasing; hence, we should not be surprised to see the Bank rate of discount lower before the expiry of the next nine years considerably in excess of its present amount. In the discount market, the rates of discount have not varied. First-rate bills have been done freely at 2½ per cent; but, owing to the unfavourable opinions which in reference to the stability of certain large firms, bankers in general have continued cautious in their advances. On Monday the Three per Cent Consols were quoted at 98⅝ ⅞; the purchases above referred to had the effect of raising the prices on Tuesday to 98⅞; but that rate of value was not supported at the close. On the following day, in consequence of several sales of stock having been made by jobbers in the Foreign and Railway Markets, for the purpose of paying balances in connexion with the Account, Consols gave way ⅛; having left off 98⅝ ⅞ both for Money and the Account. Business was inactive on Thursday, and the Three per Cents were marked 98⅝ ⅞. At the end of the week the Three per Cents (money) were done at 98⅝ ⅞; and for the new Account, 98⅝ ⅞. Long Annuities, ending Jan. 5, 1860, marked 6¼. India Bonds, £1000, 77s.; Ditto, under £1000, 80s., 77s. prem. Exchequer-bills have sold at 68s. for £1000, and 71s. prem. for small.

One of the leading events in the Foreign Market has been the settlement of the Account, which, on the whole, has been rather an important one. The extreme fluctuations during the period it was open ranged thus:—Mexican 5 per Cents 5x per Cent. Bonds, 1½; Equador, ½; Grenada One-and-a Half per Cents, 1½; Dito Deferred, ½; Mexican, ½; Peruvian Five per Cents, 4; Dito Deferred, 10½; Sardinian Five per Cents, 1; Spanish Active, 1½; Dito Deferred, per Cents, 1½; Venezuela Active, 6; Ditto Deferred, 1½. The rise in Buenos Ayres Stock is easily accounted for, viz. the terms on offer were the River Plate's being finally settled, and there appear to be wide satisfaction to the general contract, which is yielding a very large annual return It is in contemplation to make a gradual extinction of the debt of Peru, and the abundant means in hand justifies the impression that present prices are very low. We observe that the Active Bonds bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent, and the Deferred 1 per cent. from the 1st of April, 1852, the sum of interest undergoing a yearly increase of 1 per cent till the 1st of April, 1856, when it remains fixed at 3 per cent. Instead of being drawn by lot for the purpose of being cancelled, they are now openly purchased in the Market. The Peninsular Bonds have not rallied much, but

NEW BOOKS, &c.

BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY FOR APRIL.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS' LITERARY WORKS, with Memoir of the Author. By H. W. BECHET. Edited by Henry G. Bohn, York street, Covent-garden.

BOHN'S CLASSICAL LIBRARY FOR APRIL.

CICERO'S ORATIONS: literally translated by C. D. YONGE, M.A. Vol. III containing Orations for his House, Plancius, Sestius, Celius, Milo, Ligarius, &c. Post 8vo 5s. Henry G. Bohn, 4, 5, and 6, York street, Covent-garden.

BOHN'S SCIENTIFIC LIBRARY FOR APRIL.

ORESTED'S SOUL in NATURE, and other Works. Translated by the Misses HORNER. Post 8vo; Portrait 5s. Henry G Bohn, 4, 5, and 6, York street, Covent-garden.

BOHN'S SCIENTIFIC LIBRARY FOR APRIL.

THE CHESS TOURNAMENT. Edited by H. STAUNTON, Esq. With numerous Illustrative Diagrams. Post 8vo 5s. Henry G Bohn, 4, 5, and 6, York street, Covent-garden.

BOHN'S ANTIQUARIAN LIBRARY FOR APRIL.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S WORKS, edited by S. WILKIN, F.L.S. In three volumes, Vol III. Post 8vo, cloth, 5s. Henry G Bohn, 4, 5, and 6, York-street, Covent-garden.

Foolscap 8vo, 5s.

THE UPPER TEN THOUSAND: Sketches of American Society. By A NEW YORKER. Reprinted from "Fraser's Magazine." London: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

CRABB'S TECHNICAL DICTIONARY.

Just published, pieces of New Publications.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, cloth, price £1 4s.

A TECHNICAL DICTIONARY; or, a Dictionary explaining all Terms of Art and Science. By GEORGE CRABB, Esq., M.A. Author of "The Dictionary of Synonymes," &c. "The great merit of these explanations is their brevity, and the manner in which the compiler has done his task is most satisfactory."—Art Journal, Jan. 1852.

London: W MACWELL, 32, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, cloth, price £1 4s.

NORTHERN MYTHOLOGY; or, the Popular Traditions and Superstitions of Scandinavia, North Germany, and Netherlands, from Earliest Times. Chiefly Collected and Translated, with Notes, &c. by B THORPE

"This work must not be confounded with the cheap 'got up' books of the day."

"Full of learning and research. Most valuable and entertaining. Abundant materials for New Fairy Tales."—Athenæum.

"A mass of matter over which a child may hang and a scholar turn to profit."—Examiner

LUMLEY, 18m, High Holborn.

OF MORESBY and SALFORD EDUCATION BILL. By a Barrister and M.P. Author of "Suggestions for a Digest of the Statute Law," &c. &c. Price 1s. 6d.

Sold by all booksellers.

THE MANCHESTER and SALFORD EDUCATION BILL. By a Barrister and M.P. Author of "Suggestions for a Digest of the Statute Law," &c. &c. Price 1s. 6d.

Sold by all booksellers.

In 1 vol. 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 15s. cloth,

NORTHERN MYTHOLOGY; or, the Popular Traditions and Superstitions of Scandinavia, North Germany, and Netherlands. From Earliest Times. Chiefly Collected and Translated, with Notes, &c. by B THORPE

"This work must not be confounded with the cheap 'got up' books of the day."

"Full of learning and research. Most valuable and entertaining. Abundant materials for New Fairy Tales."—Athenæum.

"A mass of matter over which a child may hang and a scholar turn to profit."—Examiner

LUMLEY, 18m, High Holborn.

Just published, post 8vo, cloth, 2nd edition,

THE MANCHESTER and SALFORD EDUCATION BILL. By a Barrister and M.P. Author of "Suggestions for a Digest of the Statute Law," &c. &c. Price 1s. 6d.

Sold by all booksellers.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

LENA; or, the Silent Woman. By the Author of "King's Cope," &c.

"Lena, the delicate, truthful, innocent creature, who gives her name to the book, is singular in her be-loose, her clear and simple sense, and her tenderness. Cecil, the showy, sarcastic, true-hearted, unselfish heroine of the story, in piquant; other characters are sounded with great nicety and the dialogue is easy and lively."—Spectator.

"A clever, animated, and engaging novel, of the light and airy school of writing."—Weekly Dispatch.

"An elegant and graceful novel. With varied incident, and abounding with interest."—Bell's Messenger

"Very cleverly."—Examiner

THE LILY of SAINT PAUL'S; a Romance of Old London. By the Author of "Wyvenhoe." 3 vols

THE SCHOOL for FATHERS: an old English Story. By T GWYNNE. 1 vol 6s cl

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co, 65, Cornhill.

FATHERS, Mothers, Brothers, Sisters, Cousins, Lovers, Apprentices, Parents. Everybody read the interesting Family Magazine, the "HOME CIRCLE," which has received the approbation of the eminent Dr. Archibald Alison and Mr. Justice Talfourd.—Opinions of the press:—"No home should be without it."—Weekly Chronicle. "Everything that is good."—Morning Herald. Now releasing, and given away with No 1 to 2, a large Steel Engraving: "Sunday Evening." Weekly, 1d; Monthly Parts, 6d; Volumes, 4s and 6s 6d. To be had everywhere. Office, 80, Strand. Cases and covers for binding, where all back numbers, parts, volumes, and cases can be obtained. Part 33 now publishing: Lover's "Handy Andy," Illustrated by Phiz, every week. Home Circle Office, 80, Strand.

THE PRACTICAL MECHANICS' JOURNAL. An Illustrated Index to the four completed Volumes, containing 1168 pages of quarto letterpress, illustrated by 24 large Plate Engravings, and 1200 Figures on Wood, forming a complete Encyclopædia of recent Engineering and Mechanics, is now ready, and may be had free from the Publisher.

HERBERT, 88, Cheapside; and at the Editors' Offices (Offices for Patents and Designs), 47, Lincoln's-inn-fields; Glasgow, and Edinburgh.

THE EDUCATIONAL TIMES for APRIL contains History of Harrow School, from its Foundation.—The Ambassador of Savoy's Visit to Eton.—Eton Montem.—Music as Taught in Schools.—The Schoolmaster in the Back Settlements.—Memoir of Gregory Richardson.—Prospects of Education under the New Ministry.—Latin Exercises.—Correspondence on Private Schools.—Review of Modern Language Philosophy versus Philology.—Biography of Schoolmasters.—Lists of Masters' Assistants, &c.—Reviews of College and School Books.—University Intelligence, Mathematics, &c.

Published by C H Law, 131, Fleet-street, London. Price 6d; stamped 7d; and in quarterly parts 1s 6d.

Just published, in royal 8vo, with numerous Plates, price 18s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the HARMONY of the UNIVERSE; or, the Principles of Physico-Harmonic Geometry. By JUAN MERCHAN CEBRIAN. The object of the Author in introduce and explain to the scientific world a new Author is introduce and explain to the scientific world a new system of analyzing the phenomena of the universe. This work possesses great interest, and is worthy the attention of every man possesses great interest, and is worthy the attention of every man seeking knowledge and the progress of civilization. It shows how far from being exhausted are the means of acquiring knowledge, and introduces reforms and improvements into various branches of science which until now appeared to have attained considerable perfection.

London: JOHN WEALE, 59, High Holborn. Newton and Son, 66, Chancery-lane, and 3, Fleet-street, Temple-bar.

Now ready, in two elegant volumes, price 18s.

BOLE PONDIS. By H. M. PARKER, Esq., Bengal Civil Service.

"A series of exceedingly smart and cleverly-written papers, which we recommend to every reader who wishes to while away an hour on any variety, but that the various articles set before him should be capital of their kind."—Morning Chronicle

"Tuneful, pleasing, spirited, and well-varied."—Athenæum.

"Pleasant reading, the verse being flowing and the prose lively."—Spectator.

"Exquisitely simple, touching, and beautiful."—Britannia.

"Full of humour and fun, uniform with the Queen's Regulations), price 10s.

A CATECHISM and HAND-BOOK on REGIMENTAL WARLIKE, &c. &c. By Captain ANTHONY WARLIKE, 87 5 Regiment.

"A valuable production, and will be found exceedingly useful to every Regimental Officer."—Naval and Military Gazette.

"Will save a Subaltern from paying six fees, so far as instruction can secure efficient service."—Literary Gazette.

"Containing a large amount of useful information, which ought to be familiar to every officer."—United Service Magazine.

"The very thing, from the Colonel, is pointed out in detail, with copious forms for Reports, Examinations, and Court Martials even to the interior economy of a regiment."—Royal Military Magazine.

W. THACKER and CO, 87, Newgate-street London.

MURRAY'S RAILWAY READING: One stamp Work of General Information and Innocent Amusement, printed in large readable Type, suited for all classes of readers.

Already published:

MUSIC and DRESS. 1s.
LIEUTENANT ESSAYS from "THE TIMES." 4s.
NIMROD on the CHACE. 1s.
LAYARD'S popular Account of NINEVEH. 2s.
LIFE of THEODORE HOOK. 1s.
JAMES' FABLES of ÆSOP. 100 Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.
NIMROD on the ROAD. 1s.
LORD MAHON'S HISTORY of the "FORTY-FIVE." 3s.
THE FLOWER GARDEN. 1s.
GIFFARD'S DEEDS of NAVAL DARING. 2s. 6d.
THE HONEY BEE 1s.
NIMROD on the TURF 1s. 6d.

Shortly—

A JOURNEY to KATMANDU (Capital of Nepaul), with the Camp of Jung Bahadur: including a Sketch of the Nepalese Ambassador at home. By LAURENCE OLIPHANT. "A series of strong and healthy publications."—Athenæum. "The mixed character of the series is a good feature and carried out with vigour and tact in the present."—Critician Quarterly Review. "A new series, destined to occupy a very distinguished position."—Sun. Mr Murray has secured most of the travelling commenders."—Observer. "Books at once cheap and good."—Economist "We heartily wish this new undertaking success." Morning Herald

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street; and to be obtained at all booksellers and railway stations.

Just published, price 1s.

PROPOSAL for the DEFENCE of the COUNTRY, by means of a VOLUNTEER FORCE in place of a Regular or Local Militia. By JOHN KINLOCH, Esq.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London; Frederick Shaw, Dundee, and other Booksellers.

This day is published, Part IX., price 5s.

THE BOOK of the GARDEN. By CHARLES M'INTOSH, Author of the "Practical Gardener," &c.

CONTENTS.

Chap. II.—Garden Walls (continued).
Chap. III.—Hothouse Building.
Chap. IV.—Heating as applied to Horticultural Erections.
Illustrations.—Villa Garden—Villa Garden Improved.—Ground-plan of Palm House and Part of Garden at Kew; and 118 Engravings on Wood by Branston.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London.

MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR GENERAL READING.

On April 1st, price 6d., Part LXIV. of

THE CHURCHMAN'S COMPANION

CONTENTS: The Fisherman of Hoge (Concl.) 41. Unity; Cyril's Dream. 42. Colonial Bishops. 43. Jerome; Life of Goldsmith (Chap. 6); Easter Thoughts; A Layman of the 17th Century; News of the Month; The Children's Corner: The Passion Dyers; Notices to Correspondents. Ten to seven examples, neatly bound, price £1 1s.

London: J MASTERS, Aldersgate-street and New Bond-street.

MUSEUM of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES. A Quarterly Journal of Ancient Art. Vol. II., Part I, March 31. 1. On the Progress and Decay of Art, and on the Arrangement of a National Museum. By Prof. Ramsay

2. On Recent Discoveries at Alcudia. By the Rev. H Hutton, a Subject. 3. On Excavations lately made in the Great Sphinx. By S. Birch, F.S.A.

4. On a House at Pompeii, excavated by Edward Falkener.

5. On a Jordan Bronze-pipe (fifteen paces). By J A Davies.

6. Collectanea of 1851.

7. Notices of New Publications.

Illustrated with Four Engravings and Sixteen Woodcuts.

Price 6s 6d; or, including postage, £1 1s. £1 1s. 8d to the country.

Volume I. may be had, bound in cloth, £1 11s 6d.

RICHARDS, Printer, 37, Great Queen-street.

THE PETIT COURRIER DES DAMES; or, Journal of French Fashion.—8. and J. PULLEN, 34 and 35 Rathbone-place, continue to receive the above elegant Journal of French Fashions, which arrives from Paris, and is delivered to the subscribers every Saturday, at 10s. the quarter; and postage free to all parts of the country, at 13s. 6d. Also the "Journal des Demoiselles." on the 1st of the month, at 10s. and 14s. the year.

Just published.

NINEVEH and its PALACES. A Narrative of the Discoveries of Mr. Layard and M Botta at Nimroud and Khorsabad; with Descriptions of the Exhumed Sculptures, and particulars of Every History of Ancient Nineveh. By JOSEPH BONOMI Illustrated with above Two Hundred Engravings, principally from the Assyrian Remains. Cloth 21s 6d., or elegantly bound in calf gilt and blind-tooled, 31s 6d.

BOSWELL'S JOURNAL of a TOUR to the HEBRIDES. Companion to "Boswell's Life of Johnson." With Notes, Illustrative of the Hebrides, and an Index, by ROBERT CARRUTHERS, Esq., of Inverness This interesting work is now issued in a full volume of Johnson's Life. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s 6d.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON COOKERY-BOOK; embellished with upwards of Two Hundred tasteful and descriptive Woodengravings, and Fifteen Hundred Original Receipts, embracing the whole Domestic Cookery of Every Day Life. By ELIZA COOKE, Cabinet to St. James's Palace, Earl Grey, Lord Stafford, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt and lettered, 12s 6d.

A STORY with a VENGEANCE; or, How many Johns may go to a Tale. Inscribed to the greater number of Railway Travellers, and dedicated to the rest. By ALFRED B. REACH and SHIRLEY BROOKS With Steel Engraving by John Leech, Esq., and Eight Designs by Phiz. Crown 8vo, in wrapper, 1s 6d; neat cloth, sprinkled edges, 2s 6d.

Office of the Illustrated London Library, 227, Strand.

FALLACIES of the FACULTY, price 2s 6d.

"This is a bold book, a very bold book, and we recommend persons who have been dosing themselves with drugs to kick out the apothecary and read Dr. Hastings' Fallacies of the Faculty, before acting as a novel."—Westminster Review. By the same Author, "The Forbidden Book," in two vols. 12s. Also, Dr. Hastings' entertaining extraordinary revelations of modern practice, with a new mode of treating (without medicine) Fever, Apoplexy, Gout, Rheumatism, and Nervous Diseases: diseases of the Spine. &c. &c.

SIMPKIN and MARSHALL Stationers'-court; J OLIVER, 59, Pall-Mall.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY.—Mr. G.W. STONE, begs to announce that his work is now ready, containing the Philosophy of the above Science, together with complete instructions how to experience the various effects in 6d.

London. H BAILLIERE, 219, 16-post-street. Dublin: James M'Glashan, 50. Upper Sackville-street. Paris: J B BAILLIERE.

VITAL Air a Healthy Mode of Cure (comprising all that is good in Allopathy, Homeopathy, Hydropathy, &c.) for the afflicted with nervousness, depression, gout, piles, pre-mature decay, indigestion, &c. &c. in a few days. Also Vital Air (Supplement), fear of the same, amaurosis, &c.

Also, Vital Air Exposed, or the Fallacies of the Faculty Superseded.—Prussic acid, arsenic, calomel, evils. Post-free, 1s. Dispensive Practice of MEDICINE. At 2, LE BAS-BUILDINGS, Fleet-street, CONSULTATION ROOMS 4s. MUSEUM, 67, Great Russell-street, British Museum. Patients received. A Leisure daily at Three.

HANWELL COLLEGE and PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—Principal, the Rev J A EMERTON, D.D, Oxon.—There will be vacancies at Easter. Great advantages are here afforded to the Sons and Orphans of the Clergy and Military and Naval Officers.

EDUCATION.—In an Establishment for the Daughters of Gentlemen, delightfully situated on the South Coast, pupils are carefully instructed in the English Branches. Teachers, and Professors of talent attend. The number of pupils is limited from 20 to 30; references unexceptionable. Terms, 50 guineas, given to Clergymen of the Established Church, and to parents of children who have been several years in the Establishment. Exclusive Access. Address, F X W, care of Mr BLIGHT, No 67, Gracechurch-street, City.

HOLMES' STEREOSCOPE.—A complete and portable instrument, in mahogany, varnished, with Two Inches Lenses, as patented, and ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of Jan. 24, Price 5s. Post-office orders, addressed to Mr. DUNCAN HOLMES, Optician, Photographer, and Toy dealer, 31, Regent-street, will receive immediate attention. Opticians, Photographers, and Toy dealers supplied.

STEREOSCOPE, a novel Instrument by which two Daguerreotype Portraits (when taken at different angles) appear as a perfect Model. They are a most pleasing, but appear to have all the reality and solidity of life.

Persons desirous of possessing one with one of the best made Stereoscopes, for £5, by M LS HEAD, 5, London-terrace, Hackney-road, London.

PICO'S HAVANNAH CIGARS.—Some persons having sold Cigars with this name, false, representing them as Pico's Havannah Cigars, J J PICO begs to inform the public that he is not connected with the trade, that he is PORTER of the Havannah Cigars which bear his name, and are so much celebrated for their aromatic flavour.—They are to be obtained solely at 50 A, Pall-Mall.

IF YOU REQUIRE FAMILY ARMS, send your name and county to the Lincoln's-Inn Herald Office, Chancery-lane, and a correct Sketch, 5s 6d, or postage stamps; crest engraved on stone, 8s 6d; arms with name on plate for seals, 14s; arms, crest, and motto, on rings, 21s. Address to HENRY SALT. Observe, LINCOLN'S-INN HERALDIC OFFICE.

BENNETT'S MODEL WATCH MANUFACTORY, 65, Cheapside, is the largest in the City. Gold watches, 2l. 2s.; gold keyless, 3l. 13s. 6d., and 5l. 5s.; silver, 2l. 5s., 3l. 3s., and 4l. 4s.; gold chains, rings, brooches, and every description of jewellery of the newest designs. BENNETT, watchmaker to the Queen, the Prince Consort, the Queen Dowager, the Board of Ordnance, and the Admiralty, 65, Cheapside.

CARPETS.—BRIGHTS SPLENDID VELVET TAPESTRIES.—These goods being woven by steam power, are at least one-fourth cheaper than hand-woven goods, the patterns more elborate, and the quality equal to any Brussels Carpets of double the price. Patterns sent free. Rich 5 in. and Worsted Damask warranted, 134 inches wide, from 5s 6d per yard. Turkey Carpets, Floor Cloth, &c.—BRIGHTS, 246, and 247, KING'S, 4, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, opposite Howell and James's.

FREE CANCER HOSPITAL, LONDON,—Cancer is much more prevalent than is generally supposed. 1778 persons died of it in London alone in the year 1850. Cancer is the sincere hope of arriving at a more successful mode of treating its most painful and destructive Disease, this Hospital was established in April last for its exclusive treatment, and its utility is best proved by having on its books no less than 187 Patients, many of whom gratefully acknowledge the relief they have experienced.

Many of the Bankers in and out of town receive Subscriptions. Any One of the Governors, 80 Trustees, Messrs Coutts, and the Treasurer, John Parkinson, Esq. 66, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

W. J. COCKERELL, Secretary.

Hospital, 1, Cannon-row, Parliament-street.

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street, and 2, Royal Exchange Buildings, London. Established 1807.

It is respectfully notified to persons insuring in this Office the removals of which fall due at Lady Day, that the same should be paid on or before the 9th April. The receipts are lying at the Offices in London and in the hands of the several Agents.

The terms of the County Fire Office are highly advantageous to the Insured: and have secured to it a large share of public approbation. All claims are settled with promptitude and liberality. Full particulars will be immediately furnished to parties applying personally, or by letter, to either of the above offices, or to any of the Agents, who are appointed in all the principal towns of the United Kingdom.

JOHN A. BEAUMONT, Managing Director.

NEW MUSIC &c.

RUDIMENTS of MUSIC. By JOHN HULLAH, Professor of Vocal Music in King's College, London, &c. &c., price 2d, post free, 3d. A few candidates in the most clear and simple manner, and it is used for the tuition of the choristers of Trinity and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge.

J. A. NOVELLO, London Author, King's College, Cambridge.

Just published,

ANNA'S LAST LAY to BRITAIN'S QUEEN. The Music by HUMMEL. The Words by ARDIEL. Published by SARAH.

To be had of the publisher, at Kew Library, 23, Duke-street, Manchester-square, London; Messrs Hopkinson's, 6, Commercial-street, Leeds, Mann's Library, High-street, Kensington; and of all respectable music-sellers.

THE ROYAL MINERVA WALTZES.—Just published the above beautiful Waltzes, composed and respectfully dedicated to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K G., &c. by G. B. GOODYER. Published and sold at MOUTRIE'S Music Repository, 10, Bond-street, Corner of Brook-street, London, three doors from Madame Tussaud's Exhibition.

D'ALBERT'S FAUST and DEW-DROP QUADRILLES. Just published, the above Quadrilles, as played at her Majesty's State Ball, and since at all the great balls in London and the provinces.

"These waltzes are perfectly different in style, but each a gem of its kind."

Price 4s. solos and duets; full orchestral parts, 5s.

CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street.

N. J. SPORLE and HENRY LOVELL, ST. VALENTINE'S DAY is a DANGEROUS TIME. Key G. Time 2-4. Compass D to F.

DRIVE ROUND the FIRE. Key G. Time 2-4. Compass D to B.

"I'm a Merry, Merry Girl I'm Always Merry and Gay" "I'm a Merry, Merry Girl I'm Always Merry and Gay" Key G. Time 4 4. Compass D to B.

Sole Agent, G CASE, 32, New Bond-street.

NEW SONGS.—The YOUNG LADY'S LITERARY ALBUM. Price 2s each

Miss Lindsay has set in rounded these two pleasing and effective songs. The Lady's Literary Album is a collection of the most interesting, on a romantic imagination, is a most happy and original composition. one which must have a wide popularity."—Musical Review. "Miss Lindsay's 'Young Lady's Album' is a collection of the most interesting and effective songs. The Morning Advertiser, Feb 14.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO, New Burlington-street, Publishers to the Queen.

N.B. COCKS'S MUSICAL MISCELLANY is published on the 1st of every month, price 8d, stamped 6d.

Just published,

INSTRUCTIONS for the HARMONIUM. By JOSEPH WARREN, &c. Also, suitable for the above, Lindley's Practical Introduction to the Organ, a New Edition, revised, improved, and enlarged. By Warren and Lindley. Introductory, Middle, and Full Voluntaries, and 37 Psalm Tunes with Interludes, 10s 6d. Warren's Collection of Psalm Tunes (enlarged) of Warren's Complete Instructions for the Concertina, 10s 6d.—Messrs WHEATSTONE and Co., Inventors and Patentees of the Concertina, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street, London, where may be had a descriptive prospectus of the Ten Guinea Instrument.

DAVIDSON'S MUSICAL TREASURY, price 4d each number. Above 1000 numbers at 4d, or 2d per sheet of four folio pages, comprising, besides Jackson's morning and evening services in F and E flat, and Kent's Te Deum in A, each 6d. 6 Masses, each service for 6d—185 English songs—100 Scotch songs—34 Irish songs—20 Welsh songs—20 Christmas carols—110 German songs, with English words, as sung at the Vocal Concerts—110 glees, madrigals, and rounds, including the best Church services—75 popular pieces—38 vocal duets—30 Ethiopian and negro melodies—20 comic songs—20 sacred compositions—20 vocal quadrilles—70 pianoforte pieces. Each 3d sheet costs 3d for postage. Any 12 sheets sent free for 3s. London: DAVIDSON, 19, Peter's-hill, and 360, Paternoster-row; and sold by all booksellers.

TOLKIEN'S 25-GUINEA ROYAL MINUTO PIANOFORTE, nearly 7 octaves, O G fall, metallic plate, with all late improvements, in mahogany, rose, maple, walnut, or rosewood cases, 25 guineas; the touch, tone, durability and workmanship will stand any climate without injuring the delicacy of their original beautiful tone and touch.—TOLKIEN, 376, Oxford-street, 4th, and 5th, Middle Scale Houses, London-bridge. Drawings post free.

PIANOFORTES for SALE or HIRE, at CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street. A large Stock of NEW and SECOND-HAND PIANOS, by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, &c. for SALE or HIRE. Instruments by less reputed makers at the lowest prices. Any one hired for three months may be had less than one year's use, if ordered, should a perfectly new instrument from the factories of any erected, should a perfectly new instrument from the factories of any of the best makers. Old pianofortes taken in exchange.—50, New Bond-street.

PIANOFORTES at Manufacturing Prices.—Messrs HOLDERNESS and CO, 444, New Oxford-street, London, beg to inform their friends and the public that they have reduced the price of their Piccolo Pianofortes, in rosewood, sebre, or walnut-tree-wood cases, to 21 guineas each. These beautiful instruments are 6½ octaves, with the compass, combine all the latest improvements, are possessed of amazing power, combined with great sweetness of tone, and the touch is unique. Attention is called to has hitherto distinguished their manufacture. Warranted for five years. Also, a large assortment of every variety of cottage pianos, by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, and other makers, from £16, and Cramer, Beale, and Co.'s, from £16.—W. RAVEN, 214, Regent-street. A descriptive list of musical instrument tuned, repaired, and taken in exchange.

AN AUTHOR'S WIDOW, AGED 80.—The WIDOW of the late GEORGE SHARS, of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, M.A., and of the Inner Temple Barrister-at-Law, author of "The Practice of Pleading in the Courts of Common Law," "Dictionary of Synonymes," "A History of the English Law," "A Digest of the Law of Real Property," &c. &c. &c. and "Lectures on Logic," &c. &c. The subject poverty in which Mrs. CRABB, at the advanced age of 80, finds herself left, by the premature death of her husband, induces her, from her knowledge of one or two articles in the Times with the deceased, they have made it a duty strictly to preserve the secrets of all communications, and as an additional security to recommend it to the sympathy of those who value literature and pity the necessities of age. Mrs. CRABB's address is 4, Upper-terrace, Kentish-town, near London.

"Legal Observer," of March 19, to which the attention of those disposed to assist the case is respectfully directed.]

RECEIVED.

The Royal Literary Fund	£	s	d
Friend of Mr Crabb	490	0	0	Thos Cox, Esq	£1 1 0
Miss Elizabeth Arnolds	5	0	0	John Palmer Stocker, Esq	1 1 0
George Hyde, Esq, Leeds	5	0	0	D E Willoughby, Esq	1 1 0
Old Share	5	0	0	Mr F Foster	1 1 0
Dr Mackride, D C L, Prince Edward's Island	5	0	0	G S Gibson, Esq	1 1 0
Le Mar Hall, Esq	5	0	0	Mrs Hicks, Esq	1 1 0
Mrs Rankin	5	0	0	J H Law, Esq	1 1 0
H G Rowland, Esq	5	0	0	George C D Lewis, Esq	1 1 0
Thomas Robinson, Esq	5	0	0	H Leighlands, Esq	1 1 0
Rev S Robins, Sittingbourne	5	0	0	F F Maberley, Esq	1 1 0
The Rev G U Rolfe	5	0	0	J Hinde Palmer, Esq	1 1 0
John L Ross, Esq	5	0	0	Proprietors of "The Critic"	1 1 0
J Barrow, Esq Admiralty	5	0	0	Thomas Rogers, Esq	1 1 0
Captain Rodwell, M P	5	0	0	Sir Hardley Wilmot, Bart	1 1 0
Miss Fenton, Bath	3	0	0	Thomas Paul, of Dr Crabb	1 1 0
W D Lewis, Esq	3	0	0	C B	1 1 0
W Palmer, Esq, Gresham Professor of Civil Law	2	10	0	Rev John Cooke, Reg Professor Eldhire	1 1 0
Richard Peacock, Esq	2	10	0	J Hardy, D Lond	1 1 0
J Rudell, Esq	2	0	0	J M Moltrum, Esq	1 1 0
Commissioner Mr Serjeant Stephen	2	0	0	Lord Dynevor	1 1 0
Charles Williams, Esq	2	0	0	Captain Sol e, Esq	1 1 0
Lord Bishop of St. Asaph	2	0	0	Mrs Thompson	1 1 0
A Barrister	2	0	0	M E	1 1 0
Mrs Rigby	2	0	0	Mr Hastings	1 1 0
Captain Douglas	2	0	0	George C Otn, Esq	0 10 6
W H Tomkin, Esq	2	0	0	W F Haly, Esq	0 10 6
Mrs Rankin	2	0	0	Rev Thomas Spencer	0 10 6
Sir Richard Sutton, Bart	2	0	0	F E Tusker, Esq	0 10 6
F L Barnwell, Esq	1	1	0	J Uptigg, Esq, Dublin	0 10 6
Richard Barrat, Esq	1	1	0	Walter Venning, Esq	0 10 6
Henry G Bohn, Esq	1	1	0	William Lund, Esq	0 10 6
Jas S Buckingham, Esq	1	1	0	R B	0 10 0
Rev G Clayton, Walworth	1	1	0	Small sums under	0 19 4
				Messrs Butterworth	10 10 0
					£75 16 6
Amount £10 per cent					1 10 6
					£13 12 0

* * Communications on the subject, and Subscriptions, will be gladly received by the Treasurer, Mr. JOSEPH W. BUTTERWORTH, 7, Fleet-street, London.

					£ s d
Thos Cox, Esq	£1	1	0	Amount £10 per cent	1 10 6
John Palmer Stocker, Esq	1	1	0		£13 12 0
D E Willoughby, Esq	1	1	0
Mr F Foster	1	1	0
G S Gibson, Esq	1	1	0
Mrs Hicks, Esq	1	1	0
J H Law, Esq	1	1	0
George C D Lewis, Esq	1	1	0
H Leighlands, Esq	1	1	0
F F Maberley, Esq	1	1	0
J Hinde Palmer, Esq	1	1	0
Proprietors of "The Critic"	1	1	0
Thomas Rogers, Esq	1	1	0
Sir Hardley Wilmot, Bart	1	1	0
Thomas Paul, of Dr Crabb	1	1	0
C B	1	1	0
Rev John Cooke, Reg Professor Eldhire	1	1	0
J Hardy, D Lond	1	1	0
J M Moltrum, Esq	1	1	0
Lord Dynevor	1	1	0
Captain Sol e, Esq	1	1	0
Mrs Thompson	1	1	0
M E	1	1	0
Mr Hastings	1	1	0
George C Otn, Esq	0	10	6
W F Haly, Esq	0	10	6
Rev Thomas Spencer	0	10	6
F E Tusker, Esq	0	10	6
J Uptigg, Esq, Dublin	0	10	6
Walter Venning, Esq	0	10	6
William Lund, Esq	0	10	6
R B	0	10	0
Small sums under	0	19	4
Messrs Butterworth	10	10	0
	£75	16	6
Amount £10 per cent	1	10	6
	£13	12	0

J. HAYCRAFT begs to inform his Pupils and Friends that he has REMOVED from Queen's-road to 1, Queen's-terrace, Regent's-park.

TO MILLINERS and DRESSMAKERS.—To be DISPOSED OF, a Private MILLINERY BUSINESS in New Bond-street. Apply to J R. 3, Red Lion-street Holborn.

ARCHITECTURE.—WANTED, in an Architect's Office in the City, an ARTICLED PUPIL, or, if preferred, an Apprentice, to which latter case his freedom in one of the City companies would be obtained. A premium required. Address, in the first instance, by letter, to T J F W, Mr Newman's, Bookseller, 235, High Holborn.

A CARD.

MR. MATTHEWS, Surgeon Dentist, respectfully announces to his friends that he has removed to 17, LOWER BECKLEY-STREET, Portman-square. At home from Ten till Five o'clock.

INSANITY.—Messrs. LANE and LARA, Medical Agents, 14, John-street, Adelphi, beg to offer their advice gratuitously to the friends of patients seeking a fitting retreat. Attendance, Male and Female, are, as usual, supplied by them at the shortest notice.

REEVES'S MOIST WATER-COLOURS, in warranted to keep in any climate. Also, their Colours in Cakes and pans Cumberland lead and zinc now used by all artists.—Manufactory, 113, Cheapside, London.

SHAWLS! SHAWLS! SHAWLS! of all kinds Cleaned, and the brilliancy of the colours preserved. Black dyed for mourning every Wednesday. Furnitures of all sorts cleaned, dyed, and finished, by SAML. OSMOND and Co., 8, Ivy-lane, Newgate-street, London. Established above 3s centuries.

DOUDNEY'S LIVERIES satisfy Masters and Servants.—Footman's suit, £3 3s. best quality.—patronised by the Queen, Prince Albert, and Duchess of Kent.—17, Old Bond street, Burlington-arcade, and 64, Lombard-street. Established 1794.

INFANTS' NEW FEEDING BOTTLES.—From the Lancet:—"We have seldom seen anything so beautiful as the Nursing Bottles introduced by Mr Allan, of Oxford-street. They are adapted to all kinds of food and have an elastic nipple, which no infant will refuse: unequalled for cleanliness and durability. 7s 6d, or by post in box, 7s extra.—Mr. ALLAN, 186, Oxford-street, Zeich is stamped with my name and address.

COCKERELL & CO.'S BEST COALS ONLY. Purfleet Wharf, East-street, Blackfriars; Essex Wharf, Essex Road, Islington; Pimlico; and No. 1, Coal Exchange. Cash price, 21s per ton.

HAIR MEMENTOS.—ARTIST in HAIR.—Mr. LOWDNEY seeks as Ladies resident in any part of the Kingdom a BOOK of SPECIMENS for two postage stamps. He also embellishes makes, and elegantly mounts in fine gold, Hair Bracelets, Brooches, Rings, &c. and arranges the most recherché.—DEWDNEY, 179, Fenchurch-street, London.

ARMS, CRESTS, CORONETS, or INITIALS, STAMPED on NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPES, in gold, silver, and colours, in the most elegant style, at half the usual charge. —RODRIGUES CREAM-LAID ADHESIVE ENVELOPES, for postage, 2s 6d, or by post, 3s 6d. A list, with upwards of 100 illustrations, post free, 6d. Regent-house.

RIMMEL'S TOILET VINEGAR is far superior to Eau de Cologne, as a toute and beneficial lotion for the toilet or bath. It cools, refreshes, and invigorates the most delicate constitution, and is a most essential disinfectant in sick rooms, nurseries, &c. Sold by E. RIMMEL, 96, Cornhill, Perfumer, &c. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

GOLD CHAINS by WEIGHT and WORKMANSHIP.—WATHERSTON and BRODDEN, Manufacturing Goldsmiths, established A. D. 1798, having been awarded a Prize Medal for their Display of Gold Chains in the Great Exhibition, beg to announce, that, in obedience to the numerous calls made upon them, they have resolved to alter their Manufactory to the Pale of MANUFACTURERS' PRICES The system of weighing chains against the precious metal, now so generally adopted, originated with this house, Watherston and Brodden sell their gold at its bullion value, their profit being made on the workmanship alone, which is the true and only principle for the fairness or simplicity of the pattern A general assortment of Jewellery, all made on the premises.—Manufactory, 145, Houndsditch, London. They have no connexion with a house in Regent-street, assuming the name of Hawleys. Elegant Gold Watches, 5l. 5s. and 6l. 6s. in four hales, un

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 553.—VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1852. [SIXPENCE.

THE NATIONAL INCOME, AND OUR FUTURE FINANCIAL POLICY.

THE Property and Income Tax expired on Monday last, and awaits renewal at the hands of the present Parliament, which, moribund although it be, possesses vigour and vitality enough for the task. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, reminded of the fact by Mr. Hume, has announced his intention of informing the House, on its re-assembling after the Easter holidays, on what day he will introduce the financial statement of the Government. Mr. Disraeli, it appears, will not wait for the report of the committee appointed last session, and of which he himself is a member, to consider the possibility of making this inevitable tax a just one, but will introduce his Budget without delay. It is to be regretted that the committee has not made sufficient progress with its labours to declare its opinions before the Chancellor of the Exchequer asks the renewal of the tax; but it is clearly the duty of the Government to pursue an independent course upon the matter, and to bring forward the Budget at the earliest possible moment.

In the meantime the country has before it the returns of the national income and expenditure for the year and the quarter ending on the 5th of April. While Protectionists—a rapidly diminishing body among men who think—are loudly asserting that the country is driving down the steep hill of perdition in consequence of its Free-trade policy, it is fortunate that facts invariably disprove the assertion. It is not only one fact, or one series of facts, but all facts and all series of facts, considered from any point of view we please, that lead to the same irresistible conclusion. All the friends of Free Trade, whether Conservatives, Whigs, Radicals, or entirely neutrals in politics, may thus justify their determination to suffer no change to be made in the system which produces such striking and happy results.

There are three different ways in which the annual statement of the national income may be considered and tested. The financial year ends on the 5th of April. To compare the quarter ending on that day with the quarter preceding it, is one mode of arriving at a result; to compare it with the corresponding quarter in the preceding year, is a second mode; and to compare the whole year with the year before it, is the third. Let us shortly glance at the mass of figures presented by the national balance-sheet, and see what facts can be discovered under each of these methods for arriving at a clear understanding of our position and prospects. If we compare the quarter ending on the 5th of April, 1852, with that ending on the 5th of January, 1852, we find, with an increase under several heads that are usually supposed to show whether the people be well fed and employed, a general decrease in the national income of no less than £725,000. Let us not, however, be alarmed, but investigate the matter more closely. If, in like manner, we compare the quarter ending on the 5th of April, 1852, with that ending on the 5th of April, 1851, we find under the head of Customs Duties an increase of £66,759, and under that of Excise an increase of £89,528—items which show on the part of the people an increased consumption of various articles conducive to their comfort and their luxury. If, entering still more deeply into the figures, we compare the year ending on the 5th of April, 1852, with the year ending on the 5th of April, 1851, we find that on the Customs there is an increase of £97,266, on the Excise of £57,674, and on the Post-office of £190,000. This last is due principally, we suppose, to the great mass of correspondence caused by the rise and progress of the Great Exhibition. On the Crown lands there is an increase of £30,000, which we cannot explain, although, doubtless, it is explicable enough; and in the Miscellaneous department there is an increase of £39,434. This, however, is but one side of the question. On the other hand, there is a decrease of £203,998 in the Stamp Duties, of £659,505 on the Assessed Taxes, and of £119,597 on the Property and Income Tax, amounting to a general decrease on the financial year of £707,558. But the decrease is neither alarming nor surprising, nor in any way unforseen; it is, in fact, as great a proof of the national prosperity as the increase under the Customs and the Excise. In the first place, Sir Charles Wood having, in 1850, a surplus to deal with, materially reduced the oppressive Stamp Duties, after two or three, if not half a dozen, unsuccessful attempts to compromise them in a manner satisfactory to the legal profession and the public. This accounts for the decrease under that head. In the second place, the same Minister had a still larger surplus in 1851; and, being puzzled what tax to abolish or reduce, amid the multitude of interests that thundered at the doors of the Treasury to secure his favourable attention, decided in favour of the Window-tax, and swept off an amount of revenue considerably exceeding a million and three-quarters, substituting an Inhabited House Duty of a much smaller amount. When it is borne in mind that there was certain to be a loss of income under this head, and that the Inhabited House Duty has not yet been half collected in any part of the country, it will be seen that here at least is no symptom of national retrogression, and that the decrease proves nothing but the prosperity of the nation that has a surplus of revenue over expenditure, notwithstanding such heavy reductions.

In the third place we have the decrease on the Property and Income Tax to consider. But, like the other two, it is not of a nature to disprove the general prosperity of the country. While at first glance it would seem to contradict all the evidence afforded by the other returns, we have only to look to the working of the measure to find an explanation of the decrease perfectly consistent with the well-known increase of the national wealth. As incomes under £150 per annum are, as we think, very unjustly and unwisely exempt from the operation of the tax, it may follow that the principal increase of comfort and prosperity proved by the Customs and Excise returns has taken place among the poorer classes. This we believe to be, to a certain extent, true, and it is a matter for rejoicing if it be so; but we think the fact of the general decrease in the proceeds of this particular tax at a time when pauperism has diminished, when trade and employment have increased, and when the consumption of beer, spirits, tobacco, tea, coffee, and sugar is larger than ever, tends to prove that the tax is very extensively evaded. Indeed, it is notorious that such is the fact. When a Government is so lazy or so dishonest as to say that it cannot make a distinction between realised property and precarious income, the carriers of precarious income very naturally, though very improperly, take the remedy into their own hands, and become as dishonest as the Government. If they cannot evade the tax altogether, they underrate their incomes. Even the owners of realised property find means to squeeze themselves for revenue purposes below the taxable line of £150 Sometimes a tax-payer with a tender conscience returns to the Government the amount of which he has defrauded it; but we may be tolerably certain, that one person pays his conscience money in this manner, to have it acknowledged in the Times by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, there are scores, if not hundreds, who coolly pocket the plunder, and who think it, if not a meritorious act, a very venial and pardonable offence, to defraud a Government that will not take the commonest pains to do justice.

THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE EIGHT-OARED BOAT RACE.—SKETCHED BETWEEN PUTNEY AND MORTLAKE. (SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Of course, the details of the Budget and the general intentions of the Government are as yet a secret. But the policy that is written upon the face of the revenue returns, in characters that the most ignorant may read, and which is supported by every fact bearing either upon the physical the moral, or the social condition of the people, is evident and palpable. To persevere in the Free-trade policy, so that other taxes as unwise as the paper duty, the excise duty on soap, and many others which still interfere with the trade, the health, and the comfort of the people, may be abolished, and to render the Property and Income Tax an equitable one, extending to all property and all income, is the course pointed out by fact as well as by policy, by argument as well as by experience. Protection never yielded such results, as we now witness. It is true, that, amid the general prosperity, the voice of wail arises from the agriculturists; but the agriculturists themselves should remember that Free Trade is but six years old—that the miseries of the farmers began immediately after the peace of Waterloo—and that the groans and moans were heard even more loudly under a system of Protection than under a system of Free Trade. Far be it from us to deny the existence of their distress. We are bound to believe it, as we are bound to believe the generally prosperous state of the country; but we must look to something else than Free Trade as the cause of their uneasiness. In the approaching readjustment of our fiscal system the claims of agriculture will not be lost sight of. If land is unduly taxed or burdened, the burden must be removed; but at the same time the question deserves consideration—why the agriculturists are alike under unfavourable Free Trade and under Protection, and why farmers complain as much in France, which is not yet under a Free-trade régime, as they do in England? Free-trade and Sir Robert Peel have been blamed for the distress in Skye and in the Hebrides; but the distress in those districts was even greater in 1780 than it is now, and has never ceased from that day to this. Let the farmers look to their landlords for relief, if the shoe pinches them; for their friend Mr. Disraeli, and their greater friend Lord Derby, will not be able, in the face of all experience, to befriend them by the reimpos tion of a Corn Law. The revenue returns, as well as common sense and the national safety, forbid it.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The racing fixtures next week embrace Newmarket Craven, with a list of five days, but sport only sufficient for three, Stafford and Newcastle Spring, each commencing on Wednesday; Aberconway on Thursday; and The Hoo on Lord Derby's Park, on Friday. There will be steep chasing on Monday at Bir[illegible] in conjunction with flat racing, at Stretford on Wednesday, at Newcastle and in the Aberstone country; and at Abergavenny on Friday. The coursing season is at an end.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The settling brought a very large attendance, and some business was transacted on the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes, Chester Cup, and Derby, showing an improvement in Lapdist, Sutton, and Little Harry. The quotations, irrespective of the horses particularised, and Fillis, who has altogether disappeared, show very little change

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES

4 to 1 agst Hemsbrewed	9 to 1 agst Lapdist 10 to 1 agst Ambrose	5 to 1 agst Daniel O'Rourke

CHESTER CUP

18 to 1 agst Sutton	20 to 1 — Merry Wid	66 to 1 agst The Indian Warrior (t)
18 to 1 — Sacrocow	25 to 1 — Hi ss Homburg
20 to 1 — Joe Miller	25 to 1 — Pyrdie	66 to 1 — King of Trumps
20 to 1 — High Sheriff	50 to 1 — Rotchcor (t)

DERBY

5 to 1 agst Hobble Noble	17 to 1 agst Orlando	33 to 1 agst Little Harry
11 to 1 — Augur (t)	17 to 1 — Caverhouse	33 to 1 — Pomatom
100 to 6 — Lapdist

Merry Peal is scratched for the Newmarket Handicap.

THURSDAY.—A thinly-attended room and a remarkably dull afternoon; our prices, in fact, are almost entirely made up from offers.

NEWMARKET FIRST T[illegible]

4 to 1 agst Maria	8 to 1 agst Mountain Flower 10 to 1 agst Orl[illegible]	8 to 1 agst Bardolph

FLYING DUTCHMAN'S HANDICAP—5 to 1 agst Voltigeur (taken)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES

4 to 1 agst Hemsbrewed	5 to 1 agst Dan O'Rourke	Claverhouse is scratched
4 to 1 — Lapdist	10 to 1 agst Bobbin Noble

CHESTER CUP

18 to 1 agst Sutton (t)	25 to 1 agst Hi ss Homburg	33 to 1 agst Hetherpo
20 to 1 — High Sheriff	25 to 1 — Nancy	50 to 1 — Indian Warrior
	66 to 1 agst Sophistry

DERBY

11 to 8 agst Hobble Noble	18 to 1 agst Lapdist	35 to 1 agst Phantom
12 to 1 — Augur	20 to 1 — Orlando	35 to 1 — Acorus (t)
15 to 1 — Claverhouse	25 to 1 — Homebrewed (t)	100 to 15 — Rebon

IMPROVED BADGES FOR PUBLIC VEHICLES.—On Wednesday the Commissioners of Inland Revenue commenced th[illegible] issue of new plates to the metropolitan hackney carriages, so constructed as [illegible] cover the numbers more legible, and prevent the system of "doctoring" practised by dishonest drivers, who, in order to escape their delinquencies, have been in the habit of altering their number plates, and thus deceiving justice, by misleading the public and police who had occasion to summon them for misconduct.

An entire change has taken place in the mode of lighting the Palace of the Tuileries. The boxes have been suppressed, and replaced by magnificent [illegible] attached to the windows.

The Queen has been pleased to constitute and appoint Major-General James Frederick Love, C.B., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of Jersey, in the room of Lieutenant-General Sir James Henry Reynell.

Six Roman Catholic clergymen have arrived in London by the steamer City of Paris from Boulogne, with their baggage and effects, for the purpose of taking their passage by the ship Tarnar for Sydney, as missionaries to New South Wales.

The Osservatore Romano states that another violent storm occurred in the Adriatic on the 16th ult., and caused great damage to the shipping at Ancona.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE

Louis Napoleon is fast advancing towards the completion of his most sanguine hopes. The Imperial throne is within view, and may be considered as attainable at the will of the Prince. The only matter of doubt appears to be as to the moment of fitting convenience when he may choose to assume the title of Emperor of the French: but the thing itself seems settled, and he has obtained the grand desideratum which formed the ground of so much ill-will between him and the late Legislative Assembly—a large dotation. The first main act of the new Senate has been to vote M. Bonaparte 12,000,000 francs a year (£480,000), and to appropriate the national palaces, parks, gardens, furniture, &c. to his use, together with the right of shooting and hunting in the national woods and forests of Versailles, Fontainebleau, Compiegne Marly, and St. Germain. All the public bodies of the State have now taken the oath of allegiance to him; and he has experienced the gratification of receiving in due form what he so much desired and needed to consolidate his position, viz. the homage of the Church in the person of its leading dignitaries.

The occasion chosen for this latter important occurrence was on the presentation in the chapel of the Tuileries on Sunday last, of the bonnet sent by the Pope to M. Donnet, Archbishop of Bordeaux, recently nominated Cardinal.

The speech of M. Donnet is of special importance, as showing how complete is the adhesion of the clergy to the new order of things. It is as follows:

Monseigneur, Religion re[illegible]ored to our temples, Justice resuming her majesty and her rights, internal tran[illegible] maintained in the midst of foreign wars; in a word, the country at [illegible] saved from confiscation, pillage, and extermination—such were the first impressions of my early life, and for to whom my country owed such benefits bore your name

How can it be unpersuaded; fifty years later, that name, hailed as a new [illegible] and a hope, was greeted from cities to the banks on two occasions, and was transformed into two immense acts by the most spontaneous and irresistible outburst of which the history of any people makes mention. We must presume that the Almighty does not interfere with the free actions of men, except when they refuse to see in those facts the hand of Providence revealing itself alternately severe and merciful. His pardon is too short to separate us from the tempest which convulsed the world, for as to forgetfulness [illegible] it is not given to a nation to be stationed in the vapour of intoxication, and that the earth trembled to its foundations. A few hours sufficed, and France proved to the universe that she is only anarchical when taken by surprise; and the nation recognised that she has not been free and proud but under a chief with whom she feels that she exists, and in whom she is personated, as you, Monseigneur, in the midst of her nearest interests.

I wished to pay the debt of my country before paying my own. You have promised me out to the benevolence of the Supreme Pontiff, and I am this day a member of the Sacred College, and associated in the work of the immortal Pius IX. [illegible] visits whose affections, to partake whose labours, it may some day be permitted me. I shall only see in this august dignity, and in the rights given me of a seat in the Senate, but an additional obligation to labour for the good of the Church and the State. I have only been in the pleasure of succeeding a revered prelate the obligation of continuing under the Roman purple, and, in all the acts of my life, the apostolic mission of the Irreproachable Cardinal de Cheverus, [illegible] and the most sublime meekness. If society seems to be [illegible] because it wants the main authority which binds it together and unifies it. You have desired, Monseigneur, by the addition to the Senate of some members of the French Episcopacy, to level the wall of separation which had been in these latter times erected betw[illegible] the spiritual and temporal powers. "If these ever have not been united with Caesar," it was remarked towards the close of 1830), "they were dethroned with him." We utter no complaint—we cast no look of sadness on the past—we do not ask to make our days [illegible] this world; but we will mark [illegible] with gratitude and respect, [illegible]

River Bush, where about 70 head of colonial cattle are consumed per week Holding all this vantage-ground, does there seem any likelihood of the terms of a conqueror being enforced upon these Kaffirs? The Commander-in-Chief seems likely to fail in uniting the colonial borghers and in bringing them into the field. It need not be repeated, that when his Excellency's proclamation of the 6th was published, the people of Graham's Town manifested great readiness to take the field; but now, on application being made through the Board of Defence for forage to the burghers' horses, and ordnance arms to such as were not provided at his Excellency refused to render the slightest assistance—a decision which we are utterly at a loss how to account for.

Two memoranda published by Sir H. Smith at the head-quarters, King William's Town, on the 21st and 23d of Feb., respectively state, first, that an amicable arrangement has been concluded with the Trans-Deian chief Bokoo, his son Mapassa, and their tribe. In answer to his message for peace, Kreili was told that Sandilli and the Galkas must first vacate the Amatolas and cross the Kei; and, secondly, that the patrol under General Somerset had destroyed nearly the whole of the cultivation of the Galka district. It was rumoured, however, that the General had been attacked on the 19th of February, and that the 74th and 91st had suffered; firing was heard in that vicinity at the time; but a letter dated at Gwali, on the 19th, does not mention the attack, but states that the crops of the kaffirs were nearly all destroyed. However, the enemy still maintained an attitude of defiance, and the Tambookies were assembling to assist Macomo in the Waterkloof.

Colonel Eyre's despatch of the 18th of February says that he has destroyed Sandilli's kraal and extensive crops near the Keiskamma River and in the Helebi Kloof. The enemy offered no resistance.

Marauding bands continued to overrun Mancazana, Bavian's River, Albany, and the neighbourhood of Fort Beaufort, where cattle were still stolen. The old commando system was put in force there again. Near Cradock depredations were as numerous as ever. Near Butterworth a large body of Fingoes were successfully attacked by Kahra (krah's), who killed 20 fugitives, and captured 5000 head of cattle, and afterwards made an effort against a Wesleyan mission station.

It will be thus seen that matters present the same varied aspect, for and against us, which has characterised the whole course of our hostilities with the Kaffirs.

MURDER OF MR. BOYD IN THE SOLOMON ISLANDS.

THE fate of Mr. Benjamin Boyd, which has excited so much painful anxiety in the City, and has already been mentioned in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, has, we regret to say, been fully ascertained beyond a doubt. The unfortunate gentleman, it will be recollected, was o a voyage in his yacht, the Wanderer, from California to Sydney, and when among the group of the Solomon Islands, in the South Pacific, was attacked by the natives, and met with a horrible death. An impression has been circulated to the effect that Mr. Boyd would be found probably to have perished on board his own vessel; the truth, however, will be best gathered from the annexed interesting narrative, extracted from the ship's log-book, which details the circumstances, and is attested by the master and crew of the Wanderer

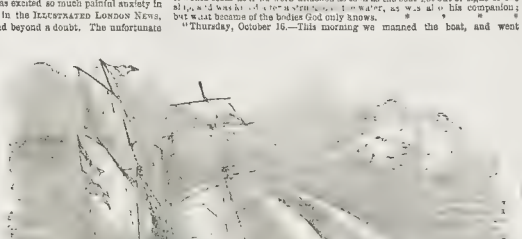
"Tuesday, Oct. 14.—Thursday, at three o'clock P.M., we came to an anchor in a small bay on the south west of the island of Guadalcanar, being in south latitude 9 40, and longitude 159 50 E. A number of canoes were alongside, but without any articles of trade, and at sunset all went ashore. The night passed in perfect quietness.

"Wednesday, 15th.—This morning at an early hour many canoes were alongside, without any trade or warlike weapons. At about half-past six Mr. Boyd rose in his usual good spirits, and taking the small boat, with one native of Ocean Island, went on shore to shoot game. The boat was seen to enter a small creek, and immediately went out of sight of the ship. Mr. Boyd fired one shot soon after. Many natives were soon standing near the entrance to the creek. About seven o'clock another shot was heard, but nothing transpired to excite suspicion. During the morning several natives were very persevering in their attempts to come on board, but were as frequently driven off. About half past seven o'clock all the Europeans went in to breakfast, and while in the water the natives tried hard to induce them to take the boat ashore, but without success. When the crew got out of the water the natives wished them to go and shoot birds, but on the opposite side to where Mr. Boyd had gone; but no one went. Things remained thus till nine o'clock, excepting that the number of canoes had increased. Breakfast having been ready for some time, the gong was sounded for Mr. Boyd, but no answer was returned. At this time a native stole a handkerchief, and, pulling off some distance, held it up for us to go and get it. We sent Geddy, a native of Byron Island, to swim for it, but as he approached the canoe pulled off. He was called back, and came on board, and sat on the rail forward, on the starboard bow. Two natives followed him up, and made the first attack on Tine, a native of Byron's Island, with a club, striking at his head; but he received warning from Geddy, and met the blow on his arm, and knocked the wretches into the water. The alarm was now given, and we were quite unprepared for an attack. Our deck guns, contrary to our usual custom, were neither loaded nor run out: all our small arms were below; but in five minutes we were all armed, the five white men with muskets, and the crew with boarding-pikes and cutlasses. At this time upwards of one hundred canoes were around the ship. Three canoes came up on our starboard quarter, from one of which the first spear was thrown, passing between three of us. A gun was fired over their heads, but this seemed only to pure them on more. A general yell was then given, and the canoes came rushing up to the ship with the intention of boarding us. Spears and other missiles flew through the rigging, when the first shot levelled its mark, and every succeeding one too did nearly deadly effect. Some canoes were driven from the bows, but they tried to board us forward: so determined were they, that an armour had been put up on the martingale back ropes, and were coming in the face of the board pikes and cutlasses, when they were shot down. The pirates now began to retreat, and the firing ceased, leaving the battle fairly won. We then cut our one six-pounder and long Tom, we had complete command of the whole bay, and did not cease firing until the village was deserted.

"We now manned the small boat and went in search of Mr. Boyd; but traces we found were the place of struggle and the marks where he had fired two shots. The small boat lay in the creek. We searched to the left of the creek, but with no avail. Now close to the village there were a number of natives were concealed in the bush not far off. We heard their hideous yells, but they would not show. We searched their houses, and then fired them. We now proceeded to break up their canoes; and in one we found a dead native, who had been hit off by a grapeshot through the right eye; we left him, and, going to the beach where another canoe lay, we found a belt belonging to Mr. Boyd. The day was spent in searching for the bodies, but without success.



MR. BOYD'S YACHT "WANDERER."—(FROM A DRAWING BY MR. BRIELLI.)

"From the marks ashore, and the position of the wadding of Mr. Boyd's gun, it would seem as if he were attacked as soon as the boat got out of sight of the ship, and that after a struggle Mr. Boyd, as well as his companion, but what became of the bodies God only knows.

"Thursday, October 16.—This morning we manned the boat, and went round the first village to the south-east of our anchorage. As we approached the shore, about one hundred natives were seen upon a hill to the right of where we landed. From these we expected an attack. We moved up to the village, and, posting a watch on the natives, searched the houses, and then set them on fire. Here we destroyed two canoes, and laid waste their plantations. Two shots were fired at the natives to induce them to come down, but they made off in the opposite way. We then returned to the ships and having consulted together, it was unanimously considered our duty to run every risk in searching for the remains of the late Mr. Boyd

"Friday, Oct. 17.—At an early hour this morning we stood out to sea, and taking a strong breeze at ten A.M. stood off, and at six P.M. made the land to the windward off the first village we intended to visit. We lay off during the night

"Saturday, Oct. 18.—At 10 A.M. we hove to, lowered the boat, and went to the sound, but found no anchorage. Stood on the land, and made preparations for cannonading the village. Brought long Tom to bear on the starboard side, two six-pounders and two pounder guns, and at a quarter-past 3 P.M. the first shot was fired, and then followed seven rounds of six-pound shot, distance half a mile. The natives ran from their houses, and took shelter among the trees

"Sunday, Oct. 19.—During the last night the wind drew more round, and then fell a calm; we, therefore, did not make the land until half past twelve, when we manned the boat. Seven of the crew went in her. Mr. Crawford and two black natives remained in the ship. The boat having pulled in close as she could for the breakers, rounded to oppos te the village. And fired two rounds of grape, from a large gun which she carried, into the village. She then ran down about three-quarters of a mile, and, under the cover of the gun, the crew landed, and proceeded up to the settlement. The natives abandoned it the moment they caught sight of us. All the houses were searched but traces of poor Mr. Boyd's friend could not be found. We set on fire the houses and their canoes. At this time the natives were seen gathering in large numbers at the hill settlement about two miles further in the coast. At this point they were expected to make a stand; but upon the party moving in that direction they ran, making fearful yells. At three o'clock P.M., there being every indication of a storm, the party made for the ship. Most of the escape, we considered it useless to attempt any further research, as the night, where we could find no safe anchorage, and where our company was too small to leave a sufficient number on board to work the vessel in case of difficulty, and at the same time to leave an effective crew on shore; we shall, our crews from these wretched shores, and bore away. (Signed, William Stowe), master; George C. Crawford, mate; John Webster and Gilbank Barnes. Dated, Yacht Wanderer, Royal Yacht Squadron, Oct. 20, 1851."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE DUCHESS IDA.

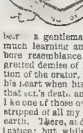
THE DUCHESS IDA, Consort of Duke Charles Bernard of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach and sister of her late Majesty the Queen Dowager Adelaide, widow of William IV., was the younger daughter of the late George Frederick, reigning Duke of Saxe-Meiningen; she was born the 20th June, 1794; and was married, the 30th May, 1816, to Duke Charles Bernard, who survives her, and is the father of the present Charles Frederick Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar. By this marriage the Duchess Ida leaves two sons—Prince Edward, an officer in the Bithanyerse, and Prince Hermann, an officer in that of Wirtemberg, and mayor of the City of Wirtemberg's daughter, the Princess Augusta. The Duchess Ida died at Weimar, somewhat suddenly, on the 3d inst.

PRINCE FELIX DE SCHWALZENBERG.

PRINCE FELIX LOUIS JOHN FREDERICK DE SCHWARZENBERG, Minister for Foreign Affairs, President of the Administration of the Austrian Empire, and Chancellor of the Order of Francis-Joseph, was the second son of the late Joseph Prince de Schwarzenberg, and was born the 2d October, 1800. On the 21st of November, 1848, he was raised to the high office which he continued to hold till the hour of his death. His earlier years were devoted to pleasure. At times he took part in military life; he held the rank of Lieutenant Field-Marshal in the Imperial army, and served with distinction under Marshal Radetzky in Italy. He had filled the diplomatic posts of Aust ian Minister at Turin and Naples, which latter appointment he still held on the outbreak of the revolution in March, 1848. Nothing seemed as yet to have marked him out for the highest office in the empire. After the fall of Prince Metternich the old adherents of the former Government were successively called upon to mount the breach. Count Piequemont and Baron Wessenberg attempted the duties of Ministers, and an appeal was also made to the leading members of the Liberal party, who had suddenly become conspicuous members of the State. The nature of all these expedients was rapid and complete. In this distressing state of the nation, Prince Schwarzenberg accepted the first office in the Government. With a leadin ng tenacity and courage, which seemed to take no account of the dangers before him, he at once repudiated all concession and compromise, and resolved to suffer no abatement of the Imperial power as long as he was its representative. The triumphant result of the work he undertook is from the knowledge of Europe. His vigorous grasp of power and wonderful ability, the Imperial house of Hapsburg owes its complete victory over the revolution of 1848, and its restoration to a state of despotism more absolute than before. Schwarzenberg achieved this in three years and a half; and, though we may look with distaste on the haughty and unbending character of the man, and on the unlimited rule that he has re-established, yet it cannot be denied that he has secured the general peace of Europe. It remains for those who succeed him to soften rigours which may now be no longer necessary, and to grant graduary to the people of the Austrian empire that rational liberty which will be its best security for the non-recurrence of those terrible events that required the talents of Schwarzenberg to overcome them. The Prince has died while in the active service of his Imperial master. A stroke of apoplexy proved fatal to him on the 5th inst., at Vienna

Prince Felix de Schwarzenberg was the younger son of a distinguished noble Austrian house, which for ages has given warriors and statesmen to the empire. His elder brother, John Adolphus Prince de Schwarzenberg, is the present head of the family; his other surviving brother is a Cardinal, and Prince Archbishop of Prague.

THOMAS HAVILAND BURKE, ESQ.



THIS gentleman, the grand-nephew and nearest relative of the great orator and statesman, the Right Hon. Edmund Burke, died on the 21 last., after a short illness, aged fifty-seven. He was the only son of Colonel Thomas Haviland, of Penn, Bucks, who married Mary, only daughter of Juliana, sole sister of Edmund Burke, and wife of William Fennell, Esq., of Loughrea, in the county of Galway. Colonel Haviland's father, General William Haviland, was a distinguished soldier, and an esteemed favourite of King George III. In March, 1816, on the decease, at Brompton, of his mother, Mr. Thomas Haviland became the representative of his illustrious grandmother, and assumed by Royal permission the name and arms of Burke. He was called to the Bar, by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, the 18th of November, 1819: he subsequently practised but little in his profession, not needing to do so from his private fortune, and was a gentleman of very retiring habits. He was, however, a scholar of much learning and intelligence, and, in his social and amiable disposition, bore resemblance to his relative "the great Edmund." With the regretted demise of Mr Haviland Burke, perishes even the collateral representation of the orator, whose chief glory was the hope of a succession, and who broke his heart when his only son died. How eloquently did Burke himself speak of that son's death, and his own despair. "The storm has gone over me, and I lie like a tree torn up by the roots and withering on the ground. I am stripped of all my ornaments, I am torn up by the roots and I am prostrate on the earth. There, and prostrate there, I most intelligently recognise the divine justice; but whilst I humble myself before God, I feel I am alone." Now, indeed, nothing but the fame of Edmund Burke survives, which, as Grattan said of it, can fear no death except what his party may impose on the globe.

MR. EDWARD FITZWILLIAM

THIS actor, whose celebrity was once considerable, though of late little heard of, died last week. He was of Irish parentage, but was born in England, August 8th, 1788. At the age of eighteen he started on his professional career; and as early as 1806 he was engaged at Hythe and Sandwich as actor and property-man, with the liberal income of twelve smiling a week. In 1808 Fitzwilliam appeared at Gosport, and subsequently was engaged under Elliston at several provincial theatres, among others at Margate. In 1813 he was employed at the Sheffield theatre, where he remained to the Cross and the Surrey, where he remained for full seasons. In 1822 he married Miss Colebi. [illegible] Mrs. Fitzwilliam, and for a long period their combined attractions continued successful. He became, too, a performer at Drury-Lane, but under conditions to which he was not accustomed: Mr. T. Dibdin had previously written characters for the actor; and he had now to accommodate himself to parts writ en for others, a proceeding repugnant to his task. Equal to a minor theatre, the legitimate drama overtasked his powers. Mr. Fitzwilliam's popularity gradually declined; and of late years his reputation was confined to convivial circles, and his talents were principally employed at public dinners.

THOMAS TYRWHITT DRAKE, ESQ., OF SHARDELOES, BUCKS, AND ASHFIELD HALL, CO. LINCOLN, AND ST. DONAT'S CASTLE, GLAMORGANSHIRE.

MR. TYRWHITT DRAKE, of Shardeloes, a Magistrate and [illegible] of the county of Bucks, and its High Sheriff in 1831, died on the 23d ult., at his hunting residence at Buck[illegible] Lodge, Leicestershire, aged 64. [illegible] the representative of the ancient family of [illegible] in the county of Lincoln. His estates were very considerable, his ancestry of great antiquity, and his own personal position that of an honourable, philanthropic, and disinterested man." From the time of the resignation of Sir Thomas Mostyn to the end of the last session, he held the mastership of the Bicester hounds, and his kind, hospitable, and gentlemanly conduct had endeared him to many. His father, the late Thomas Drake, Esq., LL.D., of Shardeloes, assumed in 1776, in accordance with the testamentary injunction of Sir John [illegible] Fountain Tyrwhitt, Bart., the surname and a[illegible] whits; but, on inheriting the estates of his [illegible] the decease of his father, he resu[illegible] paternal name, and became Tyrwhit[illegible] wife, daughter and coheir of the Rev. William Wa[illegible] of his decease, in 1810, five sons and three daughters. Of the latter, the eldest, Anne, who is deceased, was married to the present Sir Hug[illegible] Baronet. Of the sons, the eldest was Thomas Tyrwhits Drake, who succeeded to the paternal inheritance, the second, the late William Tyrwhits Drake, Esq., M.P. for Amersham, Lieut.-Colonel in the Blues; the third, the Rev. John Tyrwhit Drake, Rector of Amersham; the fourth, the Rev. George Tyrwhitt Drake [illegible] Malpas; and the fifth, Frederick-William Tyrwhit Drake, of Hedsor [illegible]

THOMAS TYRWHITT DRAKE, Esq., of Shardeloes, whose death we record, [illegible] many years in Parliament, before the Reform Bill, for the borough of Amersham, and consistently supported the hereditary principles of his ancestors, who were, from earliest knowledge, Royalists, Cavaliers, and Tories. Mr. Tyrwhitt Drake was born 21st March, 1784; and married, 15th October, 1814, Baro[illegible] Amherst, sister of the present Viscount Valentia, by whom he leaves [illegible] family.

The Drakes of Shardeloes, one of whom, Sir William Drake, [illegible] Baronet in 1641, are a younger bran[illegible] Drakes of Ash, in Devon. [illegible] manor mansion in Buckinghamshire is a handsome architectural edi[illegible] with a fine lake and an extensive park; and the deceased gentleman pos[illegible] Donat's Castle, Glamorganshire, together with three lov[illegible] Bucks; a "portion" of Malpas, Cheshire; and St. Nicholas, or [illegible] church," Deptford.

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

The note of preparation for the coming contest still rings l[illegible] throughout the various boroughs, cities, and counties of the empire, and with all characters which indicates the very strong interest taken by the country at large in the results of the approaching general elections, and in the character which they may impress on the constitution of the new Parliament

WICKLOW COUNTY.—Mr. George Macartney, of Lisanoor Castle, is spoken of as a candidate for this county.

BATH.—The canvass is being conducted with [illegible] at vigour by [illegible] this city; and whilst the Liberals declare that they have made [illegible] Conservatives declare that Captain Scobell and Mr. Phinn [illegible] Scobell at the last election, the Conservatives affirm that Mr. Whitmore [illegible] be returned.

CHESTER BOROUGH.—The Belfast Mercury states that [illegible] Lennox Lennox, Lord John Chichester and Mr. Tennent, their [illegible] candidate in the person of Mr. Richard Davison, who comes forward as a Protestant Conservative.

TAMWORTH.—Up to this time no Conservative candidate has offered himself, but three or four are now talked about; viz. Mr. Masterman, the London banker; Mr. Peel, of Drayton Manor; Mr. Gilpin, and Major Mr. Green, shipowner, of London; and Mr. Hubbard, Deputy Governor of the Bank of England.

CHRISTCHURCH.—The Hon. Captain Harris, brother to the Earl of Malmesbury, is said to be in the field in the Derby interest. An opposition is threatened by W. Tice, Esq., a retired banker, residing at Sopley-park.

CLARE.—Mr. Cornelius O'Brien has addressed the electors of Clare.

CORK COUNTY.—Mr. Thomas M. Barnes has addressed the electors, in opposition to the hon. Cecil Lawless, the present member.

CORK CITY.—Colonel Chatterton, the present Tory [illegible] the contest, and has announced his intention again to offer himself as a candidate [illegible] advocate for Protection."

CORK COUNTY.—Mr. C. H. Frewen, M.P., has addressed a letter to the Cork Constitution, declaring, as the head of the [illegible] Mr. Frewen, the announced candidate at the late election, that he is "perfectly satisfied with the result of the contest, because it proves this, that if the gentry of Ireland were only true to themselves, there is not a county in Ireland where they may not return a man of their own choice.

DROGHEDA.—Sir William Somerville has issued a valedictory address to his constituents, in which he says, "From every inquiry which I have been [illegible] made in Parliament, as to the occasion of this present state of public affairs, I should not appear before you as a candidate for your suffrages with any [illegible] grounded hopes of a success in result; and I therefore [illegible]

EAST SUSSEX.—At a influential meeting of Conservative gentlemen, held at the Lion, Bath, on Sunday, it was resolved to substitute for the name of Mr. Gorin[illegible] Mr. Stapley, who is certain to come to the front. Sir Fitzroy Kelly, to whom a requisition was forwarded a few weeks back, on his appointment to the office of Solicitor-General, declined having on Monday evening, and declared himself a candidate.

HEREFORDSHIRE.—It is rumoured that a son of Lord Saye [illegible] Sele will be brought forward, in conjunction with Mr. Cornewal Lewis, [illegible] Lord Eardley, the present Free trade interest. The hon. Mr. Ha[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

TRAVELLING IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE "BAY STATE" AND "EMPIRE CITY" STEAM-SHIPS.

At this season of locomotion, it may be interesting to glance at the facilities which Brother Jonathan possesses for enjoying his holidays, by "river, road, and rail," and contrast them with our home resources. This we are enabled to do in the accompanying set of Sketches, the Artist of which has the very agreeable advantage of describing his own real-life pictures.

THE "BAY STATE" AND "EMPIRE CITY" STEAM-SHIPS.

The Bay State is one of the large Fall River steamboats, which perform the journey by night with the avowed intention of helping you on your journey to Boston. The passengers embark at pier No. 4, on the north or Hudson River, at five o'clock, and are thence conveyed to the East River, passing by the city of New York, Blackwell's Island, to Hurl's-gate. The scenery up to this place is very beautiful, being diversified by rocks and trees on either side of the river, until you arrive at that part where the rocks appear above the rapids, at intervals causing very dangerous eddies and whirlpools. This spot is alluded to by Cooper in one of his novels; but the picture is rather highly varnished, as some of the steam-boats stem the current daily at a tolerably good pace. Soon after this they enter the Sound, an inlet of the sea which divides Long Island from the mainland, being 101 miles long and near 30 broad at the greatest width. Passing Black Island, they enter Narragansett Bay and Fall River, landing at Newport, 57 miles from New York, in the middle of the night, where the railway cars are in readiness to proceed to Boston. Altogether this is a very pleasing trip, and rather novel to an Englishman. These boats are of very considerable dimensions, although not quite so large as the New York and Albany boats. An end view is here given, in order to show how the width abreast is increased by using supports underneath. Some idea of the size of the wheel-houses may be formed by the fact that the wheels are 40 feet in diameter. The whole length of the ship, nearly, is preserved in the lower cabin for a supper and sleeping-room; long tables are laid out with a supper for 300 or 400, with numerous black waiters to attend on the passengers' wants; and a similar number of berths are built on each side the cabin, with rich damask curtains, to receive the traveller after he has partaken of the well-provided meal. Here he may rest until disturbed by the unruly behaviour of rude boreas or the ringing of the large bell on the deck, which tells of the journey's end as far as the sea is concerned. That part of the upper or "hurricane deck," nearest in the view, is a comfortable and cool place for viewing the night scenery on the voyage, and studying lunar effects in the Sound. The saloon and state cabins are on the same story, and are fitted up with great taste and comfort, approaching splendour. Here you may lounge about on lengthy sofas, vis-à-vis, and dos-à-dos, and rocking chairs, or read the papers, or pass through the door leading to the deck for coolness, "just as you mind-ter." There is on the lower deck, which at one end resembles a warehouse, 'abundance of room; not only for a large cargo of merchandise, but offices for the captain and others, and a very splendid room especially fitted up for the ladies, with delightful little berths ornamented with rich damask and muslin curtains, forming at once a handsome saloon and sleeping cabin. Rough accommodation is likewise afforded to poor emigrants and others, who cannot afford such luxuries, at the baggage end of the vessel. Here may be seen man, woman, and child, chiefly Irish, resting their weary limbs on certain portions of the cargo, or the softest plank, as the case may be, looking the picture of misery. The boilers, about thirty feet long each, are poised over the water on either side of the boat; and there is a contrivance for the red-hot coals (anthracite) to be raked out, when done with, so as to fall into the water. The flag at the stern, which appears larger on account of its being so close, is thirty feet long. Enough has been said of California and its gold. The Crescent City is one of the first ships which run between Chagres and New York, and is very splendidly fitted up.

SLEIGHING IN NEW YORK.

Let us at once plunge into the enlivening picture. The snow is now set in, and the streets above a foot deep. Omnibuses, carriages, and cars are all of a sudden withdrawn, and in one day the scene is entirely changed. The sleighs are all out, and present a view of the most animated description. Large omnibus-built sleighs, with "any quantity" of passengers, are whisked through the streets with their unlimited numbers of horses, from one to twelve, and even twenty. Broadway presents a scene capable of stirring up emotions in the breast of a monomaniac. Ladies and gentlemen are equally delighted with the early chance of driving their neat and elegant, and often splendid sleighs, with their sacred persons muffled up in bear, buffalo, and leopard skins. Some of these skins are fancifully ornamented with a countenance somewhat resembling one of the red deities of the Sandwich Islands, to be seen only in the British Museum, beautifully vandyked around with a red cloth trimming; others resemble the heads of bears with animated glass eyes, whilst the owners, at a cursory view, might be almost mistaken for the animals themselves, with their bear-skin caps, presenting a truly zoological appearance, erming a great contrast to the light summer dress of the warm days of July. The velocity of some of the lightest of these sleighs is beyond what might be expected. There is a dare-devil style of driving which would not be tolerated in crowded London. The horses appear not to be the least alarmed at the stunning noise they are compelled to endure in consequence of a girth of bells being fastened round the collar, body, and along the martingale, some of them carrying above 150, of from a walnut size to that of a large orange; and a tolerable idea of the noise in Broadway may be formed when the street is crowded with these conveyances.

SLEIGHING IN NEW YORK.

TRAVELLING IN THE UNITED STATES.

RAILWAY CAR.—DETACHING THE HORSES.

RAILWAY CAR.—DETACHING THE HORSES.

There is something so free-and-easy in American travelling, that it is a sort of balm to the European visitor, when the heat is oppressive, to know that change of air and scene may be obtained at a cheap rate, either by ferry-boat or railway. We knew an English lady who delighted to take the ferry-boat to Brooklyn, and, for the trifling consideration of two cents, make an unlimited number of journeys backward and forward, without landing, merely for the benefit of the air which a rapidly moving body will create in offering resistance even to a stationary atmosphere. Upon this scientific principle, as well as the use of palm-leaf fans, sherry coblers, mint julieps, brandy smashes, and the ever serviceable iced Croton water, are the ladies and gents of New York ever wont to cool their feverish sensations. But the railway offers endless amusement in this particular affair. You see a carjust about to start from Centre-street to New Haven, or Harlaem, the Greenwich of New York. Visions of the aforesaid coblers flit across the mind, whilst a trip to the "High Bridge," the architectural colossus and boast of the wondering Knickerbockers, alike tempt you to take a trip. You have merely to ascend two little steps, when the next lands you on the platform. At one end of the car a little door is then opened, and you take a seat on a well-stuffed red plush cushion, with a ditto back to lean against. It is nothing to any one—you intend to enjoy yourself, and feel a "kinder" American independence in your locomotive drawingroom. You may get into a car bound to either of the above-named places, "just as you minid-ter." The Americans prefer to have cheap railways and good carriages for the public accommodation, to extravagantly expensive termini entrances, and cheap painted hard wooden seats to sit on. Nor did we ever see such an accommodation in that country as a third-class carriage, wherein human beings were compelled to stand all the journey like a parcel of pigs, having positively no seat to avail themselves of, and the open sky above. As these cars have to turn a right angle more than once during their journey from the centre of the city to the locomotive engine, it will be necessary to attach a four-in-hand team in order to take them to that station; but it may appear a matter of speculation. If not of doubt, how a car nearly 50 feet long could turn such an angle. By reference to the Sketch, it will be seen that it is poised on two small carriages underneath, with four wheels each, the centre of each having a pivot so contrived, that, whilst the front carriage is turning a sharp curve of less than 40 feet radius (an outrage contrary to law in England), the hinder one may be on another portion of the rail in reality pointing in another direction. We have watched the cars at this interesting turn, and found the driver with his four horses in hand is obliged to go very carefully, in order not to shoot over the curve by the force of the impetus being so suddenly checked. We likewise remarked that the outer rail was several inches higher than the inner one, as a matter of course; this is most sensibly felt in the inside of the car; but for all this contrivance and care the cars will at times get off the rails. The windows along each side offer an opportunity to the traveller of seeing all around him. The cars are very light, and a stream of air can be let in at any time by opening one of the end doors; they are also ventilated by perforations in the roof, and in the winter time a close stove is introduced, which is rather a remarkable feature to an Englishman. One might go from one end of the train to the other, through all the carriages, as the money-taker must do each journey. There is something in the manner of fastening the four horses and detaching them at once which merits a careful description, and is a feat worthy of Astley's Amphitheatre. It must be understood that the driver stands on the platform in front, the horses being attached by an iron pin, which drops into a hole at his feet and fastens the pole at the front of the carriage; when at the end of the journey, and whilst the car is still in motion, he slightly holds in the horses, and, guiding them off the rails at a tangent, suddenly withdraws the pin, and thereby detaching the horses, jumps off the platform, and drives them into the stables, whilst the car goes on by its own momentum to the locomotive engine, attended by the breakman.

INTERIOR OF A NEW YORK RAILWAY CAR.

In the accompanying interior of an American car, the contrast with our own carts, &c. may be readily seen, in the immense length, the whole of which cannot be very well given in a perspective drawing, on account of the necessary distortion of the foreground. In attempting a difficulty almost approaching an impossibility, we have afforded the best view in our power. The width of the car is about 9 feet and the length nearly 50. There are eighteen seats on either side, and 17 windows. Each seat is capable of containing two persons, so that 72 persons may be comfortably accommodated, whilst a passage of about 20 inches wide the whole length of the car is preserved for the convenience of the money or tickets, as well as for the use of the passengers, and is found extremely convenient. The back of each seat is fixed on either side by two iron bars turning on a pivot in the centre of the arms of the seat, by affording an opportunity for a party of four persons to sit opposite each other, by turning the back of one seat over, as represented in the Engraving. This contrivance shows the freedom paid to the comforts of passengers by the railway companies in America, and is well worthy of imitation. The backs of the seats and the cushions have already been described as being well stuffed, and covered with a fine plush, the centre of the seats being made of polished black walnut or mahogany. Each window is supplied with a blind, which may be let down to keep out the rays of the sun, or fastened up in the antique style represented in the Engraving. The small quaint nooks on the left of the door does not contain an inkstand, but a lamp, which is fed with alcoholic camphine, or "gas" as it is there called: two tubular pipes contain the wicks, of at least two inches in length, to prevent, for a time, but not entirely, exposure by heat of the inflammable mixture contained therein. We have preserved, as nearly as possible, the various fashions of hats worn by the American gentlemen, that our English manufacturers may have an opportunity of selecting something distinguished for the ensuing season. There is nothing excessive in an American car. It is not a car for first, second or third-class people. The "upper ten" must shut up from the rest and the ticket collector is only to all indiscriminately whose custom brings in the dollars. The object of the carriage appears to be for the accommodation of the public as well as the shareholders. The comfort afforded is sufficient to warrant this observation, for, as "all men are equal," so there is no second-class car, unless for excavators and such like persons: members of Congress and butchers, aldermen and carmen, are alike commingled and on an equal footing, when travelling as subscribers. The whole train, being placed on the top of the carriages, and allowed to slide down boards to the ground from the top, to the detriment of the boxes, and the destruction of all that is fragile inside, but carefully put into the baggage-cars and locked up, or you may take care of a small basket or bag yourself, at your own risk. It is a boast in America that a lady may travel alone from one end of the United States to the other, without molestation of any kind, and the Engraving of the Interior of a car will fully bear out this observation, for, as I said,

INTERIOR OF AN AMERICAN RAILWAY CAR.

FATAL WRECK OF HER MAJESTY'S STEAMER "BIRKENHEAD," AND LARGE LOSS OF LIFE.

A catastrophe of the most disastrous character has become known within the week. Her Majesty's large steamer Birkenhead, which had been despatched from England a short time back with reinforcements for the troops engaged in the Kaffir war at the Cape of Good Hope, has been lost off the coast there; and out of 638 souls on board, only 184 have been saved.

The scene of this terrible calamity was at Danger Point not far from Simon's Bay, where the steamer, after a prosperous run of forty-eight days from Cork—which she left on the 7th of January last—arrived on the 24th of February, and landed a portion of the reinforcements on board. She left on the following evening at seven o'clock to proceed to Algoa Bay and the Buffalo River, with the rest of the troops destined for the war; and her commander, Captain Salmond, in his anxiety to make as quick a passage as possible, kept to the shore so closely, that the steamer, during the night, got among the rocks which line the coast, and struck with a violent shock at two o'clock in the morning on the 26th of February, seven hours after she had steamed out of Simon's Bay. The speed at which she was going—8½ knots an hour—drove her with such force on the rocks, that within a few minutes after she struck she broke in two, and went down, carrying with her the large proportion mentioned above of the persons on board.

The coolness and steady obedience to order which the troops manifested on that awful and trying occasion present an instance of one of the noblest results of discipline. All the women and children were removed in time to secure their entire safety, and then the officers and men tried to save themselves in the boats, and by whatever means they could obtain.

The following report, addressed to the Commandant of Cape Town by Captain Wright, of the 91st Regiment, one of the survivors, gives a graphic and succinct narrative of the disaster :—

Simon's Bay, March 1, 1852.

SIR,—It is with feelings of the deepest regret that I have to announce to you the loss of her Majesty's steamer Birkenhead, which took place on a rock about two miles and a half or three miles off Point Danger, at 2 A.M., 26th February.

The sea was smooth at the time, and the vessel was steaming at the rate of eight knots and a half an hour. She struck the rock, and it penetrated through her bottom just aft of the foremast. The rush of water was so great that there is no doubt that most of the men in the lower troop deck were drowned in their hammocks. The rest of the men and all the officers appeared on deck, when Major Seaton called all the officers about him and impressed on them the necessity of preserving order and silence among the men. He directed me to take and have executed whatever orders the commander might give me. Sixty men were immediately put on to the chain pumps on the lower afterdeck, and told off in three reliefs; sixty men were put on to the tackles of the paddlebox boats, and the remainder of the men were brought on to the poop, so as to case the fore part of the ship. She was at the time rolling heavily. The commander ordered the horses to be pitched out of the port gangway, and the cutter to be got ready for the women and children, who had all been collected under the poop awning. As soon as the horses were got over the side, the women and children were passed into the cutter, and under charge of Mr. Richards, master's assistant, the boat then stood off about 150 yards. Just after they were out of the ship the entire bow broke off at the foremast, the bowsprit going up in the air towards the fore topmast, and the funnel went over the side, carrying away the starboard paddlebox and boat. The paddlebox boat was injured when being lowered. The large boat in the centre of the poop awning could not be got at.

It was about 12 or 15 minutes after she struck that the bow broke off. The men then all went up on the poop, and in about five minutes more the vessel broke in two. Forewards, just about the engine-room, and the stern part immediately filled and went down. A few men jumped off just before she did so, but the greater number remained to the last, and so did every officer belonging to the troops. All the men, as well as the sailors, I fear, were crushed when the funnel fell; and the men and officers below at the pumps could not, I think, have reached the deck before the vessel broke up and went down. The survivors clung, some to the rigging of the mainmast, part of which was cut off by the funnel, and others got hold of floating pieces of wood. I think there must have been about 200 on the drift wood. I was on a large piece along with five others, and we picked up nine or ten more. The swell carried the wood in the direction of Point Danger. As soon as it got to the weeds and breakers, finding that it would not support all that were on it, I jumped off and swam on shore; and when the others, and also those that were on the pieces of wood, reached the shore, we proceeded into the country, to try to find a habitation of any sort where we could obtain shelter. Many of the men were naked, and almost all without shoes. Owing to the country being covered with thick, thorny bushes, our progress was slow; but, after walking till about 3 P.M., having reached land about 12, we came to where a wagon was outspanning, and the driver of it directed us to a small bay, where there is a hut of a fisherman. The bay is called Sandford's Cove. We arrived there about sunset; and, as the men had nothing to eat, I went on to a farmhouse about eight or nine miles from the Cove, and sent back provisions for the day. The next morning I sent another day's provisions, and the men were removed up to a farm of Captain Smales', about 12 or 14 miles up the country. Lieutenant Girardot, of the 43d, and Cornet Bond, of the 12th Lancers, accompanied this party, which amounted to 68 men, including 18 sailors.

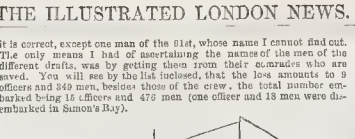
I then went down to the coast, and during Friday, Saturday, and Sunday I examined the rocks for more than 20 miles, in the hope of finding some men who might have drifted in. I fortunately fell in with the crew of a whale boat, that is employed sending on Dyer's Island; I got them to take the boat outside the seaweed, while I went along the shore. The seaweed on the coast is very thick, and of immense length, so that it would have caught most of the drift wood. Happily, the boat picked up two men, and I also found two. Although they were almost exhausted, two of them having been in the water 38 hours, they were all right the next day except a few bruises. It was 86 hours on Sunday afternoon when I left the coast since the wreck had taken place; and as I had carefully examined every part of the rocks, and also sent the whale boat over to Dyer's Island, I can safely assert that when I left there was not a living soul on the coast of those that had been on board the ill-fated Birkenhead.

On Saturday I met Mr. Mackay, the Civil Commissioner of Caledon, and also Lieutenant Villiers. The former told me that he had ordered the men who had been at Captain Smales' to be clothed by him, he having a store at his farm. Forty soldiers received clothing there. Mr. Mackay, the field-cornet, and myself, accompanied by a party of men brought down by Mr. Villiers, went along the coast as far as the point that runs out to Dyer's Island, and all the bodies that were met with were interred. There were not many, however, and I regret to say it could be easily accounted for. Five of the horses got to the shore, and were caught and brought to me. One belonged to myself, one to Mr. Bond, of the 12th Lancers, and the other three to Major Seaton, of the 74th, Dr. Laing, and Lieutenant Booth, of the 73d. I handed the horses over to Mr. Mackay, and he is to send them on to me here, so that they may be sold, and that I may account for the proceed.

On the 28th of February her Majesty's ship Rhadamanthus was seen off Sandford's Cove; so I went down there, and found that Captain Bance, the Commander of the Castor frigate, had landed and gone up to Captain Smales', to order the men down to the Cove, so as to embark in the steamer to be conveyed to Simon's Bay. On Sunday, when I was down on the coast, the field-cornet told me that at a part where he and his men had been a few bodies were washed up and buried; also a few boxes, which were broken in pieces and the contents strewed about the rocks. I have ceased to hope that any more were living, and came down to the Cove to join the other men. We arrived there about six P.M.

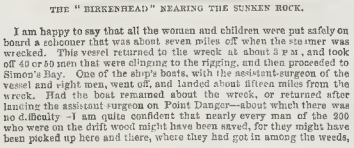
The order and regularity that prevailed on board, from the time the ship struck till she totally disappeared, far exceeded anything that I thought could be effected by the best discipline; and it is but seldom it comes to be wondered at, seeing that most of the soldiers had been but a short time in the service. Every one did as he was directed; and there was not a murmur or a cry among them until the vessel made her final plunge. I could not name any individual officer who did more than another. All remained their orders, and had them carried out, as if the men were embarking, instead of going to the bottom; there was only this difference, that I never saw any embarkation conducted with so little noise or confusion.

I inclose a list of those embarked, distinguishing those saved. I think it is correct, except one man of the 91st, whose name I cannot find out. The only means I had of ascertaining the names of the men of the different drafts, was by getting them from their comrades who are saved. You will see by the list inclosed, that the loss amounts to 9 officers and 349 men, besides those of the crew, the total number embarked being 16 officers and 472 men (one officer and 18 men were disembarked in Simon's Bay).



THE "BIRKENHEAD" NEARING THE SUNKEN ROCK.

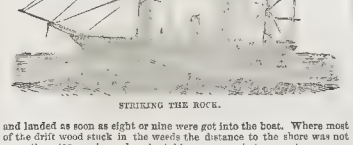
I am happy to say that all the women and children were put safely on board a schooner that was about seven miles off when the steamer was wrecked. This vessel returned to the wreck at about 3 P.M., and took off 40 or 50 men that were clinging to the rigging, and then proceeded to Simon's Bay. One of the ship's boats, with the assistant-surgeon of the vessel and eight men, went off, and landed about fifteen miles from the wreck. Had the boat remained about the wreck, or returned after landing the assistant surgeon on Point Danger—about which there was no difficulty—I am quite confident that nearly every man of the 300 who were on the drift wood might have been saved, for they might have been picked up here and there, where they had got in among the weeds,



STRIKING THE ROCK.

and landed as soon as eight or nine were got into the boat. Where most of the drift wood stuck in the weeds the distance to the shore was not more than 400 yards, and as, by taking a somewhat serpentine course, I managed to swim in without getting foul of the rock, or being tumbled over by a breaker, there is no doubt the boat might have done so also

(the fact I cannot omit mentioning). When the vessel was just about going down, the commander called out, "All those that can swim, jump over board and make for the boats." Lieutenant Girardot and myself were standing on the stern part of the poop. We begged the men not to do as the commander said, as the boat with the women must be swamped. Not more than three made the attempt.



BREAKING.

On Sunday evening, at 6 P.M., all the men who were at Captain Smales', and the four I had with myself on the coast, were embarked in boats and taken on board the Rhadamanthus, and we arrived in Simon's Bay at 3 A.M. on Monday, the 1st of March; eighteen of the men are bruised and burnt by the sun, and the Commodore has ordered them into the Naval Hospital. The rest are all right, and seventy require to be clothed. I need scarcely say that everything belonging to the men was lost.

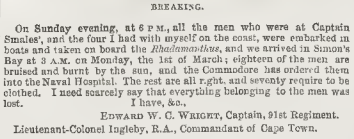
I have, &c.,

EDWARD W. C. WRIGHT, Captain, 91st Regiment.

Lieutenant-Colonel Ingleby, R.A., Commandant of Cape Town.

P.S.—I must not omit to mention the extreme kindness and attention shown by Captain Smales to the men at his house: and by Captain Ramsden, of the Lioness schooner, and his wife to those taken on board his vessel.

E. W. C. W.



THE WRECK.

From other accounts it would appear that considerable numbers perished in the water from the attacks of the sharks, which surrounded the wreck in shoals.

The following are returns of the numbers saved and lost respectively :—

SAVED.

OFFICERS, SEAMEN, MARINES, AND BOYS.—William Callaes, assistant-surg., C. R. Hancock, assistant engineer, 1st class; Benjamin Barber, clerk, 3d class; John Freshfield, clerk; E. B. Richards, master's assistant; G. W. S. Rice, clerk; John Archbold, gunner. Seamen.—John Bowen, A.B.; Jas. Dunn, A.B.; George Tilt, A.B.; Jos. Smith, A.B.; Charles Noble, A.B.; Tom. Berry, A.B.; William Langwad, A.B.; John Ashbot, stoker; George Randon, stoker; John King, stoker; Thomas Daw, stoker; Henry Maxwell, quartermaster, Edward Wilson, boatswain's mate; James Lacey, coal heaver; Jas. Meehan, coal heaver; Wm. Neale, carpenter's mate; Thos. Hardman, jig. stoker; James Duffy, J. F. and W. Second Class Boys; Robert Prim, A.B.; George Winsor, A.B.; Thomas Harris, A.B.; John Lewis, A.B.; Thomas Woods, stoker, John Thelan, A.B.; John Dyke, A.B.; James M'Carthy, A.B.; Thomas Forbes, A.B.; Henry Bewell, A.B.; William W odward seaman; Thomas Drackford, seaman; Thomas Coffin, seaman; William Giles, boy 1st class, Charles Mathews, boy 2d class; George Windham, boy 2d class; Benjamin Turney, boy 2d class; J. R. Howard, not on ship's books.

MARINES.—John Drake, colour-sergeant, William Northover, private; Thos. Dame, private; John Cooper, private; William Tuck, private; Thomas Kearns, private.

SOLDIERS.—2d Regiment: John Moore, Michael Maley, P. Peters, John Peters, Thomas Gardner, Robert Pace, Henry Dance, Henry Vernon, James Gibbs, Regt. Sergeant-Major M'Carthy. Sergeant Tuite, W. Bushe, William Clark, Thomas Caldwell, James Godin, John Herriel, James Wade, William Wright, Richard Ryan, Daniel Waters, Thomas Sangaw, John Irwin, James Johnson, Robert Jones, John Yale, John Simm, P. Ward. 43d Regiment: John Hurst, Ed. Ambrose, James West. 43d Regiment: Adam Keating. 60th Rifles: William Brownlow, Thomas Nuttall, Thomas Smith, William Sumer. 73d Regiment: Sergeant Kaber y, William Burbe, Thomas Cash, James Fitzpatrick, Wm. Hopkins, Patrick May, Michael O'Brien, Patrick Lynch, John Sullivan, William Ward. 74th Regiment: Sergeant Harold, W. Boyce, C. Fergusson, James Henderson, D. Jackson, Walter Taylor, John Smith, Charles Walker, D. Sawyer, Richard Evans, Stanley, D. Carey, F. Mullins, F. Cunningham, John Goodall. Staff Assistant: John Lamb, John Walmsley, Frederick Winterbottom.

WOMEN.—Mrs. Darkins, Mrs. Nesbit, Mrs. Mullins, Mrs. Hudson, Mrs. Gwichar, Mrs. Sparks, Mrs. Montgomery.

Thirteen children.

Mr. Bowen, staff-surgeon.

Total:—One officer and 62 soldiers, 7 women, and 13 children.

When the Rhadamanthus reached the scene of the wreck, she found on the shore, near Danger Point, 68 survivors, who had succeeded in landing there. It appears, from search of the coast for twenty miles, that no others have been saved or are likely to be found. The following is the list of the 68 persons, in addition to those saved by the boats:—

OFFICERS.—Captain Wright, 91st Regiment; Lieutenant Girardot, 43d Regiment; Cornet Bond, 12th Lancers.

12TH LANCERS.—J. Dodd. 43d Regiment: A. Auther, W. Babb, J. White, J. Ryan, J. Bourke. 60th Regiment: J. Brown, R. Hand, M. Barby, J. Hoddy. 91st Regiment: G. Bridges, G. Wells, W. Smith, L. Hargins, J. M'Donell. 43d Regiment: J. Gerim, G. Peters, G. Lyons, G. Brachney, M. Hornett, P. Allan, J. Woodward. 60th Regiment: Sergeant D. Andrews, A. Lacke, H. Cook, J. Hanlon, H. Maiher, J. Stanfield. 73d Regiment: D. Sullivan, J. O'Reilly, W. Dopson, P. Taylor. 74th Regiment: G. Taylor, J. M'Mullin, R. Hartle, J. Keath, D. Manrue, J. M'Gregor, J. M'Kee. 91st Regiment: J. Hosden, P. Flynn, J. Corbey, A. M'Kay, A. Hutson, J. Lancey, J. Haggard.

Total: 46 soldiers, 4 officers.

List of officers and seamen of the Birkenhead taken off Danger Point:—

OFFICERS: Mr. Barbar, assistant engineer; Mr. Archibald, gunner.

Edward Crosser, A.B.; Samuel Harris, cutter; Thomas Hundran, stoker; Edward Wilson, boatswain's mate; James Wearan, sailmaker's mate; Jas. Lacy, captain forecastle; James M'Neal, cooper's mate; Henry Maxwell, quartermaster; H. Jeffry, paymaster and purser's steward; Edward Gardner, stoker; Rd. Biggle, A.B.; John Hawkins, stoker, William Lock, private, R.M.; Thomas Kearns, ditto; George Wyndham, B. 1st class; Benjamin Turner, ditto.

Total:—2 officers and 16 seamen.

DROWNED.

Draft 2d or Queen's Regiment.—Ensign Boyland, Corporal M'Manus, Privates Coal., M'Kinsey, George March, James Keay, Jos. Burke, Charles Cornell, James Coe, Richard Coleman, William Clay, William Forbes, Green, John Greenleaf, John Howard, George Knight, Patrick Lavercy, John Martin, Charles Mooney, James Nason, Michael O'Connell, James O'Leary, George Price, John Quirk, Paddy Simmonds, Frank Shockney, Nathaniel Thomas, Samuel Wilson, Webster, Walter, Thomas Woodcock, George Weir, W. M. Wilson, Zachariah Cartwright, John Dill, William Dyer.

Draft 6th Royal Regiment.—Ensign Medford, Abraham Burke, Michael Beckett, William Brown, John Began, Patrick Began, William Began, Joseph Bromley, Dennis Cotter, Patrick Corrigan, Hugh Dickson, Thomas Finn, William Fletcher, John Grady, Joseph Hudson, Henry Kean, John Kelly, William Kitchen, Henry Lombaert, John Layne, Hugh Murray, Cornelius Mooney, Patrick Mooney, Thomas Mooney, Michael Morgan, John Obrenshaw, Charles Price, Patrick Ryan, John Ryder, John Shearington, Thomas Sykes, Mark Somerton, Michael Star, John Smith, Edward Tobyr, George Tuly, John Tuley, George Worth, West, Thomas White, James Mitham, Henry Jacobs, Paul Lavery, Patrick Malann, Joseph Harris, Alfred Cafford, John Croker, James Hanley.

Draft 12th Lancers.—Cornet Rolt, Sergeant John Straw, G. Hutchins, G. Hughson, Cosburn.

Draft 12th Regiment.—Privates Thomas Archer, Armstrong, Barrett, Beauingham Boswell, George Bradley, Byrne, Carrington, Celtus, Canes, Cummens, Lawrence Craig, Dunmuck, Darkin, England, Fell, Fitzgerald, Fingham, Fanney, Foeman, Finn, Grimshaw, Hart, Howard, Samuel Johnston, Wootton, Kaulber, Kely, Lambdon, Lawlor, Lee, M'Dermott, M'Donnell, M'Morrow, Matthews, Mann, Molloy, Nolan, Northrop, Allen Connor, Owen, Palmer, Pebir, Patell, Rennalds, Roach, Shepard, Smith (3714), Spriggs, Thompson, Tilton, Wales, Wilson.

Draft 43d Light Infantry.—Sergeant William Hicks, Corporal Joseph Harrison, Corporal Benjamin Cousins, John Anderson, John Butler, John Byrne, William Button, Daniel Brennell, Thomas Cave Jean Co grove, George Graham, William de Bank, Thomas Doey, William Donald, Joseph Fanning, Roff, Houston, John Eaddleston, Reardon, Sullivan, Vickrey, Edward Quin, Maurice Welch, Charles Ramshaw, Shepherd, John M'Quade, Michael M. Karalin, Timothy Sheehan, William Tucker.

Draft 43d Regiment.—Lieutenant G. C. Coker, William Connell, M. Daughtery.

Draft 60th Rifles.—Corporal Francis Curtis, James Brown, James Brookland, James Cannan, William Campbell, Ed. Elliott, Thomas Irons, Michael Hamilton, Jacob Lee, William Kelly, Charles Lucas, James Slather, James Moore, John May, Daniel M'Quade, Patrick O'Brien, Thomas Peacock, John Rees, Samuel Russell, Thomas Scutts, James Storey, Patrick Sloane, James Thompson, William Wilkins, Walsh Wisherd, James Wilson, William Woodward, John Watts, Simon Jacobs, Joseph Ladd

DRAFT 73d Regiment.—Lieutenant G. W. Robinson, Lieutenant A. H. Bond, Thomas Birmingham, James Bernard, James Seagram, William Bosman, Daniel Buckley, John Byrne, William Burton, John Bryan, Michael Caffy, Matthew Combs, Patrick Corney, John Cassents, Charles Dawson, Hugh Deegan, William Dudley, Patrick Doyle, Hugh Feehy, Matthew Fitzpatrick, Michael Fanagan, Hugh Feby, Michael Fremsh, Malachi Garin, Samuel Gavin, Samuel Giles, John Grant, William N. Hall, John Harmer, Patrick Heanley, Robert Hinchin, Michael Hanley, William Kearns, Timothy Lahey, George Lawrence, Thomas Larkin, Michael Maher, John Mabeys, John Murphy, Thomas Murray, Patrick O'Brien, William O'Connell, James Quinn, George Ratan, George Searey, William Flynn, Philip Scott, Timothy Sheehan, Daniel Sims, James Sullivan, Robert Shepherd, George Smith, James Wiseh, William Holmes, James M'Murray.

Draft 74th Highlanders.—Major Seaton, Ralph Russell. Corporal M. Mathson, Corporal William Laird, George Anderson, Archibald Baxter, Joan Binnie, Robert Beatie, Walter Bruce, John Cattanach, John Cowan, David Conlan, William Cain, Daniel Dodds, James Glover, Charles Grey, D. R. Gordon, William Graham, Thomas Harrison, Alexander Henrie, David Hunter, James Kaxwood, John Lowrie, James Morton, Alexander Meddoh, Alexander Matheson, Thomas Marvey, Alexander Miller, David Minor, George Miller, William M'Ainsey, John M'Kinnon, Edward M'Leod, John M'Glarney, Thomas Robertson, Ebenezer Rutherford, John Sharp (1), Duncan Shaw, Robert Smith, William Smith, Robert Stewart, William Stewart, John Thomson, Adam Thomson, Francis Turney, Robert Walker, George Watson, Peter Hamilton, John Nelson, Thomas Pride.

Draft 91st Regiment.—Sergeant William Butler, Corporal Alexander Webber, Joseph B. ?, James Bean, James Buckham, William Whibro, James Cavaner, Daniel Daley, James Drury, Hugh Ford, Patrick Gaffy, John Harber, Stephen Hagan, Patrick Hagan, Thomas Jays, George kemp, Frances Backeney, George Lewis, James Montgomery, William Malcolm, John Smith, William Smith, Luke Smith, Patrick Smith, William Clark, James Turney, Christopher Ware, Alexander Weaington, Joseph Grant, John Moore, William Woodman, George Lewis, James Moon, William Foster, William Meadows, William Sedgewood, Patrick haly, James Deaney, Alexander M'Fadon, Henry Haywood, Patrick Hussey, John Sweeney, David Pratt; James Walsh, passenger: Andrew White, a servant.

The accompanying Illustrations, for which we are indebted to the courtesy of Captain Wright, show the several stages of the catastrophe. First, we have the ill-fated steamer nearing the sunken rocks; in the next Sketch, she is striking, and the two other Sketches show the mode of her destruction. The fore part of the vessel fell on the side of the rock, and the machinery, being heavy, kept that part down, leaving the stern, which was buoyant, above water. It had, however, a rocking motion; and in a little time it broke in two at the second air-tight compartment (a), when the water rushed into b, and drew down the whole stern, and those upon it, below water, leaving out the topsail yard, to which they clung.

"CHRIST BLESSING LITTLE CHILDREN."

THIS picture, which is intended to be placed in the infant-school of St. Stephen's, Westminster, has been painted by Mr. Marshall Claxton, under these very interesting circumstances.

In the summer of the year 1850 the artist received from Miss Burdett Coutts the commission for the picture, for the decoration of the school erected with the fine church of St. Stephen at Miss Coutts' expense. Mr. Claxton shortly afterwards sailed in an emigrant vessel for Australia. On his long voyage he studied his work, sketched it, and immediately on landing at Sydney prepared to set about painting.

He could, however, find no house with a room large enough for his purpose; so, having obtained from the committee of Sydney College the loan of that building, he set up his easel there. The painting soon became matter of public interest, so that, from first to last, not less than 7000 persons called to watch its progress. They viewed it at Australia's earliest contribution to art, and they felt justly proud of such a first essay. At length the picture was completed and sent to England, and, since its arrival here, a large number of persons visited the Amateur Gallery in Pall-Mall, wherein it was placed.

"CHRIST BLESSING LITTLE CHILDREN." PAINTED BY MARSHALL CLAXTON, FOR THE INFANT SCHOOL, ST STEPHEN'S, WESTMINSTER

It is generally regarded as the most successful work the artist has yet painted. Bearing in certain places the marks of imperfection and hasty execution, the conception and general arrangement show the painter's command over expression, ability in telling the story, a fine feeling for colour, and competent knowledge of effect. Christ is seated in an open portico; around him are grouped the several ages of infancy or youth; the children of rich and poor are there—of Jew and of Gentile, of the bondwoman and of the free. All press around the Saviour with an instinctive appreciation of his benignity and love. To the left of the picture, the favourite disciple and his brother are rewarding with delight this new proof of their Master's goodness; while Peter and other Apostles are yet awed by the rebuke, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Certainly no subject could have been selected more appropriate for its final resting place, an infant-school; there to [illegible], in comparative ratio, the sacredness and high calling of the precepts taught within the Church's holy pale.

We understand that the picture is about to be engraved in style corresponding with Sir C. L. Eastlake's fine print of "Christ Weeping over Jerusalem."

THE SUNDAY BEFORE EASTER IN PARIS.

DRAWN BY VALENTIN.

In Paris, the Sunday before Easter (Le Dimanche des Rameaux, as it is termed) is observed by a ceremony corresponding with that of blessing palms at Rome; hence Palm Sunday. Just as the crowd are leaving the churches, after high mass, venders of box-tree surround them. The twigs are eagerly purchased, and each is taken to be blessed by the parish priest; after which the possessor takes it home, and keeps it as propitiatory of good fortune. The practice is very general; even the coachman places a branch of box in his horses' heads.

PALM SUNDAY IN PARIS.—DRAWN BY VALENTIN.

THE CROSS OF FIRE

IN ST. PETER'S, AT ROME, ON MAUNDY THURSDAY.

(SEE NEXT PAGE).

THE CROSS OF FIRE IN ST. PETER'S, AT ROME.

THE grand and solemn character of the religious ceremonies which mark the observance of Holy Week in Rome has long been celebrated as the chief among the attractions of a sojourn at this season in the Eternal City.

Maundy Thursday, so called from the first words of the anthem, "Mandatum novum do vobis," &c. ("A new command I give unto you, that you love one another as I have loved you"), which is sung on that day at the commencement of the washing of the feet by the Pope, in the Sala della Lavanda of the Vatican, is one of the principal days devoted to these imposing and magnificent ritual observances of the Roman Church.

At the close of the day's ceremonies, the office of Tenebræ, in commemoration of our Saviour's Passion, is chanted, as well as on the evenings of Wednesday and Good Friday; and in St. Peter's, on this occasion, one of the most beautiful features of the "Tenebræ," as they are termed, is presented to the admiration of the spectators. Towards the conclusion of the Tenebræ, the church is rendered almost wholly dark by the gradual extinction of the lights; and from the lofty dome is seen suspended in mid air, over the Confessional of St. Peter, adjoining the High Altar, a Cross of Fire, or Light, emblematic of the light of Christianity, of which the Cross of Christ is the symbol.

The idea has evidently been suggested by the cross of light, inscribed with the words in vouto vinces (i. e. "By this sign you conquer"), which is mentioned in the life of Constantine the Great as having been seen by that Emperor in the heavens, when, still a Pagan, but yet inclining to Christianity, he was preparing in the immediate neighbourhood of Rome to give battle to his enemies, who disputed his right of succession to the imperial purple.

The "Cross of Fire" in St. Peter's on Maundy Thursday evening is formed by covering a cross with innumerable small lamps, which emit a brilliant flame, thus rendering the transept, and the whole vicinity; and, all around being dark, the Cross is displayed in brilliant relief, as shown in the Engraving.

Accompanied as this sight is with the tones of the choir chanting the psalm "Miserere" as it can alone be sung by Italians and in St. Peter's, the effect of the whole is grand and impressive in the highest degree.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following preferments and appointments have recently taken place:—Exeter: The Rev. R. J. Hill, to Penfield, Essex; the Rev. T. N. Williams, to Aber, Carnarvonshire. Vicarages. The Rev. C. J. Bellin, to Blakesley, Northamptonshire; the Rev. G. Lowell, to Ludgvan, Breckenbridge, the Rev. H. P. Messer, to Kingston-near-Thames. The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Rev Edward Ventris, M.A., perpetual curate of Stow-cum-Qui, near Cambridge, to be one of his Lordship's domestic chaplains. The Bishop of Exeter has instituted the Rev William Bryans, M.A., perpetual curate of Ash, Shropshire, to the vicarage of Tarvin, Cheshire, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. J. S. Bowstead, M.A., on the presentation of the Bishop of Lichfield. The Bishop of Bath and Wells has licensed the Rev. Thomas Laughan, B.A., curate of Wa-cot, to the Incumbency of St Mary's Church, Queen-square, Bath. The President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford, have presented the Rev. A. P. Denison, B.D., Fellow of that society, to the rectory of Burdwell, near Bury St. Edmund's, Suffolk, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. Henry Adams, M.A.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently received testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev. A. M. F. Browne, from the children of the Lechlade National School; the Rev. Octavius Fox, late head master of the College School, Worcester, from his former pupils; the Rev. George Raymond Portal, from the teachers and scholars of the National School on his resigning the curacy of Wilton, Wilts; the Rev. J. F. Bynham, lately appointed to the rectory of Charlton, Dover, from his former congregation, at Margate; the Rev. T. Cooke, from the teachers of St. Peter's Church, Brighton, on the inhabitants; the Rev. G. R. Turner, from the parishioners of Marlborough, on his leaving.

THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE, NORTHAMPTON.—An effort is now being made to restore and enlarge this very interesting church, the oldest of the existing round churches in England. A committee has been formed, consisting of the Bishop of Peterborough, the Archdeacon, Lords Exeter and Spencer and Messrs. Bloxam, Hartshorne, Poole, and others, in conjunction with the vicar and churchwardens, to carry this object into effect.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, K.G., has been pleased to appoint the Rev. John Stopford Risley, B.C.L., rector of Wotton-Bucks, one of his Grace's chaplains, in the room of the Rev. Benjamin Hill, late vicar of Wotton, Bucks, who has accepted a chaplaincy at Valparaiso, South America.

MARY MAGDALEN, FROM THE PICTURE BY COUNT D'ORSAY (Hogarth, Publisher).—This impressive work has been beautifully lithographed by Emile Lassalle. The painter has sung to portray the sorrowing mother giving utterance to the touching lament, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." The expression is that of bitter mourning and affecting sadness in this proto-example of the sorrows of Christianity. The picture will, in the words of the old saying, "naturally suit with the composed, fixed, and monastic disposition of some minds," but will at the same time satisfy the meditative feelings of all.

THE ENGINEERS' STRIKE.—The following correspondence has taken place between the Manchester branch of the Amalgamated Society and the Employers:—"To the Association of Employers.—Amalgamated Society, Manchester Branch-office, March 30, 1852. Gentlemen,—The Manchester District Committee agree to withdraw the circular issued by the Executive Council, dated Dec. 24, 1851, and the circular emanating from a meeting held in Carpenters'-hall, Oct. 2, 1851, on condition that you withdraw the declaration. If the above proposition meet your approbation, and the ground is clear, we suggest the following propositions for your consideration:—To work piece-work on a mutual principle between employer and employed. To work over-time when necessary, and to be paid for so working at the rate of time and a quarter for the first two hours, time and half for the next two hours, and double time for every hour worked afterwards. The deputation is waiting to appear before the association, or to answer any question that may be put to them, on behalf of the workmen.—Gentlemen, yours respectfully, W. HEMM, Sec."——"March 30, 1852. Sir,—We are instructed by the executive committee of the Employers' Association to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this day, and, in reply, to say, the committee cannot enter into any compromise whatever. They are strongly opposed to all combination, whether of masters or workmen, and they therefore trust that they will succeed in so far as to prevent one by the aggressive acts of your and other societies; and until all the objectionable rules, demands, and by-laws of such societies are unconditionally rescinded and withdrawn, and the workmen individually are every employer to make what arrangements and engage what workmen he pleases is fully recognised, the committee do not feel justified in recommending the association to receive any deputation which they have thought necessary to adopt.—We are, RICHARDSON and WHITWORTH.—To Mr. W. Hemm, secretary, Manchester Branch of the Amalgamated Society." The secretary of the iron-moulders at Manchester addressed a letter to the secretaries of the Association of Employers, dated April 1st, in which he states that he is desired to express his regret that the "declaration" had not, erewhen, been withdrawn, and that the iron-moulders were desirous and willing to resume their work on the following conditions:—First, the withdrawal of the declaration from the iron-moulders; second, the discharge of the individuals who have subscribed to the same. The following answer has been returned:—"Manchester, April 2, 1852.—Sir,—We have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday; and in reply we are instructed by the executive committee of the Employers' Association to say that the two 'conditions' named by you, on behalf of the iron-moulders, cannot be entertained. The extraordinary character of the second 'condition' is most especial; the adherence of the employers to those workmen who have signed the declaration is a matter unanimously understood and approved. We are, sir, your obedient servants, RICHARDSON and WHITWORTH, secretaries.—Mr. James Ellis, secretary to the Iron-moulders' Society, Manchester."——The following notice has been sent from the Executive Council of the Amalgamated Society to the employers of operative engineers:—"Gentlemen,—The Executive Council of the Amalgamated Society beg respectfully to withdraw the circular issued by them to the employers of operative engineers, dated the 24th December, 1851, which circular stated that they had come to a resolution to establish place-work and overtime after the 31st December, 1851. In withdrawing the above circular, which seems to have given rise to a serious contest in the trade, it is fully anticipated that such a course will have the effect of inducing the employers to withdraw the declaration which workmen are called upon to sign before resuming employment.—I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, W. ALLEN, Gen. Sec., 23, Little Alie-street, Whitechapel, London.—April 5, 1852."

The Liverpool Watch Committee have decided that no member of an Orange or Ribbon society shall be allowed to remain, or be engaged, in the police force of that borough.

A valuable chronometer, manufactured by Alderman Carter, of Cornhill, has been presented by the inhabitants of the Mauritius to Mr. Sheard, with the following inscription: "The inhabitants of Mauritius present this chronometer to Mr Samuel Bishop Sheard, late second officer of the ship Randolph, wrecked on this island on the night of the 28th of June, 1851, to mark their admiration of his calmness and humanity in repeatedly risking his life, under circumstances of peril and danger, in order to save the Indian emigrant passengers, in which he was eminently successful."

The Gazette de France says:—"A rumour is current that the two Grand Dukes of Russia, Michael and Nicholas, are about to comb to Paris on a visit to the President of the Republic."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE BURMESE WAR.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH, in moving for papers explanatory of the grounds of the hostilities with Ava, drew, with open the false position in which the peace and annexation of the territory would place the Government of India, and upon the prejudicial and probably fatal effect which even the most complete success in the war would produce upon both the civil and military service.

The Earl of DERBY vindicated the conduct of the Governor-General, who, he said, was not less anxious than the noble Lord himself to avoid the necessity of a large increase of territory in that quarter. He hoped the House would be satisfied, that as on the one hand there had been no desire to incur the responsibility and hazard of a war, so on the other hand the measures of the Government had been so prompt and ready as to leave no room for a very reasonable expectation that the hostilities with the Burmese Empire would be of no very long duration.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN REFUGEES.

Lord BEAUMONT moved for the production of further correspondence on this subject, and called their Lordships' attention to the papers relating to it already laid on the table. The right of asylum granted in this country to foreigners who had lost their own was not only an honour to this nation, but was a source of safety to those Governments whence they had escaped; and he trusted the noble Lord the Foreign Secretary would at once declare whether they were prepared to abide by what had been the invariable policy of England in this respect. His Lordship also directed attention to the expulsion of the Free Church (Scotch) ministers from Perth.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said that he held, as a principle paramount over all others, that the dignity of the Crown and the honour of the country were to be the first considerations of any person holding the position which he had the honour to fill. He could assure their Lordships that he was determined to continue to political refugees the asylum afforded to them by this country, so long as they observed its laws. He explained that the circumstances of the expulsion of the Free Church ministers had been much exaggerated.

After some observations from Lord GRANVILLE with regard to the correspondence which had passed between himself and the Austrian Government,

Lord BEAUMONT withdrew his motion.

THE PATENT LAW BILL.

Lord COLCHESTER moved that the bill should be committed pro formâ, and that several amendments were to be proposed should be discussed at the third reading.

The bill accordingly passed through committee.

THE MUTINY BILL, AND THE MARINE MUTINY BILL.

These bills were read a second time.

The Indemnity Bill passed through committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

GRAND JURIES

The ATTORNEY GENERAL gave notice that after Easter he would move for leave to bring in a bill to render it unnecessary to summon grand juries within the metropolitan district.

THE MILITIA FRANCHISE.

Colonel ROMILLY asked the Home Secretary whether he intended to give the franchise to seafaring men and to sailors in the Royal navy, as well as to militia-men.

Mr. WALPOLE said it was not his intention to press the clause in the Militia Bill giving a vote for the county to every man who had served for two years in the militia. He had consulted with his colleagues, who found so many difficulties in the way of carrying out the object, that he had determined to give it up.

COUNTY COURTS JUDGES.

Mr. WALPOLE, in reply to Mr. M'Cullagh, stated that in some exceptional cases, where the labour was unusually great, it might be deemed proper to allow the maximum salary of £1200 a year to the county courts judges.

NEW ZEALAND.

In reply to a question from Mr. MAGUIRE, Sir J. PAKINGTON said that it was the intention of the Government immediately after Easter, to introduce a bill with a view to confer representative institutions upon New Zealand.

NEWSPAPER STAMPS

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL stated, in reply to Mr Scholefield, that, in conformity with the opinions of the late law officers of the Crown, he thought the decision of the Court of Exchequer in the case of a publication called "The House old Narrative of Current Events" was sound in law, and that a new information would be tried, as a matter of form, to allow of the question being referred to the decision of the judges on a writ of error.

MINISTERIAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. OSBORNE, in reference to what he termed the anomalous position of Ministers, demanded from them a somewhat more explicit declaration than had as yet been given with respect to their future policy, and of the measures they intended to introduce. The Government immediately after Easter, to introduce a bill with a view to confer representative institutions upon New Zealand.

The Earl of DERBY replied that the only information he possessed on the melancholy subject to which his hon. friend referred was derived from the same source from which his hon. friend derived his, namely, the public papers. Up to the moment of his leaving the House he had received no official or unofficial intelligence bearing on either of the topics involved in his hon. friend's question had reached him.

Mr. GRATTAN also questioned the Secretary to the Admiralty on the melancholy subject.

Mr STAFFORD, in reply, also stated that no further information had been received from Admiralty or the newspapers relative to the case of the Birkenhead, the number of souls on board of which was upwards of 600. The Hydra and Megæra, which were also employed in conveying troops to the Cape, had been spoken with—the one on the 22nd of March, and the other on the 23rd of March, and the other in 28 deg. 13 min. north latitude, and 18 deg. 18 min. west longitude, on the 29th January.

THE "BULLETIN FRANCAIS."

Mr. MILNES put a question in reference to the recent seizure of publications belonging to a British subject, Mr. Jeffs, from the Soho steamer, by the Belgian Government.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the publications were for the most part French newspapers, and were contraband under an old Belgian act. For the wrong sustained by the seizure of the Bulletin Français, the editor of which had been prosecuted against and acquitted subsequently, Mr. Jeffs must proceed in the Belgian courts.

THE RIVER PLATE.

Mr. M. GIBSON put a question on the subject of our relations with Brazil an the free navigation of the river La Plata.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER explained, that within twenty-four hours after the fall of Rosas, communications had been opened with the French Government for the purpose of securing the same commercial advantages which that power enjoyed by treaty. The Chevalier St. John and Sir Charles Hotham were about to go on a joint mission for the purpose of negotiating for the opening of the free navigation of the waters of La Plata. In reply to a further question, he added that the British envoy would touch at Rio, for the purpose of opening friendly communication with the state of Brazil.

PUBLIC BUSINESS.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave notice, that on the 15th Mr. Herries would move the Committee on Indian Affairs. On the 23d the Militia Bill would be proceeded with, which, with the estimates, was, to be the only time business, interrupted only by any question of great urgency, such as the financial statement, until they were disposed of.

BALLAST-HEAVERS.

Mr. G THOMPSON moved for leave to bring in a bill to establish an office for the employment of ballast-heavers, and to act as and to the system of employing and paying them at public-houses. The bill, he said, was framed on the same principle as the Coalwhippers' Act.

Mr. STAFFORD would not oppose the first stage of the bill, but expressed a doubt whether it would not tend to impose restrictions on the employment of labour, and to create a monopoly in favour of a certain number of labourers.

Mr. CLAY said the Coalwhippers' Act had improved the condition of the labourers, and recommended that the subject to which the present bill related should be sent to a select committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. OSBORNE spoke in favour of the proposition for a select committee.

Mr. WAKLEY suggested the establishment of a general labour office

Mr. GLADSTONE expressed a decided opinion in favour of the motion, and suggested that it one for a select committee to inquire into the whole subject of the employment of ba last-heavers, with a view to framing a bill in their report.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he should be glad if the House consented the principle of the bill, the better course would be to allow it to be read a second time, and then refer it to a select committee.

After some further conversation, a resolution in favour of the bill was passed in committee of the whole House, and the bill was ordered to be brought in.

The County Courts Extension Bill went through committee pro forma.

And the House was counted out in committee on the Suitors in Chancery Relief Bill, at a quarter to eight o'clock.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he did not think that Mr Gladstone had solved the difficulties surrounding the case of South Africa, for he did not think that the settlers who had been rent out by the Government in 1819 should be left to the protection of the colonists, who might perhaps neglect the duty, and thus bring dishonour on the country. He did not see the utility of keeping up an immense military frontier, which was of no possible utility, but which, if brought within reasonable limits, might be kept for years to come by a force not exceeding 4000 men. The noble Lord availed himself of that opportunity of stating that there was nothing in all that occurred to left reflected in the slightest degree upon the military reputation of Sir Harry Smith

Sir J. PAKINGTON deprecated the enormous additions of territory which had been made to the colony at the Cape, and hoped that before the return of Sir H Smith he might have achieved the pacification of the frontier. The great difficulty to be overcome was the extent of territory which was added to the colony by Sir H Smith with the consent of Lord Grey, all ough on a former occasion Lord Grey had refused to sanction the annexation when it was recommended to him by a former Governor; and in refusing the annexation had assigned as reasons the difficulty of defending such an extent of frontier, which would bring it in contact with warlike and numerous tribes of natives, leading to constant uneasiness and probably expensive wars. He could only say, for his own part, that he would pay every attention to the subject with a view to extricating us from the difficulty without tarnishing the honour of the country.

The debate was continued by Mr. Roebuck, Mr. Osborne, Colonel Thompson, Mr. Hume, Mr. H Drummond, Mr. Frederick Peel, and Lord John Russell.

Mr. F. PEEL said he should be prepared, whenever the occasion should present itself, to defend the policy of Earl Grey.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he should be also prepared to defend Earl Grey, and to take his share of the responsibility of his acts.

The vote was then agreed to, and the House resumed

The Exchequer Bills Bill and the Protection of Inventions Extension Act were each read a third time.

The Common Lodging-houses Act Extension Bill passed through committee; an amendment, proposed by Mr. Walpole, to limit the inquiry to any case where a commission may be appointed to ten years, having been pressed to a division, and lost by 1, 0 votes against 89.

Adjourned at half-past one.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE LOSS OF THE "BIRKENHEAD."

In reply to Lord Monteagle, the Duke of NORTHUMBERLAND stated that the Admiralty had not received any news of this steam-frigate. As soon as the news that it was lost reached the Admiralty by the newspapers, the Admiralty sent down a message by electric telegraph to the Admiral at Devonport, to inquire whether there was any truth in the report; and, if there was, why he had not sent intelligence of it immediately to the Admiralty, as their agents had sent it to the newspapers in London.

OFFICIAL SECRECY.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH referred to the publication of the orders framed to the commander of the Burmese expedition, and urged the necessity, for the safety of the army and the success of our arms, that the orders given to them in command should be kept secret.

The Earl of DERBY expressed his concurrence in the sentiments of the noble Earl on the subject.

On the motion of the Earl of DERBY, the House then adjourned for the Easter holidays, to Monday the 19th inst.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE EASTER HOLIDAYS.

It was agreed that the House at its rising adjourn to Monday, the 19 h inst.

THE LOSS OF THE "BIRKENHEAD."

Mr. ADDERLEY asked the Secretary for the Colonies whether he had received any information relative to the reported loss of the Birkenhead steamer, and the causes of that event? In the second place, he wished his right hon. friend to state whether the news just received from the seat of war at the Cape gave any hope of an approaching cessation of bloodshed.

Sir J. PAKINGTON said that the only information he possessed on the melancholy subject to which his hon. friend referred was derived from the same source from which his hon. friend derived his, namely, the public papers. Up to the moment of his leaving the House he had received no official or unofficial intelligence bearing on either of the topics involved in his hon. friend's question had reached him.

Mr. ADDERLEY also questioned the Secretary to the Admiralty on the melancholy subject.

Mr STAFFORD, in reply, also stated that no further information had been received from Admiralty or the newspapers relative to the case of the Birkenhead, the number of souls on board of which was upwards of 600. The Hydra and Megæra, which were also employed in conveying troops to the Cape, had been spoken with—the one on the 22nd of March, and the other on the 23rd of March, and the other in 28 deg. 13 min. north latitude, and 18 deg. 18 min. west longitude, on the 29th January.

THE "BULLETIN FRANCAIS."

Mr. MILNES put a question in reference to the recent seizure of publications belonging to a British subject, Mr. Jeffs, from the Soho steamer, by the Belgian Government.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that the publications were for the most part French newspapers, and were contraband under an old Belgian act. For the wrong sustained by the seizure of the Bulletin Français, the editor of which had been prosecuted against and acquitted subsequently, Mr. Jeffs must proceed in the Belgian courts.

THE RIVER PLATE.

Mr. M. GIBSON put a question on the subject of our relations with Brazil an the free navigation of the river La Plata.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER explained, that within twenty-four hours after the fall of Rosas, communications had been opened with the French Government for the purpose of securing the same commercial advantages which that power enjoyed by treaty. The Chevalier St. John and Sir Charles Hotham were about to go on a joint mission for the purpose of negotiating for the opening of the free navigation of the waters of La Plata. In reply to a further question, he added that the British envoy would touch at Rio, for the purpose of opening friendly communication with the state of Brazil.

PUBLIC BUSINESS.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave notice, that on the 15th Mr. Herries would move the Committee on Indian Affairs. On the 23d the Militia Bill would be proceeded with, which, with the estimates, was, to be the only time business, interrupted only by any question of great urgency, such as the financial statement, until they were disposed of.

BALLAST-HEAVERS.

Mr. G THOMPSON moved for leave to bring in a bill to establish an office for the employment of ballast-heavers, and to act as and to the system of employing and paying them at public-houses. The bill, he said, was framed on the same principle as the Coalwhippers' Act.

Mr. STAFFORD would not oppose the first stage of the bill, but expressed a doubt whether it would not tend to impose restrictions on the employment of labour, and to create a monopoly in favour of a certain number of labourers.

Mr. CLAY said the Coalwhippers' Act had improved the condition of the labourers, and recommended that the subject to which the present bill related should be sent to a select committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. OSBORNE spoke in favour of the proposition for a select committee.

Mr. WAKLEY suggested the establishment of a general labour office

Mr. GLADSTONE expressed a decided opinion in favour of the motion, and suggested that it one for a select committee to inquire into the whole subject of the employment of ba last-heavers, with a view to framing a bill in their report.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he should be glad if the House consented the principle of the bill, the better course would be to allow it to be read a second time, and then refer it to a select committee.

After some further conversation, a resolution in favour of the bill was passed in committee of the whole House, and the bill was ordered to be brought in.

The County Courts Extension Bill went through committee pro forma.

And the House was counted out in committee on the Suitors in Chancery Relief Bill, at a quarter to eight o'clock.

THE PEEL TESTIMONIAL.—On Saturday last a deputation, consisting of the following gentlemen, viz. Mr Yates (the originator of the testimonial and chairman of the committee), Mr. Dean, Mr. Davis, Mr. Finch, Mr Wakeling, Mr. Al-Pinal, Mr. Greg, and Mr. Hume, waited upon Mr. Hume, at his residence in Bryanston-square, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of subscriptions collected and auditing the accounts. Mr. Hume informed the deputation that the total amount of penny subscriptions was £1737 9s 6d; and he (Mr. Hume) was happy to say that he had received promises of subscriptions from several gentlemen, and expected a donation of £5 from Mr. Cobden. The accounts having been audited, it was agreed that the money should be paid into the hands of Messrs. Coutts and Co. by John Russell, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Hume, as joint trustees. A sum of £10 was voted to Mr Yapp (Mr. Hume's secretary), for his services upon August last; and a vote of thanks having been tendered to Mr. Hume for the interest he has taken in promoting the object of the subscribers, the deputation withdrew.

COLONIAL REVENUES.—A return to the House of Commons gives the gross revenue of the following years for which they could be made out. The fol owing are the principal amounts: Cape of Good Hope, revenue £223,854, expenditure £299 201; Ceylon, revenue £40s,823, expenditure £414 715; Gibraltar, revenue £29,761, expenditure £30,653; Hong Kong, revenue £23 527, expenditure £34,649; Malta, revenue £126 389, expenditure £114,193; Mauritius, revenue £308 342, expenditure £265,206; New Zealand (north), revenue £65,244, expenditure £53,723; ditto (south), revenue £48 791, expenditure £45,199; South Australia, revenue £166 606, expenditure £49 324; Trinidad, revenue £88,140, expenditure £78,971: Van Diemen's Land, revenue, £123,706, expenditure £108 864; West Australia, revenue £10 129 expenditure £11,259 The whole revenue of these colonies amounts to £1 7 7,495. The expenditure to £1 730,307. The cost of collecting the revenue was £6 05 4

The total receipts derived from the turnpike roads in South Wales in 1851 was £207,307, and the aggregate within that year was £234,340. The receipts for 1852 are estimated at £39,833, and the expenditure at £39,260.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Hon. William Patrick Talbot, brother of Earl Talbot, is appointed Private Secretary to Lord Derby, in the place of Col. the Hon. Edward Wilbraham, and is now officiating in that capacity to the Premier, in connexion with Mr. C. W. Strenge, of the Treasury.

A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday afternoon at the Foreign-office, Downing-street. The Ministers present were the Earl of Derby, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Lonsdale, the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Secretary Walpole, the Earl of Malmesbury, Sir John Pakington, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Northumberland, Right Hon. H. W. Henley, the Earl of Hardwicke, the Right Hon. J. C. Herries, and Lord John Manners. The Council sat two hours and a half.

Mr. Horatio Hammond, Précis Writer to Lord Malmesbury at the Foreign-office, is appointed her Majesty's Consul at Granville, in the place of Mr. D. Turnbull, deceased. Mr. Bridges Taylor, of the Foreign-office, is appointed Précis Writer in the room of Mr. Hammond.

The Anglo-Brazilian Steam Navigation Company have established a line of splendid and powerful new steam-ships to ply regularly between Liverpool, Pernambuco, Bahia, and Rio de Janeiro, calling at Lisbon to land and receive passengers. The steamers already arranged for the line are the Cleopatra, Miranda, and Viola, each 1,500 tons burden, with proportionate propelling power. The Cleopatra, the first of the line, is now nearly ready, and will be despatched from Liverpool punctually on the 25th of next month.

Lord and Lady Eglinton have commenced a series of state balls at Dublin Castle.

A return to the House of Commons has been printed, by which it appears that the largest number of slaves from Africa in one year landed in Cuba was in 1844, when the number was 10,000. The largest number landed in Brazil was in 1848, when the number was 60,000. Last year 3500 slaves were landed in Cuba, and 350 in Brazil.

It is stated, says the Patrie, that a company has been formed for the establishment of a railway from Lyons to the Sardinian frontier. A demand for a concession of the line, which will stop at the Pont de Beauvoisin, has, it is said, been just made to the Government. It is positively at last that this railway will be continued across Savoy by an Italian company.

Shirvenham-house, the property of Viscount Barrington, M.P., was entirely destroyed by fire, in the latter part of last week. The amount of property consumed was very great. Only a portion is said to be insured.

On three several days about the middle of last month, large stones were found on the rails of the railway of Argenteuil, near the station of Colombes, in France. An invest gation having been made, it was discovered that the author of these nefarious acts was a boy named Christy, son of a small farmer at Colombes; and it appeared that he had been desirous of causing a frightful accident from love of mischief. He was arrested, and condemned by the Tribunal of Correctional Police to two years' imprisonment. His father was accused as civilly responsible, but he was acquitted.

On Saturday last, after delivering his lec ure on the branches of organic chemistry connected with malting, brewing, and wine making, Professor Brande, in an affecting address, took leave of the members of the Royal Institution, from whose body he has now retired.

The Lords of the Treasury have constituted Lowestoft, at present a creek within the port of Yarmouth, a separate and independent port of the supernumerary class, and the arrangement took effect from and after the 4th inst.

Major-General Cochrane assumed the command of the Dublin garrison and district on the 1st of this month, in succession of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge.

Another gold company, formed in accordance with the French plan, en commandite, has issued its prospectus, under the title of the "Lewis Hill Range (Australian) Gold and Copper Mining Company." The richest auriferous district in Australia will be the scene of their operations, they having secured a tract of land on the river Turon, within two miles frontage to the river

John Miller, Esq., of London, formerly the head of one of the principal mercantile houses in Rio Janeiro, has endowed Elizabeth College, Guernsey, with 1,000 guineas per annum, to establish an exhibitions for the pupils of that institution.

Richard Butler, a collier, living at Ince, was killed last week by an explosion of foul air whilst he was at work at the bottom of a pit at the Ince Bay Pit, forming part of the Hagh Colliery, belonging to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres

A letter from St. Petersburg, in the Emancipation of Brussels, says:—"The physicians of the Czar have just prescribed for him the waters of Schwalbach, in the Grand Duchy of Nassau, only a few leagues from the French frontier. Thus, before a month is over, and during a part of the summer, the Imperial Court of Russia will be established there. Its crossing through Germany, the Czar proposes to visit the courts of Vienna and Berlin, and perhaps will go as far as Munich."

On Saturday last, about three o'clock in the morning, the boiler of an engine connected with a goods train consisting of 38 trucks, on the Great Western Railway, near the Southall station, burst with a terrific report, shattering the furnace and engine to pieces. The only persons injured by the explosion were the engine-driver and the fireman, who were both thrown a considerable distance and dreadfully scalded. They are, however, likely to recover.

There has been an increase in the quantity of tea entered for home consumption, as appears by the trade and navigation accounts just printed. In the month ended the 5th ult. the quantity chargeable with duty was 4,308,222 lb. In the like period of the preceding year the quantity was 3,975,705 lb., and in the month ended the 5th of March, 1851, the quantity was 5,020,004 lb.

By a return printed by order of the House of Lords, the quantities of quassia and aloes imported into the United Kingdom in the last twelve years are given. In the year 1840 there were 5 lb. of quassia chips, 1148 cwt. 2 qrs. 5 lb. imported, and of aloes 323 cwt. 2 qrs. 21 lb.

The elective body of the Alumsters of the Roman Catholic Church in the Archdiocese of Dublin assembled on Saturday last, for the purpose of electing three names to be forwarded to Rome, to act as the successor of the late Roman Catholic Archbishop, Dr. Murray. The result was:—For the most Rev. Paul Cullen, ex unanimus, 23 votes; for the Very Rev. Dean Meyler, dignor, 9 votes; for the Rev. Dr. Duncan, dignus, 8 votes.

On Sunday morning, the Rev. Sir H. R. Dukinfield, Bart., M.A., preached a sermon at St. Thomas's Chapel, Marylebone, on behalf of the funds of Middlesex Hospital. The reverend gentleman stated that during the past year the hospital had received 2328 in-patients, and 11,002 out-door recipients. At the conclusion of Divine service, a liberal collection was made in aid of the funds.

The Ulster Gazette states that in some localities in Ireland the want of labourers is severely felt; whilst in nearly all the wages suddenly rose in the last month from tenpence and a shilling per day to fourteen, fifteen, and in some places sixteenpence per day

On Saturday, the churchwardens of the parish of St. Thomas, Winchester, distrained, under a warrant signed by the city magistrates, on the goods of the Rev. Charles Cottrell Cartwright, Roman Catholic priest, in consequence of the non-payment of two church-rates, amounting to 23s. The articles distrained were removed to the police-station, and were sold by public auction, and realized £3 8s. 3d. There were about 150 persons present at the sale, but no excitement prevailed. The goods were purchased by a gentleman of Mr. Cotlegridge's congregation, and were by him presented to his Reverence.

His Royal Highness the Count d'Aquila, in addition to a numerous assembly at his assembly, held at present, on Monday of the whole of the corps diplomatique, at his residence, Mivart's Hotel.

During the past week the Encumbered Estates Commissioners paid out £66,000, making the total amount of funds distributed by them from the commencement £2,041,000.

Since the notice of the discovery of a new guano deposit in the South Pacific, it is stated that application has been made to the Admiralty for its interference for the protection of British shipping engaged in obtaining cargoes, and that such assistance is refused, on the grounds that the island is known to and claimed by the Peruvian Government, whose trade the British Government is bound to protect. We are further informed that the Virago steamer, which made an interview has been obtained, is not in a position to make terms to enable vessels to load upon the owners' account.

The first cargo of iron for the Egyptian Railway, now in course of construction under the superintendence of Mr Robert Stephenson, was despatched from Cardiff on the 26th ult.; and it is said that renewed facilities will be afforded in the communications with India, and that the difficulties and opposition on the part of the Porte are at an end.

A return has just been printed by order of the House of Lords, showing the quantities of foreign hops charged with duty for home consumption in the United Kingdom for the last twelve years. In the year ending Jan. 5, 1841, the quantity was 5512 cwt. 3 qr. 24 lb., and in the year ending January 5 last the quantity was 103 cwt. 1 qr. 26 lb.

A large order for rails is now in course of execution at Dowlais, in South Wales. Though the price at which it has been taken is very low, and not at all remunerative, yet the contract will prove the means of giving employment during the ensuing months.

Mr. John Barton was on Monday elected governor, and Mr. Robert Stewart, deputy-governor, of the Bank of Ireland.

A bill to continue the Poor-law Board has been introduced by Sir John Phillpotts and Sir James T. Gnean. The powers of the present board expire on the 23d of July next, and it is proposed by this bill to continue them for a period of two years longer

A letter from Athens in a German journal states that the author of a certain anonymous letter to the king, announcing the destruction of the constitution, and which excited great sensation was arrested on the 11th ult.

In consequence of the distress existing in the Isle of Skye, a sermon has been preached at St. Mn Dave's Church, Denmark-hill, by the Rev. Stephen Bridge, M.A., in behalf of the suffering Highlanders. The sum of £170 has been contributed by the congregation, £103 of which has been paid into Messrs Eastern's for the Skye Emigration Fund; the remainder is appropriated to the relief of present distress.

On Monday and Tuesday, her Majesty's Bounty, granted according to ancient custom, was distributed amongst about 800 aged and infirm men and women at Whitehall, each of whom received 5s. The "gate money," so called from its having formerly been given at this Park-gate, was also distributed to about 180 other persons, each of whom received 10s.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C M J of Birmingham.—We have to acknowledge the receipt of a Post-office order for three gui eas, which shall be forwarded to the proper quarter in furtherance of the object specified.

J C W.—The half guinea received from our correspondent shall be sent to the treasurer of the fund mentioned.

J B, Sheffield.—e, and NEMESIS.—Problems requiring so many moves in their solution are considered to be inadmissible.

INVESTIGATOR.—We cannot point the simple plan of writing the names of the pieces on their initial on the squares of your diagram? As far as we can find related the position you describe, the King cannot leave the Rook

A Subscriber.—Your Problem can be solved by White's playing, on the first move, Kt to Q Kt 8 or K 7th. It has the additional defect of being formed from a well-known beautiful position

COLUMBA.—White's mate in five moves will do; but B solu's in three is too easy

YORKIST.—We shall be glad to hear that the clubs of Sheffield, Bradford, and Preston have been established and have accepted the invitation to join the York-ire Chess Association. We are sanguine, and the existence of those clubs will be most warmly forming the nucleus of what should be the connexion to the interests of the association and of chess generally TYRO, Maidstone.—The position, which appears to us an old one slightly altered, can be easily finished in two moves.

A Z Chel ensis.—We have before stated that the mate at the end of the games between Prince Orlowsieff and Mr Horwitz cannot be decided to less than five moves

R R, of Ashford.—The last game shall be examined. The terms were ineligible, being mostly capable of result in one or in two than you specified

A VETERAN.—It has two solutions, but we doubt if it can be effected in less than six moves

SCARBORER.—The game of the late Chess Tournament are now published in a collected form, in this month's number of "Bell's Chess and Library," price 9d, and can be had of any bookseller. Still is inadmissible for you to repeat your application

B P T.—It is not a question of courtesy at all, but one of law. We should be glad to afford you the information required, but to do so we must give up the whole game to you. How far his would be fair or gratifying to thousands of other readers, we leave you to consider

The proper course for you is to purchase some standard rudimentary treatise on the game, and study that

R M S.—No one knowing anything of the subject would think "none a days" of either Hoyle or Walker as to make them Chess They are both decidedly obsolete. The best one of the two is

J C W.—Your last game shall be examined.

P W S, Montreal.—is taking with us

S M A Brien.—Staunton's Chess-players' Handbook" published by Bohn

BERLIN.—Received Friday, Oct 17, and will be examined and duly acknowledged

Hamlet.—Your game is never more in order

A Novice, Preston.—It White play properly, Black cannot give checkmate under the circumstances named

INQUIRER, Hobart Town.—In quite impossible, with 150 other common subjects to attend to at the present moment, we may have put your signature among those who correctly solved Mr Horton's problem; but if it was an error, as the problem cannot be solved in eight moves

THE NEW Mode of Observing Chess Moves.—Problem No 424 is perfect in correct, and very clever

A HEARER.—The majority of our correspondents are willing to do so in that the Germans will publish it in chess. 2. The line you mention occurs not in any ancient fo'io work, but in the game of Greco, published by Vida, Bishop of Alba, published in 1527

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 423, by Colonna, Fido, Argus, M P R M T, Punch, R D M, Ancient Nick, Marsh, and Iota, are correct

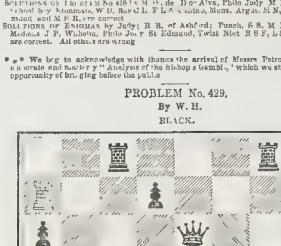
SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 424, by Mr Wade Dover, Philo-Judy M P, Caleb in Mr's school by Shoemaker, W D, Royal Dublin Society, North Argus, B N, Barton, St Edmund and M P R, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF ENIGMAS by Judy; R R, of Ashford; Punch, S S, M D, M P, Dover, Medusa, J P, Wisbech, Philo Judy St Edmund, Twist Nut H S F, L S D, and Scratch, are correct. All others are wrong

* * We beg to acknowledge with thanks the arrival of Messrs Petroff and Jaenisch's new system of "Descriptive Notation for Chess," which we shall take an early opportunity of bringing before the public

PROBLEM No. 429,

By W. H. BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in six moves.

FIRST REUNION OF THE CHESSPLAYERS OF PLYMOUTH, DEVONPORT, AND THE NEIGHBOURHOOD.—The amateurs of chess in the part of the west of England, have arranged to hold their first meeting in St George's Hall, Stonehouse, on Thursday evening, under the presidency of J. S. Treleaven, Esq., M.P. A number of great names, eminent for their skill, braving many perils, kingdom, have signified their intention to be present, and there is every reason to predict a gratifying and highly intellectual treat to all who feel an interest in the advancement of this noble recreation.

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S "ASCENT OF MONT BLANC."

MR. SMITH'S Lecture at the Egyptian Hall, on his now celebrated ascent of Mont Blanc, with Mr. Beverley's magnificent illustrations, increases daily and nightly in attraction. They are to be classed among the few things that turn out better than expected, and are thus more highly valued on acquaintance than before. We this week give another of Mr. Beverley's pictures. It takes the story of the adventurous tourists further in advance, and presents them on the Grands Mulets rocks by sunset. We have to imagine the travellers safely passed over the dangerous crevice in the Glacier du Taconnay, by means of the ladder, and then scrambling up the steep ice cliff, tied together, and pulled up by a pair of great ones, after the other, until, bravely and well, they attained a desirable station. Here they came to the scene of our Illustration—two or three conical rocks which rise from island peaks from the snow and ice at the head of the Glacier des Bossons, and which, more than they differ, would probably be termed aiguilles. They are chosen for a halting-place, not less from their convenient station on the route than from their situation out of the way of the avalanches. The scene and the sunset are powerfully delineated and painted in the following fine piece of description:—

Below us, and rising against our position, was the mighty field of the glacier—a field of ice, if I may form it so, of snow and ice, with vast irregular undulations, which gradually merged into an apparently smooth unbroken tract, as their distance increased. Towering in front of us, several hours, a scene of such wild and wondrous beauty—of such inconceivable and unearthly appendour—burst upon me, that, spell-bound and almost trembling with the emotion its magnificence called forth with every sense, and seeing, and being absorbed by its brilliancy, I saw far more than the realization of the most gorgeous visions that opium or hashish could evoke, accomplished. At first, everything about us—above, around, below—the sky, the mountains and the lower peaks—at present the creation of burnished gold, so brightly dazzling, that, now our veils were removed, the eye could scarcely bear the splendour. As the twilight gradually crept over the lower world, the glow became still more vivid and wondrous beautiful—such as could have existed in the valleys, the tops of the higher mountains looked like islands rising from a filmy ocean—an archipelago of rocks. By degrees that metallic lustre was softened into more delicate tints, and then bright, tranquil crimson, among the horizon, rising through the different hues, with prismatic regularity, until, immediately above us, the sky was a deep pure hue, merging towards the east into glowing green. The snow took its colour from these changes; and every portion on which the light fell was soon tinged with pale carmine, of a shade similar to that which glows at times assumes, from some imperfectly explained cause, at high elevations—such, indeed, as I had seen, in early summer, upon the Furka and Faulhorn. These beautiful hues grew brighter as the twilight below increased in depth; and it now came marching up the valley of the glacier until it reached our resting-place. Higher and higher still, it drove the lovely glory of the sunlight before it, until at last the vast Dôme du Goûté and the summit itself stood out, rose-like and green, in the cold evening air, although the horizon still gleamed with a belt of rosy light.

Although the superb spectacle had faded away, the scene was still even more than striking. The fire which the guides had made, and which was now burning and crawling upon a ledge of rock a little below us, threw its flickering light, with admirable effect, upon our band. The men had collected round the blaze, and were making some chocolate, as they sang patois ballads and choruses: they were, and evidently as completely at home as they would have been in their own châlets. We had arranged ourselves as conveniently as we could, so as not to incommodence one another, and had still nothing more than an ordinary wrapper over us: there had been no attempt to bind the tent with batons and canvas, as I had read in some of the Mont Blanc narratives—the starry heaven was our roofing. F. and P. were already fast asleep. W. was still awake, and I was too excited even to close my eyes in the attempt to get a little repose. We talked for a while, and then he, too, was silent.

The stars had come out, and, looking over the plateau, I soon saw the moonlight lying cold and silvery on the summit, stealing slowly down the very track by which the sunset glories had passed onward and away. But it came so tardily that I knew it would be hours before we derived any actual benefit from the light. One after another the guides fell asleep, until only three or four remained round the embers of the fire, thoughtfully smoking their pipes. And then silence, impressive beyond expression, reigned over our isolated world. Often and often, from Chamouni, I had looked up at evening towards the darkening peaks of the Grands Mulets, and thought almost with shuddering, how awful it must be for men to pass the night in such a remote, eternal, and frozen wilderness. And now I was lying there—in the very heart of its ice-bound and appalling solitude. In such close communion with nature in her grandest aspect, with no trace of the actual living world beyond the mere speck that our little party formed, the mind was carried far away from its ordinary trains of thought—a solemn emotion of mingled awe and delight, and yet no fear—perception of abject nothingness, alone rose above every other feeling. A vast untrodden region of cold, and silence, and death, stretched out, far and away from us, on every side; but above, heaven, with its countless, watchful eyes, was over all!

We may safely leave the picture and this charming description to commend themselves to the intelligent reader. Both, in their way, are right excellent works of art, and Mr. Smith rises in our estimation as an author, for having delivered himself so nobly on a theme requiring and tasking the higher faculties for its due treatment. He has indeed written eloquently on the sublime.

THE RAILWAY NOTE-BOOK;

OR,

JOTTINGS IN THE STATION, THE TERMINUS, AND THE TRAIN

BY ANGUS B. REACH.

PAGE III.—A CHAPTER ON STATIONS.

STRETCHED in long array, behind the counter, laden with crystal and plate, and mountainous tureens and seething tea and coffee urns; presiding over plateaus of pork pies artistically piled, and strata of sandwiches beneath thin glass hives, and masses of cakes and buns for the weaker stomachs of that part of the community who dread venturing upon sausage rolls and stout—the pleasant presiding deities of the refreshment station are marshalled in order due ready to attend to the wants of the hungry multitude who rush tumultuously to the counter as the voices of the guards are heard proclaiming "Five minutes—ladies and gentlemen—five minutes!" and in an instant every man, woman, and child of them all is making desperate efforts to eat and drink against time, scalding themselves woefully with red hot coffee, and blowing the soup out of their plates into their neighbours in the energetic struggle to cool the fluid down to eating point.

You may form a good idea of the style of your fellow-passengers by watching their tastes in the matter of luncheon. The dandified first-class man, with the wonderful wardrobe of travelling clothes, generally addresses himself to coffee or soup, and favours soda-water. The corner stands are not for his gentility. The red-faced second class gentleman, with a green and yellow shawl wound like a rope about his neck, calls lustily for pork pie or sausage roll, and washes it down with stout, nine parts froth and one part beer. Ladies fly instinctively to tea, and manage to get through half a dozen spoonfuls of the scalding liquid and the tenth part of a Bath bun, when the bell rings, and they fly like a covey of frightened birds off to the train—missing their carriage as a matter of course, and fluttering and rustling to and fro from the engine to the guard's van in the rear, until some compassionate policeman takes them in charge and lodges them again in their seat.

There are always flurried men and cool men at refreshment stations. The former rush nervously up and down the counter, and cannot for the life of them make out what they would like best. The gentleman who conquered over the book-stall until at last he was forced to put up with a "Bradshaws," goes rushing from cold beef to soup, and leg and wing of fowl to tongue or ham, until at length he has to snatch a biscuit and join the train at the very last instant. Other nervous men can't find their money to pay, by reason of the vast number of coins and wrappers bewilder rg them as to their pockets; while a third class are in such a dreadful hurry to eat as much as possible in as short a time as possible, that their lunch is a mere struggle against suffocation, and they rush out again, red in the face and shaking the crumbs from their cravats, at the first tinkle the bell. Not so your cool man. He enters as quietly as if he were conducting a lady to a dining-room. He knows the part of the counter to which he had better go as by instinct. His cool, distinct order is at once heard and attended to, and he is found to have singled out the very best thing on the board. He does not appear to be in any hurry, yet he manages to dispatch his soup before another gentleman has ceased blowing it, and he somehow contrives to secure a morsel of table cloth, with a knife and fork, for the lustre to a slice of tongue or beef, when his neighbours are elbowing each other frantically so as to obtain sufficient space to hold their greasy pies and meat rolls to their mouths. Furthermore, the cool man pays no attention to the bell. He knows well that there will be other intervals, and that there is plenty of time; so that the flurried men, who have half choaked themselves in their haste, have been sitting packed up in their places for at least three minutes before they see the cool man leisurely emerging from the refreshment-room, picking his teeth and looking as quietly contented as if he had sat for an hour and despatched a bottle of claret after dinner.

What a strange notion the young ladies at a refreshment-room must have of their travelling fellow creatures! They only see them in the guise of ravenous monsters—flinging themselves upon edibles, and consuming all before them, entombing in a brief five minutes hecatombs of flesh and fowl, absorbing floods of the muddiest of coffee and the weakest of tea, roaring for pale ale and stout, and deluging themselves with "sods and sherry," or, the stronger minds, "sods and brandy." And the same process is constantly being repeated. The refreshment young ladies never encounter their fellow-creatures except in the act of eating or drinking. Almost every hour during the long summer day, sometimes every half-hour, another and another flood of ravenous humanity arrives. The urns and tureens are hardly replenished, when they are again attacked—the superintendents of these constantly recurring feats, retiring at last, if they ever do retire at all, to dream of crowds of hungry faces, and open mouths, and eager eyes, grinning, and glaring, and munching, and swallowing, round their virtuous beds.

Let us glance at the peculiarities of other stations than those concentrated to refreshment. There is the manufacturing station, where what directors call their "rolling stock" is fabricated and kept in repair. A little busy city is such a place, with neat brick cottages, trimmed into pert little streets, decorated with the names of the leading directors and functionaries of the line. Everything has a fresh, clean, upstart appearance. No fine old picturesque cavalier, or ancient manse with projecting gables and lozenged windows, but every where a neat miniature uniformity, plain little churches of suburban Gothic at the corners, and an institute or lecture-room, where learned gentlemen, hired by the company, hold forth upon oxygen and hydrogen. From the great buildings right and left abutting on the line comes the clang of hammers and the roar of furnaces. Disabled locomotives, propped upon crutches, are undergoing repairs all around; mountains of sleepers are piled between the lines of rail; and rows of furnaces always smoking and blazing are expending continuous ridges of coke. As a matter of course all this activity and stir, take the humble third-class station. It consists of a lamp, a rough platform with a paling, a shed, a ticket, and a policeman. The fiery express gleams through it so fast that you must have good eyes to read the names of the locality painted on the warped and faded sign. Even the ordinary trains treat it with contempt, hardly slackening their pace or deigning to salute the third-class station with a passing whistle as they thunder through. Only at strange, inconvenient, and fitful times, the long crowded parliamentary train draws slowly up, and the porter and the policeman are roused into a state of transitory animation. "Travellers" are there, with roped and corded boxes and bundles made up in blue cotton neckerchiefs. The train is as full as it can hold already, but that matters little. A parliamentary train is never too full. Fresh comers are always packed in, nolens volens; threats, expostulations, and prayers are equally disregarded by the stout-hearted officials. The penny-a-milers may do their best and their worst. In go the super-extra passengers on the knees, the shoulders, or under the feet of the individuals already seated. Off goes the train, and the mass is left to shake itself down and make its own involuntary arrangements. "They always comes to rights somehow—it don't matter how many we put in," said a strong-minded parliamentary guard to me; "them sort of people's used to rough it, and if they ain't, they ought to." Tremendous, no doubt, for some miles, are the execrations of the poor penny-a-milers, and cutting the taunts which at every stoppage are shouted against the authorities, through the narrow windows; but the strong-minded guard is used to it, and pays no more attention to the row than to the panting and cheeping of the locomotive.

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S "ASCENT OF MONT BLANC."—THE GRANDS MULETS.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

A station not far from a country town is always interesting, from the extraordinary turn-out of nondescript vehicles which it displays. First, there is either one or two omnibuses—mere square boxes upon wheels with a perch in front, and emblazoned the "George" or the "King's Arms." These vehicles are eternally jolting along the road from the station to the High-street, or the Market-cross, in the desperate hope of picking up a stray sixpence once in a way; but they generally arrive at the hotel from the rail with nobody in them, and arrive at the rail from the hotel empty. A solitary bagman with a lot of boxes strapped together is a godsend; and a portly farmer with a white top coat, too fat to walk, is fought for with all the ferocity of rivalry. But the hack vehicles are the most worthy of regard. Look at the row: dilapidated cabriolets cut down into chaotic masses of ricketty wheels and jingling panels; strange open chariots, so slim and yet so venerable-looking that you tremble for the personal security of the stout lady who has just been hoisted into one of them; flies, like man, fearfully and wonderfully made; stupendous shandrydans of no particular pattern, but apparently compounded from the débris of old dog carts, sedan chairs, trunks, and bits of broken-up family carriages; a whole museum of such strange phenomena of vehicles stand in rank behind, or below, or above the station, as the case may be, each driver erect in his perch, and signalling with his whip, and each great raw-boned horse, with bent knees and switching, scanty tail, pricking up his old ears, in the hope that his master may not get a fare.

People talk—and not, it is to be confessed, without ample reason—of the impositions of London cabmen, but the country fly-driver has a very fair notion of cheating also. I have met with bucolic gentlemen of this class whose ideas as to the length of a mile were exceedingly cramped; and as it is generally along cross roads and rutty lanes they drive you, you have no milestones to appeal to. The most knowing of these charioteers are invariably to be found at country stations. You ask to be driven to Stonybank-wood, or to Greenleaside, or to any other place of rural destination, and you hire a charioteer accordingly, adding, as you ascend the creaking vehicle, "By the way, how many miles is it to ——?" the place in question; you feeling certain, from the close study of the county map, that it is not above three at the outside.

"Stonybank-wood, sir? Why it be better nor foive moil."

You demur to this, and the driver straightway appeals to his fellows.

"Stonybank-wood? why it's six mile good."

"It's more nor that, Tommy, if so be you don't go t' lower road, and that's agin the collar all the way."

And the result is that you are glad to make a bargain on the terms the originally mentioned distance.

Meantime we follow our train. The passengers have fairly settled down, and only get lively at stations. A select party of choice spirits in a second class carriage are playing at loo with a dirty pack of very small cards upon a railway rug stretched over their knees. A burly-faced gentleman farmer is obstreperously arguing about the corn-laws with a pale-faced gentleman from town, who takes cool and uncomfortable abstract views about the condition of the farmers; and when the agriculturist says that the British farmers can't grow wheat at 55*s.*, tells him to let it alone and they'll get foreign farmers who can. The up-window man having fallen asleep, the down-window man has it all his own way, and sits in a hurricane. Exhausted newspapers are carelessly flung upon the cushions, and studious men, who have begun shilling novels, shut them up with a remark upon the smallness of the type and the jolting of the carriage. The ladies often drop off to sleep very snugly, and the strong-minded, who knits or crochets, requests the gentleman opposite to "make legs," so that they can both be more comfortably accommodated. The commercial gentleman produces a shilling pocket-book, rather greasy than otherwise, and sets himself steadily to work upon his orders, advices, and memorandums; and the gentleman with the multiplicity of travelling garments is sure to be asleep. In the second class, the people screw themselves about, and find the seats gradually getting harder and harder. In the third class, the jolly "traveller," having exhausted his "grub," contentedly reads the fragment of newspaper in which it was wrapped.

JO MILLER'S GRAVE, ST. CLEMENT'S BURIAL-GROUND, PORTUGAL-STREET, CLARE MARKET.

THE celebrated name of Jo Miller, the father of all orphan jests, or Coram of the Jocose Foundling Hospital, will soon, by the disfranchisement of St. Clement's Burial-ground, be disassociated from its last tangible memorial, in the consequent removal of the stone which bears his epitaph written by Stephen Duck, and restored by the piety of Mr. Bulgen, the parish gravedigger, who found it overthrown and nearly obliterated, about the beginning of the present century. But the wear and tear of a few succeeding years had nearly proved fatal to the frail memorial, and it remained for Mr. Jarvis Buck, churchwarden, to renew the pious labour of Bulgen, and preserve the affectionate record of Duck, as it now appears, dated 1816.

The common gravestone attributes of a "tender husband and a sincere friend" are accepted as matters of course, but that of a "facetious companion," handed in his eulogium, is the jolly "traveller," having exhausted his "grub," contentedly reads the fragment of newspaper in which it was wrapped

STILTON," WINNER OF THE METROPOLITAN STAKES, AT THE EPSOM SPRING MEETING.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.—THE WINNER OF THE GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES.

We have this week engraved the Seventh Winner of the Great Metropolitan (nineteen starters), Mr. Meiklam's brown colt Stilton, by Cotherstone, 3 years, 4 stone 11 lb. The following are the details of the race on Thursday week:—A capital start was effected at the first signal. For the first 200 yards, Achyranthes, Kick-up-the-Dust, the Sally Warfoot colt, Stilton, Kate, the Ban, and Ingratitude formed the advanced division. The horses having by that time settled into their places, Kate took the lead at a great pace, followed by Kick-up-the-Dust, with whom lay the Sally Warfoot colt, Achyranthes, and Stilton; Joe Miller heading the second ruck, in the rear of which were Backbiter, Officious, Elthiron, and Candlewick. In rising the hill after turning out of the course, Kate got four or five lengths in advance, the Sally Warfoot colt now lying immediately in her wake, Stilton third, Achyranthes and Kick-up-the-Dust next, and behind them Joe Miller, Officious and Backbiter at this time running in the centre. Kate "carried on" at her best pace, and with a tremendous lead, quite round the turn into the straight; Stilton, the Sally Warfoot colt, Joe Miller, and Officious then began to draw rapidly towards her, and at the distance she had run herself out. Stilton then showed in front, but was immediately pulled back, and Joe Miller suffered to go on with the lead, which he held, by sufferance, to the stand; the favourite there putting the issue beyond a doubt by taking the running from him, and winning in gallant style by a length. The race was run in 4 min. 16 sec., 5 sec. faster than in 1851. Value of the stakes, £1600.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE COLLIER BRIG "RESOLUTION" BY GUNPOWDER, IN GRAVESEND REACH.

The Resolution, a collier of 273 tons burthen, in February last was run down while at anchor in the Thames, off Pitcher's Dockyard, at

ST. MARY'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS, READING.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

EXPLOSION OF THE COLLIER BRIG "RESOLUTION" WRECK, IN GRAVESEND REACH.

Northdeet, by the screw steam ship Harbinger, belonging to the Cape of Good Hope Mail Company, and when sunk formed a serious obstruction and an impediment to the river navigation. The Resolution was thirty-three years old, built at Stockton for the Baltic trade by Mr. Markham; and the master of the brig was the owner, who was on board at the time of the accident, and narrowly escaped with his life.

Mr. Barker, of Horsley-down, having been directed to make a survey of her position, and the probability of saving her and bringing her on shore, reported that, from her age and dilapidated condition, it would not be advisable to incur the expense of raising, and she was abandoned to the insurers by Captain Naylor, the owner.

The Lord Mayor, as Conservator of the river, finding by the reports from the City officers that steps had been taken by the owners to remove this wreck and nuisance to the traffic of the Thames within the jurisdiction of the conservancy, directed the City Solicitor to give official notice to the parties interested, that unless she was removed by a day named in the notice she would be deemed a vessel abandoned. His Lordship, under the advice of the Port of London Committee, gave directions to the Principal Harbour-Master to remove the obstruction; and it was considered advisable, from her age and injuries received in the collision, to blow her to pieces. The charge for which was

A NDY THURSDAY.—On Maundy Thursday, the Royal Bounty ibuted in M. ney was distributed in the usual manner at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, to 32 poor men and women, her Majesty's age being that number of years.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The annual meeting of the promoters of these schools was held on Tuesday, at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street; the Lord Mayor in the chair. The report stated that the evening school for males was open six evenings in the week, and the number admitted since its establishment was 470; the average attendance was 80. The evening school for females was open five evenings in the week, and the number admitted into it was 401, the average attendance being 85. The number admitted to the day school for infants was 634, and the average attendance 88. In the Sabbath-school for males the average attendance in the afternoon was 29; in the evening, 57. In the Sunday-school for females the average attendance in the afternoon was 60; in the evening, 107. The industrial classes for females consisted of 30 girls employed in mending and making clothes, and 3 in scrubbing. In the male industrial class several boys were engaged in making articles of clothing, many of which were sold to the pupils in the school. A benevolent lady had established a sick fund, and from this fund 1595 quarts of soup had been given to 1054 destitute families. A savings-bank had been established for children, for deposits of a halfpenny and upwards, the amount for the year was £34, the number of depositors being about 52. During the year 6 boys had been employed with success—3 of them by the Ragged School Shoe-black Society, as shoe-blacks, and 3 as labourers. Several girls had also been provided for. The statement of accounts from the 1st of March, 1851, to the same date in 1852 showed that the receipts amounted to £1199 9s. 10d., and the expenditure to £974 9s., leaving a balance of £91 0s. 2d. due to the schools.

HOME COUNTIES AND METROPOLITAN FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.—A meeting of the members and promoters of the above society was held on Tuesday last at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, Mr. H. B. Thornton in the chair. Resolutions were passed in furtherance of the new scheme, and an address delivered by Mr. Beal, in which he stated that the number of societies in England alone was 170, and the number of members enrolled was 200,000, whilst the amount of money invested was £20,000 per annum. There could be no doubt that these institutions offered a better means of investment than was afforded by savings-banks or the "benefit system," and the public were becoming greatly alive to the importance of their business.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—The usual meeting of the members of this society was held on Monday evening; Sir Roderick Murchison in the chair. Dr. Rae's journal of his long and arduous voyage of exploration on the Arctic shores in search of Sir John Franklin was read. It was a most successful investigation with any trace of the missing vessels, Dr. Rae stated that on the 5th of May he engaged surveying the shores of the Victoria and Coppermine rivers, a piece of pine wood was picked up, which resembled the butt-end of a flag staff, and was 6 feet 9 inches in length. It had a curious mark on it, and it was attached a piece of white line, knotted, to two copper tacks, both of which had the Government mark of the broad arrow upon them. The support that Dr. Rae gives to the hope that Sir John Franklin may be able to find provisions from the birds and animals, is consequent these inhospitable shores is most interesting. He deems the less success of his party in hunting as very great; and that it was sufficient to support life was evident from the fact that the consumption of provisions from the 20th of June to the 23rd of September was only 4½ lbs. of flour and 10 lbs. of pemmican, which was principally given to the dogs. Although the crew, which consisted of 17 men, was thus chiefly fed upon flesh—principally venison—there was not a single case of sickness during the whole voyage. A very interesting discussion ensued, in the course of which Captain Commanney said he considered it to be his duty to caution the public from entertaining any expectation whatever of the return of Sir John Franklin. As far as his experience went, there were not animals in large enough number to supply them with provisions—at least, in the direction in which he explored the Arctic Regions. Dr. Sutherland and Mr. Wells, on the contrary, pronounced the contrary, and affirmed that the results of their own experience in confirmation of the statements of Dr. Rae. Sir J. Maryshall, in concluding the controversy, stated that the hopes he had already expressed in favour of Sir John Franklin's being yet alive were more firmly established than ever.

GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND.—The seventh anniversary festival of this institution took place on Monday, at the London Tavern. Mr. Macready was to have taken the chair, but was prevented by family circumstances from attending. Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton supplied his place, supported by Mr. C. Dickens, Mr. Webster, Mr. Buckstone, Mr. F. Stone, Captain Cuppell, Mr. Mark Lemon, Mr. Wills, &c. Mr. Buckstone, the honorary secretary, read the report of the meeting speech, in which he described the progress of the fund by present year the list of subscribing an autobiographical account of its life and adventures, adverted to the balance in hand, and announced a prospective legacy from Mr. T. P. Cooke of £1000. Among the subscriptions announced were the following:—H. Majesty the Queen, her annual donation of £100; Sir Edward B. Lytton, £100; Duke of Devonshire, £10 10s.; the Earl Fitzwilliam, £10 10s.; Dr. Buckstone, £5 5s.; Mr. Webster, £5 5s.; Mr. Monetone, £5 5s.; Mr. Lumley, £5 5s.; Mr. C. Kean, £5 5s.; Mr. Phelps, £5 5s.; Mrs. Theodore Martin (late Miss H. Faucit), £5 5s.; Mr. Toole, £5 5s.; Madame Celeste, £5 5s.. Mr. T. P. Cooke, £3 3s., &c.

LAMBETH NEW VESTRY-HALL.—At the close of the vestry held last week at the Lady School-room, Lambeth, a poll has been demanded on the question whether a site at Kennington green should be taken, on which to erect a new Vestry-hall for the parish, or whether the subject should be adjourned for a month. The poll was finally opened on Monday evening, and there appeared in favour of taking the site 2365; for the adjournment, 1610: majority, 755. The new hall is estimated to cost £4000.

AUSTRALIA AND PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.—On Saturday last, a preliminary meeting was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, for the purpose of taking measures to raise a sufficient sum to enable those poor Highlanders to emigrate, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. Among those present were Admiral Salomons, M.P., Sheriff Moon, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Canon Macnaghten, Captain Maclean, Captain Macdougall, Charles Cowen, Esq., M.P., &c. Mr. Fraser, sheriff substitute of Skye, briefly explained the state of the population in the island, and the necessity which immediately existed for a permanent means of relief. He had also drawn attention to the reasons which had induced the local association to decide upon Australia as the colony to which these emigrants could best be sent. These reasons were corroborated by several speakers; and, after some observations from Captain Forbes, deprecating wholesale emigration as the only measure for relief for destitution in the north, the proceedings terminated by the appointment of a strong committee to consider measures for carrying out the object contemplated. The following gentlemen were at once nominated to the committee, with the usual power to add to their number:—The Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Sir Duncan Mc Dougal, Canon Macnaghten, Macleod of MacLeod, Alderman Salomons, M.P., Mr. Cowan, M.P., Henry Baggaster, Dr. Stacy, Rev. Hugh Arthur Kennard, Rev. H. Mackenzie (of St. Martin-in-the-Fields), Charles Forbes, Esq., W. J. Hay, Esq., and Mr. Sheriff Fraser. It is intended that the money to be raised should be made repayable by the emigrants, so as to be again appropriated for a like purpose each repaying individual in view the privilege of nominating the friend whom he would like assisted out. About 2000 destitute persons have already applied for assistance to the grants. It is calculated that, with the help of the Emigration Commission, £4000 or £5000 will be sufficient to accomplish the object in view.

NUMEROUS ACCIDENTS IN THE STREETS.—No fewer than seven persons, of various ages, were run over in the leading thoroughfares west of Temple-bar on Wednesday, four of whom were taken to Charing-cross Hospital, and attended by Mr. Dalton, the house surgeon of the institution; one was taken to St. George's, and the remaining two to private surgeons. The accidents were principally caused by the sufferers crossing the streets incautiously before there was sufficient way.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The births registered in London for the week ending Saturday, April 3, were—Males, 838; females, 892: total, 1730. The deaths during the same week were—Males, 668; females, 656: total, 1324. The number exhibits a further increase on the high rate of the preceding weeks, but, to a considerable extent, it is augmented by cases on which inquests have been held, and which are now entered on the registers in undue proportion. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1842-51, the average number of deaths was 974, which, if raised in proportion to the increase of population during that period and up to the present time, becomes 1071. The present return, therefore, of 1324 cases shows the average of 253. Last week 1324 deaths of 561 children under 15 years of age, of 471 persons of 15 years and under 60, and of 291 persons aged 60 years and upwards, were registered. Of 1730 persons who were born alive or were found dead, 18 of the women had reached 50 years, and two of these had nearly attained 100 years. The mortality produced by diseases of the respiratory organs is still of an unusual amount. In each of the last two weeks 300 deaths, or more than 22 per cent, being much in excess of the average, while pneumonia was fatal at the same time to 72 and 80, which is about the usual number. Last week phthisis (or consumption) carried off 15 children under 15 years of age, 116 persons between 15 and 60 years, and 7 of 60 years and upwards; while in correspondings weeks of 1842-51 the lowest number was 105, the greatest 149, and the average 126 such deaths. Consumption continues to prevail as much as it has done for a long period, and scarlatina shows a disposition to increase.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on the last two days of the week; the mean of the week was 29.986 in.

POPULATION AND HOUSES.—A return to the House of Commons, obtained by Mr. Bouverie, of the population and houses in the counties and boroughs in which returns numbers of Parliament has been granted. In the counties, the populations of Middlesex, South Lancashire, and the West Riding of Yorkshire are by far the greatest. These are respectively 1,886,376, 1,352,816, and 1,351,787. The number of inhabited houses in Middlesex is 326,303; South Lancashire 267,633; the West Riding, 352,423. In Rutland, the number of inhabited houses is only 4 × 7. Of the boroughs, the principal are—

	Population.	Inhabited Houses		Population.	Inhabited Houses
The Tower Hamlets	539 111	76,710	Bristol ..	137,328	27,753
Liverpool ..	376,053 ..	54,298	Lambeth ..	139,240 ..	27,000
Marylebone ..	370,957 ..	49,813	Southwark ..	132,984 ..	23,999
Finsbury ..	323,772 ..	51,427	Greenwich ..	109,351 ..	17,190
Manchester ..	316,213 ..	59,024	Wolverhampton ..	104,148 ..	21,999
Westminster ..	231,611 ..	24,755	Sheffield ..	135,310 ..	27,999
Birmingham ..	232,849 ..	45,844	Bradford ..	103,778 ..	19,000
City of London ..	127,869 ..	27,258	Hull ..	84,690 ..	16,851
Leeds ..	172,270 ..	36,168

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE CASE OF THE REV. MR. WHISTON AND THE ROCHESTER GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

The appeal of the Rev. Mr. Whiston against his removal from the mastership of the Rochester Grammar School was heard on Monday, before the Bishop of Rochester, who held his court, by patent, in the Chapter-house of the cathedral. Dr. Lushington, Q.C., and Mr. Bacon, Q.C., appeared for the Dean and Chapter, against whom the appeal was directed, were represented by Dr. Addams and Mr. Cowling, &c.

Mr. Whiston, in the course of his opening statement, observed that when he was elected to the mastership of the Grammar School, in 1842, there were no scholars, but he soon raised the number to nearly 90. Subsequently he fell ill with a copy of the Cathedral Statutes, from which he discovered that 4 students ought to be maintained at the university and 20 boys at the school. He found that the allowance for this purpose had remained at £6 and £8 12s. 4d. respectively to the present time, but the income of the canons had risen from £26 to £80. He had, therefore, on the 8th of Feb., 1848, applied for an augmentation of the £5 allowance for the poor students, and a correspondence ensued, which was closed by the dean and chapter. He next applied on the 13th of August for an augmentation of the allowance to the grammar boys, but that was equally unsuccessful. On the 16th of December he appealed to the dean, and after having been kept four months, he was referred by the right rev. prelate to the Court of Chancery. On the 28th of May, 1849, he published his pamphlet, "Cathedral Trusts," and on the 28th of the following month he was dismissed from his office. Mr. Whiston then proceeded to state the various modes in which the dean and chapter had attempted to expel him, and afterwards submitted the several propositions to the court, in which he denied that his pamphlet was false, scandalous, or libellous, but that, on the contrary, every allegation in it was substantially true, that, even if it were libellous, the publication was not an offence within the meaning of the word contra; that, even if the ad eged offence were a prima facie one, the question's meaning, the school master of Rochester Cathedral is not one of the ecclesiastical persons mentioned in the statute, and therefore he is not punishable under it: that the publication of such a pamphlet is the privilege of the statute de tranctione; that, if the offence were committed, the sentence was void, for the dean without the second being offered a fair and proper hearing: that the alleged offence was condoned by the statement, "but I do not mean to say that I could not cause a deed binding themselves and their successors, in which (as Mr. Whiston) was a party interested, without his consent: that all the proceedings were tainted with the ground that they acted as judges in their own cause. There were several other propositions denying the remaining matters urged against the reverend gentleman. In support of his statement, Mr. Whiston called for the production of the account of the dean and chapter for last house, although quoting figures from them in their own exculpation, the dean and chapter refused to assent to produce. Mr. Whiston continued his address until the rising of the Court, at 5 o'clock. Tuesday and Wednesday were also occupied by his arguments. The case of the appellant having terminated at half-past 4 o'clock on the latter day, the Court adjourned, with the intimation that it would not sit again until after Easter Term.

CIRCULATION OF PARIS NEWSPAPERS.—The Paris correspondent of the Independance de Bruxelles writes following as the present circulation of the Paris press:—Constitutionnel, 20 000; Siècle 23 000; Presse, 20,000; Débats, 14,000; Pays, 12,000; Estafette, 12 000; Assemblée Nationale, 9000; Union, 9000 The rest have no currency worth mentioning.

Among the passengers by the Gertrude, which left Southampton on Wednesday, with the Peninsular mail, was the Earl of Strathmore

The Ariete Gazette states, from Previsa, in Turkey, that the mosque of Ali-Pacha, having been struck by lightning and entirely destroyed, the Turkish inhabitants, by way of consolation, resolved upon the outrage against the Christians. They procured a crucifix, which they dragged through the streets, compelling every Christian who passed, on pain of death, to trample and spit upon it. The English consul, on being informed of the outrage, called upon the authorities to interfere, and to take the crucifix from the hands of the Turks. This was done, and quiet was restored.

Nearly a ton weight of gold dust has been received by the escort yesterday from Mount Alexander. The weight was 1970 lb., or 23,640 ounces, which at £3 per ounce would amount to £70 940. The amount received in Sydney from the Independence of Bremen, which arrived yesterday morning, is also stated, when we observe that within the past six days not less than £235,000 has arrived in London and at the outports; viz. £130,000 from Mexico, California, and the West Indies; £27,000 from New York, and £478,000 in gold from Australia! From Sydney the most extraordinary accounts have reached us in reference to the productiveness of the mines; but the regulations laid down by the Government appear likely to prevent the necessary of sending the gold to England for the purpose of being coined. Such was the abundance of the precious metals at Sydney, that the current gold had a value of 18s. per ounce. It is to be hoped that parties that our present Mint price cannot be maintained; but we have every reason to know that no change in it is yet contemplated by Government.

The Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt will invest £653,886 9s. 5d in Consols during the current quarter. These purchases will, of course, tend to make stock scarce; hence, there is every prospect of Consols going to par. The other purchases which have commenced at the Bank; but, up to the present time, the number of applicants who have made their appearance has been comparatively small. The last returns of the note circulation of the United Kingdom are to the close of the week ending the 24th ult., when compared with the same period in 1851. The stock of bullion in the Bank of England is now over £20,000,000 sterling, or more than £9,000,000 in excess of that held last year. This extraordinary increase in a most remarkable one; nevertheless, it is evident that we shall have a much larger supply in the year advances, unless, indeed, the import of corn should exceed present calculations.

Monday, April 5.—Three per Cents, Consols were steady, at top ⅛ at which quotations a full average business was transacted. On the later day the prices advanced ⅛ @ ¼ for Money and Time; whilst on Wednesday Consols closed at 100¼ @ ⅜ par. The settlement for the 14th of April, and 99 to ¾ for the New Account of the 11th of May. The Market was active on Thursday, when the Three per Cents were marked 99¾ 99 to 99¼; the Three per Cent. Reduced, 98¼ ⅝ ¾; and the New Three and a Quarter per Cents, 99¾ to 100; the two latter securities ex dividend. Bank Stock was done at 211 to 212. Long Annuities were 6 11 16 to ⅝; Ditto, thirty years, ending 1859, 9⅝; 7-16; Ditto, 1860, 6⅞. India Stock was marked 262. India Bonds sold at 83s. premium, and a transaction took place in South Sea Old Annuities, at 97½. The

THE BURMESE WAR.—THE INDIAN NAVAL STEAM SQUADRON LEAVING BOMBAY FOR RANGOON.

THE BURMESE WAR.

BEFORE we detail the accompanying Illustration of a squadron of steam frigates belonging to the Indian Navy leaving Bombay Harbour for Burmah, on active service, it may be as well to mention the expeditious manner in which those vessels have been fitted out. Orders were received only on the 20th of February, by the authorities of Bombay, from the Governor-General of India, to despatch every available steamer in an expedition about to proceed against the Burmese; and, on the afternoon of the 24th, three steam-frigates and a steam-transport sailed for their destination, having taken on board in that time six months' provisions, and stores of all kinds for a war complement, besides ammunition, &c. The Feroze, a steamer of 1,100 tons and 500 horse-power, had to be converted at once from a packet into a frigate: and the celerity with which this was accomplished was deserving of all praise. Seven heavy 8-inch revolving guns were also received on board from the arsenal, and were mounted and fitted for service. The Mooaffer, a frigate of the same class, although in dock, with nothing on board of her but the engines when the despatch arrived, yet the next day was hauled out, commenced coaling immediately, in twenty-four hours took in nearly 600 tons of coal, and in three days was fully armed, equipped, and prepared for sea. It was feared that the greatest difficulty would arise from the uncertainty of procuring seamen at so short a notice, as the steamers were ordered to raise their crews from a peace to a war complement; however, it was luckily effected, notwithstanding all obstacles, through the zeal displayed on this occasion by the officers of the several vessels, no doubt aided in a great measure by the bounty granted by the Government of India to every volunteer, thus plainly showing what can be done in India by good management in fitting out a formidable steam flotilla for war service. Yet, at the same time, it should be observed that much of this is due to the admirable measures adopted by Commodore Lushington, the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian navy, in arranging everything before-hand; and had not all the departments under him, as well as the officers and crews of the respective vessels, used their utmost exertions in carrying out his instructions, the squadron could not have sailed for Rangoon so soon as it did; so, after all, it is fortunate, as a local paper says (the Telegraph and Courier), "that we have an Indian navy. If the service at this moment were dissolved, and our mail communication were being conducted by a mercantile company, where would the Governor-General have to look for the means of striking an immediate and vigorous blow against the Burmese? Is it likely that we should see such a fleet of her Majesty's steamers in our harbour, ready at a few hours' notice to proceed on service, as is composed by the five vessels of the East India Company now about to start for Burmah? We trow not. In fact, the largest steam flotilla ever yet assembled for war purposes will now, in less than a month from the departure of the squadron from Bombay, be floating on the waters of the noble river Irawaddy, and hurling destruction on the forts and stockades in the dominions of the Golden-footed Monarch."

THE STEAM-FRIGATE "FEROZE."

The following are the steam-vessels to be employed in active operations against the Burmese: no despicable force, one would imagine, even against a civilised power: Her Majesty's steam-frigate Hermes; H.E.I.C.'s steam-frigates Feroze, Mooaffer, Sesostris, Zenobia, and Semiramis; H.E.I.C.'s steamers Tenasserim and Fire Queen, iron steamers Phlegethon and Medusa, and steam transports Hugh Lindsay and Berenice.

The following is from a Bombay paper dated Feb. 25:—

Yesterday forenoon, at ten o'clock, the Right Hon. the Governor, accompanied by Commodore Lushington, and the staff of the Indian navy, inspected the steam squadron about to proceed on service. His Lordship went first on board the Feroze, where he was received with manned yards. Shortly afterwards the Mooaffer, which has recently been refitted, made a trial of her machinery by steaming to the mouth of the harbour. His Lordship then visited the Sesostris, where he was welcomed, as before, with manned yards. He expressed himself highly gratified with the zeal and activity displayed in the equipment of the flotilla during the past week. On his returning to the shore, at a quarter before noon, a salute was fired from the Hastings.

The squadron consists of the Feroze, Captain R. B. Lynch; the Mooaffer, Commander H. H. Hewitt; the Sesostris Commander C. D. Campbell; the Berenice, Lieutenant A. Nesbitt. These vessels sailed between 2 and 3 P.M. yesterday. Their destination in the first instance is Madras, whence they will proceed with the following troops to Rangoon: Three companies of Artillery, H. M.'s 51st Foot, and three regiments of Native Infantry. Captain Lynch, as senior officer, commands the squadron. When reinforced by the above four steam-frigates, the fleet at Rangoon will present a most formidable aspect to the Burmese.

The following appears among the Naval General Orders, promulgated yesterday:—

"BY COMMODORE S. LUSHINGTON, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

"Superintendent's Office, Bombay, 23d Feb., 1852.

"The Commodore Commander-in-Chief begs to congratulate the captains, officers, and crews of the ships fitting for service in the Bay of Bengal, on the highly creditable and expeditious manner in which they have been prepared for sea; he also begs to express his thanks to all the different branches of the departments under his command, for their zealous and active assistance.

"This order is to be read to the respective ships' companies."

The praise thus awarded by the Naval Commander-in-Chief seems to have been fully deserved.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—APRIL 10, 1852.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 554.—VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1852. [SIXPENCE.

THE WEST IN THE EAST.

THE West has long been precipitating itself on the East. The tide of European influence and ideas has been rushing from Great Britain, as from a focus and centre, to India on the one hand, and to America on the other. Our "factories" in the East have become a dependent empire, almost too unwieldy for us to manage; while our colonies in the West have grown into an independent empire, to compete with its parent in splendour, in influence, and in power. But still the stream runs eastward by a new channel. The western streamers of those great electrical northern lights which we originally sent forth, have circled the world, and arrived at the East by a western route. The two processes are now in operation, distinct from each other, but with results which promise to be similar.

Great Britain has at this moment a new Oriental war upon her hands. We are engaged in full hostilities with the populous and semi-savage kingdom of Birmah. Having possession in India of a rich and immense empire, with which that of Alexander the Great was comparatively worthless, we are from time to time compelled to extend it, under the penalty of losing it. No moderation on our part secures us from insult and aggression. Haughty and but partially informed barbarians foolishly rush into collision with us. The consequence is, that Sir Harry Smith's threat against the Kaffir tribes is realised against the natives of India. They are "eaten up," in whole or in part, at a gulp or piecemeal, as may happen to suit at the particular moment our digestion, our temper, or our convenience. Scinde and the Punjaub are the most recent instances of the fatality of aggrandisement that pursues us. China had previously afforded an example of the same kind; and we had made a meal of the island of Hong-Kong as an earnest of our capacity, if not of our stomach, for annexation. Birmah promises to be the next instance. Indeed, it is well nigh impossible to foresee any other conclusion to the war that has now commenced, and which has most indubitably been forced upon us by the wicked folly of the Birmese authorities, than an increase of our territory at the expense of that of Birmah. When the strong men of the West settle themselves in the East, quarrels are certain to arise. Out of quarrels come wars; out of wars comes extension of empire; and out of all these, bad as the means may appear, comes the shock that gives an impulse to the civilisation of the long stagnant, purulent, and festering world of Asia. From that impulse there is no knowing what beneficial results are destined to accrue hereafter to the world, and what triumphs of commerce, of art, of science, of literature, of philosophy, of humanity, and of religion may owe their origin and progress to the unavoidable collision of the active Western mind with the sluggish conservatism of the effete and withering East.

Hitherto Great Britain has been almost the only nation that has borne the brunt of this great natural process. The Dutch and Portuguese, at an early period of European history, when they were more active, enterprising, and commercial than the then circumstances of England allowed her to be, established relations quasi amicable and quasi hostile with the Japanese and Chinese. The French, also, though less successfully, made an attempt to obtain a footing in the East. But of late years French influence has been reduced to nothing; Portuguese influence has dwindled to a degree suitable to her European importance, and no more; and Dutch influence, though still great, is purely local. British influence has succeeded to them all; and this country has become, for good or for evil, but, as we most conscientiously believe, for more good than evil, the paramount power in the East. We have gone forth conquering and to conquer—not solely by the sword, which we have been slow to use, and which we have only drawn when compelled to do so, but by the force of our ideas. With what advantage to the whole world we have established a western civilisation in the East, this and a succeeding age will abundantly testify. But we are no longer to be the only power that shall play this mighty game. What the sire has done, the son is about to imitate. The example set by Great Britain has had its effect upon America. Jonathan is resolved to try his hand at the achievements of John, and the East has to receive a rude shaking from two sides at once.

The discovery of gold in California, and the consequent rapid settlement of a busy population on the western shores of the Pacific, have brought the destined agency to the work. It was foreseen by our sharp and long-sighted children of the United States of America, that a quarrel with China or Japan, or both, would sooner or later be the result of the colonisation of California. The leaders of opinion in America made no secret of their intention to knock at the door of Japan, and to see "what the people were made of." In an article entitled "California and her Asiatic Neighbours," which appeared in this Journal so far back as August, 1850, we drew the attention of the English public for the first time to this subject, and stated, on the authority of American letters and journals, what the Americans intended to do, and their reasons for doing it, as well as the provocation or the facility which California would afford them for the purpose. Subsequently to that period, a slight attempt was made by the British Government, while Lord Palmerston held the seals of the Foreign Office, to induce the empire of Japan to behave in a neighbourly manner to the rest of the world. The attempt, however, was not sufficiently bold. The Government was not strong enough in the consciousness of its right; nor was the Minister authorised to the proper extent by the public feeling, or the public appetite for probable wars, to pick a quarrel with Japan. Consequently, the hint that Lord Palmerston gave remained ineffective. Japan took no notice of us or of the outer world, and continued to be "the great unknown" that it always was—shut itself up against the ideas, the commerce, and the necessities of the world; afforded no aid to the general work of mankind; contributed nothing to the police of nations or the security of the seas, and treated all other nations, except China, as barbarians and as foes. But, in our default, the United States, a great commercial and go-ahead people, having no public debt and no public scruple, and possessing both the power and the will to be aggressive, have, as we stated they would nearly two years ago, finally determined that Japan, by fair means or by foul, shall be compelled to do its duty to the rest of the world. At a first glance the morality of such a proceeding may appear questionable; but, when more maturely considered, its inevitable necessity, either by means of the United States or of ourselves, becomes so obvious, that the wonder is, not that the feat is attempted now, but that it was not accomplished long ago. We need not recapitulate the arguments we employed upon the subject in 1850, when the intentions of the United States were mere matter of speculation; but we may with advantage cite, in corroboration of our own, the opinions which we find put forth on authority in one of the journals of New York, which announces that the expedition against Japan has been fitted out.

CAPT. BEATSON'S EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—THE "ISABEL," FITTED OUT AT THE EXPENSE OF LADY FRANKLIN AND CAPT. BEATSON.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

"The empire of Japan," says the New York Courier and Inquirer, "covers an area of more than 100,000 square miles. Its population is estimated at 30,000,000; and, covering an archipelago, its seacoast is more extensive than the whole Atlantic coast of the United States. It not only lies directly opposite our possessions on the Pacific coast, but the two great islands of Niphon and Yesso form the Strait of Sangar, through which hundreds of our whale fleet are compelled annually to pass; but to land upon the shores of which for supplies of wood, water, or the necessaries of life, or to be forced upon them by stress of weather, subjects the unfortunate whaler to robbery and death. Japan not only refuses to hold commercial intercourse with the rest of the world—a very questionable right—but she goes further, and, occupying as she does an enormous extent of sea-coast, she not only refuses to open her ports to foreign vessels in distress, but actually opens her batteries upon them when they approach within gunshot of her shores, and when driven upon them by stress of weather, she seizes upon, imprisons, exhibits in cages, and actually murders the crews of such ill-fated vessels. This has been submitted to too long already; and the constant increase of our whale fleet, and the consequent increase of disasters in this barbarous and inhospitable region, have compelled our Government, unprompted except by its wise foresight, to insist upon a reform in the policy and bearing of the Japanese towards the rest of the world. The single fact, that at one time within the last year there were 121 American whalers lying in the harbours of the Sandwich Islands, far away from their cruising-grounds, because they could not enter any harbour on the coast of Japan for repairs, shows not only the extent of our commerce in that region, but the claims of humanity itself for protection against the barbarians who thus cut off, as it were, the commerce of the Yellow Sea and the Sea of Ochotsk."

Commodore Perry, an officer of repute and ability, has been selected to command this important expedition, which is to consist of three steam-ships, the Susquehanna, the Mississippi, and the Princeton. If the Japanese are wise, they will beware how they refuse compliance with the request which the Americans will proffer; yet the hope that they will relax in the obstinate folly—not to say the injustice—of ages, on the simple demand of an alien, a hated, and almost unknown power, is too sanguine to be seriously entertained. We may be certain, however, that the American Government, having engaged in this enterprise, will "carry it through." It is just the work to suit the daring temper and the youthful ambition of the people. The Japanese authorities, whatever the result may be, will gain no sympathy; and what is done will be as much for the ultimate benefit of Japan as for that of the whole civilised world.

CAPTAIN BEATSON'S EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

THIS Expedition, which has been fitted out principally at the expense of Lady Franklin and Captain Beatson, affords considerable hope of success, inasmuch as the proposed route is almost new.

The Isabel is a vessel of 180 tons, of a brigantine rig, fitted with an auxiliary screw to ship and unship. She has from the light water-mark to some distance above the load-mark, a coat of doubling 4 inches thick, wrought longitudinally; and over that another coat 2½ inches thick, wrought diagonally from the upper edge of the first, extending down to the keel: she has also strong ice chocks fitted to the bows, to resist any concussion, the whole being covered with galvanized iron sheathing. The screw is worked by a pair of high-pressure direct-acting engines of 8 horse-power each. The accommodation for the crew are all near the boiler, so as to lose as little heat as possible in the cold weather. There is one boiler with a double funnel, with dampers, that, closing one and opening the other as may be required, the smoke may be carried clear of the mainsail. Internally she is strengthened by large beams in midships, and breasthooks forwards; and taken in proportion to her size, she is one of the strongest vessels that has ever been sent to the Arctic Regions.

The Isabel is to sail and steam as far as the Sandwich Islands, and there refit and make some further preparations before entering the ice, and then to proceed through Behring's Straits, and pursue a N.W. course along the Asiatic shore, nearly as far as the Kolyma to where open water was seen by Admiral Wrangel some years back: then to turn to the north, and afterwards come back to the eastward on the north side of some islands which are believed to extend from the American towards the Asiatic shores to the north of the Straits; on the north side again of which, it is supposed, if Sir John Franklin is still safe, there is the best chance of finding him with our intrepid explorers. A fuller account of the course to be taken by Captain Beatson was given in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for March 27.

Towards the cost of the expedition Lady Franklin has advanced about £2000; and Captain Beatson, £1000.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.—It appearing that, at many of the outports of the kingdoms, the officers who grant certificates of registry for vessels do not insert in their books the necessary directed to be kept by the 10th section of the act 8th and 9th Victoria, c. 89, the Commissioners of Customs have issued orders to all the ports, directing that, in all cases in which records are made in the registry book, whether first entry, bill of sale, or transfer, the names of the registering officers be duly inserted therein.

THE HERRING FISHING.—The necessary preliminary arrangements for the herring trade are now being made at the various stations where this important branch of our fishing is carried on. In the accounts received this week from Liverpool, it is stated that, owing to the Burmese war, speculators have raised the price of cutch no less than £7 per ton. We have similar accounts from London of a rise of from £5 to £6 in that market for the same article. The price of cured fish, we regret to learn, is a shade down in the Stettin market, owing to expected spring arrivals. All the Lossiemouth (45) are already engaged for the coming season to fish at home, at rates slightly in advance of those of last season. Boats have been engaged at Peterhead at 10s. per cran, and £3 and upwards of bounty.

WRECK OF A PORTUGUESE STEAMER, AND GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.—The steamer Porto, while on her voyage from Oporto to Lisbon, struck upon some rocks called the Forcados, on the night of the 20th March, when she immediately went to pieces, and all the passengers (36 in number) perished. Seven of her crew were saved. Among the sufferers are Mr. Joseph Allen, of Oporto, and two daughters; Mr Anderson, from London, shipowner, who was here on account of the Karrack, bound to Australia; Mons. Dastres, French Consul at Oporto; Mr. Anderson's nephew; Senhor José Augusto da Silveira Pinto, nephew of the well-known Senhor Albano, of Lisbon; Senhor Antonio José Placido Braga; Senhor Francisco Vieira de Souza Oliveira, of the Commercial Bank. As yet no bodies have been picked up. The mate and a seaman belonging to the British schooner Kingston, of Shoreham, were cruising about the vicinity of the wreck of the steamer Porto, and getting into the strong current running out, they were carried among the breakers on the bar and engulphed in an instant. The mate is a native of Perth, named John Spence; the seaman's name is William Harris, and belongs to London. The body of the latter has since been found, and buried at the English burial ground.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, April 15th, 1852.

The "Exposition" of Pictures in the Palais Royal continues to attract crowds daily, save on the Monday, when the cost of admission is five francs, and on Thursday, when it is one. On the latter day, the attendance is large, but not inconveniently crowded On the Monday, however, the place is simply a desert. One of the most remarkable pictures of the exhibition is one by M. Gallait, a Belgian artist of very great merit, though not quite a Rubens, as his countrymen delight to style him. The painting represents the exhibition of the bodies of Count d'Egmont and Count de Horn, after their decapitation. They are laid on a bed, surrounded with religious insignia, which conceal the bodies; but the heads are fully exposed, and, though perhaps somewhat too ghastly, are admirably painted. The countenances of the three or four persons at the foot of the bed, looking at the bodies with sorrowing commiseration, and earnestly watched by the fierce soldiers of Alba, who are excellent both in design and execution; and, notwithstanding the repulsive nature of the subject, this painting is constantly surrounded by a crowd of earnest spectators.

A work was lately sold by auction here, so unique of its kind as to deserve somewhat detailed mention. The work in question is a complete set of Voltaire's works, in seventy-two volumes. The last volume, a book of upwards of 600 pages, is occupied solely by an index of the engravings embodied in the remaining codices, and which amount to no less than twelve thousand eight hundred. All these do not exist in any single edition of Voltaire, but were collected, arranged in their proper places, and bound with the text, at the expense and under the superintendence of M. Victor de St. Maurix, "Introducteur des Ambassadeurs at the Court of Louis Philippe." All the countries, towns, sights, and landscapes mentioned in Voltaire's works occupy 334 plates; the vignettes and other ornaments of the same kind amount to 696. Battle-pieces and various engravings, illustrative of the scenes, battles, &c., described by the philosopher of Fernay amount to 819, and the portraits to 10,000 in number! This wonderful collection, which cost, besides many years' labour, upwards of 20,000f., was actually sold for little more than 5000 fr.

Another discovery, highly interesting to antiquaries, has just been made within the classic precincts of the "Quartier Latin." A whole row of the small crooked houses facing the noble halls of the Sorbonne having been demolished, the lights and air to the vicinity, in the midst of them a fine Gothic chapel has been discovered, which appears to have been constructed towards the end of the thirteenth century. It is supposed to have formed part of the palace which several Kings of France, among others Philip III. (the Bold), occupied in the vicinity of the Hôtel de Cluny, which is within a stone's throw. An opinion is entertained by some adepts in antiquarian lore, that the chapel was comprised within the walls of an hotel, which would, according to them, have been raised on the spot and occupied by the Guise family in the 16th century. This, however, is a decided mistake; for the memoirs and state papers of the day are unanimous in placing the Duke de Guise's residence on the other side of the river, in the neighbourhood of the Bastile. Others, and on far better grounds, believe it to have formed part of a convent of Mathurine monks which existed in its vicinity. However, adhuc sub judice lis est. During the last two hundred years this fine relic has been greatly deteriorated, the windows having been plastered, modern constructions actually raised upon its roof and walls. It is, however, to come down, and the materials to be sold as "matériaux de démolition," anglice rubbish.

A statement appeared in a Belgian paper some time since, to the effect that M. Victor Hugo had requested and obtained permission to return to France. It was contradicted on the part of the celebrated poet as completely erroneous. It is, however, asserted that there was some foundation in the announcement, as an intimation was quietly forwarded to M. Hugo that an application to return to France would meet with ready compliance.

FRANCE.

The "Prince President" follows boldly out to their legitimate consequences the recent transformations, social and political, in the character and machinery of the institutions and government of the State. Having got the Senate to confer upon himself a more than Royal income, he now in turn bestows the bounty of the State upon a select body of the Senators; and it will be seen, that, out of the thirty-nine chosen for the golden favour of the Chief of the Republic, a large proportion belongs to the army. From the official list published, it appears that twenty Senators are to receive 30,000f. each; sixteen are to receive 20,000f. each; and three are to have 15,000f. a year. In the first category are ten generals, nauely, Generals Baraguay d'Hilliers, de Castellane, d'Hautpoul (who is also grand referendaire), Leroy de St. Arnaud, Magnan, d'Ornano, Pelet, Petit, Preval, and Rypt. The ten other Senators who are to have 30,000f. are MM. Bineau, the Minister of Finance; de Crouseilhes, ex-Minister; Ernest de Girardin; Lacrosse, Secretary of the Senate; Count Louis Marnezia, Mesnard, the Prince de la Moskowa, Prince Lucien Murat, the Duke de St. Simon, and Thibaudeau. Seven generals are to have 20,000f.; namely, General Achard, De Bar, De la Hitte, Ordener, Schramm, and two others. Nine other Senators are to have the same amount; namely, the Marquis d'Audefret, M. Elie de Beaumont, M. Dumas (late Minister), M. de Heckeren, M. M. Leverrier, M. Mauzil (de la Nièvre), Sapey, Troplong, and Vieillard. The three Senators who are to have 15,000f. are Vice-Admiral Casey, Vice-Admiral Parseval-Deschesnes, and M. G. de St. Germains.

The remodelling of the professorships in the Paris University is also carried out with vigour, and MM. Michelet, Quinet, and Mickiewicz, who have been Liberals and "something more" in their lectures, have been removed by decree from their chairs in the University.

On Tuesday, the Court of Cassation at Paris held a solemn sitting, to administer the oath of allegiance, according to the new formula prescribed by the President, to the advocates, registrars, and officers of the court. All readily took the oath, with the exception of the advocate M. Martin (de Strasburg), who refused, and resigned his post.

The Legislative Body opened its sitting after the Easter recess on Tuesday afternoon; but the business transacted was brief and unimportant. Its future meeting is not yet decided on. There was a rumour prevalent that Louis Napoleon was engaged in drawing up a Message, which would be presented to the Legislative Corps at their next meeting.

General Canrobert, the commissioner sent down to the Nièvre to revise the sentences upon the insurgent prisoners, confirms the atrocities perpetrated at Clamécy, as published at the time in the Standard. The gallant officer in his report says that all the bad rest or heard of the ravages of Sodallen was far below what had taken place; and that, so frightful were the crimes committed, he could not extend even the slightest clemency to more than 52 out of 579 persons.

The 10th of next month is fixed upon for the grand review and the presentation of eagles in the Champ de Mars. On the 9th a splendid fête is to be given at the Military School by the French army to the Prince President. Previous to the ball, a magnificent display of fireworks will take place in honour of the occasion.

The Government Journals declare, in reply to a false rumour of the Siecle, that the British and French Governments are on the best understanding with each other.

It is said that nearly 26,000,000 sterling will be required by different railway companies and by the city of Paris for public works.

EGYPT.

Advices from Alexandria to the 4th inst. state that Fuad Effendi had come from Constantinople on a special mission, to confer with Abbas Pasha on the subject of the Tanzimat, and to ascertain whether the charges made against him at Constantinople were well founded. There was an impression among well-informed parties that Fuad would advise the Porte to call on Pasha the power of life and death possessed by Mehemet Ali, as the representatives of France and Russia had advised that the differences should be amicably arranged with as much speed as possible, and their advice is pretty much of the nature of a command certain to be obeyed.

With respect to the progress of the railway, we learn that some 12,000 to 15,000 people are at work at various places on the line throwing up the embankment, pulling down houses, preparing stone for bridges, and making a cutting, which at the Alexandria end will be from twelve to fifteen feet deep, passing through a number of streets in the suburbs outside the city walls.

UNITED STATES

From New York, under date the 3rd inst., we learn that the misunderstanding between England and the United States, respecting the collection of duties in Astoria, Oregon, is in a fair way of being brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

In Congress the business transacted was wholly of a domestic and local character. The Committee on Foreign Relations had entered upon an inquiry respecting the remuneration of Spaniards plundered by the Lopez expedition. A bill to impose imprisonment in room of flogging, now abolished in the navy, was rejected.

Amongst the miscellaneous news, we find two disastrous accidents recorded—one, the bursting of the boilers of the steamer Pocahontas, near Memphis, on the Mississippi, which killed eight and scalded eighteen persons; the other, a destructive fire at Philadelphia, which destroyed houses and property to the value of half a million dollars. The fire occurred in Bank-street

At Boston, also, a very destructive fire had broken out on the morning of the 31st ult., which wholly destroyed the extensive building known as the Tremont Temple, and greatly endangered the adjoining houses, as well as the Tremont Hotel opposite. One person was killed, and others seriously injured

Caravajal, the Mexican insurgent leader, had been brought a prisoner to Brownsville, Texas.

From California there are accounts to the 2d ult. New diggings had been discovered at Marysville and Placerville, which were very productive. The town of Downieville had been burnt down, the loss of which was estimated at 750,000 dollars

The North America steamer was wrecked on the 28th February. All on board, amounting to 750 persons, were saved, but in a most deplorable condition. By the steamer which brought this news 1 500 000 dollars in gold dust was received, besides a vast amount in the hands of passengers; and 1,500,000 dollars more were on their way from San Francisco for Panama and New York.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Accounts from Callao, in Peru, to the 9th ult., state that two ships had sailed from Callao, with 400 armed men on board, with the intention of invading Guayaquil. Other vessels (one of which was a steamer purchased from the Pacific Steam Navigation Company) and troops were to follow.

CANADA

From Canada we learn that the Anti-Slavery Society of that colony had issued an invitation to fugitive slaves to flee to Canada.

Steamers on Lake Ontario (29th March) had to cut through ice three-quarters of a mile, at Toronto.

On the 27th ult. the funeral of Sir John Harvey, the late Lieutenant-Governor of Halifax, Nova Scotia, took place, with the customary military honours.

INDIA.

The intelligence received this week is of very little interest. It is dated Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, the 6th, 13th, and 15th of March respectively.

The preparations for the military operations against the Burmese continued unabated, but there was still prevalent a very general impression that the rapid approach of the wet season would prevent anything like a regular campaign being entered upon at present. From Moulmein mention is made of an ineffectual attempt on the part of the Burmese to drive off her Majesty's brig Serpent, which was blockading Rassien. Lieutenant-General Godwyn had arrived at Calcutta, from the command of the Sirhind Division, to take that of the Rangoon and Martaban expedition It was uncertain when the expedition would sail. The next mail will most probably contain some interesting advices on the subject. The squadron of the expedition has been strengthened so as to consist of 12 steamers and three sailing vessels. The 18th Infantry had percussion muskets served out to them on starting, and will first learn the use of the weapon in front of the enemy, 20,000 of whom are said to be now awaiting our troops at Rangoon, and along the line of route to the capital, Ava.

The British force on the north-west frontier, under command of Sir Colin Campbell, had returned to Peshawur, leaving garrisons in the outposts of Doh Shubkude and other places.

On the 24th of January an earthquake was experienced in Upper Scinde, Cutchie, and over Goozerat. In the second named place it seems to have occasioned much mischief.

Intelligence had been received of the accidental smothering of 50 Coolies, out of a cargo of 235, in the hold of the ship Futtey Salam, during a hurricane off Madras, on the 22d and 25th Dec. The hatches had been battened down, and cries for relief were unheard during the fury of the storm.

CHINA.

The accounts from Hong-Kong are to the 28th of February. From the rebellious province of Kwangsi no further intelligence had been received relative to the insurgents, who may now be regarded as undisputed masters of the district they occupy.

The pirates who were creating so much alarm in the neighbourhood of Ningpo had yielded to the influence of bribes administered to them by the Imperial authorities, in the shape of honours and emoluments, and had laid down their arms, becoming, for the time being, peaceable subjects.

Her Majesty's ship Sphynx had visited the island of Loochoo, a tributary to the empire of Japan. Captain Shadwell, commissioned to deliver a letter from Lord Palmerston to the Regent, proceeded, after some little negotiation, to the Royal city of Shooi, about three miles inland, and had an audience with the Regent within the walls of the city. An entertainment was prepared, and every kindness and attention were shown to Capt. Shadwell and the crew of his vessel, notwithstanding the well-known objection of the natives, through fear of the Japanese Government, to admit strangers to their territory.

AUSTRALIA.

The latest accounts from Australia are to the 10th of January, and they uphold the character of the gold fields for extraordinary productiveness, which all the previous intelligence on the subject had indicated as a matter of certain expectation. At the date of our advices, however, the vicissitudes of the season had suspended for a time the operations of the gold-seekers in some of the richest localities. This was the case, for instance, in consequence of a total failure of water at Mount Alexander, in the colony of Victoria, and in consequence of floods and an excess of water at the Turon and other districts in the colony of New South Wales. Up to the period of the exhaustion of the water at Mount Alexander, which occurred rather suddenly, the returns obtained by all parties realised the most sanguine expectation, there not being an individual to be found who had been unsuccessful. The effect of the drought, however, had been to render the earth so hard that it could only be broken with a pickaxe, and a general desertion was therefore taking place. Four months would most probably elapse before work could be recommenced; but the interval was likely to be employed in new explorations.

The report made to the Government at Sydney by Mr. Hargrave, the commissioner appointed for the purpose, upon his return from his exploratory expedition, had not yet been allowed to transpire, and it was consequently rumoured that it was too exciting to be published until after the harvest had been got in.

The proprietor of the gold field in Frederick's Valley had proposed to make over his title to that spot consisting of 1033 acres, to a company to be called the Wentworth Gold-field Company, with a capital of £30,000, in 3000 shares of £10 each, of which £25 000 was to be paid to himself, and the remainder to form the working funds.

The price of gold at Sydney had fallen to 69s. per ounce, and the miners in consequence held back their earnings. Nevertheless, on the 9th January, the ship Kate sailed for London with 49,274 ounces of dust, valued at 69s. per ounce, and amounting to £160,141.

With regard to the New South Wales mines, it is stated that new deposits had been discovered in what is called the Manero district and about the Snowy River, which it was believed would prove of a remarkable character.

From Melbourne, the chief town of Victoria, we regret to find the unfavourable accounts of the conduct of the population confirmed. Scenes of violence and depravity had been common, and they are alleged to have been increased by the influx of the convict population of Van Diemen's Land. The following is an extract of a letter on the subject, dated Jan. 2. -

A general resignation by the police had been for some time anticipated, and that which was so much dreaded has now come to pass. The constabulary have resigned en masse, and we have now only ten ordinary policemen to do the duty of the city. You may to some extent guess the consequences, but you would never be able to imagine the full scope of the evil. The town is still thronged with successful diggers, around whom a crowd of the crime-stained importations from Van Diemen's Land hover, like those flights of birds we have seen at sea hanging over a shoal of mullet or other small fish, pouncing upon one occasionally as an opportunity is given. Fearful scenes of violence occur in the open day. Men have been stopped and robbed in the purlieus of the city, will in hail and sight of a dozen passers by. The probation gangs and penitentiari are to furnish forth the honest men who are to guard the golden hoards of our merchants and our tradesmen

From Adelaide (South Australia) the latest dates are to the 24th December, at which time the population was leaving in masses for the neighbourin g colony of Victoria, attracted by the gold discoveries there. So extensive was the emigration, that several stores and inns were closed, and business hitherto of a most profitable character had been wholly put a stop to, four newspaper establishments being amongst the number

To stay the imminent depopulation of the colony, a reward of £1000 had been offered by the Government for the discovery of any gold field that should produce £10,000 within two months; and a Mr. Stephen, a barrister, having announced his knowledge of two very extensive districts, a day had been appointed for him to proceed to point them out.

Of general news there is little of any interest. A meeting had been held of the Sydney Railway Company, at which a report was read, announcing that Earl Grey had sanctioned the proposal of the local Government to grant a guarantee of five per cent. on the first £100,000 capital subscribed, payable either in London or Sydney. The preparatory works of the line were proceeding slowly, the number of persons employed being only 73; and, as an engineer was expected from London in the course of a few weeks, it was proposed to defer any more active steps until his arrival

The scheme of the home Government for a two-monthly line of screw steamers had been received with derision throughout the colonies.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF AUSTRALIA.

The following interesting communication is an extract from a private letter:—

After an early breakfast at the little inn where we spent the night, we rode seven miles through a rugged forest road to Bal arat, till within these last few months a part almost unknown, and supply formed a portion of a sheep run occupied by Mr. Y. The hills, of very moderate height, rise from the valley with little hollows (or gullies, as they are called) between them. On the side of every one of these a population of 3000 or 10,000 people in a few weeks; and although by the time I arrived the greater part of these had gone away again, there were still enough left to form a very curious scene—many hundreds of tents, of all sorts and sizes, being scattered about the valley in the most irregular manner; while others, including several stores, were clustered together on one particular hill, called Golden Point, the lower part of which has been upturned and ransacked for the precious metal, in every direction. The surface of this hill looks like a vast gravel pit, consisting of fine red gravel, such as you would choose, when sifted, for your garden-walks. On examining the ground more closely, excavations are found to consist of square holes of various sizes and depths, from 3 or 4 feet to 20 or 30 feet. The strata are very variable and uncertain, but generally this bed of gravel lies upon a bed of whitish sandy clay, and the gold is for the most part found in the lower part of this gravel, which is generally so firmly bound together, that it has become a hard conglomerate which can only be broken up by hammers. This gold is usually found in the rolled pounded and evidently water-worn pieces, from the size of a pin's head to that of peas, but new and then of much larger size The great bulk, however, is small and scarcely perceptible to the eye among the gravel, which is taken down to the bed of the stream and washed in the dishes and cradles. . . . . Among the rough, unshaven, dirty-looking men who were at work, I every now and then discovered some friend, who could hardly be recognised in his bush attire, consisting generally of a blue or dark woollen shirt, worn outside a la blouse, with a leathern belt round the waist, a straw or "wide-awake" hat, and trousers, and thick boots of coarse materials, and all of one colour, viz. that of the clay and mud with which the whole were pieces, from the size of those who were thus masquerading and addressed me without my knowing him. Among others of my acquaintance with whom I met were lawyers, doctors, tradesmen in fact, people of all sorts; but I noticed that generally the parties unlearning men were the best. The success is very variable indeed, in proof of which one gentleman told me that he and his party had been working hard for six weeks, and had sunk thirteen deep holes, but got nothing. On measuring one of these holes, I found it to be 20 feet deep, and 6 feet of it, and in two of three days took out £720 worth of gold. . . For some time past a new district, called Mount Alexander, had been attracting a good deal of attention, and a great many people had gone there and returned; but all I heard, I concluded that this would be the best place for our object of purchasing gold; and there ore we proceeded there, after spending three days at Ballarat. One of these days was Sunday. It was a very wet morning, and probably owing to this, no clergyman visited us; otherwise, there is generally service. The place was very quiet and orderly, no work being done, and most men took advantage of a day of rest after their week of toil, for gold-digging is no easy occupation.

It was in the afternoon of the 11th of November that we stopped our baggage on to our horses, wound the tether-ropes round their necks, and started for Mount Alexander, having the greater part of our money still with us. The direct distance is 80 miles, but we were too late to make a single ride of it, and slept at the Government Station, ... Leaving Captain B.'s after breakfast, we rode at a moderate pace, thinking that we had plenty of time, but in consequence of our horses being now in condition, and losing our way, we were in our saddles for three days after dark. Our first business on arriving at Mount Alexander was to inquire for the tent of the Government Commissioner, where we deposited our money, as we had previously done at Ballarat, for to make of safety. I am slightly acquainted with the Commissioner, who was very kind, and gave me some information, and regretted that, owing to their small tent being full, they could not give us accommodation for the night. We therefore ordered our kits to be taken to another tent, while we ran the main diggings and the largest collection of tents were, in hopes of finding some place of rest and some grass for our horses. . . . . A friend with whom I happened to fall in allowed me to creep into his tent, and having obtained the loan of a blanket I rolled myself up in it, munched a biscuit which I had in my pocket, and then lay down on the floor, and soon fell asleep, thinking how many with feather beds and pillows would sleep less soundly. After an early breakfast I rode slowly up the valley, visiting several gold-washers on the way, and buying a little gold. These diggings are of a very different character to those at Ballarat, being much more widely distributed; consequently the tents of the diggers are scattered up and down the various valleys over a considerable distance, more or less thickly according to the richness of the locality. After looking about us, and making some inquiry, we decided on pitching a tent for ourselves close to that of the Commissioner, where I could carry on the business of gold buying. Meanwhile we made a few purchases, and at night got accommodation in the tent of an acquaintance, in which we had to be bought or borrowed, and therefore, as there was no time to lose we set about making one. We got the loan of a tarpaulin, and then set to work, dug holes, cut down trees, stripped some bark off others—in short, as Jack Tar says, a hand fellow helped another—and by night and day a pretty well secured. You would have laug ed, or perhaps stared with astonishment, if you had seen me one minute chopping away at a tree or carrying it on my shoulder, the next cutting on a log, weighing gold as I counted out the bank notes, for we did not lose any opportunity of buying when it occurred

The next day was Saturday (the 15th).—We were again early at work. Did more to our tent, and then rode to the Government Camp, where I purchased a piece of bark stripped from a gum tree, and nailed to four bits of rough wood in the form of a table (on which, moreover, I am now writing), and on which I weighed my gold. A bark table—what I brought on it besides, and a pair of bark stools. On Sunday, when I was as glad of a day of rest as any of the diggers, I read the Church service to myself, and only went out a little in the afternoon when the weather cleared up.

Monday, the 17th.—I was busy all day buying gold, writing letters for the post, and in the evening making up my bags of gold for the Government escort, which was to leave for Melbourne the following morning. I found I had purchased altogether just 600 ounces, for which I paid on an average about 57s. per ounce. The following morning presented a most lively and picturesque scene when the escort was preparing to start. Previously to this week only two drays had been sent down by Government, and each time on horseback; but the success of the diggers had so increased, that there was now gold to the amount of £25 000, and a chaise cart was necessary. The cavalcade consisted of two mounted troopers as the chaise cart, driven by an officer with an armed guard beside him, and six more troopers on horseback behind, four of them, I think, of the native black police. The pretty scene alluded to was when all the was preparing. The hilly, open forest land is in itself park-like, and on a rising ground the Commissioner's establishment is placed, consisting of several tents and two or three gunyas or bark huts, made by the native police after their own fashion. The escort was arranged about ready saddled, and the men themselves, dressed both black and white, and in various costumes, gave life to the picture, while of course some interest was added by the knowledge of the valuable load confided to the care, and in the rugged forest country through which it had to travel. Not a sight of the train as it wound among the trees, and in due time heard that it had safely reached its destination. . . . . My occupation during the remainder of the week was very uniform, but I occasionally took a run or walk among the gold-finders, but did not leave my tent for long at a time, as my companion had now left me. About this part there are chiefly two kinds of diggings—surface digging, which simply consists in getting off a thin layer of earth from the surface of some of the hills to the depth of a few inches, when a bed of gravel is reached; and the deep-digging, which is digging down in hollow places in the streams and between hills, and re-washing the stuffs which exist under the same roots found there to and. Both kinds have proved very profitable to many. As an extreme case, three men, last week, got above 30 lb. weight of gold in less than two days out of a lit le patch of gravel or a few feet square, and not more than six inches deep. And an extreme case of hole-digging, I heard to-day of four men who took seven pint pots of gold out of a hole or fissure on Tuesday last. What a pun pamkin of gold weighs I do not know, but, as a rough guess, I should think this prize would be worth not less than £3000. Of course these are but two extraordinary cases among some thousands of diggers; but, nevertheless, the great number of persons who are getting rich in this district is almost incredible.

THE FATE OF THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The subject of the retention or demolition of the Crystal Palace is occupying considerable public attention.

The following letter relating to the future destination of the Building is of interest

29, Abingdon-street, April 8, 1852.

Dear Sirs,—Referring to the conversation which took place between Sir Charles Fox and myself this afternoon relative to the removal of the Crystal Palace, I have to inform you that, in the event of her Majesty's Government declining to purchase on terms specified—namely, £70 000, I shall be prepared to enter a contract for the purchase of the Building at that sum. The intention of my employers is to re-erect it across a winter garden and a place of general recreation and instruction for the public. In the event of your accepting my offer your solicitors may forward the draft contract to the solicitors of my employers, Messrs. Johnstone, Farquhar, and Leech, of Moorgate-street

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, FRANCIS FULLER.

Messrs. Fox, Henderson, and Co., Spring-gardens.

From a correspondence which has been lately published between Sir Joseph Paxton and Messrs. Fox and Henderson, the contractors, it appears that the amount of money collected on the two last Saturdays as admission fees has been placed by Messrs. Fox and Henderson to a separate account in the bank of Messrs. Glyn, Mills, and Co.; where it will remain subject to the claims for expences made by the committee appointed for the preservation of the Building; and the appropriation of the balance is not to be finally decided upon until the fate of the Building is determined. It will be thus seen that the demonstrations in favour of the retention of the Building bring no pecuniary advantage to Messrs. Fox and Henderson.

For the promenade concert on Saturday last, the Woods and Forests refused to permit the introduction of military bands, and the musical entertainment was confined to Mr. Best's performance on the great organ, and comprised a selection of sacred music from the works of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Graun, Bach, Mozart, &c. The performance commenced at three o'clock, with selections from the "Messiah," and finished at five o'clock with Haydn's grand "Hallelujah chorus." There were several thousand persons present.

It was the intention of Messrs. Fox and Henderson to continue these promenade concerts on Saturdays, and at the same time to keep the Building open to the public during the other days of the week; but, from a further correspondence which has taken place between these gentlemen and the authorities at the Board of Works, it appears that the First Commissioner of Works and Public Buildings (Lord J Manners) has expressed his strong dissatisfaction at the course hitherto taken by Messrs. Fox and Henderson, and that he declares, in case they persist in what he calls "the application of the Building to its present objectionable uses, or to any other purpose than those specifically mentioned in the Royal warrant, the assistance of a court of competent jurisdiction will be sought to restrain them."

Messrs. Fox and Henderson accordingly, in reply, notified their intention, which they have since carried into effect, of finally closing the doors of the Crystal Palace to the public on Thursday last.

At the meeting on Wednesday last of the general committee for the preservation of the Building, a report of the sub-committee, which was unanimously adopted, set forth that—

Two principal difficulties have existed in the public mind on the question of preserving the Building. The first is the supposition, that, if retained, it must involve a large public expense, for private subscriptions would obviously prove inadequate for an object of such magnitude. The size of the Building, and the necessary cost of maintaining, repairing, and rendering it permanent, greatly magnify the objection, which exists in the mind's of many persons sincerely desirous, on other grounds, that the Building should be preserved. The second objection is, that the non-removal would be a breach of faith with, and would be a hardship upon, the owners of property in the neighbourhood. It is necessary to meet both these objections.

It is proposed that the Building be vested by act of Parliament in trustees, who shall have power of leasing it under certain conditions specified in the act. It is also proposed that the trustees shall be so selected as to give to the country at large the highest guarantee that station can afford that the Building shall be appropriated to no purpose unworthy of the beautiful site upon which it has been erected, or the associations of the Great Exhibition.

Taking it for granted that the first difficulty existing in the public mind may be overcome as has now suggested, it is proposed to meet the second by buying up the lease from property in the neighbourhood said to be injured, and for that purpose, as well as for all other sources of outlay connected with the Building, sufficient capital will be provided under the terms of the lease to be granted by the trustees.

Three modes of appropriating the Crystal Palace may be at present specified with sufficient distinctness to show how it is intended to combine the instruction and recreation of the people with the advancement of the arts, sciences, and manufactures

In the first place, a portion of the space may be allotted to a Winter Garden, embellished with fountains, statuary, geological specimens, and a great variety of other interesting objects

Another portion might be appropriated for the reception of new inventions and a "trade collection," in illustration of the commerce of the country.

Lastly, the Building might contain a gallery of design, for the promotion of taste among manufactures and the public; and lecture-rooms and museums, which would relieve the already overcrowded state of many of our greatest scientific institutions.

It is then added, that—

It is not extravagant to expect that a sufficient sum will be realised to effect the redemption of the loan in a very short period. Any surplus receipts will be applied first in providing for the maintenance and repair of the Building, then in paying interest on the capital expended by the lessees, and the surplus partly to add to the works of art and other objects of attraction which the institution will contain; but the greater part in forming a sinking fund for the benefit of the Building by the trustees for the nation.

You are to be asked for, in carrying out this plan for the preservation of the Crystal Palace, that has already been conceded to the Zoological and Botanical Societies in the Regent's Park.

PROPOSED NATIONAL EXHIBITION AT CORK.

It is proposed to hold, in the course of the ensuing summer, a National Industrial Exhibition for Ireland, at Cork; and the committee for Dublin, who have undertaken to promote the matter, meet from time to time at the Museum of Irish Industry, 5, Stephen's Green East.

The following letter, which was read at the last meeting from Mr Shea, the honorary secretary, to the Executive Committee, shows the present aspect of the scheme:—

April 12, 1852

Dear Sir, Your committee will be gratified to learn that all matters in arrangement is connected with the Exhibition are progressing very satisfactorily.

With the last week local committees have been formed in Waterford, Clonmel, Limerick, and Cork, and we are now in communication with other towns most beneficially for our national undertaking. The interest now excited in every direction is so great, and the applications for space so numerous, that the Executive Committee have to-day decided upon building an additional hall 125 feet long by 80 feet wide, and it appears that every difficulty in the way of this enlargement will be sufficient to meet our requirements. You will, therefore, see the necessity of procuring the application forms for us as speedily as you can, to enable us to decide as to the amount of space we really shall require, and in order that the Dublin contributors should have ample accommodation.

We are also aware how much we are indebted to the exertions of the Dublin committee for the high position our undertaking now holds in public estimation.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, JOHN SHEA. Hon. Secretary.

John C. Deane, Esq., Honorary Secretary, Dublin Committee.

Mr. C. P. Roney, who stated that he was now engaged as agent for some of the principal English companies in organising an extensive system of railway communication between England and Ireland, observed, that in this arrangement the attraction of the Exhibition would be prominently put forward. He felt satisfied, from the measures contemplated, that a great portion of the manufacturing classes of England would have an opportunity of visiting Ireland. Pleasure and utility might be united; and the Cork Exhibition, not less than the attractive scenery of Killarney, &c., tempt many to avail themselves of the summer excursion trains now in progress of organisation. (Hear, hear)

Sir Thomas Deane handed in a subscription of £20 from Thomas Brassey, Esq.—(Hear)—and stated that while in London he took the opportunity of bringing the subject of the Exhibition before several influential persons. He was happy to say that he received the most cordial reception from all. He personally waited on several of his distinguished countrymen, the Irish artists resident in London, and he had the rich treat of viewing their works in their respective studios: he grieved his time would not permit him calling on all—not only extended to Maclise, Fisher, Elmore, Crowley, M'Dowell, Foley, and O'Connor, who promised to send pictures, groups of sculpture, and stained glass. Amongst the numerous encouragers of Irish talents the noble Thomas Brassey, whose name need not grace les for his country's good. Those who were at the Great Exhibition will recollect the beautiful shield presented by his workmen, with the portraits of the engineers, and views of viaducts done by Mr. Brassey, also the sculptured portraits of his children, by their sculptor, Mr. J. E. Jones. Mr. Brassey has consented that this beautiful group should be exhibited at Cork.

The meeting was also addressed by Sir Robert Kane, Hon. J. P. Vereker, Mr. Hutton, Mr. Lentaigne, &c.

A vote of thanks to his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, for his donation of £20 towards the expenses of the undertaking, closed the proceedings.

YELLOW FEVER.—INSUFFICIENCY OF QUARANTINE.

The second report of the General Board of Health on quarantine has been presented to Parliament. The subject treated of is yellow fever, and upon it much curious, interesting, and valuable information is supplied. The conclusions come to by the board are as follow:—

1. That yellow fever epidemics break out annu tanneously in different and distant towns, and in different and distant parts of the same town, often under circumstances in which communication with infected persons is impossible.

2. That yellow fever epidemics, though occasionally extending over large tracts of country, are more frequently limited as to the space over which they spread, often not involving the wards of a town, and sometimes not even any considerable district of it

4. That yellow fever epidemics do not spread from district to district by any rule of gradual progression, but often ravage certain localities, while they spare entirely, or visit very lightly, others in the immediate neighbourhood, with which the inhabitants are in constant intercommunication.

5. That yellow fever epidemics, when they invade a district, do not spread from the houses first infected to the next, and thence to the adjoining, and thus extend as from a centre; but, on the contrary, are often strictly confined to particular houses in a street, to particular houses on one side of a street, to particular rooms in the same house, and often even to particular rooms on the same storey.

6. That, in general, when yellow fever breaks out in a family, only one or two individuals are attacked, commonly the attendants on the sick escape; and when several members of a family are successively attacked, or the attendants on the sick suffer, either the epidemic was general in the locality, or the individuals attacked had gone into an infected district

7. That when the yellow fever is prevalent in a locality, the most rigid seclusion in that locality affords no protection from the disease.

8. That, on the other hand, so great is the success attending the removal from an infected locality, and the dispersion of the sick in a healthy district, that by this measure alone the further progress of an epidemic is often arrested at once

9. That such dispersion of the sick is followed by no transmission of the disease, not even when the sick are placed in the wards of an hospital among patients labouring under other maladies.

10 That no one of the preceding facts can be reconciled with any other conclusion than that, whatever may be the exciting cause of yellow fever, it is local and epidemic in its origin; and the evidence of this opinion is therefore cumulative.

11. That the conditions which influence the localisation of yellow fever are known to exist in towns, and, to a great extent, removable, and are precisely the same as the localising causes of cholera and of a l other epidemic diseases.

12. That, as in the case of all other epidemic diseases, in proportion as these localising causes are removed or diminished, yellow fever ceases to appear, or occurs at more distant intervals and in milder forms.

13 That, besides the common external localising causes, there is one constitutional such peculiarity of persons—that is, a predisposition to non-acclimation—that is, the state of the system produced by residence in a cold climate; in other words, European blood exposed to the action of tropical heat; the practical lesson being that the utmost care should be taken to prevent individuals or bodies of men recently arrived within the yellow fever zone from going into a district in which the disease actually exists, or has recently been present.

14. That the means of protection from yellow fever are not quarantine restrictions and sanitary cordons, but sanitary works and operations having for their object the removal and prevention of the several localising conditions, and that these sanitary works are impracticable, the temporary removal, as far as may be possible, of the population from the infected localities.

We deem it our duty to state, in conclusion, that, from the most careful examination which we have been able to make of the mass of evidence submitted to us, from which the foregoing conclusions have been deduced, we have not found a single fact or observation clearly ascertained and authentically recorded opposed to the general tenor of such evidence. We have met with no exception of any kind. We have indeed found the opinions of some authorities, for whom we entertain great respect, not in accordance on some points, but these have reference for the most part to matters of a purely professional and scientific nature. On the great practical question, whether, whatever may be the nature and mode of propagation of yellow fever, quarantine and sanitary cordons can afford any real protection against its introduction and spread, we believe there can be but one unanimity of opinion, in accordance with all the evidence we have submitted, that they cannot. We believe there is the like general agreement in this fact or practical conclusion, that the substitution of sanitary or hygienic precautions for quarantine isolation and restriction would afford more certain and efficient protection.

We have received from recent inquiries much information with reference to the plague of the Levant, the results of which we purpose to state in our third report—results which appear to us to be of great practical value, as showing on the one hand what measures experience has proved to be inefficacious and even mischievous; and, on the other hand, what measures may be resorted to with the best hope of prevention of the outbreak, or arresting the progress of this formidable disease; and thus of superseding the necessity of those onerous restrictions on commerce and international communication which quarantine so universally imposed on account of the plague has hitherto occasioned.

All which we humbly certify to your Majesty. SHAFTESBURY, EDWIN CHADWICK,
T. SOUTHWOOD SMITH.

Dr. Daniel Wilson has been lately presented with a testimonial, which consisted of an elegant silver tea service and coffee pot, and a silver salver with the following inscription:—"Presented to Daniel Wilson, LL.D His Associates in the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland present this tea service in grateful evidence of their high estimation of his faithful labours as secretary, and their admiration of his varied learning and genius, so successfully devoted to the restoration of the archæology of Scotland."

MONUMENT TO THE LATE ROMAN CATHOLIC ARCHBISHOP MURRAY.—The following names are amongst the last list of subscribers to the monument to the late Dr. Murray:—The Marquis of Kildare, Earl of Carlisle, Marquis of Clanricarde, Earl Fortescue, Earl St. Germans, Earl of Ellesmere, Earl of Clarendon, and Baron Richards. The subscriptions already received amount to upwards of £1000.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR MANUFACTORY AT MOUNT-MELLICK.

We are indebted to modern chemistry for the knowledge that the sweetness of many vegetable substances is due to the sugar contained in them, and for the art of extracting it from them in its crystallised form. Till the commencement of the century, all the sugar of commerce—then an uniting in Europe to between 250,000 and 300,000 tons, as well as all that was consumed in Asia (probably a much larger quantity), was obtained from the cane, and that was supposed so be the only substance from which art could extract sufficient to supply the wants of mankind. To cultivate it and manufacture sugar for the market of Europe was for many years the principal inducement for continuing and extending the slave trade Two lines of Cowper express at once the latent effect, and the horrors to which it led:—

Has God then given its sweetness to the cane,
Unless his laws be trampled on, in vain?

Soon after the commencement of this century, when the war prevented France and the Continent in general from obtaining colonial produce, some French chemists thought of applying the knowledge they had acquired of the nature of sugar to producing it from vegetables grown in their own country; and being encouraged by Napoleon, as well as by the enormous price of the article, (upwards of 2s. per pound), they succeeded in producing a coarse and weak sugar from beet-root. This occurred about 1810, and from that period the manufacture of sugar from beet has been constantly and extended. Though it was much checked on the return of peace, and the free importation again of sugar from the colonies into Europe, the manufacture had become so important, that the Government of France and some of the Governments of Germany encouraged and protected it by imposing high duties on cane sugar. From that beginning, promoted by being in the centre of all the knowledge of Europe, having at its service all the arts of Europe and an unlimited command of free labour, it has come to rival cane sugar, and beet-root is now one principal source of supplying the wants of France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Russia, and indeed the whole continent of Europe. It has improved agriculture and given employment to a great number of people. In 1836 the whole produce of France was estimated at about 80000 tons, in 1851 at nearly 80,000 tons. The beet-root sugar made in the Zollverein was estimated in 1840 at about 15,000 tons; and in 1851 at about 45,000 tons. Probably, half as much more at least as is made in France and in the Zollverein is made in all the other parts of the Continent, so that the quantity of beet-root sugar made and to be made in Russia 35,000 tons; making a total of beet-root sugar now manufactured in Europe of at least 150,000, and probably 180,000 tons, or nearly one-seventh part of the present consumption of Europe, America, and our colonies. In 1847 his was estimated at upwards of 1,000,000 tons, and as the production has increased considerably since that period, it is now probably not less than 1,100,000 tons.

The most extraordinary fact, however, in connexion with the manufacture is, that the price at which beet-root sugar can now be produced enables the manufacturer to compete with sugar made from cane by slave labour without protecting duties, though they are still continued both in France and Germany. The quantities of sugar made from beet, and the low price at which, by the help of the protecting duties, it is enabled to be sold, are amongst the causes of the great reduction in the price of sugar, by which our community and the whole of Europe benefit, and of which the West India planters bitterly complain. According to a parliamentary return, the average price of Cuban and Brazilian sugar in Europe in 1842-44 (but since then several improvements have been made in the manufacture) was 17s. 5¾d. per cwt., equivalent to £17 6s. 4d. per ton. Mr. Sullivan, the great scientific guide to those who are undertaking to make beet-root sugar in Ireland, in his pamphlet on the subject, puts it down at £21 or £22, which may, perchance, lead his sanguine countrymen into error. It is right to add that Mr. Sullivan's estimates are made from the selling price at Hamburg, where these foreign sugars had a market, and they did not, on account of the high duties, find a market here at the period of the return. At the same time we must state that the present price of Havannah sugars in the London markets varies between 17s. 6d. and 21s. per cwt., in proportion to their fineness; and the price of Brazilian sugars varies between 13s. 6d. and 21s. 6d.: and we are not in a condition to judge of the relative goodness of beet-root and these other sugars, but some of them are very fine.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR FACTORY AT MOUNTMELLICK, QUEEN'S COUNTY, IRELAND.

We may also notice that Mr. Sullivan puts down the rate of freight at too high a figure; and he may be incorrect in other statements which we have no power to verify. He says, "the usual freight from the East Indies and Penang is £5 per ton." Now, the average freight from Calcutta for the eleven years 1841-1851, as stated by Mr. Lindsay, in his work on the Navigation Laws, was £4 10s. 6d.; but the average of the last four years was only £3 7s. 11d.; and £10, which Mr. Sullivan says it sometimes amounts to has not been once reached in the last twenty years. Within the last year, however, freights from Calcutta have been down to 15s.; some of the latest advices speak of them as having risen to £2 2s., which is more likely to be about the average hereafter than £5. This is of great importance to the Irish manufacturer, because sugar can, we believe, be imported from India at a lower price than from any other country. We will not, however, enter further into criticisms that might damp the ardour of those who are engaged in what promises to be a very useful, and, we may hope, profitable enterprise. Not pretending to say exactly at what price cane sugar can now or may hereafter be imported into England, it is a certain fact that beet-root sugar has fairly competed with it on the Continent, where the cost of carriage from the seaboard has hitherto been very considerable: and it is estimated that beet-root sugar can be manufactured in many parts of Europe at a less price than must be given for cane sugar. In Mr. Sullivan's elaborate pamphlet he insists very strongly on the great advantages possessed by Ireland for growing beet; and he estimates the cost of obtaining pure sugar at from £16 17s. to £19 18s. per ton, according to the quantity of sugar in the root. We are afraid that this comparative estimate is too sanguine in favour of Ireland; but certainly enough has been done on the Continent, and there is so much probability of the expense of the manufacture being still further reduced, that the experiment now making in Ireland on a grand scale to manufacture sugar from beet-root, to compete with sugar manufactured from cane in our own colonies and paying equal duties, seems fully warranted. There is at least a probability of success.

Of all Bonaparte's mighty schemes and conquests, it is singular that none have had such abiding and important results as his temporary prohibitions of trade intended to be only temporary, but to effect the ruin of England. From his Berlin and Milan decrees there has sprung a great manufacture, which is giving a permanent direction to the industry and improvement of Europe, and has done more than all our squadrons on the coast of Africa to suppress the slave-trade, by reducing the price of sugar and rendering slave labour unprofitable by bringing it into competition with free labour. Of such consequences none of the men of 1810 had the most remote conception; and we every day see similar instances, more distinctly proving of nations than of individuals, that the Divinity "points our actions, rough hew them as we will." Another important truth is made manifest by this great change, viz. that all the supposed advantages of soil and climate are of little importance in creating wealth, compared with industry, knowledge, and skill.

SECTION OF THE MOUNTMELLICK BEET SUGAR FACTORY.

Following the examples, of which we have given a rough and brief sketch, a company has been formed for manufacturing beet-root into sugar in Ireland, and a factory, erected after the designs of Mr. Ashenhurst, of Dublin, covers a large area at the entrance of the town of "Mountmellick," in Queen's County, sixty miles from Dublin, and six miles from Portarlington railway station. In little more than three months the first building has been completed. It is the first step for introducing the manufacture into Ireland. It is erected with a refinery, replete with all the appliances necessary to produce sugar of the first quality by the most approved continental methods, combined with some improvements which will ultimately reduce the cost of manufacture much below that on the Continent. The cost of the building, inclusive of machinery, was £10,000. It has two steam-engines, together of 40-horse power, and employs 160 labourers. In addition, the company's operations afford occupation to a considerable number of labourers in cultivating beet—increasing their resources, and finding a market for the produce of the land. From the superior quality of the root produced, Ireland appears admirably adapted to the growth of beet. At present the supply is limited, and the price enhanced by the company's demands. They were not anticipated, and the farmers of the locality were not prepared for them. The company requires 300 tons of beet-root per week, which will soon exhaust all the produce of the neighbourhood. It is feared, therefore, that they will be limited in their operations by wanting the raw material, of which, however, an abundant supply is expected next spring. The average produce is said to be 26 tons per acre, at 16s. per ton, which is 10 tons per acre more than is produced on the Continent. The price, however, is 2s. higher than on the Continent; but the company has made contracts for next season at the continental prices. The results already attained promise ultimate success. The promoters have had the courage to brave popular prejudice, and prove to sceptics, that results effected in continental Europe could be attained in Ireland, where climate and soil are favourable to the object. The company have also erected an auxiliary establishment at Donney-house, Queen's County, for the purpose of cutting and drying the beet-root, by which its saccharine property is retained uninjured for an indefinite period, enabling, which is one of its advantages, the manufacture to be continuously carried on. The maximum strength in saccharine matter of the continental roots is 7 per cent. raw, or 6½ per cent. refined sugar. The trials of the root of Ireland of this year gave 7¼ per cent. in raw sugar. Refined sugar was to be made in the first week of April, although not largely, in consequence of the excellent quality of the grain of the raw sugar.

SECTION OF THE MOUNTMELLICK BEET SUGAR FACTORY.

THE CHATEAU OF NEUILLY, NEAR PARIS.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

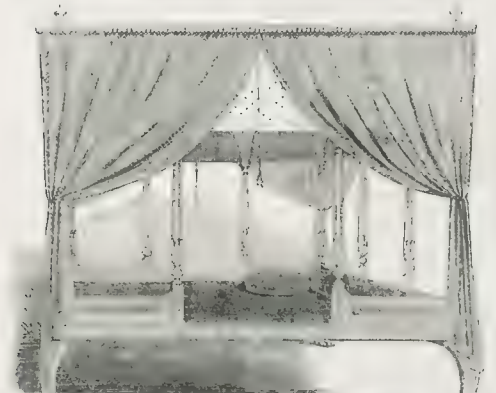
The cost of manufacturing the sugar from the root on the Continent averages £9 per ton; at Mountmellick the cost has been £7 5s. per ton. This result has been attained by superior machinery and superior arrangements to those of the Continent; and it is reasonable to hope even for further economy in cost of production. The total cost of manufacturing raw sugar on the Continent averages £17 15s. per ton at the present price of roots. At Mountmellick the total cost is £17 per ton. There is no reason, therefore, why the company may not succeed. It is incorporated by Royal charter has a capital of £120,000, with the privilege of extending it to £300,000. The company purpose to erect in the present year six factories more in Ireland, which will be indebted to the company for the successful introduction of a new and important manufacture, suited to her climate and her wants.

The difficulties to be overcome were not merely mechanical: the labourers required instruction in the details of the various processes. The results now attained, after a few weeks' instruction, are full of encouragement. The sugar receives a high character in the markets, planters and brokers admitting that it cannot be distinguished from the best cane sugar—a reputation never before achieved by beet sugar. As the details of making beet sugar will doubtless be interesting, we publish sectional Views of the Factory at Mountmellick. A reference to the ground on plan and the sectional Views will enable the reader to form a pretty clear idea of the different stages of the process through which the beet passes before it becomes sugar; but, in order that the matter may be fully understood, we also give the details of the manufacture, as pursued at Mountmellick, which have been furnished us by the company.

PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE.

The roots are topped and tailed, re-weighed, and then washed in the cylindrical washing machine, from which they are thrown into the rasping machine, from which they pass at the rate of two half tons per hour, being converted into a soft pulp. This pulp is filled into woollen bags, and receives its first pressing, which is given by a machine like Nasmyth's steam hammer: from thence it is passed to one of a number of powerful hydrostatic presses, capable of exerting a pressure of many hundred tons. All the juices are received into a tank communicating with a montjuis, or juice elevator, which by steam pressure raises all the fluid to the third story of the building. Here are four successive coppers called defecators; into one of these the juice is poured, while within is a copper coil or worm heated by steam of sixty degrees to the inch pressure derived from nine different steam generators in another part of the establishment; the heat being applied, a quantity of lime mixed with water is poured in, when a filthy scum rises, while clear juice runs down through the filters, previously filled with charcoal, of which there are twelve in all. After passing through it is raised by another montjuis to a large iron tank, and drawn off as required into another range of coppers similar to those above. The juice here loses by evaporation four-fifths of its water, runs again through the filters into another montjuis, is again elevated into great iron tanks, and passes into the vacuum pan, where the remaining water is evaporated. It is then run in a soft grainy state into the heater, where it is raised to a higher temperature, and next run into the crystallisers. When sufficiently cold it is passed through a sort of mill, and finally into one of the newly improved centrifugal machines, where the separation of the molasses takes place. This centrifugal machine is self-feeding and self-discharging, and will do more work in an hour than four of the old machines in six hours. The sugar is now perfect. To make loaf or refined sugar, the raw sugar is dissolved and passed through the filters a third time, again boiled in the vacuum pan, and when nearly cold in the crystallisers it is poured into cones, which are put (fifty in number at one time) into a rotatory cage, and by the centrifugal force the molasses is thrown out of them. After the sugar is taken out of the cone, the top and base of the pyramids is finished by rotatory cutting-machines, they are then allowed to stand for a few hours, and packed in blue paper, as seen in the shops. Some operations and some machinery we are not permitted to describe, but the above will give a fair idea of the various processes necessary to convert the root into the crystallised grain or snowy lumps, of which specimens can be seen at almost any brokers in Mincing-lane.



SILVER GILT BEDSTEAD FROM BENARES, PRESENTED TO HER MAJESTY.

SILVER-GILT BEDSTEAD.

This superb silver-gilt Royal Bedstead was forwarded last year by Bâhu Deva Narain Sing Bahadur, of Benares, through Mr. Reade, the Commissioner, as a present to her most gracious Majesty the Queen. It was one of the most superb articles at the Great Exhibition, and was duly noticed in our Journal for the 14th June, under the head of "Indian Collection."

The Bedstead has a canopy consisting of several pieces, ingeniously constructed so as to be portable, and yet perfectly strong when put together. It is an elegant specimen of Oriental taste; the carved work, silver and gilt massive ornament, the curtain brocades and cloth, being all of native workmanship.

MRS. CAROLINE CHISHOLM.

Our Portrait of Mrs. Caroline Chisholm represents her in the act of reading one of the 240 letters which, on the average of the year, are daily addressed to her on the subject of emigration. The founder of the Family Colonisation Loan Society, the progress of which we have frequently reported and illustrated (28th February), is at present on a tour through the manufacturing districts for the purpose of explaining her plans and affording interviews to her numerous correspondents among the humbler classes. At Birmingham she held her first conversazione on the 8th inst., where a local committee was formed, which included amongst others, L. Chance, Esq., the manufacturer of the glass for the Crystal Palace, whose exertions to promote education among the villages of workpeople employed in his two gigantic manufactories, have been frequently noticed in the reports of the Government Inspectors. We gave Engravings of Mr Chance's glass manufactory in the Illustrated London News of December 21, 1850. But several clergymen declined to join the Birmingham committee, fearing that Mrs. Chisholm's emigration plans were connected with Romish propagandism.

In these times of Papal aggression, when the Roman Church is found linked with enemies of freedom and of free England in every state of Europe, it is not unnatural that many should, at first sight, look with suspicion on the efforts of a Roman Catholic lady of so much talent and energy; but, fortunately, Mrs. Chisholm can appeal, in proof of her tolerant, impartial, unproselytising spirit, to a long life of action. She is the wife of a Captain Archibald Chisholm, late of the Madras army, and the mother of six children, between the ages of twelve months and sixteen years.

MRS. CHISHOLM.—FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY BEARD.

In 1838, Captain Chisholm, with his family, successively visited all the Australian colonies on sick leave. On his return to India he left Mrs. Chisholm in Sydney. At that time crowds of friendless young girls were poured into the colony by the bounty emigrant ships; and those not immediately engaged had no home. "Many slept in caves and among the shrubs of the domain, rather than face the contamination of the streets." There were also a great number of unemployed mechanics and labourers supported on Government work, although 100 miles in the interior the demand for labour was at famine wages.

Mrs. Chisholm began by applications to the Governor. Energetically, perseveringly, most annoyingly, she repeated, "Give me house-room for them, and the rations you now give, and I will gratuitously give up my time to protect them and place them in situations."

At length, in the latter part of 1841, Sir George Gipps, the Governor, gave up part of the immigrant barrack, a low wooden building 14 feet square, infested with rats, for a female home. To protect and control the girls, it was necessary Mrs. Chisholm should live on the premises. In this place she lived two years, except when travelling through the bush. She established a registry-office and a system of written engagement, sent out circulars to the interior, learned where servants were wanted, and endeavoured to send them under the charge of trustworthy people: the girls, fearful, refused to go. She took them herself, and established sixteen branch committees and 66 "homes." Among thriving settlers, who had never had a servant before, she created a new demand for female emigration. The girls married these people's sons; girls she took up the country destitute came to her to engage servants for themselves, and wrote home for their friends and relations.

While dealing with the young women she came in contact with their parents and brothers. She extended her system to them. At her own risk she hired steam-boats, lent men money to travel to their situations in the bush, to be repaid by the masters; and out of £1000 so lent, only lost £16. She formed caravans, and with from three to eleven wagons, marched through the bush, trusting to the hospitality of the squatters and settlers to feed her army—often exceeding 200 souls. With a saddle-horse and a light tandem cart, she rode through districts where there were no roads, living men and women in stations and collecting provisions for the remainder. At night she taught the raw emigrants how to make a camp, and cook supper in the open air, and then retired to a covered cart, with a few of the children, to sleep. She was nobly seconded by the settlers.

Between 1841 and 1845, Mrs Chisholm provided for eleven thousand individuals, young and old, removed the distress previously crowded into Sydney, and created a new demand for labour which has never since ceased. At the same time she collected upwards of six hundred biographies, showing the progress of the labouring classes, which she named "Voluntary Information of the People of New South Wales, taken down in their dwellings, by the roadside, and in the ploughed field." Welcomed by and known to all, they invariably related the history of their rise and progress to independence with readiness and truthfulness.

Mrs. Chisholm gave important evidence on colonisation before committees of the Legislative Council of New South Wales in 1843, 1844, and 1846. Her system of depôts and loans is still in operation.

In 1846, when on the point of leaving the colony, a committee, which included eight members of the Legislative Council and the principal magistrates and landowners, without distinction of religion or politics, raised a subscription of £130 for a testimonial to Mrs Chisholm, and presented an address, in which, after thanking her for "her zealous exertions on behalf of the emigrant population," they say, "The extraordinary efforts which you have made have been dictated by a spirit of most enlightened benevolence. In the establishment of an emigrants' home, in procuring the advantageous settlement of great numbers of the emigrant population in the interior as servants and occupants of small farms, in the large collection of statistical facts and voluntary information derived from the labouring classes, your exertions have proved of singular benefit to the community." Dr. Lang subscribed to this testimonial.

Mrs. Chisholm accepted the testimonial "to expend it in further promoting emigration, by restoring wives to their husbands, and children to their parents;" and added, "It is my intention, if supported by your co-operation, to attempt more than I have hitherto performed."

At the close of 1846 she landed in England with Captain Chisholm, almost as unknown as when she landed in Sydney among the higher classes; but charged with hundreds of commissions from humble colonists, to forward to them the r parents, their wives, their children—to become, in fact, an unpaid emigration agent on the largest scale.

Between 1846 and 1850 Mrs. Chisholm quietly but energetically pursued her work, fighting bravely against both neglect and detraction: in the latter year she br ught out her well-matured Family Colonisation Loan Society, under the auspices of the Earl of Shaftesbury and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert. On this self-supporting plan one thousand souls have been enabled to emigrate. That it is a sound plan, is best proved by the fact that the City merchants engaged in the Australian trade, deeply interested in stimulating emigration to those colonies, after serious deliberation, have decided that, in a commercial point of view, their best mode of obtaining value for a large sum they are engaged in raising (upwards of £10,000) will be to expend it on the plan and under the personal direction of Mrs Chisholm. In fact, she is not merely a writer or a talker, although she talks and writes with vigour, humour, and pathos, but an actual worker, whose theories of colonisation are all founded on facts within her own experience. In the words of Mr. S. Sidney,* "The distinguishing characteristic of Mrs Chisholm is philanthropy, extending to all classes and to all sects, directed by a degree of common sense that almost amounts to genius, and united with an energy, and an untiring perseverance, that renders nothing she undertakes impossible."

* "Emigrant's Journal," vol. ii. p. 285.

NEUILLY.

As this Royal Palace, the residence of the late King Louis Philippe, will shortly be appropriated to other purposes than the abode of Royalty, the accompanying View, with a brief outline of the place, will, doubtless, prove interesting to our readers.

In accordance with the decree of January 22, confiscating the Orleans property, it appears that on Saturday last the Government agents went to Monceaux, for the purpose of taking possession of the château and park. The concierge refused to admit them, or to give up the keys; upon which the aid of a commissary of police was called in, and he ordered the doors to be broken open. The concierge was then informed that the Government did not wish to displace any of the persons employed on the property, and that he was at liberty to remain; but he replied, with more spirit than prudence, that he did not choose to remain à titre de voleurs. On Monday morning the agents proceeded to the Palace, for the purpose of taking possession of it. The particulars of the proceedings are not yet known, beyond the fact that M. Booker, as agent of the Orleans family, had preceded thither, for the purpose of closing the gates against the invaders, and with the determination of resisting to the utmost.

We do not aspire to the clearing up of the aboriginal history of Neuilly; nor can we claim further acquaintance with "Portus de Lugisco, Lulliano, Nulliy, and Neuilly," than the conjectures of the topographers enable us to enjoy. All our reminiscences date within the present century; during which period no spot in the environs of Paris has presented such miraculous changes as Neuilly.

Neuilly is, whatever may be its origin and progress, at the present time a large village in the department of the Seine, only three miles from Paris, north-west of the Arch of Triumph de l'Etoile. One of the most prominent architectural features of the town is the bridge, which was built, under the reign of Louis XV., by the celebrated architect Peyronet, and is considered hischef-d'œuvre. It consists of five horizontal arches, with splendid balustrades, the stones of which are rectangles of 35 by 10 feet. From this point the outspread scene of enchanting art and nature which Neuilly presents is one of the most striking. Our illustration shows a portion of the Royal Château and park, the summer residence of the late King Louis Philippe, with St. James's House, the celebrated villa of Pauline, sister to the Emperor Napoleon; though this does not include the elegant chateau of "Bagatelle" (the park of which extends to the Bois de Boulogne), the hamlets of Madrid and Sablonville—situated as in oasis in the centre of the sandy and barren plain of Sablons. It will be remembered that Neuilly and St. James's House were, in 1814, transformed into quarters for the Duke of Wellington.

The Park is upwards of 100 acres in extent, and the building is in the Italian style, consisting of only one story. The grounds are laid out in the English style.

WORCESTER AND HEREFORD RAILWAY.—A special meeting of the Gloucester and Berkeley Canal Company was held at Gloucester on Wednesday Mr Potter, a director of the Gr at Western Company, moved, and Mr. Baker, another director, seconded the motion, for opposing the Worcester and Hereford Narrow Gauge Bill, and for subscribing £300 for that purpose. After a long discussion, a poll took place, and resulted in the rejection of Mr. Potter's motion by a majority of 199 votes.

On Sunday last a terrible fire b oke out in the town of Listowell, in the county of Kerry, which was not arrested in its destructive progress until it had consumed no less than 28 houses. The most rapid and fearful excitement creat d by the m.ancholy occurrence are de cribed as extreme. The fire originated in a spirit-shop belonging to a man named Michael Burke. On Monday four cabins w . . . cidentally burnt in Kilkee ny.

W. Rollinson who was left for execution at Bury S. Edmund's on Thursday week . . has had an application made on his behalf at the last moment. His life will be spared in consideration of his extreme old age (83 years), and the r mainder of his wretched existence will be spent in close confinement. Sarah Francis was executed on Saturday last at Lewes, for the murder of her lin band by poison

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 18.—First Sunday after Easter. Low Sunday.
MONDAY, 19.—Alphaus. Lord Byron died, 1824.
TUESDAY, 20.—Sun rises 4h 55m, sets 7h 3m.
WEDNESDAY, 21.—Ox ord and Cambridge Terms begin.
THURSDAY, 22.—Feilding born, 1799.
FRIDAY, 23 St George. Shakspeare born, 1564; died, 1616.
SATURDAY, 24.—Oliver Cromwell born, 1599.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 24, 1852.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.	M. A. M. A.
h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m
3 45 3 59	4 15 4 30	4 45 5 3	5 15 5 30	5 47 6 0	6 15 6 31	6 43 7 2

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—GRAND EXTRA NIGHT. IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. It is respectfully announced that a GRAND EXTRA NIGHT will be given on THURSDAY, APRIL 29, when will be presented Rossini's celebrated Opera, IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. Rosina, Mdlle Rosa Csrvalli; Count Almaviva, Sig Calzolari, Figaro Sig Ronconi; Basilio, Sig Fraschini; and Don Bartolo, Sig Lablache. With various Extra Attractions in the BALLET DEPARTMENT by Mdlle Guy Stephan, Mdlle Rose, Esper, Lamoureux Allegrini, Parsons, M di Me tos, and M Mathieu. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Opera Box-office, Colonnade Haymarket.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Commencation of Talent.—On MONDAY EVENING NEXT, APRIL 19, 1852, the entertainments will commence at Seven o'clock precisely with (for the First Time in London) LE PETIT QUINZE PAVTE SOIT CUVERTE OU PERDUE. Le Comte, M Lafontaine; Le Marquis Mdlle Denain. After which, Second Time) MADEMOISELLE FE LA SEIGLIERE. Le Marquis (Marquise) de Barcouse de Vowert, Mdlle Denain. On WEDNESDAY NEXT, APRIL 21, will be given (for the Seventh Time) LA MARQUISE DE LA SEIGLIERE. Chez-Mars. At Lafont. After which, Beaumarchais's Comedy of LE BARBIERE DE SEVILLE. Au Le Fresentin Jouile Figaro M Regnier, Rosine Mdlle Lucas. Boxes £2 2s; Pit 7s; Amphitheatre, 5s. Private Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be obtained at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33 Old Bond-street, and at the Box-office of the Theatre.

ROYAL PRINCESS' THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr CHARLES KEAN.—MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1852, will be performed the CORSICAN BROTHERS and the new FAIRY EASTER PIECE. On Tuesday 20 the Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Wednesday 21st Shakspeare's Historical Play of KING JOHN, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Thursday 22d The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Friday, 23d The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Saturday 24th The Corsican Brothers, and the New Fairy Easter Piece.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE, ADELAIDE-STREET, WEST STRAND. On MONDAY, APRIL 19 and every evening during the week, a new Characteristic Addi ess to the Public by Mr Albany Brown. After which, for the 345 night, the Performance of PUNCH AND JUDY. To be followed by (for the first time in this country) A GRAND EQUESTRIAN MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT, by an entirely new Troupe of Performers from the Continent of Europe, to be called Mdlle Spezia. To conclude with the Extravaganza of ALADDIN and the WONDERFUL LAMP. Every evening at Eight o'clock. A no-stop entertainment on Wednesday, the 21st and Saturday, the 24th inst at Three o'Clock. Private Boxes and Stalls to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre daily, from 10 even and 5 ver; and of all the principal Librarians.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr W BATTY. On MOND 1, APRIL 19th, and during the Week, the Circus will re-open with a Series of Novelties, the splendour of BONAPARTE IN EGYPT; or, the Battle of Aboukir, producing in its representation almost unrivalled features of the Grand Spectacle, to be followed by [illegible] and the Ballet Divertissement of the Arabian, combining all that is gr ss and renowned in the Equestrian Art. The whole concluding with a laughable Afterpiece—Stage Manager, Mr Le Clercq.—Tickets may be had at the Boxoffice from 11 till 4 daily.

HERR STAUDIGL'S FIRST APPEARANCE this SEASON.—Mdlle SPEYER begs to announce that her SECOND and LAST MORNING CONCERT will take place on THURSDAY, APRIL 22, at the NEW BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Queen Anne-street, on which occasion she will perform a selection of Classical and Modern Pianoforte Music and be assisted by Mdlle de Lussan, Herr Staudigl, and Herr Meyerhoff (pupils of Mdlle Speyer), who will for the first time in London, be heard of Mdlle Speyer, 12 Ebury-street, Eaton-square; at Messrs Cramer and Beale's, Regent-street; Chappell and Lee der's, and Cocks', New Bond-street.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that on MONDAY, APRIL 26, a MUSICALE will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on FRIDAY, APRIL 30th, 1852, to commence at Eight o'Clock. Vocalists: Miss Dolby, Miss Lanza, Madame Bishop, Mdlle Parodi, Mdlle Nissen, Mdlle Marchesi, Signor Ferrari Instrumentalists: Herr Pauer, Mr. Kate Leder, Messrs. W. H. Holmes, J. B. Chatterton, Clementi, Aylward, and Signor Regondi. Conductors: F. Mori and F. Romer. Tickets, 7s each; to be had of Messrs CRAMER and BEALE, and at the principal Music sellers. Reserved Seats, 10s6d, to be had only at Signor and Madame FERRARI'S residence, 35, Upper Norton-street, Portland-place.

MDLLE PACHIOTTI begs to announce that he will give a GRAND MORNING CONCERT, with full Orchestra, at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on THURSDAY, APRIL 29, at which he will perform several of his recent Compositions for the Pianoforte, with Orchestra. Conductor, Mr. Lucas. Accompanists. Conductor, M Berlin. Further particulars will be duly announced

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take p ace at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS on WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 5, when he will be assisted by Mdlle Parodi, Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Aguilar, with a numerous and efficient Orchestra. Two of Mr Aguilar's latest compositions—a Grand "Allegro Maestoso" for piano, with orchestral accompaniments, entitled "Arabella," will be performed.—Conductor, Mr Benedict. Tickets, 10s 6d.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—The Directors beg to announce that the GRAND (FIRST SYMPHONY, by Beethoven, has been for some time in REHEAR-AL, and it is confidently expected that a performance worthy of this great production will be ready for the Fourth Concert.
WILTERT BEALE, Secretary

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER-HALL.—The THIRD CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, on which occasion MOZART'S and HAYDN'S Symphony in D minor, and MENDELSSOHN'S Overture to the Lustspiel "Le Vassale," by upon 1st, will be given; together with other important works. The celebrated clarinet, Madame Pleyel, will perform at this Concert.—Tickets, 8s, at CRAMER, BEALE, and Co's, 201, Regent-street.
WILLERT BEALE, Secretary.

EXETER-HALL.—DANIEL, an Oratorio (sixth chapter), by GEORGE LAKE. FRIDAY, MAY 21. Also Mendelssohn's ELIJAH. Vocalists: Miss Dolby, Miss Lanza, Mr Lockey, and Mr Weiss. Principal violoncello, Mr Lucas. Messrs Lucas, Seymour, Blagrove, Hill, Card, and H Hill, violins, with band and chorus of 800 performers. Organist, Mr Brownsmith, leader, Mr Willy. Tickets, 3s, 5s, and 10s 6d

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall.—On FRIDAY, April 23, Handel's Sacred Oratorio ELIJAH. Vocalists: Miss Dolby, Miss Lanza, Mr Lockey, Mr G Perren. Principal violoncello, Mr Lucas. Messrs Lucas, Seymour, Blagrove, Hill, Card, and H Hill, violins, with band and chorus of 800 performers. Conductor, Mr Benedict. Doors open at half-past 6; commence at half-past 7. Tickets, 3s, 5s, and 10s 6d; central area reserved seats, numbered, 10s 6d. The subscription to the Society is £1 1s per annum, or for reserved seats £2 2s. Offices, 9, Exeter Hall, every day from 10 till 4.

MUSICAL UNION.—H.R.H. Prince Albert, Patron.—THURSDAY NEXT, APRIL 22.—Doors open at Three.—WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Quintett in D, Mozart; Quartett, B flat, No 6, Beethoven, Trio, D minor, piano. &c Mendelssohn; Solo, pianoforte, Encore Quartett, A minor, Haydn; Finale—Rubini Encore. Subscribers are requested to pay their Subscriptions before the commencement of the present season, to prevent delays at the Concert Rooms. Joachim and Ernst engaged. Tickets, each 10s 6d, to be had of Messrs. Cramer and Co's, 201, Regent-street; Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; Messrs. Ebers, Andrews, and all the principal Libraries, and at the box-office of the theatre. ED. Piccadilly, opposite the Haymarket

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY.—BRIGHTON and LONDON.—Dr. DARLING will give his amazing EXPERIMENTS in the NEWBURGH ROOMS, BRIGHTON, on MONDAY and TUESDAY next, and at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, every WEDNESDAY and FRIDAY

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN to VISITORS DAILY. he Collection now contains upwards of Fifteen Hundred Specimens; a fine series of Antelopes having been added to the Hippotamus, Elephant Calf, and other rar animals during the winter 4dm as on 1s; on Mondays, 6d

PANORAMA of the ANCIENT CITY of SALZBURG, in UPPER AUSTRIA, JUST OPENED at BUNFORD'S large ROTUNDA LEICESTER-SQUARE, exhibiting a vast extent of the city and its beautiful scenery, and the magnificent mountain scenery by which it is encircled, so appropriately are the "El Dorado des Fantaisies." The Views of Somerset, ancient Nineveh, and of the Lake of Lucerne are also now open. Admission, in each circle, or 2s 6d to the three circles. Schools, half price. Open from ten till dusk.

NEW WEEKLY PERIODICAL
On Saturday, May 1, price Twopence No. I. of THE PEOPLE'S ILLUSTRATED JOURNAL of Arts, Manufactures Practical Science, Literature, and Social Economy.
Office 1, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street
Orders received by all Booksellers and Newsmen.

OPERA BOXES in the best Situations, ORCHESTRA STALLS, and PIT TICKETS on Moderate Terms, at Mr MITCHELL'S ROYAL LIBRARY, 33 Old Bond-street FRENCH PLAYS, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. PRIVATE BOXES for every Theatre in London let by the Night

HANWELL COLLEGE and PREPARATORY SCHOOL —Principal, the Rev J A EMERTON, D.D. Oxon.—The Easter Vacation due a this day Great changes are here effected to the Sons and Orphans of the Clergy and Military and Naval Officers.

NOTICE.—The Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS can have their Volumes Bound in the appropriate Covers, Gilt Edged, at 5s per Volume by sending them carriage paid, with Post-office order payable to LEIGHTON, SON, and HODGE, 13, Shoe-lane, London

BARTLETT'S GREAT DIORAMA of JERUSALEM and the HOLY LAN , painted on a scale of unequalled magnificence, the figures and objects of life A grandeur of effect and truthfulness of representation produced by the introduction of Sacred Vocal Music (never at it mixed at any oth r Diorama) sung by a full chorus accompaniment Daily, at 12, 3, and 8 o'clock.—Admission, 1s, 2s, and 3s 6d.—ST. GEORGE'S GALLERY, HYDE PARK CORNER.

HINDOSTAN.—THE GRAND MOVING DIORAMA from CALCUTTA to the HIMALAYA is now EXHIBITED DAILY, at the A-IATIC GALLERY, Baker-street Bazaar Portman Square 's 12 3 and 8 o'clock Admission, 1s, 2s, and 3s 6d. Preceded by Mr Phillips's Musical Entertainment, entitled an Evening with Mr Lewis Hughes, and the whopping by Mr Keeli, a rare and lasting treat of unique fun of talent has been bought together the productions of his unprecedented success in the Literary Gazette

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A Lecture by J. H. PEPPER, on Glyphs and Apollo Fairest Fay, for the prevention of Forgery by the Ancient Process, daily at Two o'clock; and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday Evenings at Eight o'clock, on the Ghost Illusion. The Grand Revolving Stage has been added to the Ghost every Evening except Saturday at Eight o'clock Lecture on Voltaic Electricity, by Dr H. Bachoffner And a new Series of Dissolving Views. Exhibition of the Miro cope, Diver and Diving Bell, &c.—Admission, 1s, to those and Children under ten years of age, half-price.

DIVIDEND OF PROFITS, 1852.
ALBION LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, empowered by Act of Parliament.
DIRECTORS.

John Hampden Gordon, Esq Chairman	J W Bosanquet, Esq	T W Clinton Murdoch, Esq
E q	F Barnes, Esq	David Riddell Roper Esq
Charles Mac Neil, Esq, Deputy Chairman	J Cunningham, Esq	Edward Swann, E q
	F D Dalmaine, Esq	Francis Wilson, Esq
F J Benson, Esq	J P Harrison Esq

Physician—Dr Bostock, 17, Bedford-square
Solicitor—Mr Bell, Bank of England

The next Divi lend or Profit w l be made up to the 30th in stant. Policies issued on the participating scale on or before that date will be entitled to

The Bonus can be applied either to increase the sum insured, or to reduce the future premium or may be received in cash.

Claims paid in thirty days. Claims have been paid by this Company exceeding £1 500,000, from no single instance of dispute or compromise of any kind has occurred for more than twenty-five years.

DIVISION OF PROFITS.

THE SOCIETY for IMPROVING the CONDITION of the IN ANS, held at the residence of the Treasurer, 26 Cavendish-square, London.—Instituted 1842, and rules drawn up by the late Earl of Shaftesbury, President.

Patron—The Right Hon the Earl of Ashley, M P
Vice-Presidents.
The Right Hon the Earl of Arundel and Surrey The Right Hon Lord Somerv le.
TREASURER—Sir Alexander McLeod M D HONORARY SECRETARY J C Sommers, Esq.
ORDINARY MEMBERS.

The Grace the Duke of Norfolk	C R Weld, Esq	Charles Summers, Esq
The Duchess of Norfolk	John Bush, Esq	Dr Monro
The Earl of Arundel & Surrey	R L Bryan, Esq	D Pirie
Right Hon Lord Lovaine,	Atkinson Morley, Esq	Thomas Copeland, Esq
The Hon W Scott	Rev Sir F Lee Bart	Dr A J Sutcliffe
The Hon Mr Howard	Rev C W Lake, D D	H B Lee Esq
The Hon Fitzroy Kelly, Q C	John Wm Parker, Esq	Dr J G Bansell
Jos Jeffery, Esq	Ralph Bates, E q	H W Diamond, Esq
	Rev Thomas Moore, Colonial Missionary	Alexander Frot et, Esq
		W B Wood
		J Dr Purdon
	CORRESPONDING MEMBERS
Alex C Mori on Esq, Bengal	H C Bowman, Esq, Montreal	Dr Selmer, Copenhagen
Dr Thomas Cook, New York	Rev	Dr Fredrick Stimmel, Tübingen
Dr Hirsch, Gloucester	Rev Alexander, Belfast
	Rev Thomas

N B—A Gold medal is also given to the Pupil in an ordinary number.
These members have compounded for their annual sums for life.
Subscriptions and donations are received by Messrs Twining and Co, bankers, Strand, London.

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN LIVERPOOL and NEW YORK. The GREAT BRITAIN steam ship, 2500 tons, 1 spits R R Matthews, Commander of the first Western Ocean Screw Steam ship, will be despatched on SATURDAY MORNING, the 1st May, from the Wellington Dock, Liverpool, direct to New York

RATES OF PASSAGE

After Saloon	"	"	20 guineas
Fore Saloon	"	"	15 guineas
	with a few Middle Berths at	"	12 guineas including Steward's fee, the abundance of an experienced Surgeon, bedding and all provisions, stores, wines and liquors, of which will be laid in with more than prime

Each passenger in the after saloon will be allowed half a ton, and in the fore saloon a quarter of a ton measurement for baggage, and all above that quantity will be charged accordingly. Freight will be charged on any exceeding these quantities at 60s. An passage money to be paid before luggage can go on board

FREIGHT Fine Goods, 60s per ton measurement, coarse goods, hardware, and weight articles to agreement, without primage or pilotage, and 5 per cent primage if paid here or with the owners in New York, at four dollars eighty cents per pound sterling. Goods intended for any part of America, forward d with care and economy. Cargo received at the south-west corner Wellington Dock up to six o'clock on the evening of Thursday, 29th of April. Parties to call at No 9 Cook, Liverpool, or at the office 1, North John-street, Liverpool.

App ly to Messrs Gibbs, Bright, and Co			George C Fim and Co
"	London .... G Seymour, Sun-court, Cornhill	"	Manchester .... Yates and Corbling
"	Glasgow .... Samuel Irvin and Co	"	R W Wilde d
"	Dublin .... Thomas and Sons, Eden quay	"	Leeds ..... Davy and Co
		"	Barnsley .... Marsden and Sons,
		"	Hawe ..... Theodore Barney
	H. Allen North Wall	"	New York.... Island Irvin
Or to	GIBBS BRIGHT, and CO., North John-street, Liverpool.

See "Black and White" for Maron and April.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPORATION.—Established A D 1720, by Charter of King George the First, and confirmed by special Act of Parliament.
Chief Office—ROYAL EXCHANGE, London. Branch, 29, Pall Mall.
GOVERNOR, Thomas Baker, Esq
SUB-GOVERNOR The Hon J T Leslie Melville
DEPUTY-GOVERNOR G Penrhos Barclay, Esq

	DIRECTORS.
Henry Bainbridge, Esq	Robert A Heath, Esq	Abraham G Roberts, Esq
Edmund P Bicknell, Esq	William Hodgson, Esq	Charles Thompson, Esq
John G Calley, Esq	Lancelot Holland, Esq	Thomas Smith, Esq
Alexander Cowan, Esq	Sir J W Lubbock, Bart	William Sellon Esq
Edward M Dashwood, Esq	Charles J Manning, Esq	Joseph Soames, Esq
Henry Davidson, Esq	H Berry Lewis, Esq	William Wallace, Esq
R W Grenfell, Esq	Edward A Palmer, Esq	Octavius Wigram, Esq
A Bunbury, Jun, Esq	John Henry Pelly, Esq	Charles B Young, Esq

FIRE and MARINE ASSURANCES granted on liberal terms.

LIFE ASSURANCES for any sum not exceeding £10,000 on one life, with, or at lower rates without, participation in Bonus.

The extraordinary Bonus on participating Policies (apportioned with reference to age) has ranged from 1 to 3s per Cent. per annum upon the Sum Assured, or from 23 to 60 per Cent. upon the premium paid.

The Bonus may be taken in reduction of Premium, if preferred

The peculiar and distinctive character of the Royal Exchange—more than a century and a quarter afford a guarantee that this large Bonus has been declared out of realised surplus, and is only available for meeting profits at the next and danger of future participants

Policies may be effected in a form providing at once for the Assured in old age, and for his family in case of premature death.

LOANS are granted on unencumbered Policies to the extent of their official value, without involving law charges.

Persons assured with this CHARTERED CORPORATION are exempt from the liabilities of Partnership involved in the Mutual system; and have the security of a large Capital—stock in addition to the Premium Fund. ALEX. GREEN, Secretary.

LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION, established by Royal Charter A.D 1720, for LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES.
Head Office—7 Royal Exchange, Cornhill.
Regent-street Office—1, Waterloo-place.
WILLIAM KING, Esq, Governor.
EDWARD BLUMENTER, Esq, Sub-Governor.
JOHN ALEXANDER HALDIMAND, Esq, Deputy-Governor.
DIRECTORS.

Robert Allen, Esq	William Cabell, Esq	Charles Kerr, Esq
Richard Sargent Ayrey, Esq	Benamy Dewes Jun, Esq	Charles Lyall, Esq
George Barnes, Esq	James Dunn, E q	John Orr, Esq
Henry Bonham Esq	John Fuller Esq	George Penton, Esq
Henry Barnabas, Esq	Samuel Gregson, Esq	Peter Rickman, Esq
Thomas Bell, Esq	Edward Osborne Hamlin, Esq	Alexander Prot et, Esq
J Watson Borradaile, Esq	John Alex Hankey, Esq	Thomas Wedlake, Esq
Charles Crawley, Esq	Edward Harman, Esq	Lieut.-Col F Wilson, Esq

WEST END LOCAL COMMITTEE
Two Members of the Court of Directors in Rotation, and Henry Kingsford, Esq John Todd Pratt, Esq

LIFE DEPARTMENT
Actuary—Peter Hardy, Esq, F R S.

This Corporation has granted assurances on lives for a period exceeding 120 years, having issued the first policy on 24th June, 1721.

Two-thirds or six-ninths of the entire profits are given to the assured.

Policies may be opened under any of the following plans, viz—

At a low rate of premium for the whole term of life, continuing the same after the first seven years.

At a rate of premium for the remainder of life, or after payment of the first premium, to participate on the ensuing seven years, or until 5 mi.

The high character which this ancient Corporation has maintained during nearly a century and a half secures to the public a full and valuable declaration of profits

The Corporation bears the whole expenses of management, thus giving to the assured in consequence of the profession afforded by the corporate fund, advantages equal to those of any system of mutua. assurance.

Premiums may be paid yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly.

No entrance fee or other charge beyond the policy stamp

The fees of medical referees are paid by the Corporation

A policy may be effected for as small a sum as £50, and progressively increased up to £50, without the necessity of a new p licy.

Every facility will be given for the transfer or exchange of policies, or any other satisfactory arrangement will be made for the convenience of the assured

JOHN LAURENCE, Sec.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C C C—The address is Stratton-street, Piccadilly.
A SUBSCRIBER, Winchester—Apply a Horse and Co. 13, Newgate-street.
M. J. No 8—We have no rule for the composition of Vandyke brown; and cannot recommend any correspondent to mix sulfate yellow, crimson lake, and indigo in the desired tint.
W H B, Gloucester—The Guardian Office, Lombard-street.
D P C—The 5-d may be heard of at Messrs Batt and Co, sadlemen, Strand.
H B F Mr Braham was born March 20 1777.
E H, Gracechurch-street, does not state which medal he has received.
R Q—A widower having a daughter, marries a widow who has a son. Can the son legally marry the daughter? Most certainly.
A VERY OLD SUBSCRIBER—There seems no reason why an M P should use a cockade.
AMULET—"The comb e treasure" is an arms is part of the bearings, and must be borne by all the descendants entitled to the original coat.
M S F, Gillingham—"Music hath charms," &c, is from Congreve's "Mourning Bride."

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The back Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for 1850 and 1851 are now Reprinted, and may be obtained by order of all Booksellers and News-agents at the published price. The Numbers previous to 1850 can be had only in Parts or Volumes.

ON THE FIRST OF NEXT MONTH WILL BE PUBLISHED
A MAY NUMBER
OF THE
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
THREE SHEETS,
ONE SHILLING!

 The Illustrations of the Picture Exhibitions will be resumed next week.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1852.

ONCE upon a time, in the early days of the French Revolution, the daring spirits who were associated with or preceded Robespierre in the government of France took it upon themselves to abolish religion. Louis Napoleon, having entered into an alliance with the Jesuits will not, it is presumed, go so far as the terrorists; but, although he be gracious, y pleased to exempt religion and its observances from his decrees, he has made an onset against education; and more especially against those two important branches of it, the study of moral philosophy and the study of history. By a decree in the Moniteur of Monday last, M. Bonaparte regulates, "in a definitive manner," the plan of study which is in future to be observed in all the colleges connected with the University of France, with the view, as this astounding lawgiver himself explains, "of modifying the methods of education, which have up to the present day produced so many sterile and dangerous minds." The main features of the project, into the details of which we need not enter in this place, are threefold, and may be summed up in few words. History and philosophy are no longer to be taught in the public seminaries of France, but religion, or that form of doctrine which the Jesuits and the Ultramontanes please to designate as religion, is to be compulsory upon all students. As a proof that the President is in earnest, he has removed from their professorships in the university two illustrious men, Messrs. Michelet and Quinet, whose names are known and respected all over Europe. A third gentleman, M. Mickiewicz, who enjoys a reputation only second to that of his celebrated colleagues, is included in the same interdict. Victor Cousin, more illustrious than either, had already been condemned to penury by being deprived of his professorship. And why is M. Bonaparte so angry with philosophy and history? Philosophy teaches, that, for every wrong committed by a man upon his fellows, there is an inevitable retribution. History proves the truth of philosophy by countless instances from the experience of every nation under the sun. And perhaps it is for these reasons that philosophy and history are to be interdicted in France. We thought, some weeks ago, that the President had reached the climax of his daring; but these last decrees have proved that there are still dizzier heights to which he will dare to climb, before the culmination of that "star of destiny on which he places so much reliance. The upper and middle and all the best men of the working-classes hold up their hands in amazement at these acts. The ignorant say nothing, and the monks rejoice. What the last-mentioned body of men think of their ally is known but to themselves; yet it must strike even them as being fortunate, that, like Robespierre, the President has condescended to patronise religion. Who knows what he might have done, had he taken the Jesuits against the Roman Catholic priesthood of France and their teachings as he has against philosophy and history? In the meantime, the "Prince President" will not attempt to destroy all the intellect of France; he has graciously been pleased to allow grammar, logic, and arithmetic to be taught. But, as history and philosophy are so distasteful to him, he will perhaps try to prevent their dissemination by the press as well as by the professorial chair? If he do not, his last decrees, mighty as they are, will not answer his purpose.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort have been enjoying the delightful weather of the past week at Windsor. The Queen, generally accompanied by the illustrious visitors who have been sharing the Royal hospitality, has taken daily drives in the Park and neighbourhood of the Royal demesne; and on Monday and Thursday her Majesty, with the Prince Consort and Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, took equestrian exercise.

On Monday the Duc and Duchess d'Aumale and the Princess Salerno visited the Queen and the Prince from Claremont. In the evening their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary and his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived at the Castle on a visit to her Majesty and the Prince Consort.

The Duke and Duchess de Nemours, with the Count d'Eu and the Duke d'Alençon, arrived at the Castle on Thursday, on a visit to her Majesty and the Prince Consort.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent has joined the Royal dinner party at Windsor during the week.

In addition to the State Ball and State Concert on the 5th and 10th proximo respectively, which we announced last week, her Majesty has signified her gracious intention of holding two Drawing-rooms more during the present season, and a third Levee on Wednesday next, the 21st inst. The Drawingrooms will take place respectively on the 7th of April and the 13th of May—the latter in celebration of her Majesty's birthday

It is expected, will is expected, will return to Buckingham Palace on Monday or Tuesday next.

The Earl Talbot has relieved the Earl of Verulam in the duties of Lord-in-Waiting, and Capt. the Hon J. Denman, R.N., has succeeded Col. the Hon. A. Hood in those of Groom-in-Waiting.

The Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Constance Leveson Gower have left Staffo d House for Trentham Hall, where the Marquis and Marchioness of Stafford e Marquis and Marchioness of Clidara, and a family circle, have also arrived. Their Graces return to London on Monday next. The marriage of Lady Constance Leveson Gower with the Earl Grosvenor, eldest son of the Marquis of Westminster, will take place in the Chapel Royal on the 24th inst.

The Duke of Wellington has left Apsley House for Strathfieldsaye. His Grace will co plete his 83d year on the 1st of May.

The Earl and Countess of Derby left town on Monday afternoon, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, at Goodwood

The Earl and Countess Howe and family have arrived at Curzon House from Gopsal

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston have left town for Broadlands.

We are sorry to learn that Lord Truro has been suffering from indisposition during the past few days.

Lady Macdonald gave birth to a daughter on Monday last, at the family residence in Green-street.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE EASTER BANQUET AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

The civic hospitality of London was exemplified with more than usual magnificence and sumptuousness on Monday last, when 250 of the nobility and the distinguished classes—including the Prime Minister and several of the members of her Majesty's Government, representative Ministers of foreign states, &c.—assembled to do honour to the Lord Mayor's Banquet in the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House.

The display of gold and silver plate was in the highest degree costly and brilliant; and the banquet itself, supplied by Messrs. Staples, of Fish-street-hill, comprised the richest wines and the most costly delicacies of the season.

In the absence of the Lady Mayoress, who was indisposed, Miss Hunter sat on the left of the Lord Mayor, and Lady Palmerston on the right hand of his lordship. At the head tables were also the Earl of Derby, the American Minister and lady; the Danish, Turkish, and Belgian Ministers, the Bishop of Manchester, the Solicitor-General, the Duke of Northumberland, the Earl and Countess of Chichester, Earl of Albemarle, and Marquis of Salisbury. Among the general company were the following:—Madame Musacchio, the Minister of the Netherlands, the Right Hon. the Judge-Advocate-General and Charitor Baron of the Exchequer, Lord and Lady Colchester, Mrs. Walpole, Right Hon. Cecil Forrester and Mrs. Paley, Lord George Lennox; Sir William Clay, Bart., M.P.; Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart., General Sir Archibald and Lady Maclaine, the Hon. Col. Wilbraham, and the Hon. Mr. Talbot.

M. Laurent's band was in attendance, and several vocalists, by whom the intervals between the toasts were filled up with some well-selected operatic and social music.

The time-honoured ceremonial of the loving cup was given with all due solemnity by Mr. Harker, the city cook, and was duly handed round the company, to the amusement and surprise of such of the foreign guests as were not acquainted with the national formula.

The usual royal and complementary toasts having been honoured,

The Earl of Derby, in responding to the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," observed, in reference to his late entry upon office:—"I am not insensible to the difficulties under which we have assumed the present position, at the commencement of a Parliamentary session, with so little leisure to mature measures to be submitted to that Parliament. But I believe that our friends, and even our opponents, will do us credit for having performed our duty, by not shrinking from responsibility, and thus encountering a ministerial crisis at the commencement of a session of Parliament. (Hear, hear.) I do not presume to speak here of any political courses of action, but of this I hope to see indications—and I hope I am not mistaken. In this metropolis, that we are not looked upon as a set of reckless and careless men, likely to neglect great national interests or great moral or social obligations. (Cheers.) A change of government so complete as that which has recently taken place, could have been considered in some parts of the world almost a revolution; but in this country it may take place not only without disturbance of public affairs, but without ruffling the serene aspect of society, and without disturbing for a single moment the personal friendship even of political opponents. (Loud cheers.) And to what is this to be attributed? Is it to any merit in man? No; but to the institutions of the country itself."

On Wednesday a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of six Directors in the room of Henry Alexander, Esq., Lieutenant-General James Caulfield C.B., the Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville, Major James Oliphant, Henry Thoby Prinsep, Esq., and John Shepherd, Esq., who go out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and divered to the scrutineers, who reported that the following had fallen on William Butterworth Bayley, E q., Russ l Ellice, Esq., Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., Ross Donally Mangles, Esq., M.P., John Masterman, Esq., M.P., and Major John Arthur Moor. A Court of Directors was also held at the East India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to John Shepherd, Esq., chairman, and Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., deputy chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East India Company during the past year.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—The committee recently appointed by this society, for the purpose of corresponding with and of promoting the objects of the society, in the colonies, has received the following letter from the Colonial office:—"Downing-street, April 3.—Sir,—In answer to your letter, I am directed by Secretary Sir John Pakington to suggest to you, for the information of the council of the Society of Arts, that he considers the advantages likely to result from a more general diffusion of the objects of the society throughout the British colonies to be very great. Therefore, the wishes of the council, Sir John Pakington will be happy to forward copies of your letter and the enclosure to the governors of the respective colonies, if you will be good enough to send me the printed copies of the same, which did not accompany your communication. I am, sir, your obedient servant, J. HILL.—To G. Wood, Esq."

TONBRIDGE-PLACE RAGGED AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—The annual general meeting of the friends and subscribers to this useful undertaking was held on Monday evening, in the school-room, Tonbridge-place, New-road, the Rev. J. Woodward in the chair. The report, which was highly satisfactory, stated that the present number in the boys' school was 209; girls' ditto, 343; total, 552. The number of boys in the branch school at Agar Town, at the present time is 172, and that of the girls 188, making a total of 360. The teachers, who give their time and attention gratuitously, and to which great praise is due, were stated to be 30 in number. The Sunday evening ragged school at Agar Town had been of great service in this neighbourhood, and a marked change had lately come over the conduct of the children, which at one time was very unruly. The average attendance at this school was 43 girls and 53 boys, making a total of 96

SPITAL SERMON.—On Easter Monday the boys of Christ's Hospital (the Blue Coat School), according to annual custom, proceeded to the Mansion-house, where they were regaled with a plentiful supply of cakes and ale, with 6d. each by the Lord Mayor. His Lordship, with the sheriffs and aldermen on ward, then accompanied them to Christ Church, Newgate street, where the Spital sermon was preached before the Governors of the Institution. On Tuesday, at the same place, the Lord Mayor's chaplain preached, after which an entertainment was given at the Mansion House.

ROYAL ASYLUM.—The annual festival.—On Sunday morning the Rev. J. V. Povah preached at the church of St. Agnes, St. Anne's-san, Aldersgate-street, in behalf of the funds of the Royal Society of St. Anne's. The Mayor and aldermen were present, and the earnest appeal of the rev. gentleman was responded to by a co lection of £40.

THE MILITIA BILL.—At a meeting of the inhabitants of Marylebone, held on Tuesday at the Princes' Concert-room, Castle-street, Oxford-street, resolutions against the proposed Militia Bill were unanimously agreed to. There were about 300 persons in the body of the room, and on the platform were Mr. Richard Cobden, M.P.; Mr. Jacob Bell, M.P.; the Rev. Messrs. J Neller, C. Vardy, J. C. Galloway, &c. Mr. J. A. N cholay presided on the occasion.

FISTULA INFIRMARY.—The annual meeting of the governors of this charitable institution was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday: Sir J. L. Lushington presiding. The report of the committee stated that the building fund now amounted to a sum (about £2000) which would justify the commencement of the new hospital for in-patients, to contain 50 beds; and which they recommend should be called St. Mark's Hospital, the present name of the society having proved injurious to its progress. The surgeon's report stated that, during the past year, 563 patients had been admitted to the benefits of the institution, when 322 had been discharged, and 132 materially relieved, 11 were discharged incurable, and 79 still remained on the books. The receipts for the year were £2077 13s 9d., and the expenditure £1971 12s 7d. The report was adopted; and some formal business having been transac ed, the meeting separated.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.—The anniversary festival of this society was held on Wednesday at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, the Right Hon. the Earl of Hardwicke, R.N., in the chair. The usual toasts having been drunk, the amount of subscriptions was announced to be about £940. From the report it appears that "the resources and present condition of the charity have greatly improved. This institution extends to the objects of its parental care, food, clothing, and instruction, with appointments in the merchant service, or other suitable position in life, when they leave the asylum."

FEMALE EMIGRATION FUND.—On Saturday last another party of female emigrants, fifty in number, making a total of about 850 who have been sent out by this institution, sailed from Gravesend on board the Free Trade, for Sydney. The emigrants arrived at the London station of the Blackwall Railway from the "Home" in Hatton-garden at half-past nine o'clock, where they were met by the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert and Mrs Herbert, the Rev. Thomas Jackson, late Bishop Designate of Lyttelton, Mr. H. Herbert, M.P., &c. The preparations for the emigrants were most comfortable, and comprised a number of ingenious devices for increasing their accommodation. The young women being assembled, each received their testimonials and a letter of instruction and advice from Mrs. Herbert, who requested them to write to inform her of their future welfare. Mr. Sydney Herbert addressed them in a very feeling and affectionate tone, inculcating the great importance of maintaining at all times the strictest principles of religion, morality, and industry. The emigrants departed in the highest spirits

FIRE.—On Tuesday morning, shortly before one o'clock, a fire broke out upon the extensive warehouses and stores belonging to Mr. Moggridge, corn factor and seed merchant, in Tottenham-court-road, which in a very short time destroyed the whole of the building, which consisted of 2100 feet in length. The stock consumed was valued at several thousand pounds more. The engines, however, soon arrived. The horses were all saved, but a number of goats and fowls perished in the flames.

On Wednesday evening Mr. Wakley held an inquest in the Gray's-inn lane Workhouse, on Robert Thompson, aged 72. Deceased was a native of Ayrshire, and served in the Peninsula and Waterloo fifty years. On one occasion he was a whole day engaged at a bastion, under the personal inspection of "the Duke." Although his breast was adorned by clasps and medals, he had not a farthing pension. He claimed the honour of inventing the Archimedian screw and other contrivances. Latterly his only support w s derived from the Scotch Hospital and chance charity. On Monday morning his landlord, not having seen him for several days, forced open his door, and found him lying dead and partially decomposed on a bundle of rags which formed his bed. Near him lay a phial containing some laudanum, and 2s 7d. was found upon his person. In his room were 200 pairs of old boots and heaps of bones he had collected. He had not a friend to own him. Mr. Whitfield, surgeon, opened the body, and found that he died of disease of the heart. Verdict accordingly.

THE ROYAL HOSPITALS OF THE CITY OF LONDON.

From the usual annual report of the Royal Hospitals of the City of London, made to the Lord Mayor on Monday, it appears that—

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL has put forth apprentices, and discharged, during the past year, 232, eight of whom, being instructed in mail engines and navigation, were placed forth apprentices to commanders of ships out of the Mathematical School founded by King Charles II. Children deceased during the year, 14; children now under the care and charge of the hospital in London and at Hertford, 1353; to be admitted on presentation granted to this time, 152: total, 1534. The support of this hospital materially depends upon benefactions and bequests.

IN ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL, the patients admitted, cured, and discharged during the last year were 5957 in-patients, and 79,701 medical and surgical cases, including casualties, most of whom were poor, sick, and lame persons, and many of them being destitute of aid relief have been supplied with money, clothes, and other necessaries, to enable them to return to their several places of habitation, amounting together to 53,638: died, 444; remaining under cure—in-patients, 573; out-patients, 2538. This being the most ancient hospital in the metropolis, and having escaped the great fire of 1666, the building by length of time became so ruinous that in the year 1729 great part was necessarily taken down.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL had admitted, cured and discharged, within the same period, of sick, wounded, maimed, and diseased persons, 4369 in-patients, and 48,402 medical and surgical patients, including casualties, some of whom have been relieved with money and necessaries at their departure, to accommodate and support them in their journeys to their several habitations: total, 52,864. Died after much labours in their sickness, 228; remaining under care—in-patients, 466; out-patients, 1485. So that there have been during the past year, of poor miserable objects under the care of the said hospital, and destitute of other proper care, in all, 55,043

The report of BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL stated that there were received into the hospital during the last year, under commitments by the Lord Mayor and the Aldermen of the City, as criminal or disorderly persons who have been kept to hard labour or received correction, 592; apprentices sent by the Chamberlain for confinement, 17; received into the hospital sundry poor persons who had been found wandering abroad and begging in the City, 403: total, 1012.

IN THE HOUSE OF OCCUPATIONS OF BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL there were remaining at Christmas, 1850, 219; admitted in 1851, 115; discharged in 1851, 99; remaining at Christmas, 1851, 125.

IN BETHLEM HOSPITAL there were in Jan. 1, 1851, 198 curable, 73 incurable, and 105 criminal lunatics. There were 286 curable, 6 incurable, and 103 criminal lunatics admitted during the year. 125 were discharged cured during the year, 102 uncured, and 363 remained in the institution.

ROYAL MAIL STEAM-PACKET COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders in the company was held on Thursday at the London-tavern, Bishopsgate-street; Mr. A. Colvin in the chair. The balance-sheet showed that the receipts for the first half-year had been £566,284, and the expenditure £369,298, leaving a surplus of £196,985. The chairman moved the adoption of the report, and in doing so said that, notwithstanding the unfortunate loss of the Amazon, the prospects of the company were very satisfactory. Mr T. Baring, M.P., seconded the motion, which, after considerable discussion, was carried. The chairman proposed that a dividend of £3 per share be paid on the stock of the company, which was carried, and the meeting closed.

MATRICIDE.—APPALLING AFFAIR.—On Saturday afternoon one of the most melancholy and appalling crimes we have ever had the misfortune to record was committed by a young man of the name of Thomas Wheeler, aged 28, upon his mother, Elizabeth Wheeler, widow, aged about 50 years, occupying apartments in the house No. 1, Durham place, Kennington-road, and immediately facing Bethlehem Hospital. The unfortunate man, it appears, had been an inmate of Bedlam for eleven months, and for about seven months he was confined in a lunatic asylum at Wandsworth, from each of which places he was received out of mistaken affection by the mother, although he was pronounced by the several authorities of those asylums as unsound and dangerous. Some years ago he was in Brazil, and had a sun-stroke as he was crossing the line, which proved the commencement of a deficiency manifested that he was allowed to go at large, particularly as the dangerous tendencies of his insanity were apparent to every person around him. The dreadful facts we shall now briefly relate. Shortly before one o'clock on Saturday morning, while Mrs. Wheeler was in the act of leaving her apartment with a saucepan of greens in her hand, which she was about to prepare for dinner, her son suddenly rushed forward from behind the door and had an axe held by her son. He then knelt upon her, and with the aid of an axe and a knife severed her head from the body. While perpetrating the bloody operation the murderer had placed a pillow under the knees to prevent the blood spirting over him. It is supposed that he then deliberately washed his hands, for when he was apprehended there was no stain perceptible upon his person. Mrs Dean, a lodger, and wife of the landlord of the house, having had her attention excited by the heavy fall of the body, hastened up stairs to the apartments occupied by the Wheelers, when she observed the unfortunate maniac making a hasty retreat over the adjoining building, carrying in his hand a knife and a chisel. On entering the room she ascertained the frightful tragedy that had taken place, when she instantly informed her husband, who pursued the murderer up Kennington-lane. On meeting police constable Lockyer, No 135, the latter immediately secured him. He was thereupon brought before Mr. Norton, the magistrate, at the Lambeth Police Office, when an examination was entered upon, in the course of which the prisoner fully admitted the fact of which he was accused. He occasionally looked with a round him, and appeared to be either unconscious or indifferent to the position in which he was placed. He was dressed in a black frock coat, black waistcoat, and dark woollen trousers, and was in the act of pocketing a clasp knife rather than tied round his neck. His is described as a well made man, with large black eyes, regular features, and an intelligent countenance. It is stated that he had once a salary of £300 a year, and that he can converse in four different languages. Latterly, however, his mother was obliged to support him, with the assistance which she received from her friends. She is described as having been a beautiful woman, and stood in the 5 ft 10 inches high. From the evidence before the magistrates, it appears that the prisoner was, for some days before the fatal occurrence, observed going about the house with a flat iron in his hand, muttering something to himself in a most excited and incoherent manner, and that his mother expressed fears respecting him to a Mrs. Philips (another lodger in the house) about ten o'clock the same morning, and said that she should send him to the workhouse on the following Monday. This threat appears to have aggravated the mental disease of the prisoner, as he observed to Mr. Norton, the magistrate, "The fact is that she has threatened to send me to the workhouse for a month or three of them, and she said she would have me charged with, and I suppose they cannot draw people away in the most gentle manner." He is now confined in Horsemonger-lane gaol. On Tuesday the coroner's inquest, after hearing evidence of which the above is a report, returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the unfortunate young man.

On Good Friday morning, a basket-maker of the name of Spankhurst, of Barking, in Essex, with its two sons, were found drowned in a small piece of water near the Thames, under the high bridge adjoining Barrens Rims. From the coroner's inquest it appears that the unhappy man in a fit of despair had drowned his two children, aged respectively ten and six years, and then committed suicide.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The births in the metropolis for the week ending on last Saturday were—Boys, 737; girls, 723: total, 1460 children. The deaths registered during the same period were 1051, showing an improvement when compared with the returns for the previous four weeks, in which severally the mortality rose above 1200. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1842 51, the average was 938, which, if corrected for increase of population, would be 1000. The table of fatal ni cases still shows 235 deaths caused by diseases of the organs of respiration, or nearly one fourth of the total number, and that the mortality under that head has not undergone any considerable reduction. The corrected average of this c ss is only 178. It appears, too, on a comparison with the previous week, that pneumonia continues as fatal, while bronchitis, which greatly exceeded the average, maintains about the same amount. The number of deaths ascribed to phthisis is now less; it has decreased from 141 in the previous week to 146 in the last, which is about the average. In the epidemic class of diseases there appears some tendency to increase. Small-pox was fatal to 59 children and 18 adults; scarlatina, to 39 persons; 11 children were carried off by measles; 47 by hooping cough, and 8 by croup; 4 persons died of influenza; 44 of typhus, &c.; 2 of remittent fever; 2 of rheumatic fever; and 7 of erysipelas.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on every day of the week except Monday; the mean of the week was 30 013. The mean temperature of the week was 44 deg., which is rather below the average of the same week in ten years. The mean daily temperature of Sunday was 39°5, about 5 degrees below the average; rose to 47°3 on Monday, women in 2 4° above it; fell to 42°3° on Wednesday, and rose again to 45°3° on Saturday. The wind was generally in the north-east.

On Tuesday, at a meeting of the Edinburgh Town Council, a letter was read from Professor Wilson, announcing his resignation of the office of Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University, in consequence of ill health.

Yesterday week a severe accident occurred to Captain White, the master of the Cheshire fox-hounds, at the kennels. The gallant master was in the act of mounting a spirited horse, in order to accompany the pack on an airing excursion, when the animal jumped aside, and the captain fell to the ground, the horse, afterwards, in his capering, treading on the master's leg. He was immediately conveyed home and put to bed. The injury, though serious, we are happy to say is not dangerous.

The incendiary fires in the New Forest have recommenced, notwithstanding the apprehension of two or three parties who have been concerned in setting fire to parts of the forest, and their committal to gaol, to be tried at the assizes. The principal cause of the incendiarism has been owing to the authorities "driving the forest," as it is called; that is, driving all the cattle found in the forest to a central point, and impounding them. This is the most obnoxious proceeding that can be taken against the New Foresters.

The appeal of M. Chavoix, ex representative, against the sentence pronounced against him for killing M. Paul Dupont in a duel, came on a few days back, before the Tribunal of Bordeaux. The former sentence was confirmed, with this difference, that the damages granted to the three daughters of the deceased have been reduced from 30,000 francs to 12,000 francs.

SKETCHES IN BIRMAH.

MARTABAN, ON THE SALAEEN RIVER.

WE continue our Sketches of the seat of the war in Birmah, with a view of Martabac, a town situated immediately opposite Moulmein, on the right or north bank of the Martaban or Salaeen River. It belongs to the Burmese; and, from its vicinity to our capital, it was expected to be the spot from which they would attempt an attack upon our provinces, before reinforcements arrived from Calcutta and Madras. In 1841, when a war was almost daily expected with the King of Ava, a force was collected at Rangoon of 80,000 Burmans (distant from Martaban only 70 miles), and an attack on Moulmein was in hourly expectation. At that period, however, we had a very respectable force stationed at Moulmein, consisting of 3 European regiments, 2 native corps, artillery, 2 frigates, and several steamers; and, no doubt, the Burmese considered our reception would have been rather too warm for them. Now, however, things are somewhat altered; for it is believed that at the time the late affairs at Rangoon took place there were only about 1500 men stationed at Moulmein, all of whom were native troops; and although a wing of the 18th Royal Irish, with a troop of artillery, were immediately despatched from Calcutta, yet it was doubtful whether they would arrive in time to prevent an attack upon Moulmein.

Next are two curious scenes, characteristic of the religious observances of the Burmese.

First is the interior of a large Natural Cavern, filled by the Burmese with their gods, many of which are sculptured out of the alabaster and marble. They vary in all sorts of hideous shapes and forms: some of them are of enormous magnitude, being from 30 to 40 feet in height. From the roof hang the most beautiful stalactites; and what with the dim light, the hideous and grim expression of the countenances of the deities, and the gloom of the huge cavern, the scene is one that is not easily effaced from the memory. The cavern extends completely through the rock, so that the visitor can enter at one end and pass out at the other.

NATURAL CAVERN, WITH BURMESE IDOLS.

The building in the third View is a Koun, or Burmese Monastery, in which the priests and their dependants reside. It is built of teak wood; the upper portions are carved in a very beautiful and elaborate manner. It consists chiefly of two portions; that on the left of the Engraving being appropriated for the private apartments of the priests while that on the right is used as a kind of reception-room, wherein the priests hold discourse with their flock. As usual, the building is raised about five feet from the ground, upon strong posts; and surrounding it, in this instance, are numerous trees, chiefly that of the jack-fruit, affording agreeable shade during the heat of the day. The Burmese priests resemble in a very remarkable manner in many of their religious observances and ceremonies the monks of the Roman Catholic persuasion: thus

KOUN, OR BURMESE MONASTERY.

"Assistance" (Captain Belcher, Commodore). "North Star" (Captain Pullen) Resolute" (Captain Kellett).

SIR EDWARD BELCHER'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION, SENT IN SEARCH OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

both live in communities apart from the laity, both take the vow of celibacy, shave the crowns of their heads, wear a loose flowing robe of a peculiar colour, and use beads, which they count or tell at the time of their devotions. The attendants of the Burmese priests are usually young boys; one of their most important occupations being to collect daily for their masters tribute in the shape of food, as the priests subsist solely by voluntary contributions.

SIR EDWARD BELCHER'S ARCTIC SEARCHING SQUADRON.

Assistance ..	..	..	..	..	..	2	60 Captain Sir E Belcher
Resolute ..	..	..	..	..	..	2	60 Captain Kellett, C B
North Star	..	..	..	..	..	3	46 Commander Pullen
Pioneer (screw)	..	..	..	..	..	1	30 40 h.p. Commander M'Clintock
Intrepid (screw	..	..	..	..	..	1	30 40 h.p. Lieut. Osborn

This Expedition, which has been despatched in search of Sir John Franklin, has been fitted out with all the accessories of scientific discovery and experience. Whilst the vessels lay at Woolwich, hundreds of visitors went on board. Among others were a number of ladies with presents for the gallant captain and the officers of the Resolute, consisting of silk flags, various kinds of knitted comforters, elegantly worked and embroidered caps, sofa covers, and many other articles

Mr. Hay, lecturer on chemistry at Portsmouth Dockyard, has instructed, at Woolwich, the four bombardiers of the Royal Marine Artillery attached to the Expedition, in the mode of adjusting the plates, covering and attaching the copper wires, and manipulating the sulphuric acid used in galvanic batteries; it being intended to take to the Arctic Regions a number of tubes charged with 20 lb. of gunpowder each, to be used in bursting the ice, in order to force a passage up Wellington Channel with the steamers of the Expedition. The cases will be discharged from a galvanic battery, the parties operating being at a safe distance on board the vessels, as long coils of wire will be supplied, covered with gutta percha. Mr. Hay, after instructing the Bombardiers, gave lectures on the galvanic battery, and the uses to which it may be applied, in the presence of the whole of the officers of the Expedition. The chain cable testing house was placed at Mr. Hay's disposal for the facility of carrying on his instructions, and a battery was prepared.

Mr. George Shepherd, C.E., has examined and got repaired all the gas apparatus connected with the balloons for distributing messages in the Arctic Regions, and also supplied a number of new balloons and the means of inflating them with gas, to be used by the present Expedition. The balloons are made on this occasion to float on the water, should they come down at sea. The messages are to be printed on satin of various colours, and on papers of all colours; and about 500,000 of them will be printed on both sides, leaving room to fill in in writing the latitude and longitude of the vessels at the time they are sent up. Some of these messages may be met with by the parties under Captain Collinson, engaged in the Behring Straits expedition. The following is a copy of the messages which will be despatched from the Resolute:—

Despatched by a balloon from her Majesty's ship Resolute, Captain Kellett, in lat. N., long. W

To Sir John Franklin.

On the other side—

Provisions left at Intending to winter at Steering for

In the vicinity.

A new feature is to be introduced in the vessels of Capt. Sir Edward Belcher's Expedition, Mr. Greener having been ordered to supply several of his harpoon guns, with a view to enable the officers and men to kill whales and other large fish in the Arctic Regions, for the purpose of using their oil as fuel. These means, with the addition of Minié rifles for killing birds or deer, will enable the enterprising voyagers to obtain resources hitherto unavailable by any of the previous expeditions.

On Wednesday the greatest activity was displayed at Woolwich Dockyard to complete the stores required for the vessels of the Expedition. The Monkey steam-vessel, Second Master Sallenger, was to tow the Assistance; the Zephyr steam-vessel, the Resolute; and the Adder steam-vessel, the North Star, to Greenhithe, where they will have their compasses adjusted. The Intrepid screw steam-vessel and the Pioneer screw steam-vessel were each to proceed to Greenhithe at the same time.

Rear-Admiral Sir Francis Beaufort, K.C.B., Hydrographer at the Admiralty visited Captain Belcher at an early hour, and remained a long time to witness several experiments made to show the officers the mode of inflating balloons, and the bombardiers of the Marine Artillery the application of the galvanic battery for blowing up the ice. Capt. C. B. Hamilton, Capt. Reynolds, R.N., and the officers studying steam were present in the afternoon, while Mr. Shepherd and Mr. Charles Button, operative chemist, inflated several pilot and a large-sized balloon; the latter, when it was allowed to ascend, having several thousands of printed coloured papers attached to a slow match, and a number of papers not printed attached with a quick match: many of the latter fell, as was intended, before the balloon passed over the dockyard in a south-west direction, the wind at the time being moderate from the N.E. The other printed with papers attached to the slow match are intended to fall in various parts of the country. The generation of the gas in four casks was perfect; and the balloon ascended to a great height before it was lost to the view of the spectators and numerous visitors to the yard, who had assembled on the dockyard battalion parade ground to witness the proceedings. During the time the inflation of balloons was taking place, a number of slips of satin were printed at the printing press supplied for the use of the Expedition. Rear-Admiral Sir Francis Beaufort. Captain Sir Edward Belcher, and Captain Kellett, after witnessing the ascent of the balloon, proceeded to the chain-testing room, where the galvanic batteries (six in number) were stationed; and the boundaries of the Marine Artillery having prepared, under the direction of Mr Hay, two tin cases, one charged with two pounds, and the other with two pounds and a half weight of powder, one of the cases was placed under an empty tar barrel on the parade ground, and a copper wire, covered with gutta percha, made to communicate with the powder. Sir Edward Belcher held one wire at the entrance to the testing room; while the other wire, covered in a similar manner with gutta percha, and attached to the galvanic battery, was placed in contact, and the explosion of the barrel was instantaneous, the pieces flying high into the air and spreading in all directions, without leaving a vestige of them near the spot where the barrel had been placed. Another tar barrel was subsequently exploded by a young lady firing the charge from the galvanic battery.

"Intrepid" (Commander M'Clintock), Tender to "Resolute." "Pioneer" (Lieut.-Commander Osborn), Tender to "Assistance."

SIR EDWARD BELCHER'S ARCTIC EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

The squadron (except the North Star) left Woolwich on Thursday morning for Greenhithe, where they will be joined by the North Star, and in a few days leave on the voyage. We do not here describe the several vessels, as the details of them were given in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for May 11, 1850, when the North Star was described in our Journal for May 26, 1849. The equipment is complete in every fully provisioned for three years; and, independently of the supply, the North Star carries out an additional stock of provisions, and will remain at the entrance to Wellington Channel. With this reserve and the additional quantity of provisions left by Sir James Ross at Port Leopold, the present Expedition may remain out five or six years without difficulty.

The greatest exertion will be made to get to the back of 55 deg. should it be still found to bar the entrances to Well nton Channel; and gunpowder is to be employed for blasting purposes. Sledges of the most improved construction are also provided. In short, every means has been adopted to accomplish the great object in view; and Sir Edward Belcher will not, we believe, spare any power placed at his disposal, or return home until he shall be actually compelled, by want of provisions or other unavoidable calamity, to do so.

EXTRAORDINARY STATEMENT RELATIVE TO THE FATE OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

An extensive correspondence with the various parties concerned has been published by the Admiralty, relative to a statement made by a merchant captain at Tynemouth, in conversation with an officer of one of her Majesty's ships, that two three-masted vessels had been seen on an iceberg off Newfoundland in April, 1851, by the brig Renovation, of North Shields, when on her voyage to Quebec. This statement having been accompanied with a surmise as to the possibility of the ice-bound vessels being Sir John Franklin's ships, the Lords of the Admiralty, notwithstanding the improbability of a story of such extreme import having so long unrevealed, have instituted the strictest inquiries into the matter; and the correspondence all goes to show that there were vessels seen in the situation mentioned at the time, but there is no ground shown for supposing them to be Sir J. Franklin's ships. There is one missing link, however, wanting in the chain of correspondence, viz. the testimony of the captain of the Renovation, who is now on his voyage in that vessel to Venice, on his arrival at which port he will be closely interrogated.

Letters have also been written to the collectors of Customs in all the whaling ports in England and Scotland, in order to ascertain if any whalers answering to the description here given were missing in 1850 or 1851.

Subjoined are the letters which embody the statement

Her Majesty's ship Sampson, Portsmouth, March 20, 1852

Sir,—After mature deliberation, I am of opinion that it may be desirable to acquaint their Lordships with the following particulars in reference to Sir John Franklin's ships:

About the beginning of the present month I was in company with a merchant captain of the name of Storey, who is a native of Tynemouth, and at present residing there; we were talking about ice, &c., when he made the following statement, which I give in his own words:

"In reference to icebergs, I know a captain at present in Shields harbour, who told me that when proceeding to North America in the spring of 1851, the mate, who had the morning watch reported an object in sight ahead of his ship. On a near approach to the ice under the water it could be observed sheering out to a considerable distance at the lee side, thus acting like a vane in keeping that part to leeward; on passing so close prudence would allow, the ice-bound vessels were observed close to the berg, but out of the berg; they were regularly moored, with their topsail yards and topgallantmasts down. No human beings could be seen"

I inquired why all this had not been made public long since? He gave me to understand that the captain alluded to had contented himself with speaking to his friends about it, but was now afraid of the shame which would attend its publicity after so long a time had elapsed.

I earnestly requested him to seek an interview with him, for the purpose of ascertaining if I could be allowed to take down his deposition in writing

On seeing Captain Storey next day, he informed me that the captain had sailed; but I am privately of opinion that the captain hesitated to risk the exposure which he feared might await him, although I told Captain S orey to inform him that I would take care to explain away his long silence on the subject.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most humble and obedient servant,

JAMES M. SHORE, Second Master.

The Hon. the Secretary of the Admiralty.

P S. Supposing them to be Sir J. Franklin's ships, the fact of no human beings being seen may, I think, easily be accounted for The catastrophe of an iceberg breaking away from the place where it had formed would, no doubt, be sufficient to cause the crews to rush on foot to the nearest safe point; the ships driving away with the berg in the interval would leave no means of rejoining them.

J. M. S.

P P.S. The name of the captain and other particulars, no doubt, will be supplied by Captain Storey, Tynemouth, Northumberland, should an official letter be written to him on the subject, provided he has not sailed.

Sunderland, March 28, 1852.

Sir,—In reply to your confidential letter of the 26th instant, directing me to make minute inquiries respecting two ships having been seen, in the spring of 1851, drifting with the iceberg off North America, ascertaining, as far as possible, the credibility of Mr. Storey's statement on the subject, and to report thereon, for their Lordships' information,

I beg leave to inform you that I immediately proceeded to Tynemouth, and saw Mr. Storey, who states that he left Bristol for Quebec, as master of the brig Agnes, on April 5, 1851, crossed the banks of Newfoundland about the 20th, arriving at Quebec on May 9th. Here he met Mr. Edward Coward, the master of the brig Renovation, and as both their vessels belonged to the same owners, the Youngs, of Shields, and were both ready at the same time for their voyage home, they frequently met at the Custom-house, when they entered into conversation respecting their outward bound passage, and were of opinion that they had crossed the Banks about the same time, namely, the 20th of April. Mr. Storey then proceeded to state—"I (Captain Coward) also related as follows, as near as I can recollect. "When near the edge of the bank, in lat. 45, lon. 30 W, wind N E, fresh breeze and clear weather, as much as I could carry forestmast standing-sail, felt the vessel to take the ground, which was large, and held her attached to it, in which there were two three-masted ships, having their masts struck, and yards down, and all made snug. To all appearance they had passed the winter together in the ice. At about five o'clock in the morning, when within one mile of them, the mate called me to see the berg and ships. By the time I got up, dressed, and on deck, my ship was abreast of them. Took spying-glass and carefully examined them, which were held by one on board, but could see no one. At the time I did not think of Sir John Franklin's missing ships. Anxiety to get ahead out of the danger whilst the weather was clear from fogs, and the ice far passed before I could make up my mind, caused me not to reduce sail, and examine them more accurately. I am since of opinion they might possibly be the missing ships."

The above can be depended on as a faithful report of Mr. Storey's statement to me of what (as far as his recollection serves him) Captain Coward related to him. And in answer to a query of mine, whether any one was present besides himself when this conversation took place, he replied, "Yes, a Mr. Clough, the master of a ship I do not now recollect the name of, but he is now with the same ship, either at Portland or Weymouth, having gone there with a cargo of Canada timber, on Government account, for the break water constructing at the island." and who, he thinks, might corroborate the statement, if required by their Lordships. In concluding what Mr Storey knows on this subject, I beg to remark, from what I can understand, and from my own observation respecting him, that he appears a straightforward, plain-spoken seaman, and a most unlikely sort of a person to circulate an untruth.

Having further ascertained that the wife and a brother of Captain Coward's were now residing at Shields, I then proceeded there, and saw Mrs. Coward, an intelligent young person, and on my asking her if she had ever heard her husband relate anything about meeting ships beset in the ice? she replied, "Yes; that only the last two or three months he had mentioned to me in the course of conversation with her, that he had passed two ships embedded in a very large iceberg, near each other, the one upright in the ice, the other with a slight inclination, and with their masts and yards down, and that he was then carried by the current to the leeward of them, which he could not account for." I then asked her husband relate anything about meeting ships beset in the ice? she replied, "Yes; that only the last two or three months he had mentioned to me in the course of conversation with her, that he had passed two ships embedded in a very large iceberg, near each other, the one upright in the ice, the other with a slight inclination, and with their masts and yards down, and that he was then carried by the current to the leeward of them, which he could not account for." She further informed me that her husband still commands the Renovation, and sailed from Shields last Thursday, the 18th inst., fortnight, for Venice, on that he left his address, which I forward [Captain E. Coward, brig Renovation, Marco Trevisanato, Esq., merchant, Venice.] On my asking if any of the officers and crew of the Renovation, who were with him at the time of seeing the ships in the ice, were at present in Shields, she replied, "that the same crew were with him now; but that the mate, a Mr. Robert Simpson, is now master of the British Queen, and that he sailed from Shields last Monday, the 22nd instant, for Limerick, to take emigrants to America, and where, in a few days, he will probably arrive." I beg, therefore, permission to suggest that Mr. Simpson may possibly be the mate spoken of in Captain Coward's account of the ships, and he probably may be enabled to confirm or otherwise the statement of his late captain; or, at all events, he must have heard of the circumstance, or known what was entered in the ship's log-book on the occasion His address I have also ascertained, which I transmit. [Captain R. Simpson, British Queen, Mr. Orilly, Quay, Limerick.]

The brother of Captain Coward, now residing at Shields, I did not see, as he was at Newcastle when I called. He is a surgeon in reputable practice.

I have thus endeavoured to trace out connecting links which may lead to other chains of evidence, respecting ships having been seen drifting on an iceberg off the banks of Newfoundland in April last year, which I hope may prove satisfactory.

I have the honour to remain, sir, your very obedient servant,

HENRY C. HAWKINS,
Inspecting Commander of Coast Guard.

To the Secretary of the Admiralty, Whitehall, London.

Weymouth, March 30, 1852.

Being requested by Captain Pasco to give an account of what I heard Mr. Coward state at Quebec, concerning two vessels he passed in an iceberg, to the best of my recollection it was as follows:—

While running with standing-sails set about the edge of soundings they passed a large iceberg, on which were two vessels, the one a ship, sitting upright, the other with a list, he could not say whether a ship or barque, her mizenmast being gone. He also stated to me that he mentioned it at the Custom-house upon arrival at Quebec, and expressed his regret to me at not being able to attempt to board them, being ill at the time, but there were other vessels in his track, but not in sight at the time.

I left Shields April 9, 1851, arrived at Quebec May 18, and left June 19, 1851.

GEORGE CLEGH, Master Barque Pearl

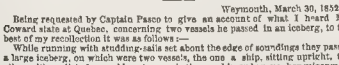
Accompanying is a copy of the Sketch received by the Admiralty from Mr. Simpson, who was the mate of the Renovation, and who saw the vessels and reported them to Captain Coward.



1 Largest ship, about 500 tons; three lower masts and bowsprit standing; fifty yards from the edge of the ice.
2 Smaller ship about 350 tons, lower and topsail yards across topmast on end: both ships close together.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Viscount Hardinge, the Master-General of the Ordnance, accompanied by Lieutenant-General Sir John Burgoyne, the Inspector-General of Fortifications, and Captain the Hon. A. Hardinge are at present engaged in visiting the Channel Islands, for the purpose of making an official inspection of their fortifications, with a view of ascertaining how far they would protect the English coast from an invading force.

Admiral Sir C. Ogle, Bart., who was formerly president of the Royal Naval School, and by whose exertions the present handsome building at New cross was materially promoted, has given £1000 (Three-and-a Quarter per Cents), the interest of which is to be applied to the board and education of a son of a post-captain, to be selected by the committee of the Society with the proviso, that the first ten years' dividends be paid to the secretary, Mr. Alfred Eames, in whose favour Sir Charles Ogle has made this exception "as a mark of his personal respect, and in testimony of that gentleman's long services, and his great utility in advancing the prosperity of the school"

Major-General James Campbell, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the 95th Regiment, has been appointed to succeed Lieut.-General Wyvyard, in command of the troops serving in the South Wales

Commodore Martin hoisted his pendant on board the Prince Regent, at Spithead, on Monday, exchanging the customary salutes with the Commander-in-Chief. The Vixen steam-sloop, Commander Barrard, flying for the Brazilian station, went out of harbour to Spithead on he same day.

It is now officially decided, that the 6th Dragoon Guards (to be equipped and armed as Light Dragoons) are to proceed this year to Bengal, there to relieve the Light Dragoons, which are to return home. The 6th Dragoon Guards will, however, remain at Dublin for several months; they will afterwards be brought over to Canterbury to prepare for embarkation.

Lieutenant-Colonel Dodgin, who is at present the commandant of the depôt at Kinsale, in Ireland, will shortly embark for the Cape, to take his late gallant and courageous brother's place, at the head of the 74th.

His Grace the Duke of Northumberland arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday evening, accompanied by his private secretary, Captain Sir Thomas Herbert, Captain Milne, and Sir Baldwin Walker, &c.

The Retribution steam-frigate arrived at Devonport on Monday, bringing Mr. Stafford, the Secretary of the Admiralty, and Mr. Grant, as an official visit. The object of this visit is understood to be to enable the new secretary to visit the dockyard and the various establishments under the direction of the Admiralty, with a view to enable him to make himself acquainted with the locality and other matters on which information is necessary to his office.

Commander Corbett, R.N., one of the heroes of Lagos, son of U. Corbett, Esq., of Aston Hall, Shropshire, having returned home on Saturday last, the inhabitants of Oswestry assembled to congratulate the gallant officer on a most enthusiastic reception. A public dinner took place in honour of the event in Sheffield, the town being gaily decorated with triumphal arches.

THE MINIE RIFLE.—On Wednesday last in practice with the new pattern rifle musket continues unabated. Lieutenant-General Sir De Lacy Evans, M.P., was amongst the officers present in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, for the purpose of witnessing the range at which the firing took place on Monday. Detachments of non-commissioned officers and two non-commissioned officers, from each of the following regiments are at present receiving instruction in the use of the new arm, under the superintendence of Major Brownrigg, of the Grenadier Guards, in addition to the detachments from the regiments previously named:—Grenadier Guards, 1st, 2d, and 3d battalions; Coldstream Guards, 1st battalion; Scots Fusilier Guards, 2d battalion; and two sergeants from the East India Company's Warley Barracks. On one of the days of last week, Mr Lancaster, junior, had some private practice with his elliptical-barrelled gun; and Colonel Dundas, C.B., fired twenty rounds from it at 800 yards range, and out of that number hit the target eighteen times. Colonel Wylde, C.B., Royal Artillery, was present to witness the firing.

STEAM COLLIERS.—Several influential men interested in the coal trade have formed a large company in London to build iron screw colliers, to enable them to compete with the railways. These vessels are to run between Newcastle and London, and it is expected will supersede the present sailing colliers. Messrs. Grantham and Bury are appointed engineers to the company, and have already designed two similar vessels, now building at Messrs. Vernon's, of Liverpool, for a private party at Hartlepool.

CAUTIOUS ADMINISTRATION OF CHLOROFORM.—The Lancet notices two modes of administering chloroform—the dangerous and the safe. One consists in giving a small quantity of it to the patient in a very short time with hardly any admixture of atmospheric air. Patients are in this manner quickly rendered insensible. This method is dangerous; and though but comparatively few accidents have occurred, they have struck such terror into practitioners and members of the community, that this mode should never be followed. Chloroform should first be inhaled with a large quantity of atmospheric air; respiration is allowed to go on for some time before the chloroform is then gradually inhaled in a more concentrated form, and left off as soon as any unpleasant symptoms occur. Eight or ten minutes, and from three to five drachms of chloroform, is the most that should be used in ordinary cases; but this loss of time and chloroform is made up by the absence of danger. Operations of the most delicate kind can thus be carried on for a whole hour, as much as three ounces or more of chloroform are consumed, and no accident occurs.

SUTTEE REVIVED.—The night of the 1st of this year (says the Calcutta Englishman) witnessed one of those fearful tragedies to the suppression of which the philanthropists both in England and India proudly point as one of Lord William Bentinck's crowning acts in the cause of humanity. The following is pretty near the truth:—The Rajah died at Pachete, on the 1st of January, at about four P.M.; a wild cry was raised by the women of the zenana that the Rajah was dead; this was soon silenced, and a guard placed at more distance round the rajbarry. On the death of the Rajah being made known to the heir, he proceeded to the apartments of his mother, received the news, and was told to enjoy his dignity, for that her mind was made up. The present Rajah left his mother and saw her no more. A pile was hurried y made within the precincts of the rajbarry. At about ten o'clock a procession of smoke told that the horrid custom of that house was being carried out. The rance walked seven times round the pyre, and then threw herself from some blocks of wood into the flames, which had been placed for that purpose. After a few convulsive struggles to escape, her ashes mingled with those of her idiotic husband, who detested her in life. The faces of sensing a long procession to Gotee, said to contain the body of the Rajah and his wife, was then carried out. The sick ranee was to have proceeded to Juggernauth, and there die; but the suttee having got wind, the latter part could not be carried out, and it became necessary to persuade the widow to burn herself. She was done in the person of Nutrat Kebes, to the no small profit of the subordinate official.

A French paper states that the mackerel fishery has never been so productive as it has been this year. During the last ten days the value of that fish brought into the port of Ecamp alone was 200,000 francs.

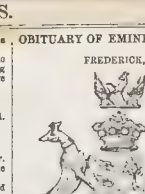
A letter from Christiania states that an engineer in that place has just invented a mach ne for cutting through the ice It is worked by steam, and is in the form of a locomotive engine, with six cogged wheels. It runs a million four saws which make deep incisions in the ice; and as the cuts are made the men follow and break up the ice with heavy hatchets. It is by means of this invention that the ice in that port has been broken, and a free passage opened for several vessels to proceed to sea

On Sunday last was presented to William Kaye, Esq., of Broughton, Manchester, by his lady, the extraordinary number of three daughters, who, with Mrs. Kaye, are doing well

His Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein is at present staying at Exmouth, where he has taken a house for a short time.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

FREDERICK, FOURTH LORD RENDLESHAM.



FREDERICK LORD RENDLESHAM, who succeeded to the title at the decease of his twin-brother, 13th September, 1839, was born the 6th January, 1798, and had consequently completed his 54th year. His father, Peter Isaac, the first Peer, was eldest son of Peter Thellusson the rich merchant of London, the singular devise of whose vast property led to so much litigation and learned discussion, and gave rise to a special act of Parliament to interdict, in future, similar testamentary bequests. By the death of Lord Rendlesham, one life, we believe, only remains, that of Mr. Charles Thellusson intervening, before the vast accumulated fund will become divisable.

Lord Rendlesham was an Irish Peer, and sat in the House of Commons as member for East Suffolk. He married, 5th June, 1838, Eliza Charlotte, eldest daughter of Sir George B Prescott, Bart., and relict of James Duff, Esq., by whom, who died 31st December, 1840, he leaves one son, Frederick William Brook, present Peer, born at Florence, 9th February, 1840, and one daughter, Anne Blanche.

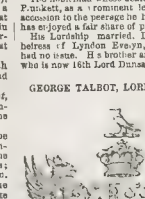
RANDAL EDWARD, 15TH LORD DUNSANY.

INTELLIGENCE reached town last week of the death of this nobleman, at Dunsany Castle, county of Meath, on the 7th instant His Lordship was born September 4th, 1834, the eldest son of Edward, 14th Baron, by Charlotte Louisa, his wife, third daughter of Nicholas, 1st Lord Cloncurry. His grandfather, Randal Plunkett, claimed in 1791, and was allowed, his seat in Parliament, which had not been taken by his immediate predecessors, in consequence of the outlawry of the 11th Lord, who had adhered to the cause of King James II The Plunketts of Dunsany and the Plunkets Earls of Fingall de cend from a common ancestor. Sir Christopher Plunkett, Deputy-Governor of Ireland under Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York.

The nobleman whose death we record was formerly known, when Mr Randal Plunkett, as a prominent leader of the Protestant party in Ireland. Since his accession to the peerage he has been a constant resident on his Irish estate, and has enjoyed a fair share of popularity. He was one of the representative Peers.

His Lordship married, December 29, 1838, Elizabeth, only daughter and heiress of Lyndon Evelyn, Esq., of Kenchams Court, county Hereford, but had no issue. His brother and heir is the Hon. Edward Plunkett, Captain R N., who is now 16th Lord Dunsany.

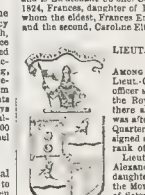
GEORGE TALBOT, LORD DYNEVOR, LORD-LIEUTENANT OF CARMARTHENSHIRE.



His Lordship, who died at his seat, Barrington Park Oxfordshire, on the 8th inst., aged eighty-six was elder son of George Rice, Esq., of Newton, M.P. for Carmarthenshire, a descendant of the famed Sir Eidur Ddu, Knight of the Sepulchre, temp Edward Cœur de Lion, and thus, paternally, representend one of the most eminent of the Welsh families. The Pe rage he inherited from his mother Cecil Baroness Dynevor in her own right. The title was originally conferred on her Ladyship's father, William first Earl Talbot, who, having no surviving male issue, obtained a Peerage, with limitation to his daughter and her male descendants

Lord Dynevor was born 13th October, 1765, and married, 26th October, 1791, Frances, daughter of Thomas Viscount Bulkeley, by whom he leaves six daughters, all unmarried, and one surviving son, the Hon. George Rice Rice Trevor (now fourth Lord Dynevor), who has long represented Carmarthenshire, in Parliament, and is Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant of the County Militia. He married in 1824, Frances, daughter of Lord Charles Fitzroy, and has four daughters, of whom the eldest, Frances Emily, is married to Edward Fitzhoot Wingfield, Esq., and the second, Caroline Elizabeth Anne, to Thomas Bateson, Esq.

LIEUT. COLONEL ALEXANDER SETON, OF MOUNIE, CO. ABERDEEN



AMONG the ill-fated passengers lost in the Birkenhead was Lieut.-Colonel Seton, of the 74th Highlanders This gallant officer studied his profession at the Senior Department of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, and received there a certificate of qualification of the highest class. He was afterwards employed on the staff as Assistant Deputy Quarter-master-General at Dublin, an appointment he resigned as a necessary consequence of his promotion to the rank of Major, by purchase, in May, 1850.

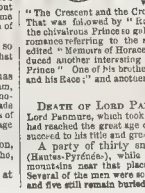
Lieutenant Colonel Seton was son and heir of the late Alexander Seton, Esq., of Mounie, by Janet Skene his wife, daughter of the Rev. Skene Ogilvy, D.D., and represented the Mounie branch of the old and eminent Scottish House of Seton of Pitmedden.

HENRY JOHN HENLEY, ESQ., OF LEIGH HOUSE, CO. SOMERSET.

THE decease of Captain Henley, late of the 14th Regiment of Foot, took place on the 2d inst., at his marine residence, at Brighton. He was Lord of the Manor of Colway, in Dorsetshire, and possessed the old family seat of Leigh House, co. Somerset, where his ancestors had been seated for nearly three centuries. His father, the late Henry Hoste Henley, Esq., of Leigh, served the office of High Sheriff of Somersetshire; and his great-grandfather, Henry Holt Henley, Esq., Chief Clerk of the Pipe, was Recorder and M.P. for Lyme Regis

Captain Henley was born 29th May, 1789, and had, consequently, nearly completed his 63d year. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of the late John Crosier, Esq., of Grove House, Camberwell, and has left by her one son, Henry Jacob Henley.

ELIOT B. G. WARBURTON, ESQ.



THE gifted author of "The Crescent and the Cross," whose melancholy death on board the ill-fated Amazon has caused much deep regret, was eldest son of the late Major George Warburton, of Aughrim, county Galway, formerly Inspector-General of Constabulary in Ireland, by Anna Maria wife, sister of Colonel Acton, of Wes.aston, M.P. for the county of Wicklow His family was a branch of that of Warburton of Garryhinch, in the Queen's County, itself a scion of the old Cheshire House of Warburton of Warburton and Arley. Mr. Eliot Warburton married, a few years since, Anne Georgina, daughter of the late Edward Grove, Esq., of Shenstone Park, county Stafford, niece of Sir Edmund Cradock Hartopp, Bart., and cousin germain of Adelaide Lady E Bulwer, first wife of the present Sir John Russell. By this lady he leaves issue. Mr. Warburton's first known literary effort was his popular and captivating work on the Eastern Archipelago, which ran already through eight editions. That was followed by "Rupert and the Cavaliers," a brilliant history of the chivalrous Prince so gallantly distinguished in our great civil war; and by a romance referring to the same stirring period. Shortly after Mr. Warburton edited "Memoirs of Horace Walpole and his Contemporaries," and finally produced another interesting novel under the title of "Darien; or, the Merchant Prince" One of his brothers, Mr. Acton Warburton, is the author of "Hochelaga and his Race;" and another, of the well-known work on Canada, "Hochelaga."

DEATH OF LORD PANMURE.—We regret to announce the death of Lord Panmure, which took place at Brechin Castle, on Tuesday. His Lordship had reached the great age of 82. By his death, Mr. Fox Maule, will succeed to his title and great estates.

A party of thirty smugglers, belonging to the village of Gavernie (Hautes-Pyrénées), while passing, a few days since, through a defile in the mountains near that place, were suddenly overwhelmed by an avalanche Several of the men were soon dug out, seriously injured. Two were found dead, and five still remain buried under the snow.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

At the parish church of Rochdale, a few days ago, the somewhat unusual circumstance occurred of baptism being performed by immersion. The rite was administered by the Rev. Dr. Burnet, the recipient being a young lady about sixteen years of age. A large stone font, weighing several tons, and which is usually kept beneath the tower, was made avail able on the occasion.

Two of the valuable species of shark, called Sun Fish, were captured during the preceding week in the neighbourhood of the Isles of Arran, by a Clachdash fisherman. The fish is rarely found on the coast of Ireland before the month of May.

There are now three projects in the field for the purpose of establishing a submarine telegraph between England and Ireland, two of them being in connexion with the Electric Telegraph Company, who have a choice of routes, the one about 84 miles between Holyhead and Kingstown, and another of 21 miles between Portpatrick on the coast of Scotland and Donaghadee. The latter will require 44 miles less of wire than any other route, and will consequently be carried out at half the time and cost, and be completed, it is expected, before June.

The directors of the Paris and Lyons Railway Company are negotiating a loan of eighty millions francs. A call of £10 10s. is required to pay off the liabilities of the Universal Gas Light Company.

A recumbent statue and tomb of the late Earl of Powis, intended to be placed in St. Mary's Church, at Welchpool, has just been completed by Mr. Richardson, the sculptor, after a very elegant design by Mr. G G. Scot , the eminent architect. It is sculptured in alabaster, of which material it contains about three tons.

The Perthshire Advertiser states that they have good authority for saying that the Duke of Atholl expressly intimated to Lord Derby, that the acceptance of the office of Minister of the Robes by her Grace the Duchess must not be understood as binding him to the Protectionist policy of the Government. His Grace, in short, will vote against the Ministry on this point, if ever they bring it to a vote.

The Rev. Dr. Warneford has presented the princely donation of £10,000 to Queen's College, Birmingham (in addition to his former be efaction), to establish a theological department. A special meeting of the council was held on Thursday week, to receive the communication.

It appears from the evidence before the committee of the House of Commons now sitting on the water supply of the metropolis, that the immense volume of fresh water derived from the area of the drainage of the Thames which comes over Teddington lock, and mixes with the water below, is calculated at 800,000,000 gallons a day, or about 16 square miles of water 90 feet deep.

The gardeners of Dresden, at a ball recently given by them, presented the ladies assembled with fans made of natural flowers, which, by a very simple species of mechanism, opened and closed like ordinary fans.

A recent decree of the prefect of police in Paris regulates the size of the bills of each theatre in a character of the type, and the colour of the paper, and fixes the order in which the bills of the different theatres shall be stuck up on the wall s

On Easter Monday, Messrs. Hughes and Stack, churchwardens of the parish of St Mary-le-Strand, distributed the annual Easter gifts or 8s 4d. each to twenty poor widows of the parish as left by will in the year 1686 by a lady named Elizabeth Jennings. A second distribution of small sums of money from the churchwardens' fund took place to poor parishioners. Most of the recipients were far advanced in years, and some poor old men liberally assisted in contributing towards that fund which they this day received a portion of.

A numerous body of Christian Ministers have signed an address, which has been extensively circulated in favour of an extensive system of Parliamentary reform and in support of the National Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association under the presidency of Sir Joshua Walmsley.

By order of the House of Lords, a paper has just been printed, containing a report, by Sir Chas. Trevelyan, to the Treasury, on the Commissariat Armnities Act; under which it appears that, from 1846 to 1849, £4 845 062 was advanced to Ireland. The free gifts, for the relief of distress, amounted to £1,466,876, while the sums to be repaid were £3 712 388 ; in addit n to which there was £1,122,707 for building workhouses. The document has reference to the repayment of a nuities extending over a period of forty years.

The library of the late eminent Dr. Augustus Neander, celebrated throughout Germany for its completeness in theological works, has just been published on behalf of the senate of the University of Rochester, in the state of New York

The Earl and Countess of Derby have subscribed £30 in aid of the Leicester square Soup Kitchen and Hospice.

It is stated that Lieut.-Gen. Lord Frederick Fitzclarence will be appointed to succeed Lieut.-Gen Sir John Grey, K.C.B , as Commander-in-Chief of the troops serving in the Presidency of Bombay.

On the evening of Easter Monday, the Rev. Albert Alston, curate of St George's, Hanover-square, under the Rev. Dr Howarth, entertained a large party of the parents and friends of the district with his superintendents, at the School-room No 1, South-street. After a most bountiful supply of tea and cake, a grand selection of sacred music was played by Miss Cragg, upon an organ erected for the purpose ; and several anthems, glees, and madrigals were sung by ladies and gentlemen, under the conductorship of Mr. Sykes, the singing-master of St James's.

The Electric Telegraph Company have just completed their through range of wire 148 miles from London to Bristol. Several hundred men are now employed upon the line remaining to be completed between Bristol and Exeter, of about seventy three miles, and which it is expected will be finished by June, and so complete, with the exception of minor communications, the telegraphic network of the country.

An electric telegraph communication now exists between Havre and Liverpool. The first despatch was received on Thursday week. It came by way of Calais, and occupied ten minutes in being transmitted from that port to Havre.

On Easter Monday and Tuesday the usual annual meetings were held in the different parishes of the metropolis, for the election of church-wardens and other parochial officers, and for the transaction of the other ordinary vestry business.

At a meeting of the council of the Medical Benevolent College, held at the Hanover square Rooms, on the 6th inst. Dr. Watson was unanimously elected vice-president of the college; the Rev. Henry Mackenzie, vicar of St Martin's-in-the-Fields, and the Rev. H. Glossop, vicar of Isleworth, were also elected life governors of the institution, both these gentlemen having in their respective districts kindly preached in aid of the funds of the college.

The execution of John Keene, a labourer, aged twenty, for the murder of an illegitimate child of his wife's, by throwing it down a well upwards of one hundred feet in depth, took place on Tuesday morning, on the top of Horsemonger lane Gaol.

By a convention just entered into for a period of seven years, between this country and Belgium, it is guaranteed that British subjects shall enjoy, in regard to fishery along the coast of the kingdom of Belgium, the treatment of the most favoured foreign nation, and that Belgian subjects shall enjoy the same reciprocal rights in regard to fishery along the coasts of the United Kingdom.

On Sunday afternoon, two privates of the 4th Light Dragoons, stationed in the neighbourhood, were drowned in the river Thames, off Isleworth Church. Five of the men in the same regiment hired a boat, for the purpose of rowing up and down the river. After some time, one of them, in order to rock the boat, the effect of which was that it capsized, and they were all precipitated into the water. It further appears that Mary Lowe, the daughter of the summoning officer, to whom Irving, one of the deceased, was betrothed, was so affected by the news of his death, that she sank under it, and died on Monday.

Sir Fitzroy Kelly, her Majesty's Solicitor-General, M.P., has given £50, in addition to his munificent donation of £500, in aid of the funds of the City Branch Soup Kitchen, near Smithfield.

On or about the 20th ult., about 200 of monetal relics were found at Weston, near Norwich. They are in silver, and have on one side the rude figure of a cross, in other side some characters resembling the above and below the horse, and some letters are also visible at the bottom. The weight of each averages 17 grains. These coins are certainly of a very rare type. Neither Hawkins nor Ruding notice any such.

The estate of Richael and Glaschorrie, in the parish of Blair Athol, which was sold the other day for £8000 to Richard Heaming, Esq., Worcestershire, was bought by Captain Beaumont, after upwards of twenty years of litigation, for £50.0. The tide in vance since that time is so g rowing to the ground shooting, which is now one of the best in Athol.

The first portion of the model dwellings for the people of the middle classes in the city, recently erected at the top of new Victoria-street, Westminster, have been completed and are partially tenanted. So far has the experiment answered, that several houses more in Ashley-street are to be built for the same purpose, as well as the upper portions of those begun at the Vauxhall-road end of the street.

On the 2d of March Calcutta was visited by the first nor'wester of the season—a furious storm of wind, thunder, hail, and rain. The electric fluid passed in large quantities along the wires of the telegraph, detonating in loud explosions at the stations; but, beyond for a short time interrupting the communication and endangering the attendants, it did no harm.

The Austrian Lloyd's states that the Earl of Westmoreland, the British Ambassador at Vienna, was about to proceed to Prague, to be present at the execution, in the cathedral of that city, of a grand musical mass which he had composed.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas are still in Paris, where they are to remain guests of the Prince at the Elysée.

On Good Friday morning, shortly before one o'clock, there was observable a sublime atmospheric phenomenon. The sun presented to the south-eastern quarter an appearance of sheets of flame of various hues; first a light lemon tint, then changing to deep orange, after which they changed to a deep vermilion.

Ensign Metford, 6th Regiment, who was unfortunately lost in the Birkenhead, was married last Christmas, a few days only before embarking at Cork for the Cape, to Maria, daug ter of Dr. Faulkner, Esq., Newark, and niece of the late Dr. Sadleir, Provost of Trinity College. The lady, fortunately, did not accompany her husband.

The Treasury have agreed to ask Parliament for a grant of £26,000, for the erection of a new Custom-house in Belfast.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J M, of Venice—Your games at Venice have duly reached us. Accept our best thanks for them, and the accom. of One s polite on the Continent which accompanies them

F F Winchester Mechanics' Institution ! For every Pawn a player advances to the eighth square he can demand a Queen, whether he has lost his first Queen or not. 2. A Piece can give check, although being "pinned," as it is technically termed, it may be unable to capture

C H S B S—Your route looks decidedly shorter than Salvo's. Such positions, however, but it repay the time and trouble their solution demands

C M S, of Dundee—The first is impracticable; the second too easy

R K, of Ashford—No 2 has two solutions

COLOMBA—The last is correct, but too obvious. Try again

J C W—It shall have an early place

R K, of Ashford—Problem No 428 cannot be solved as you suggest, as a moment's considera- tion would prove to you. What is to prevent Black, at his 4th move, p aying K to Q 8 5th? R D K—Enigma 728 is perfectly correct. Try it once more.

W L A The game with M de Rivas is very smart and lively. Have you any other games with the same pressing antagonist?

J B K In such a case Black must Castle, as it is quite evident he did not move his King merely to subjugate

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 428 by Colonna, Sigma, Beh. Omicron

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No 429, by R K, of Ash ord; R D M, St Edmund, Dodo, Johannes et Heroicus, Dorvon

SOLUTIONS OF ENIGMAS by Judy, Colonna, St Edmund, R R, of Ashford; R D M, are correct

* * We have to thank Mr. Löwenthal for a collection of highly interesting games, played during his recent tour with the best players of Oxford, Cambridge, Reading, Liverpool, Manchester, Preston, Halifax, Sheffield, Cargrave, Edinburgh, &c.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 428.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to Q B 6th	P to Q R 4th (best)	4. B to K 7th (ch)	K moves.
2. K to Q 5th	P to K B 4th	5. P mates
3. P to Q B 4th	K moves

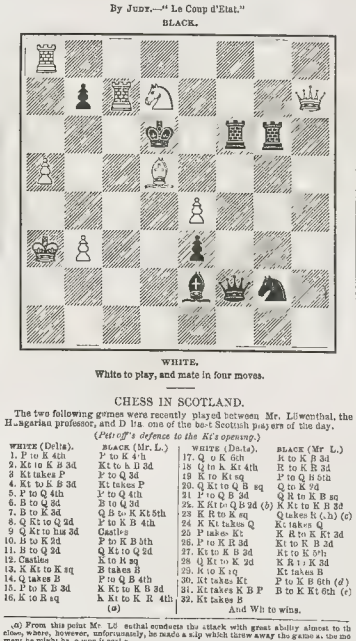
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 429.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R takes P (dis ch)	K to K B 4th	4. P to B 5 4th (ch)	K to K B 3 (best)
2. P to K Kt 4th (ch)	K to B 5th (best)	5. R to Q 6 h (dis ch)	K to K Kt 3d
3. R to Q 4th (ch)	K to K 4th (best)	6. P to K B 5th	Mate

PROBLEM No. 430.

By Judy.—"Le Coup d'Etat."

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

CHESS IN SCOTLAND.

The two following games were recently played between Mr. Löwenthal, the Hungarian professor, and D ns one of the best Scottish players of the day.

(Petroff's defence to the K's opening.)

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. L.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	17. Q to K 6th	R to K B 3d
2. Kt to K B 3d	Kt to h 3 3d	18. Q to K 4th	R to K R 3d
3. Kt takes P	P to Q 3d	19. K to Kt sq	P to Q B 5th
4. Kt to K B 3d	Kt takes P	20. Q Kt to Q B sq	Q to K 2d
5. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	21. P to Q B 3d	Q R to K B sq
6. B to Q 3d	B to Q 3d	22. K Kt to Q B 2d (b)	K Kt to K B 3d
7. B to B 3d	Q B 5 c. K Kt 5th	23. K R to K sq	Q takes K (ch) (c)
8. Q Kt to Q 2d	P to K B 4th	24. K takes Q	P takes K
9. Q Kt to h 3d	Castles	25. P takes Kt	K R to K Kt 3d
10. K to Kt 2d	P to K B 5th	26. P to K B 3d	Kt to K B 3d
11. B to Q 3d	Q Kt to Q 2d	27. Kt to K 5th	R to K R 5th
12. Castles	Kt to K sq	28. Q Kt to K 2d	K R to K 3d
13. K Kt to K sq	B takes B	29. K to K sq	Kt takes B
14. Q takes B	P to Q B 4th	30. Kt takes Kt	P to K B 6th (d)
15. P to K B 3d	K Kt to K 5 3d	31. Kt takes K B P	B to K Kt 6th (e)
16. K to R sq	K Kt to K R 4th (a)	32. Kt takes B

And Wh to wins.

(a) From this point Mr. Löwenthal conducts the attack with great ability almost to th closo, where, however, unfortunately, he made a slip which threw away the game, the mo ment he might ha e won it easily

(b) White's forces are under such constraint that he can move none of them to advan age.

(c) He might also have played Kt or B to K 6th.

(d) An evident oversight. By first playing R takes Kt, the game was his own, for suppose.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
31.	R takes K Kt	33. K w B sq	P takes K
32. P takes R	B to K Kt 6th	34. K takes B	P to K 8th, &c

(e) This error cost White a Pawn, and the advantage thus obtained enabled his opponent in the end to win the game

(f) Threatening mate

(g) We should have preferred playing Q to K 5th because we do not see how, without some ruinous sacrifice, White could in that case have avoided the immediate loss of the game

(h) He might apparently have played with advantage Kt to Kt 3d (eh) before taking the Bishop.

(i) Advancing this Pawn was not at all a judicious step

INSTRUCTIVE GAME BETWEEN THE SAME OPPONENTS.

(Evans Puma.)

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. L.)	WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (Mr. L.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	25. K R to K Kt 3d	K to R 2d
2. Kt to K B 3d	Kt to Q B 3d	26. K to K 2d	P to K B 3d
3. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	27. K R to K B 3d	P to K R 4th
4. P to Q B 3d	Q to K 2d	28. Kt to K B 3d	P to K R 5 h (e)
5. Castles	P to Q 3d	29. Kt takes K R P	Kt takes K R P
6. P to K R 3d	P to K R 3d	30. P takes Kt	P takes Kt
7. P to Q 4 h	K B to Q Kt 3d	31. Q R to K B 4th	K to Kt 2d
8. P to Q B 4th	P to Q K 3d	32. Q R to K 4th	R to K R sq
9. Kt to K Kt 2d (a)	P takes P	33. Q R to K 4 4th	R to K R 3d
10. P takes P	B takes Q P	34. Kt to Q 6th	Q R to K R sq
11. B to Q 5th	B to Q R 3d	35. Q R to K B 3d	B takes Kt
12. P to R sq	B to K B 3d	36. P takes B	Q R to K B sq
13. Kt to Q B 3d	Castles	37. K R to K 6th	R to K R 4th
14. P to K R 4th	K R to Q Kt 5th	38. Q R to Q B 3d	R to K B 3d
15. Kt to K B 3d	Kt to K R 4th (d)	39. Q R to Q 3d	R to K 4th
16. R to K B 2d	Q Kt takes B	40. Q R to K R 3d (ch)	K to R 3d
17. Q takes Kt	Q to K R 5th	4 . Q R to Q 3d	R takes K R
18. Kt to K B sq	P to K B 3d	42. P takes R	R to K 2d
19. K R to Q 3d	Q to K B 7th (e)	43. R to Q Kt 3d	P to Q Kt 3d
20. R to K 3d	B takes B (d)	44. R to Q B 3d	R to K 4th
21. Kt takes B	Kt takes K P	45. R to K 3d	K to B 4th
22. Q to Q 2d	Q takes Q	46. R to K B 3d (ch)	K takes P
23. Kt takes Q	B to K 3d	47. P to K R 4th	R to K Kt 2d (ch)
24. Q R to K B sq	Q R to K 2d	48. K to Q 4th	P to K B 4th

And after a gallant struggle for some time longer, Delta surrendered.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 730.—By C. M. J., of Birmingham.

White: K at Q Kt sq, B at Q R 5th, Kt at K R 3d; P s at Q 2d, Q B 2d, Q Kt 3d, and Q R 4th

Black: K at Q R 6th; P s at K 7th, Q 3d and 4th, and Q R 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No 731.—By the same Author.

White. K at Q R 8th, B at K B 5th, Kts at Q 6th and Q R 3d; P s at K Kt 8th, K B 2d, and Q h 4th.

Black: K at Q 5th, P s at K Kt 2d and K 5th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 732.—By Mr. Bigland.

White: K at Q 2d, B at K Kt 8th, Kt at Q 6th; P s at K 4th, Q 5th, and Q R 4th.

Black: K at Q 5th, P s at Q 3d and 6th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

COLONIAL CHURCH SOCIETY.—On Tuesday a meeting of the members and friends of this society was held at the Literary and Scientific Institution, Edward-street, Portman-square; Mr George Finch in the chair. The Rev. M. Thomas, the secretary, detailed the operations of the society in Newfoundland, New Brunswick, and other colonies and dependencies of the British Crown. The meeting was addressed by the Right Rev Bishop Carr, who bore testimony to the successful exertions of the society in the diocese of Bombay, over which, until recently, he presided; and also by the Rev. Robert Bickersteth, M.A., rector of St Giles's-in-the-Fields; the Rev. G Sisk, LL B., archdeacon of Lichfield, and minister of Christ Chapel, Maida-hill; the Rev. J. W. Reeve, M.A , minister of Portman Chapel; the Rev. J. E. White, M.A , minister of Pitzroy Chapel; Rear-Admiral Harcourt; and other clergymen and gentlemen. Several resolutions were agreed to, affirming the great usefulness of the society, and pledging the meeting to a renewal of the support hitherto afforded to it.

OXFORD.—Intelligence has reached the University that the Visitor of Lincoln College, the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, has pronounced judgment in the appeal touching the election to the rectorship of that college. His Lordship's decision is in favour of the Rev James Thompson, B.D., formerly fellow of that society and rector of Cuddington, in Buckinghamshire, now rector of Lincoln College.

HEREFORD CATHEDRAL.—During the past week the four additional lancet windows of the Lady's Chapel, in this venerable cathedral, have been filled with coloured glass, and the whole of the east end may now be considered as complete.

HOGESETH CHURCH.—The corner-stone of a new north transept to this church was laid on Saturday last by the Bishop of Oxford, assisted by the vicar, the Rev. Dr. Knollis, the Rev. A. Pott, his Lordship's chaplain, and several other clergymen

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following preferments and appointments have recently taken place :—Prebendary: The Rev. T. Wright Whitaker, to Lichfield Cathedral. Canonry: The Rev. Joseph Dunnington Jefferson, to Oakeldwick, in York Cath dral. Rectories: The Rev. Jackson Porter, to Oddingly, Worcestershire; the Rev T Fenton, to Waterfall and incumbency of Caldon, Staffordshire; the Rev. J. Jones Reynolds, to Holy Trinity, with St Peter's, Shaftesbury, Dorset; the Rev. A. Rogers Taylor to St. Michael Caerhays, Cornwall; the Rev. R Watts, to Nailstone, Leicestershire. Vicarages: The Rev. R. Seymour Walpole, to Farndon cum-Balderston. Notts; the Rev. E B. Wigley, to Gallington, Cumberland; the Rev C Fawcett, to Somerford Keynes, near Cricklade; the Rev. W. Bryans, to Tarvin, with Duddon, Cheshire; the Rev. T Gurney, to Lilbourne, Northamptonshire; the Rev. Barton Logge, to St. Mary Magdalene, Colchester.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently received testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev. R. H Davies, curate of Lavenham, Suffolk, from the parishioners. Rev Frederick Charles Finch, upon his leaving the curacy of St And ew, Rochester, Dudley, from the new h lders and others connected with the district; Rev. Charles Lee, curate of All Saints, Derby, from the teachers of the Sunday School, on his resignation; Rev. Charles Mackenzie, from the congregation of St. Thomas's, Colchester, on his resignation of the lectureship; the Rev R West, on the occasion of his leaving Walton-le Dale, near Preston, from the congregation; Rev H. G. Robinson, of Holy Trinity, Preston, on his leaving, from the churchwardens and congregation

The foundation-stone of a new church, to replace the dilapidated old one, was laid at Gayton, Warwickshire, on Thursday week, by Miss Bolton King. E D King, Esq., is a donor of £500 to the building fund. The service on the ground was read by the Rev. T. Lee, vicar, and the Rev R. Churchill, curate of Gayton. The edifice will be in the early English style and will consist of nave, chancel, and north aisle, and engaged tower, with spire, and will be built of stone

A new church has been erected at Wonlwich, and is to be consecrated by the Bishop of London on Wednesday, the 28th instant. It is dedicated to the Holy Trinity; and the Rev W. Duncan Long, M.A., late min ster of St. Bartholomew's Church Barbican, is the incumbent to the new district.

A very handsome altar cloth made of crimson Utrecht velvet, with the sacred monogram, cross, and glories, richly embroidered in gold-coloured silk, has recently been presented to Christ Church, Accrington, by the lady of Robert Hargreaves, Esq., of Bank House

LAW AND POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

Thursday being the first day of Term, the Equity and Common Law Courts were opened. The Judges did not go in state to their various Courts, and there was no ceremony observed on the occasion. There was but a very thin attendance of the members of the bar in any of the Courts.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS (CRIMINAL JURISDICTION).—There is a bill in the House of Commons to abolish the criminal jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in certa n cases. The act of 5 and 6 Edward 6, c. 4, and other statutes against quarrelling and fighting in churches and churchyards, as recommended by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, are to be repealed. Further, it is proposed to enact that after the passing of the measure no suit or proceeding shall be commenced or heard in any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales for defamation, or for quarrelling, chiding, or brawling by words only in any church or churchyard, or for using or laying violent hands upon any weapon, or for drawing any weapon with intent to strike another in any church or churchyard."

At Bow-street police office, on Saturday, Eliza Hunt was ordered to be sent to a lunatic asylum, in consequence of having been heard to say that she wanted the life of the Queen, and would have it by some means, while she was walking in front of Buckingham Palace on the previous Thursday. She had a large knife concealed in her bosom

In the Lambeth police-court, on Monday, Ann Lambert, a decent-looking woman, who has been frequently brought before the magistrates for a similar offence, was charged with disturbing the congregation at the Independent Chapel, in the York-road, Lambeth. The prisoner, in reply to the charge, observed that she would not again trouble the congregation of the Chapel in question, and that her attention should be directed towards Cardinal Wiseman Her friends promised to look closely to her, and on this promise she was discharged.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE.—By a notice dated April 2, it is stated, that on and after Tuesday, the 6th instant, an afternoon mail will be made up at the office for Watford and Berkhampstead, to be despatched by the train which leaves the Euston-square station at 5.0 P.M (Sundays excepted). Letters for this despatch must be posted at the receiving offices in London before two P.M.; at the branch offices in Lombard-street, Borough, Charing-cross, and Old Cavendish-street, before three P.M.; and at the General Post-office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, before 3.30 P.M.; and they will be delivered in Watford and Berkhampstead respectively in time for reply by the London mail which leaves those places in the evening.—— A second notice states, that, in addition to the ports mentioned in the 3d instant, instructions No. 9 of this year, as included in the scheme of the Pacific mail-packets, arrangements have been made for serving once a month, by means of a branch contract packet, the ports of Guayaquil, Lambayeque, Islanchico, and Santa Blanche. This branch packet will be fitted to meet West India mail packet leaving Southampton on the 2d of each month; but letters for the above-named ports will also be forwarded as far as Panama by the packet leaving Southampton on the 17th of each month.

THE STEARIC CANDLE MANUFACTURE.—This was the subject of the third extra Great Exhibition Lecture, recently delivered at the Society of Arts, by Mr. G. F. Wilson, the managing director of Price's Patent Candle Company, gave a most interesting précis of the economy of the above establishment, where in upwards of 900 hands are employed, and during the past winter £7000 worth of candles were made weekly. To Chevreul we owe the chemistry of candle-making; every fat was tried, but stearine was a very aboriginal acid. In 1813 he showed the importance of salting free the fatty acid from its comparatively undistinguishable base, which discovery is the basis of the art of steam candle-making. Mr. Wilson briefly illustrated Chevreul's valuable labours, and then showed the merit of the English makers in the practical application of the science, especially as regards its cheapness, and perfection of manufacture by skilful machinery. The several stages of the palm oil trade, from Old Calabar to Belmont, Vauxhall, were a se ries tively illustrated. Mr. Wilson then adverted to the mode in which the stearic candle trade was represented at the Great Exhibition, as also mentioned a fine specimen from Stockholm, and the beautiful paraffine candles in the French department. Altogether, this lecture is a valuable illustration of scientific manufacture.

EXTRAORDINARY LONGEVITY.—Died at Lewisham, Kent, on the 8th instant, Ann Scally, aged 103 years. From early years she was an actress of the theatrical profession, and acted at various theatres in England, Ireland, and Scotland. She was in the same company with the late Edmund Kean, and also with James Sheridan Knowles, during the brief career as an actor; and was her proudest boast, that she had still a place in Alcids to the Jane Shore of Mrs Siddons. About the age of 60 he lost her hearing, and was obliged to re inquish the stage; and since was residing in the same house as Mr. E. Owen, serving her destitute situation, took her from compassion into his family, and from last time to the hour of her death she has been solely dependant on that gentleman's bounty. She retained all her mental faculties to the last, and confined to her bed three days previous to her decease She was buried at Sydenham on Good Friday: it was somewhat singular that though she was twice married she never had occasion to change her maiden name, both husbands bearing the name of Scally.

The Ascent of Nice, of the 4th, states that Dr. Lefèvre, a French physician now at Nice, has discovered an immense stratum of fossil animals in the Grotto of the Lazzarotto, as it is called, situated within the grotto of Montaburon. Dr. Le evre intends continuing his excavations on a large scale.

We see by the German papers, that an exhibition of Silesian art and manufactures is about to be got up in Breslau, in a house on the plan of the Crystal Palace.

It is stated, that a shock of an earthquake was felt on Thursday morning, the 1st of April, at half-past five o'clock, in Winsomebe, Axbridge, which caused the plaster of the ceilings in some of the houses to crack, the bells to ring, and the clocks to strike.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO DR. CONOLLY.

TESTIMONIAL TO DR. CONOLLY.

THE eminent services of Dr. Conolly, in the amelioration of the treatment of the insane, have recently been distinguished by the presentation of a Testimonial, which took place at Willis's Rooms, on March 31; the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. With the name of Dr. Conolly, physician to the Hanwell Lunatic Asylum, is associated the most successful efforts of more enlightened times to substitute kindness and occupation for cruelty and neglect in the treatment of persons labouring under mental disease; and it would be difficult to point to any instance in which the distinction of a public testimonial has been more honourably earned. At the presentation, the Earl of Shaftesbury, in the name of the meeting and of the subscribers, requested Dr. Conolly to accept the Testimonial as a record of esteem, respect, and gratitude. Dr. Conolly was cordially received on rising to return thanks, which he expressed in graceful terms. He then gave a most interesting narrative of circumstances connected with the past and present systems of treatment for the insane; and concluded with an assurance, that, although approaching the last arch of the mysterious bridge of life, he was still determined to continue his exertions in the path he had chosen for himself. Votes of thanks were passed to the committee of management, to the treasurer (Sir James Clark), to the secretaries (Dr. Forbes and Mr. Frankum), and to the chairman; and the noble Earl, in acknowledgment, having earnestly directed attention to the extension of the system to classes above the extremely poor, who did not yet possess its advantages, the proceedings, which were of a most agreeable character, terminated.

The Testimonial consists of—1. A three-quarter length portrait, painted by Sir John Watson Gordon, P.R.S.A., R.A. 2. An Engraving of the Portrait, in mezzotinto, by W. Walker, Esq., presented to the subscribers. 3. A piece of Plate, consisting of groups of figures placed on and around a pedestal, which also bears the inscription; the figures being intended to shadow forth the labours on account of which the Testimonial is presented. On the summit, the God or Genius of the Healing Art is represented in a standing posture, as meditating and directing the improved treatment of the insane, with Mercy on his right hand and Science on his left. Some of the evils to be remedied, the mode of relieving them, and the results, are illustrated by the groups of figures around the pedestal and in the reliefs on its base.

The groups exhibit 1. A male and emale figure, representing Melancholy and Raving Madness, under restraint. 2. A patient relieved from restraint, in a state of partial recovery, with the implements of coercion thrown on the ground. 3. The same patient restored to reason and surrounded by his family, to whom he is gratefully indicating the sources of his restoration in the group above.

The two reliefs inserted into the ebony base exhibit, in contrast, the past and present modes of treating the insane.

The following is the inscription on the plate: -

This Testimonial, commemorative of his strenuous, persevering, and successful labours to improve the treatment and ameliorate the condition of the Insane, is (together with a Portrait of himself) presented by his admiring and grateful contemporaries to John Conolly, M.D., Physician to the Hanwell Lunatic Asylum, A.D. 1852.

The plate has been admirably executed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, from designs modelled by their eminent artist, Mr. Alfred Brown.

ROMAN PAVEMENT DISCOVERED IN CANNON-STREET.

1. AMPHORA, OR WINE VESSEL.
2. BLACK CINERARY URN
3 & 4. VESSELS OF STONE COLOURED WARE.
5. MORTAR, STUDDED WITH QUARTZ, WITH POTTER'S NAME.
6. BLACK URN, DIAMOND PATTERN.
7. SMALL SAMIAN VESSEL.
8. EARTHEN LAMP.
9. SMALL VESSEL, USED PROBABLY FOR BALSAMS OR OTHER FUNERAL OFFERINGS.

ROMAN VESSELS FOUND IN CANNON-STREET.

ROMAN REMAINS DISCOVERED IN CANNON-STREET, CITY.

ON Saturday week the workmen employed upon the foundations for the new line of street, at a little distance east of Basing-lane, at the depth of 12 feet 6 inches below the surface, came upon a Roman tesselated pavement, a space of which comprising about 27 feet was exposed. This pavement, which is composed of the common red tesseræ, without pattern, is embedded in a thin layer of cement and pounded brick, underneath which is a thick stratum of coarse sand cement. A cutting contiguous to the site of the pavement exhibits a section of chalk foundation, with layers of Roman tile, over which, supporting part of a brick building now in course of demolition, are the remains of a strong chalk wall, about 10 feet high and 4 feet in thickness. About 18 feet from the Roman pavement is a circular shaft, similar to that discovered near Billingsgate in connexion with Roman pavements and other remains on the site of the present Coal Exchange. This shaft is composed of chalk, and lined with hard stone. A chalk-built vault had been demolished by the workmen before the writer had an opportunity of examining it. Fragments of the fine red pottery called Samian ware, some of them bearing an elegant pattern, were found at a depth of nearly twenty feet, in other parts of the excavation, and in the face of the cutting, about four feet below the pavement, the writer picked out bits of the same kind of pottery, and fragments from a large mass of carbonised wood imbedded in the clay, and seemingly one of the piles which had served to support the Roman edifice formerly occupying the spot, in like manner with those discovered near Billingsgate. It is worthy of remark that the site of these discoveries is, as nearly as can be ascertained, that formerly occupied by the fortress of Tower Royal, being just about the same distance east of Queen-street as the line once known as Tower Royal-street, so designated to mark the locality of the ancient Royal fortress; and it seems not improbable that the chalk superstructure above described may have appertained to the walls of this edifice.

Stowe places Tower Royal in the parish of St. Michael; but it appears, according to a grant thereof by Richard III. to the Duke of Norfolk, to have been in St. Thomas's parish. This is quoted by Maitland from an old Ledger-book, which states "that the King granted unto John Duke of Norfolk messuagium cum pertinenciis, voc. le tower, infra paroch. Sancti Thomæ Lond." It is not clearly known when Tower Royal was erected; but it appears to have been a residence of the Kings of England at a very early period. According to Stowe, it was inhabited by Stephen, but by the time of Edward I it had been discastled, and was at that time held as a tenement by one Simon Beawmes. It acquired the title of Inn Royal in the time of Edward III., who made it his residence. It was bestowed by the King on the College of St. Stephen, Westminster; but it reverted to the Crown, and was called the Queen's Wardrobe in the time of Richard II., when it appears to have been a place of strength; for when the followers of Wat Tyler had obtained possession of the Tower of London, it afforded shelter to the Princess Joan, the King's mother; and here took place the interview between Joan and her Royal son, when, by presence of mind and firmness, ill-ratified by his succeeding career, he had suppressed a rebellion that imminently menaced his crown and heritage. Leon III., King of Armenia, when expelled his kingdom by the Turks, was lodged and entertained with great generosity in Tower Royal by Richard II., in 1386. This place was afterwards used as stabling for the King's horses, and subsided into mean tenements, which succumbed to the great fire of 1666.

A Correspondent, who has watched the excavations from the first, and has collected a very interesting series of fragments and other matters, shewing this to be the site of a Roman villa, has favoured us with the accompanying Sketches of a few of the articles found.

In seeking for firm foundation, a trench was cut for the frontage in Cannon-street, length 142 feet, width 7 feet 6 inches, and from 7 to 9 feet deep, and from 18 to 20 feet from the pavement. The earth from the trench was highly impregnated with animal and vegetable matter, moist and very black. Throughout the whole distance of the cutting was a vast and almost continuous number of piles, some supporting walls of Roman masonry, consisting of unhewn pieces of chalk, cemented by firm mortar, and covered with the usual building tiles or bricks. The soil was interspersed with horns, bones, teeth, and tusks of boars, oxen, goats, and other animals; also, oyster, mussel, and cockle shells, besides a quantity of fragments of flanged tiles, scored flue tiles, amphoræ, mortaria, urns of various colours and shapes, glass vessels and Samian pottery of various descriptions.

At the bottom of a cross trench, dug on the above day, was found a human skeleton, lying east and west, 6 feet below the chalk, and about 100 feet east of the pavement.

DIPLOMATIC CONSIGNMENTS.—The authorities having considered the practice under existing regulations with respect to officers accompanying to the place of destination articles directed to be delivered duty free for ambassadors or other privileged persons, these regulations, which have reference to certain regulations of the Excise, since repealed, have been rescinded, and directions have been issued, that in future only spirits, tobacco, and wine, delivered duty free for ambassadors or other privileged persons, be accompanied to their place of destination by an officer of the Crown, all other articles being at once delivered under proper authority to the parties duly authorised to receive them.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE POET MOORE.—It is stated that the Marquess of Lansdowne, the Earl of Shelburne, Mr. Longman, Mr. Murray, and some other gentlemen are about to form a committee in London to collect subscriptions, and to co-operate with the general committee in Dublin in reference to the proposed testimonial to the late poet Thomas Moore. In the subscription list already published in Dublin there appear the following names; viz. Lord Eglinton, £25; Lord Charlemont, £50; the Lord Chief Baron, £20; the Lord Mayor, £10; Lord Talbot de Malahide, £10; the Right Hon. Maziere Brady, £10; Sir Thomas Esmonde, £10. Several private persons have subscribed £5 each, and Mr. William Henry Curran, son of the celebrated Curran, has put down his name for £20.

PRINCESS' THEATRE.

THE tragedy of "King John," with its magnificent appointments, still continues to prove attractive. The character of the hero, notwithstanding his crimes, commands sympathy, for the mind habitually recognises in him the majesty of England and of the age in which he lived, rather than the mere individual. He is a grand impersonation of the state. His weakness, his guilt, his religious vacillation, all typify "the condition of England question," as mooted in his time; his person is but, as it were, the plane on which move mighty public interests. An unsettled state of power and opinion—a struggle for progress, and an uncertainty as to its direction—a rude state of law, in which private vengeance had not yet assumed the disguise of public justice—and the tottering condition of authority, wherein well nigh these are the national marks which present John to us as a representative personage, bearing the yoke of his time, and vicariously suffering its evil as his own.

All form was formless; order, orderless—

To us this picture of regal sin and suffering has a deep meaning, and moves the reflective soul to intense emotion. Shakespeare, in his rifacamento of the old play, evidently felt all this; and added to the natural pathos of the story by the exquisite snatches of poetry with which he adorned the original meagre dialogue. The subject was worth his writing up, and he performed the task con amore. Witness the fine touches which he has thrown over the prison scene between Hubert and Arthur, to which this week we have devoted our Illustration. Even the conceits with which this colloquy is overrun only serve to set forth the innocence of childhood in a more affecting manner. Perhaps the character of the Prince was never more beautifully interpreted than by Miss Kate Terry, whose exquisite acting at Windsor Castle in the part much pleased her Majesty. Of Mr. Ryder's Hubert, with its rough pity and manly devotedness, we have said sufficient on a former occasion. To those who have witnessed the performance, our Illustration will prove pleasingly suggestive, and they will value it as a record of an excellent example of really fine, natural, and powerfully pathetic acting, in one of the most distinguished of Shakspeare's situations, marked with some of his best points, and irresistibly commanding the sympathies that are strongest in the noblest. Such dramas are calculated to make the spectator brave and good.

SCENE FROM "KING JOHN," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

CURIOSITIES.

BLACK JACKS.

THESE four "Black Jacks," such as our ancestors used when "merry in the hall," are the property of the Rev. W. Brooke Kempson, rector of Stoke Lacy, Herefordshire, and are believed to have descended as an heirloom from his ancestor, Thomas Kempson, of Sardon, in Warwickshire, which estate was purchased by him from the Commissioners of the Commonwealth, about 1658.

The Black Jacks are of three sizes, on quart, one pint, and two half-pints; made of strong black leather, lined with pewter: they have deep silver rims, and silver shields bearing the family crest of the Chamois, from a form of which word, "Chamoison," the name is supposed to be derived. There are but few sets of these drinking-vessels in existence.

BLACK JACKS.

EASTER PIECES.

The subjects of these seasonable dramas hunt this year in couples. At the Lyceum and the Adelphi we have varying versions of the "Dame de la Halle" of MM. Michel, Masson, and Co.,—the first in eight acts, the last in three; and at the Haymarket and the Olympic, the burlesques treat the argument of "Les Frères Corses" according to a more or less "fair" and "liberal" principle of adaptation and imitation. Other theatres, however, are more independent in their topics, and select, as usual, from elfin lore, the tale best suited to their taste, their means, and the calibres of their histrionic staff. Of these novelties the most important is certainly that at the LYCEUM.

The version of the "Dame de la Halle" here takes the title of "A Chain of Events," in eight acts, and has been manipulated for the occasion by Messrs. Slingsby Laurence and Charles Mathews, who have not only altered but extended the original, partly for the purpose of writing up a character for Miss Julia St. George in that of Javotte. This perhaps was expedient, on account of Miss Laura Keene being engaged to personate the heroine Thérèse. The period of the play occupies five years, from 1761 to 1765, and is thus abundantly supplied with the elements of the old répume—the agencies of the Court and the Bastile being of course not omitted. The eight acts are, in fact, eight tableaux, or set scenes, each converging by means of dialogue and action to a picturesque dénouement. These are more or less skilfully wrought up to the desired point; but the process in one or two is rather slow, and much would be gained by the excision of superfluous dialogue. The situations and action might be introduced in fewer words. The story, from its extent, admits of episodal treatment, which might be carried on to an indefinite length, so flexile in structure are dramas of this class. The catastrophe was transparent from the end of the third act; but was delayed by the introduction of the episodes alluded to, the sensation of variety being boldly substituted for that of curiosity. To this no legitimate exception can be taken, since expectation is, after all, the true dramatic law, the losing sight of which is the ruin of so many dramatic experiments. The mise en scène is full of ingenious contrivances, such as people arriving in sedan chairs and other vehicles, carriages with real horses, fountains with real water, and a shipwreck in a stormful sea, admirably managed with an effect of reality equally astonishing and appalling. The scenery has been painted by Mr. Beverley in his most beautiful style, and produces the effect of the most perfect reality. The first, representing a street in Paris, introduces us to Père Bonneau, a waterman (Mr. Frank Matthews), and several of the more important personages of the drama, particularly to Gaspard Lavisé (Mr. C. Mathews), on whom the intrigue of the plot depends. His great desire is to secure the will of the Marquis de Mercy (Mr. H. Horncastle), bequeathing his title and fortune to an unknown son; which will he knows to be in the house of the Marquis, then compelled to fly from Paris. In order to this, the Marquis disguises himself as Père Bonneau; but just as he is about to escape, a fire breaks out in the street, and he is compelled by the mob to serve in his apparent vocation, and help as a waterman to extinguish the flames. The effort costs him his life. Meanwhile the clever rogue has secured the will, now become doubly valuable by the death of the testator. The subordinate interests of the scene relate to the introduction of the girl Javotte to the fellowship of the market, an incident which crowds the stage with the market people belonging to the Halle, the great fish-market of Paris, the foremost portraits being that of Madeleine Rochard (Mrs. Frank Matthews), and that of the Syndic of the Market, Alcide le Fort (Mr. Roxby), in love with Thérèse, whom he believes to be a widow, her absent husband not having been heard of for years. To this husband it is, resident at St. Domingo, that Gaspard proceeds with the will; and who, having been a foundling, is really made to believe that he was the son of the Marquis. On their voyage to France, they encounter a storm at sea, in which the latter, Georges Michel (Mr. Belton), is saved by Gaspard. This storm constitutes the second act, equally brief and effective.

The third act presents divers incidents in Thérèse's shop, an establishment raised by her own industry, and a sum of 3000 francs transmitted by her husband in the only communication she had received from him. These incidents complete the episode of Javotte's admission to the fellowship of the market, and present Therese herself in an interesting situation, having received an official document, forged, of course, by Gaspard, certifying the death of Georges Michel. In her distress she is supported by the sympathy of Marie Bonneau (Madame Ventris). Much care is bestowed on the delineation of Madame Bonneau. Smitten with a passion for lotteries, Madame has abstracted from its hiding-place every rouleau of two hundred secreted in a bag by her husband—a sum entrusted by the Marquis to Bonneau just previous to his unfortunate death, to be delivered to his son whenever he should appear. The arrival of that supposed son has now taken place, and Bonneau determines to pay over the money. The fourth act, in Bonneau's house, leads to the discovery of his loss, and the culprit in his wife. In the fifth act he proceeds to the Marquis de Mercy's, and explains the circumstances of his defalcation to the supposed heir, by whom he is readily excused; Thérèse, too, who has caught a glimpse of the new Marquis and recognised him for her husband, follows to present a bouquet in the name of the ladies of the Halle, and thus secures an interview, in which a full confession is made. But Gaspard's contrivances prevent a happy issue. The aristocratic Countess de Meloy insists on the marriage of her supposed son to a great and noble heiress, and Gaspard insists on the repudiation of the market-wife. In the sixth act it becomes necessary that these two parties should proceed to extremities; and after many endeavouring to induce the heroine to compromise her rights, they accuse her to the authorities of some crime which confines her at once to the Bastile. The act concludes with the carriage arriving that bears her away to prison. In the seventh act, which occurs in the Market of the Innocents, with the fountain by moonlight, during a holiday fête, Thérèse is rescued by the strong and brave Syndic. Her (the actress's) part in the concluding scene is prosecuted and a ballet, in which Miss Rosina Wright accomplishes a terpsichorean triumph. Alcide, having borne off the lady from the officers of the Bastile, brings her to the illuminated Saloon of the Fleur-de-Lys, and restores her to her friends. Georges Medel seeks the same place, determined on doing justice to Thérèse, to whom he has always been faithful. Gaspard seeks to prevent him by implicating his dupe in his own felonious crimes; but the timely production of the true heir defeats all his schemes. Gaspard, in rage, attempts to commit suicide by throwing himself from the balcony of the Fleur-de-Lys into the courtyard of the Palais Royal, and is fired at by the gendarmes.

SCENE FROM THE NEW DRAMA OF THE "QUEEN OF THE MARKET," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The acting throughout of this interesting drama was exceedingly effective. The first place must be given to Mr and Mrs. C. Mathews—to him for the coolness of his assumption, and to her for the pathos with which she invested her part. Mrs. the Yeatres more than ever deeply touched the feelings. Miss L. Keene was successful in Thérèse, and Julia St George as Alcide was desirable in Janette Rosby in Alcide was capital; and nothing could be better than Mr. and Mrs. Frank Matthews in their highly characteristic parts. When such refreshments as are needful shall have been made in the third act, fourth act, there can be no doubt that this long and elaborate drama will be most highly popular.

ADELPHI.

In characterising the same piece here, it cannot be necessary to go into the same detail. Suffice it to say, that the title adopted is "The Queen of the Market," and the names of the characters differ. The heroine of Bilboa Lafort also, was most amusingly exaggerated by Paul Bedford. The public will no doubt be enri ns to compare the different effect of the same piece at such disproportionate lengths as eight acts and the ne; moreover, as each version is good, we may predict a considerable run for both.

On Wednesday, another addition was made to the Easter attractions, one of a peculiar structure, and designed to illustrate the versatility of Miss Woolgar. The author has resorted to a tale of Machiavelli, and has confided to the actress the mission that the former had entrusted to the fiend Belfegor. The title of the piece is "Mephistopheles," and summons up associations with the genius of Goethe and his wonderful "Faust." There is much of the spirit in this drama. The infernal powers are much distressed to learn whether matrimonial squabbles are the fun of husband or wife. To ascertain the fact Mephistopheles proceeds to effect his incarnation in both characters—the first a dozing bear, and the other a meek and piously-educated lady; the former he converts into a brute, the latter into a fashionable termagant. The moral, we suppose, is, that the fault in question is sometimes the man's and sometimes the woman's. No very satisfactory conclusion this, but eminently practical. In it, however, we may recognise the Mephistophelian principle—the Gentleman sarcasm. The dramatic ground, however, is as conventional as the moral one is amiable. The various of assumptions, altogether five, realised by Miss Woolgar with the most artistic facility, demonstrates beyond all doubt the comprehensiveness of her powers. The whole action is confined to one actress; and the charm of the performance lies in the apparent complet ness of the entire work. As an elegant vaudeville it merits the success it achieved. The piece is written by Mr. R. B. Brough, one of the Brothers Brough, whose productions we have on many occasions had the pleasure of commending

HAYMARKET.

"O Gemini, Brothers of Course," is the name of the burlesque produced here, a successful experiment of its class. There is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and the horrible easily converts into the droll. The "two members of the Amalgamated Society of Dramatic Authors" have shown a majesty for accomplishing that is fearful, and have managed their burlesque rhyming with great skill. The mind of the spectator, however, must be directed to the original, in order fully to appreciate the allusions. Mr. Buckstone performed the "twin brothers," and was received with roars of laughter. Opera also will have found an element in which he much revel. In most instances he brought out the wit of the text fairly: it was only twice or thrice that he descended to personal mimicry of the manner of Parisbina. Mrs. L. S. Buckingham, as Château-Reynaud, was a superb imitation of Wigan. Miss Cubitt, as Emilie, a bonnet-maker, and fair cause of the ghostly disturbance, was pretty and interesting. The concluding scene of "The Opera" does also well set, and the grouping was admirable. Mr. and Miss Mitchenson were the principal couple, and danced grotesquely enough. The piece was, as we have said, successful, but, in our opinion, should no doubt be curtailed of its fair "few." A bold experiment is needed at this house, as a stimulus to its future prosperity.

OLYMPIC.

"The Camberwell Brothers; or, the Mys erious Milkman," at this theatre, is by Mr. C. Selby. Cow-lane, Camberwell, is the scene of operation. Punky Franky (Mr. Compton), separated by the surgeons from his twin brother, has seed-and-eight of his absent confrère's characteristics. Fighting Franky is about to have his head quinched; and the fact is revealed by a mystic sensation and a "photographic phantom." The Marionettes come in for their share of the burlesque; and Mr. Albany Brown exclaims during the entr'acte cremation scene, "Oh, liars! A bad mariage at Cremorne substitutes the opera at Paris, where Mr. Compton appears as Fighting Franky, quarreling with an Irishman about a Frenchwoman. His heart, however, finds him, when Franky comes to life and punishes his opponent. Mr. Compton was very happy in his impersonation; and the getting-up of the piece was liberal and handsome.

PRINCESS'.

Here "The Corsican Brothers" reappeared in their own proper shape; and the public most warmly gratulated Mr. Kean on his return to the stage and recovery from severe indisposition. A fairy tale succeeded the drama, concerted from seven magazine stories. A fairy tale succeeded the drama, concerted from seven magazine stories. By Mr Tom Taylor, and entitled "Witikind and his Brothers; or, the Seven Swan Princes and the Fair Heluosine." The original of the tale may be found in Grimm's collection, under the title of "Die Sieben Schwäne." It is closely followed by Mr. Taylor, who has depended on polish and elegant wit rather for success. The story presents us with Mundragore, a sorceress, as the stepmother of the young princess, Heluosine, banished from her father's palace into the forest of Arden, and there disfigured by an enchanted wash, administered by the witch-wife, her brothers being likewise transformed into swans by day, though restored nightly to human shape Ulf, the honest foster brother, presents the disfigured Heluosine when a second time driven from home; and they, with the seven swan princes, journey to the realm of Avalon, and find friends in the Royal family of that kingdom, consisting of seven sisters and a brother. Mundragore's vengeance, however, follows the party. Having transformed her husband into an owl, which she carries about with her confined in a cage, she arrives in Avalon, and subjects them to many troubles; all of which are, of course, ultimately surmounted, and in the end Heluosine and Ulf are united in happy wedlock. The dresses and decorations are superb; the dances introduced, graceful and judicious; and the music, by Mr. Robert Siede, original and pleasing. Altogether, this piece commends itself by its elegance and novelty.

MARYLEBONE.

This theatre opened on Easter Monday, under the management of Mr. George Bolton, with Shakespeare's play of "The Tempest," Prospero being performed by Mr Cowlin, Miranda by a Miss Grosvenor, and Ariel by a Miss Lavine. The scenery and appointments were new, and the acting very creditable to the company. The Annual National Ballet Divertissement," in which Europe, Asia, Africa, and America dance pas seuls, while Britannia looks on, until the end, when she achieves her triumph and all pay her homage. We may now watch the proceedings of this theatre.

PUNCH'S PLATHOUSE.

"A Village Tale," by C. Reade, Esq., is the title of the Easter novelty produced here. Farmers, rogues, and agricultural seductions are the persons and the plots involved in a drama devoted to the illustrati n of pastoral innocence and simplicity. Poor Rachel, the victim, was touchingly personified by Miss Maskell. The other parts were ably filled, and the piece was successful.

SURREY.

The burlesque at this theatre is by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, "The Three Perils of Man; or, the Knights of the Round Table." The subject is denoted in the title. King Arthur and his knigh s form the basis of the interest; the particular point of it concerning La Belle Isande and Sir Tristram, who must die from poisoned, and immures her in Castle Dolorus, whence she is rescued by Sir Lionel Merlin, the enchanter, Morgana La Fay, and a Welsh fairy, with their sanctimonious eyes and spirits, form the supernatural machinery. Parodies and puns, as usual, are the staples of the scenes and speeches. This piece Miss Harland personified Sir Lionel. The other characters were well filled, and the production was eminently successful.

ASTLEY'S.

Some French dramatist has supplied the original of the Easter piece, "Bonaparte in Egypt," produced here last Monday. It is of a highly picturesque character, and presents the action in a light that reveals to Gallic ambition. In the course of the piece Napoleon appears on a white charger, and the tableaux are uniformly excellent. The defeat of the Mamelukes at Aboukir is the last of these, and which is, perhaps, as finely grouped as may be, and brought down the curtain with applause.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

MARIONETTE THEATRE.

The production of "Aladdin" is likely to add to the reputation of the distinguished manager; the cost nesse of the scenimes, and the Chinese propriety of the figures, evince the utmost liberality. The processions and the appearances through the stage in sheets of flame of the Genius of the Ring, the Spirit of the Lamp, and the magic lan ern have never been more managed by living artists; while the dancing, especially of a figure with two flags, which he is con inually throwing into the air and shifting from the right hand to the left and vice versâ the flags crossing and re crossing each other without any apparent connexion, is really marvellous; as are also the evolutions of a figure with a hoop and two flags. Mr. A. Bany Brown, also, is provided with a new introduction, the piece of which is the production of a new humorist, and during the rehearsal of his drama. This is no wooden-headed affair, but a smart satire, brilliantly touched off in the approved style of "the fast school."

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Rossini composed the "Italiana in Algieri" for the San Benedetto in Venice in 1813, just after his successful production of "Tancredi" for the Fenice, in the same city and year. The libretto, by Angelo Anelli, has been ineffective on the stage, and the original music has long been laid aside. It was written for the following year. In 1818, "Il Barbiere" was the first of Rossini's operas heard in this country at the King's Theatre; and in 1819, on the opening night of the season (January 7th), "L'Italiana in Algieri" was produced, and given six consecutive nights with the greatest success. It was received during Ebers' management, in 1825; but it has not been played since that period until it was done at the Royal Italian Opera, in 1847, with Mad. Alboni, Sontag, and Marini: the work, however, failed to make much impression, principally owing to the absurdity of the libretto for an English audience, who do not seem to comprehend the buffoonery of broad Italian farce. The plot consists of the efforts of Isabella, Taddeo, and Lindoro, three Christian prisoners in Algiers, to mystify the Bey Mustapha, and thus effect their escape, which they accomplish, through the stolidity of the Bey, by enrolling him in the supposed secret of the Pappataci, who are the believers in the following tenets, as translated by Mr. Bunn:—"Pappatacci, who are the believers of all the fair. The cats, at Sunday's revival sounded Mdlle Angri, her first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre, as Isabella Mdlle Fuller as Elvira, the wife of the Bey, Signor Ferranti Taddeo, Signor Belletti Mustapha, and Signor Calzolari Lindoro, the lover of Isabella. That Rossini is the greatest of musical wags is exemplified in this opera, from the first bar of the lively overture to the finale. The monumental crash, first bar of the lively overture to the finale. The monumental crash, is a series of well-timed and practical jokes, thoroughly illustrative of the comical incidents of the drama; and wherever a serious situation arrives, which is but rarely, his music becomes dignified and imposing. There are few airs which can be pompously, for example, in the "Cessa alla patria." for profound pathos and patriotic fervour. It was quite a treat to listen again to the charming themes and in-pring strains in the "Italiana." The music and interest never flag; it is ever flowing with the most delicious melody, whilst the individuality of each character is preserved with consummate skill. The overture was rapturously re-demanded; the passages for the double-basses and for the flute did not escape the attention of the audience, as also the remarkable chords in the concluding movement, reminding the hearer of our National Anthem. The lovely clarionet obligato in the symphony of the tenor air is a gem of orchestration; indeed, the accompaniments throughout abound replete with fancy and imagination.

The opera was, as regards the principals, remarkably well executed, the music being precisely suited to the "speciality" of each artiste. Now that Alboni has abandoned contralto parts, Mdlle. Angri's supremacy in them is unquestionable. Her voice is exqu-sitely rich and sympathetic, and her style is more sustained and refined. In the "Pensa alla patria" she created quite a sensation by her superb compass of voice and astonishing vocal volubility, executing the most intricate divisions with the utmost precision and finish. Signor Belletti's drollerus as Taddeo were diverting. Belletti had a hearty reception on his return from the troupe in America with Jenny Lind (Mdme. Otto Goldschmidt). There are few basses who can sing in these days the florid passages of Mustapha's part, but Belletti compassed them with surprising facility. Equally astonishing was the articulation of Calzolari in the rapid divisions in Lindoro's music. He gave the opening air, "Languir per una bella," with refined feeling and taste, and by his entire assumption of the character fully confirmed the title he has attained of being the first Italian tenor."

We do not join in the notion that the "Italiana in Algieri," the "Turco in Italia," and the "Cenerentola" ought to be shelved because "Il Barbiere" is the composer's masterpiece; for cancelling these works would be the first step in the secondency, but more care must be taken with the drilling of the chorus-singers.

Mdlle. Cruvelli will reappear this evening as "Norma," supported by the great Labiache as Orovso, and the pleasing tenor Gardoni as Pollio.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Rossini's "William Tell" was given for the third time on Tuesday. Herr Ander's Arnoldo at the most is but a succès d'estime, as the French would say. It seems curious that the tenor, who is the idol of the Viennese public, should have such little impression here, but the fact is susceptible of ea-y explanation. Whilst Germany boasts of the finest bass voices, there is a great dearth of tenors, and those which the country produces are remarkable for a peculiarity in that sympathetic quality which is the characteristic of the Italian tenors. The quality of the Teutonic tenor, Ander, is a type of that to be found everywhere on the Rhine and the Danube —woodeny, harsh, nasal, guttural, and with one register only. Besides, acting is as thoroughly German as his singing; his action is angular, and the peculiarly Mephistopheles aspect which he presents, reminds one of Her ch'famous outlines. Herr Ander must, therefore, be judged from a totally different point of view and, doubtless, from this standpoint, he is certain of a first-rate artist, whose popu arity in his own theatres can be readily accounted for. At Covent Garden he sings in a strange language, with a stage entourage having little consideration—he may add, generosity—for any artists not from the sunny south, and in a much larger arena than he has been accustomed to, and hence his comparative failure. He had, however, his superb moments, during which his energy and artistic intelligence enabled him to command the applause of his auditory, particularly in the celebrated trio in which Arnoldo is made acquainted with the cruel execution of his father, Melchtal, by Gessler's orders.

The c.aracter of William Tell comes under the denomination of "ingrateful," but Ronconi's genius gives vitality and prominency to its most minute details; he made it also, as it were, his own, so low was he in the knowledge of the audience. Tell's apple, nothing could be finer than his acting and singing, particularly in the prayer ter the protection or his only child. Marini's Walter, Tagliafico's Gessler, Polonini's Melchtal, Vialetti's Rodolphi, Stigelli's Leuthold, Mdlle. Lotti's Edwige, Polonini's Melchtal, Stigelli's Rodolphi, Vialetti's Leuthold, Mdlle. Lotti's Edwige, Mdlle. Bellini's Jemmy, and Mdme Caste lan's Matilde, completed this strong cast.

We shall notice the production of Donizetti's four-act opera "I Martiri" in our next impression.

DRURY-LANE.

Meyerbeer's "Robert the Devil" was presented on Monday, sustained by Madame E. Garcia, Mr. Gardoni, Mr. Fedor, Mr. Marsh, and Mr. Drayton. The opera was followed by a divertissement, "Une Fête Napolitaine," in which the dancing of Mdlles Antonie and Adèle and Miss A. Payne was greatly applauded, and a Polka une la pas de Mr. Marshall, was re-demanded.

Balfe's "Bohe mian Girl" was given on Tuesday, with Mrs Sims Reeves, Miss R I sace Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr W. tworth, Mr. Meyers, and Mr. Drayton.

The début of Madame Fa cci in Beethoven's "Fidelio" will be noticed in our next impression. The lessee has a strong operatic company; and with the introduction of reduced prices (the half price belr g abolished), he has a fair prospect of reaping the benefit of his unceasing exertions.

ST JAMES'S

The comedy of "Mademoiselle de la Seigliere," as we had already announced, was produced on Monday; the Marquis being performed by Regnier, who, it seems too, is also the author of the piece, the translation of which is by no means beyond praise. Mdme Marquet, the new actress, will become a great favourite; beautiful in form and graceful in action. The house was well attended, and all went off with a sparkling grace that induced the impression of decided success.

"ASCENT OF MONT BLANC," EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

During the past holiday week, Mr. Albert Smith has given his popular "Ascent of Mont Blanc" every day, which, however, has been insufficient for the public demand: the interest of the narrative is unflagging, and the attractiveness of Mr Beverley's scenic illustrations unabated. We understand that her Majesty and the Royal family have graciously signified their intention to be present on Monday next, when the entertainment will be repeated, and Mr. Albert Smith's privately printed edition of his narrative of his ascent of Mont Blanc, and that he has been honoured with the Royal thanks for forwarding the same.

CUSTOMS.—It is said that a strict investigation is about to take place in regard to foreigners in London and at the out-ports acting as customs agents without being duly qualified. It having become known that persons calling themselves merchants and agents of foreign houses have in numerous instances violated the law by engaging in the business of customs agents; such an infringement of the law being to the manifest injury of the legitimate representatives of the revenue, who have given bond to a large amount for their probity, and to the fidelity to the interests of the Crown, in case of any flagrant departure from honesty upon the part of those who have given no such security.

During the week there has been an immense influx of Germans into Liverpool, en route for America. Mr. Saloi, the head of the Mennonists emigration establishment, has himself superintended the shipment of 1200. This immense number was received and quartered in his establishment in Moorfields and Vulcan-street within the last few days. About 100 are destined for New Orleans, a few for Canada, and the remainder for the States.

MUSIC.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The interest excited by the second concert appears to have been very great at Exeter Hall. The room was crowded to overflowing in every part, and we never re collect to have witnes ed a greater number of musical celebrities, native and foreign, collected than on this occasion. The execution of the colossal Choral symphony of Beethoven, and of the two overtures—Cherubini's 'Anacreon' and Mozart's 'Il Flauto Magico'—was unexceptionable. Berlioz, as a conductor, must be placed in the first rank of our festival ge erals. The rush of his violins in the 'Anacreon' at the close g ve a perfect idea of the assemblage, but M Berlioz refused the encore of his novelties in the programme were not a together successful. The pianoforte concerto in F minor, played with care and spirit by M. Bellet, would have fared better, perhaps, if the performance had not been directed by the composer himself, Dr. Wylde, whose inexperience nearly swamped the first movement. The composition can scarcely be judged, as the tutti were so contracted, but the pianoforte passages, here and there, in the slow movement, exhibit some poetry, if not original imagery, but in form the concerto is too patchy, fragmentary, and incoherent. The composer, who is yet young in his career, received very kind tokens of encouragement from his audience. The new operatic masque, by our truly distinguished composer, Edward Loder, disappointed our expectations, and, we may add, those of his general admirers, although there must be taken into account must be taken into account as merely the last piece in the scheme, and that the interpretation was not so perfect as it ought to have been. Mrs. Sims Reeves sang the music of "Enchanta," Miss Dolby, "Calypso," Mr. Sims Reeves, "Telemachus," and Mr. Weiss, "Mentor." Any details of the march of the action of the masque would be quite superfluous: all the world knows Fénélon's "Telemachus." The most remarkable items are the choral—"Come, come, come"—"In yon sky," of nymphs and fauns; the storm, "Anchors! oh what fools be here!" and the finale, "Flash your torches!"—the two latter being full of point and character. The soloists, "Hymen chasing love," so charmingly sung by Miss Dolby, is an elegant composition.

Herr Reichardt sang the tenor air from Gllick's "Iphigenia," and a barbaitod or serenade by Gumbert, a Viennese composer, like a thoroughly-trained artist; and the latter was re-demanded, the chorus accompaniment, in his true used to Auber in "Haydée," being prolonged notes, sustained pianissimo. The fragment, "The Song of the Cherubims," from the Greek service in the Imperial chapel of St. Petersburg, a best very nicely done, afforded but a faint notion of the sublime effect of the original, the Russian choir, composed of thirty singers, the "double basses" in which are quite marvellous. Bortniank, the composer of this gem, was born in 1751, and died in 1826. He had a vivid perception of devotional feeling in this very fine work of his church, in which no instruments of any kind are allowed, the whole being sung without accompaniment.

The third concert will take place on the 24th inst, when Berlioz's splendid dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," will be repeated, and Madame Pasqui, the famed pianiste, will perform.

MUSICAL EVENTS.

Mr. Neate gave his fifth quartet and pianoforte soirée on Wednesday night, at the Queen Anne street Rooms, assisted by Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti

Haydn's "Creation" was performed last night at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, under Costa's direction Mdme. Clara Novello, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes were the chief vocalists

On Monday next will be the third Philharmonic Concert. On Tuesday, the first classical meeting of the Musical Union, and Mr Bilet's pianoforte soirée. On Wednesday will be the fourth of Mr. Hullah's monthly concerts, the fourth of the London Wednesday Concerts, the second meeting of the Beethoven Quartett Society, and the meeting of Salaman's Choral Society. On Thursday will be Mdlle Spyer's soirée musicale, and on Saturday will be the second of the Royal Academy Concerts.

Amongst the musical arrivals are Grisi, Lablache, Mario, Gardoni, Mdlle. Ilma de Murzka, a pianist from Vienna; Mdlle. Clauss, the pianist from Paris; Messrs. Mullenhaer, the violinists; Herr Laub, the violinist; Mdme. Sophie Cruvelli, Mdme. Pleyel, the pianist; M. Blumenthal, the pianist, &c. Ernst and Vieuxtemps are expected in the course of the season.

Mdlle. Monti, who created such a sensation last season, at Her Majesty's Theatre, as the dumb Fenella, recently died in Milan, from apoplexy.

Halévy's "Juif Errant" has been postponed at the Grand Opera in Paris until next year. Meyerbeer has been elected honorary member of the Academy Sophia, at Prague. Mdme. Persiani, Signori Tamburini, Fozzolini, and Rossi, have been performing at Konigsberg

BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION.

A conference was held, on Wednesday, at Stra-deen House, Knightsbridge, between Lord Campbell, the Dean of St. Pauls, and Mr. Grote, as referees, and the chief members of the Book Trade, on the one hand, and opponents, Messrs. Bickers and Bush, Mr. John Chapman, and Mr Bentley, were invited to attend, but neglected to avail themselves of the invitation. The deputation was introduced by Mr. Murray. The business was then opened by Lord Campbell, who read the letters inviting the conference, and also letters from Mr. Bickers and Mr. Chapman, declining to be present.

Mr Longman then, as chairman of the association, opened the case on the part of the booksellers. He commenced by asserting, as first principles, that a fixed price for all books was most desirable, leading to a uniform practice throughout the kingdom, and tending to the benefit of both the public and of the retailers of books. He showed, next, that it was a peculiar advantage possessed by the manufacturers of books, that the whole edition of each work being disposed of, a fixed price became easy and natural. He then traced back the history of associations like the present to the year 1812, or even an earlier date. He showed the success which had attended those associations, and ended by asserting that the very prices of many of the book involved, so far as it was possible, the maintenance of that price. Without this it was useless to fix the price at all. If not maintained, the fixed price became a nullity, a dedusion, and almost a fraud.

Mr. Bain followed on the same side, and showed, by his own experience, the necessity of encouraging and supporting a large body of retailers in all parts of the kingdom, which could be in no sense the case if the present profits largely reduced. Without such a body of retailers, the new works of unknown authors would scarcely ever become known to the public. Were this case exterminated, it would be impossible for publishers to venture on any works except those of known and established authors. In the way the rising talent of the literary world would be almost wholly suppressed.

Mr. Douglas, secretary of the Edinburgh Association, stated that that association included 172 out of the whole number of 179 booksellers found in Edinburgh and Glasgow; and that in all Scotland there were not six dissentients from the principles of the association.

Mr Parker, of Oxford, stated, that the booksellers of that town were unanimous in their support of the association. He added, that the German booksellers maintained a similar association; and read a letter from Mr. Freund in support of its principles, and another from Mr. Tauchnitz, of Leipsic, to the same effect. Mr. Tauchnitz then thanked Lord Campbell and the other referees, for the patient hearing they had given, and left in their hands the following "brief view of the case:"

"A fixed price for all books, settled by the author and publisher, is des rable for the sake of the public, is essential to the respectability of the trade, and is conducive to the general interest of literature.

"A fixed price for books being fixed ought to be maintained. Its maintenance, by all means not illegal or immoral, is right and proper.

"The only means employed by the trade consist in a refusal to deal with parties who set aside this fixed price. Such refusal cannot be shown to be either illegal or immoral Therefore no reason exists why external influence should be used to overrule that system which the trade have adopted with a l but absolute unanimity for the regulation of their own affairs."

Lord Campbell, receiving the various papers and letters which were handed to him, expressed his regret at the absence of the dissentients. He desired that they should once more be invited to attend, but was unable to fix an earlier period for the conclusion of the subject than the Monday or Tuesday in Whitsun we k

The deputation then withdrew.

COLUMN OF LIGHT.—(From a Correspondent.)—In the neighbourhood of Doncaster, on Sunday evening, after the setting of the sun, there appeared a vertical column of light, at, or nearly at, the point at which the sun descended below the horizon. Its altitude was about 10 degrees, its breadth, about three degrees; the colour of the light the same as that of the golden reflection of the setting sun, and deeper where clouds intersected the column. Its duration was short, and it disappeared with the reflection in the heavens left by the sun, or before the latter had faded away. It reappeared on Monday night, but was far less brilliant, and its position a few degrees more southward

Letters from Vich, in Catalonia, state that the sanguinary bandit, El Son, who has for many years been the terror of the mountainous districts, has been captured, with one of his accomplices, and the hostess of the tavern who had secreted him. Bon had already made himself wealthy by kidnapping and ransoming wealthy farmers, and might, it he had lived, have regarded himself as a gentleman; but his thirst for old and love of adventure kept him in his old haun's til he was taken.

On Tuesday night Messrs. Cooper and Brothers' manufactory for patent tallow candles, at Manchester, being a building three stories in height, was destroyed by fire. The damage in stock is estimated at £6000, and to the building at £150 or £2000 The stock, however, is insured to the extent of £4000, and the building is fully insured. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as there had been no light in the room where it commenced throughout the day.

At the weekly meeting of the Society of Arts held on Wednesday evening—Mr. Apsley Pellatt presiding—Professor George Shaw, of Queen's College, Birmingham, delivered an interesting lecture on the manufacture of glass, being the 17th lecture illustrative of the Great Exhibition.

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

On Saturday last, the Solicitor General Sir Fitzroy Kelly was elected for Harwich, without opposition.

Aylesbury.—A numerous and influential meeting of the liberal voters of Aylesbury has resolved to ask Dr Layard to come forward as a candidate at the next e ection, in the room of Mr. Bethell.

Bewdley.—It is understood that the sitting member, Lord Mandeville, does not offer himself again, but will be a candidate for Hunt ngdonshire.

Bury.—Mr. Frederick Peel addressed his friends, for the second time, in the Town-hall, Bury, on Monday evening. The address was by ticket, and there was a crowded assembly. The hon. gentleman having expressed himself strongly in favour of Free Trade, proceeded to reply to a question put to him in reference to the College of Maynooth. The grant to Maynooth had been conver ted into a permanent provision in 1845, and he thought it would not be withdrawn, even if it was thought a vicious vote, without a breach of faith to all who had undertaken certain duties and responsibilities in dependence upon it. Besides, a considerable change had taken place in the present state of opposition to the Government, and with the Roman Catholic priests so dependent upon their people for their world y sub-istence, having a union with them in a common cau e, and these latter so determined to the established Government or the Protestant Church. It should be the aim to raise the character of the priest-, by giving them education in their own country, rather than by forcing them to seek it abroad, so that their actions might be in accord, if not in unison with ours and principles. He declared himself against the ballot, but in favour of some means which should put a stop to corruption and undue action at elections, and concluded with an eloquent peroration in favour of the preservation of our present institutions, in the use of which England had attained her present glorious state. A resolu ion approving of Mr. Peel as a candidate was then carried without a dissentient voice, and the meeting broke up.

Cashel.—Sir Timothy O'Brien has published his address to his present constituents, the electors of Cashel.

Cockermouth.—General Wyndham will contest this borough at the ensuing election as a " Free-trade supporter of Lord Derby "

Coleraine.—In compliance with a requisition from a body of the Coleraine electors, Lord Naas has signified his intention of presenting himself, for the second time, as a candidate for that borough, after the dissolution of Parliament.

Cumberland (East Division).—Mr. Marshall and G. H. Head, Esq., of Kirkoswald, have come forward to oo in the field

Evesham.—Lord Marcus Hill, contrary to everybody's expectations, has announced his intention of retiring from Parliamentary life. Mr Grenville C. L. Berkeley, of Cheltenham, has issued an address to the e-electors. Both he and Sir H Willoughby, the Protectionist member, are in town

Devon (North) —The Devon and Exeter Protection Society have threatened the co-operation of this district with a second Protection candidate, in opposition to Mr. George Stuck ey Buck, son of the present member (L. W. Buck, Esq.), in opposition to Sir Thomas Acland, who has confessed himself staunch to Free-trade principles. Mr. G. S Buck has, however, declined the stand.

Dronfield Borough.—Mr. T. M Cantwell, solicitor, of Dublin, has addressed the electors of this borough. He declares himself a firm opponent of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, and an advocate for a repeal of the Union.

Dundalk.—Mr. Bowyer, an English Roman Catholic barrister, is announced as a candidate for this borough.

Edinburgh.—Sir William Gibson Craig has announced his intention of retiring from the representation of this city.

Essex (North).—A requisition is in course of signature to H. J. Conyers, Esq., of Copt Hall, Epping, to allow himself to be put in nomination for this division of the county, in opposition to Major Beresford.

Evesham.—A rumour is current that Mr. Hobhouse, M.P. for Lincoln, is to be a candidate for Free-trade and Libera principles. Sir Henry Willoughby is expected to visit Evesham in a few days.

Finsbury.—The electors of the borough of Finsbury have resolved to present the following requisition to Mr. James Wyld, M.P. for Bodmin, which has already received several hundred signatures:—" To James Wyld, Esq., M.P., Park-villa, Regent's-park. We, the undersigned, duly qualified electors of the borough of Finsbury, respectfully request you to become a candidate at the next date to represent us in the Imperial Parliament at the ensuing election, and we pledge ourse-ves to give you our undivided support and interest."

Galway.—A local paper states that Lord Dunkellin has resolved to relinquish his intended contest for the representation of that county.

Gateshead.—This borough has been actively canvassed by Messrs. Mutt, Walters, and Liddell.

Glasgow.—Mr. Macgregor has addressed the electors. He concludes as follows:—" Considering the strife and the expenses of a doubtful election, and however great the honour it would be to be no longer your representative, I deem it just to you, and as a common-sense decision on my part, not to ask you again to e ect me, unless so full a manifestation shall be made by yourselves, that there may be no room to apprehend a defeat." His strong-y recommends his colleague, Mr. Hastie

Greenock.—At a meeting of the electors of Greenock lately held, resolutions were passed declaring confidence in Lord Melgund. The Lordship was present, and a committee was appointed for conducting his canvass.

South Hants.—The Conservatives have resolved to send a requisition to Lord Henry Scott, entreating him to come forward as candidate for South Hants, and there is every reason to believe his Lordship will comply with such a requisition, and stand as a colleague with Mr. Compton in contesting the county.

Hereford.—Yesterday, to come forward as candidate for Soho. It was highly satisfactory to h.s friends; indeed, his course through the towns has been mostly one of triumph, the horses having been taken from his carriage, and himself and friends drawn into the town amidst the enthusiastic applause of the people. Mr. Booker continued his canvass in Passion-week; and, after what is described to have been a successful canvass at Ledbury, dined with a party of Protectionists, and addressed them in a speech of some length on the possible restoration of Protection.

Lambeth.—An address has been extensively circulated by a large body of the electors of Lambeth, inviting the co-operation of all Free-traders in the borough, to secure the re-election of the Right Hon. Charles Tennyson D'Eyncourt and W. Williams, Esq.

Louth.—The electors of the county of Louth have, in meeting assembled, declared their sense of their present representatives, Messrs Bellew and Fortescue, have forfeited the confidence of the constituency. The Tenant League will make an effort there to provide seats for their hangers on.

Northumberland.—It is generally understood that Sir G. Grey's return for North Northumberland will be unopposed, and that Lord Ossulton will retire to make room for Lord Lovaine.

Norwich.—Mr. Wyatt, M.P., the Hon. Edward Smith, and Mr. Gisborne, have severally issued an address as candidates at the approaching election for this borough. They all profess to be Free-traders and Reformers, but Mr Gisborne is the only candidate that addresses the ballot.

Nottinghamshire (North).—The Nottingham Journal says that Lord Robert Clinton is prosecuting his canvass with so much success that his return for the division is almost certain.

Nottinghamshire (South).—Lord Newark's address appeared on Saturday last. He declares his determination to support the Derby Ministry.

Orkney.—Mr. Traill Dennison, M.P. for Norwich, has just issued an address to the electors of this place, in which he says: "I am not prepared to vote for any measure calculated to create more class interests, at the expense of the general welfare of the community, or to disturb the present great source of revenue under which agriculture is now suffering. I am satisfied that the evil may be greatly lessened, if not removed, without the necessity of re imposing a tax upon the people's food."

Preston.—Various communications have passed between Henry Rakes, Esq., of Chester, and the committee of the Preston Conservative Association and Registration Society, with a view to the introduction to the constituency of Preston of Conservatism. Mr. Charles Rakes is son of the venerable Commissioner Rakes, of Chester, and is himself registrar of that diocese. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Derby at the last general election.

Reading.—Mr. Stanford, M.P., in his address to his constituents, states his intention to contest the borough on the dissolution of Parliament.

Rose (New).—Mr. Charles Gavan Duffy, the proprietor of the Nation newspaper, in Dublin, and Sir Thomas Redington, the late Under-Secretary for Ireland, are the rival candidates for the representation of this borough. Sir Thomas Redington, though professing the Roman Catholic religion, is opposed by the Catholic Defence Association, on the ground of being a member of that Government that passed the Ecclesiastical Titles Act.

Shaftesbury.—Three candidates are in the field for this borough; viz. Mr. Tomline, Mr. E. H. Baldock, and Mr. Heathcote. Mr. Tomline, in offering himself again, addresses the electors as a determined Free-trader. Mr. Baldock pronounces in favour of Protection.

Staffordshire (North) —Mr. Adderley and Mr. Smith Child have issued addresses. Both candidates appear to consider that the question of direct protection to agriculture is already virtually decided, and that it would be injurious to that interest to attempt its revival. They are nevertheless supporters of the present Ministry. Mr. Adderley, in his address, states that his attention to the subject of colonization was recently called by Lord Derby in his offer of the Secretaryship of the Board of Control to his Government.

Stoke-upon-Trent.—The friends of Alderman Copeland and Mr. Ricardo have been busily engaged in canvassing the electors in the various districts. Both parties speak with confidence of success.

Sunderland.—On Tuesday forenoon, Mr. George Hudson, M.P., arrived from London, and met the elec ors in the Committee-rooms, high-street. In his address to them, the hon. gentleman, while condemning the hasty manner in which the Corn laws were repea ed, which repea., he contended, had cost great misery upon important interests in this country, and that he now found he was placed in the unwilling and painful position to turn more than he himself A though he did not think the Navigation laws could be reimposed, he thought that burdens such as light dues and the duty on timber should be removed from the shipping interest. He then proceeded to notice the other great questions at issue, and said he was opposed to the ballot and to a repeal of the Maynooth grant Tavistock.—Mr. George Byng has addressed the electors, and declared himself in favour of Free Trade and progressive reform. He is opposed by Mr. Samuel Carter.

Waterford.—Mr. William Conlngham, of London, is one of the candidates for Waterford. He is spoken of as a " determined opponent of the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill," whence it is to be inferred that he will come recommended by the Defence Association. Mr. Carew O'Dwyar has already taken the field.

NATIONAL SPORTS

The York Spring meeting—wanting a " Dutchman and Voltigeur" match to make it genera ly attractive—comes off on Tuesday and Wednesday next, with only an average list; the "pub c money," however, is contributed so liberally, and the north-country folk are so devoted to the sport, that we may look for sufficiency of racing and a good attendance. Two days at Maton, immediately following York and a minor affair on Tuesday at Leamington, which is certain of will do his own account to complete the English "cir cle" for the week. The Carnarvon April Meeting commences on Tuesday, and the Lenninster and Bedwelty (Wales) Steeplechases on Thursday. The only coursing fixture is the county of Cork on Tuesday.

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

CLARET 2 to 1 on Arbiter.

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

4 to 1 agst Homebrewed	7 to 1 agst Middleton

DERBY.

6 to 1 agst Hobbie Noble	17 to 1 agst Uralo	33 to 1 agst Kingston
3 to 1 ——— Ld the Hurry (t)	16 to 1 ——— Alger	25 to 1 ——— Phantom
13 to 1 ——— Caverthrone	20 to 1 ——— Ascrea	40 to 1 ——— K. of Trumps (t)
13 to 1 ——— Alfred the Great	25 to 1 ——— Homebrewed (t)	100 to 1 ——— Lapidist

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING —Monday.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added by the Jockey Club.—Mr. J. Osborne's Lady Agnes (Wells), 1. Captain Delme's The Little Savage (Harsing), 2.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Exeter (F. Butler), 1. Mr. R. H. Nevill's Telescope (Pettit), 2.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Hesperus (F. Butler), 1. Mr. Payne's Wingmund (Fairman).

The Riddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each.—The Duke of Bedford's ch c Hugo walked over.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.—Lord Ribbledale's Livermere walked over.

TUESDAY.

Handicap Plate of £50.—Mr. Greville's Caribou (Flatman), 1. Captain Lo dsborough's Choppins (Stevens), 2.

Plate of £50.—Mr. Wyndham's Sabra, 1.—Duke of Richmond's b f by Lanercost out of Estelle (Flatman), 1. Duke of Bedford's Gossip (F. Butler), 2.

Tuesday's Riddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each.—Lord Ribbledale's The Nabob (Jeffery), 1. Mr. F. Parr's Wee Jeanie (Charlton), 2.

Newmarket Handicap of 25 sovs each, with 200 added —Sir R. Pigot's Father Thames (Cowley), 1. Duke of Richmond's Officious (Flatman), 2.

WEDNESDAY.

Subscription Plate of £50.—Mr. F. Parr's Samia (Hiett), 1. Capt. Delme's The Little Savage (Charlton), 2.

Column Stakes of 50 sovs each. Mr. Batson's Kalidida (Sly), 1. General Anson's Dynamis (Charlton), 2.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Delamere's Harrier (Charlton), 1. Mr. Barnes's Neck-ace (Fairman), 2.

THURSDAY.

Handicap Plate of £70.—Peacock, 1. Sir Antonio, 2.

Handicap Plate of £50.—Sabra, 1. Sagacity, 2.

Handicap Plate of £50 sovs.—Alcoran, 1. Stockwell, 2.

Sweepstakes (Optional Sellers).—Mr. Keyling, 1. Foobabers, 2.

Subscription Plate of £50. Bridesmaid, 1. Od Lad, 2.

Claret Stakes —Mountain Deer, 1. Arioso, 2.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE SPRING MEETING.—MONDAY.

Hunters' Stakes of 10 sovs. each.—Mr. E. Johnson's Jack of Acomb (Mr. Gregson), 1. Mr Baker's Kilderby (Owner), 2.

Ladies' Plate of 10 sovs.—Mr. E. Johnson nd Child of the Mist (Arkle), 1. Mr. Hudson's Gray (J. Simpson), 2.

Welter Stakes of 2 sovs. each, and 15 added.—Capt. Wood nd Miss Wood (Owner), 1. Mr. Gregson's Count Borowlaski (Owner), 2.

BIRMINGHAM STEEPLECHASES. Monday.

The Free Handicap of 5 sovs each, and 25 added.—Mr. D'Arcy's Gulnare, 1. Mr. Blank's Paymaster, 2.

The Birmingham Grand Midland Steeplechase Handicap of 25 sovs each, with 100 added.—Mr. S. Lucy's Tipperary Boy, 1. Captain F. R. Forster's Cæsar, 2.

FOX HUNTING IN WARWICKSHIRE.—Negotiations which have recently been pending between Mr. K. J. Barnard, master of the Warwickshire hounds, and the inhabitants of Leamington, have terminated in Mr. Barnard consenting, during the next season, to hunt the North Warwickshire country twice a week, and the South Warwickshire three days a week, with meets in every respect advantageous to the town of Leamington.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Notwithstanding that the demand for money for commercial purposes has steadily increased, rather an extensive business has been transacted at the Consol Market this week, and prices have advanced almost daily. This state of things must, of course, be chiefly attributed to the immense amount of surplus cash at the time seeking employment, the pacific nature of our foreign advices, and the certain prospect of large additions being made from time to time to the stock of bullion in the Bank of England. With the exception of those at New York, the foreign exchanges continue favourable to the exportation of bills upon London on most of the Bourses, hence, it is possible that balances will be remitted in the shape of bullion. With reference to the productiveness of the Australian gold mines, we perceive this week another large consignment for the purpose of purchasing gold on the spot. This association, called the "Gold Importation Company," is calculated to be of much service to the miners; and there is every reasonable prospect of a good return upon the capital invested.

The Consol Account has passed off extremely well. The highest price of Consols, during the period it was open, was 99⅜; the lowest, 99⅛—showing an extreme fluctuation of ¼ per cent. The Bulls have, therefore, settled good profits. Money on "call" is now worth only ½ per cent. The rates of discount on first-class paper are ¾ to 2½ ; treasury bills, warrants, &c., 3 to 5 ; other bills and securities, 5½ to 7 per cent. per annum. The Bank rate still continues at 2½ per cent. Upon first-rate securities; advances are made upon stock at 1½. On Monday the Three per Cent. Consols were done at 99⅜ ; on the following day they advanced to 99⅝ ; but, on Wednesday, the market received a slight check, arising from numerous sales of Stock on the part of those who had merely purchased for the dividends, the Three per Cents left off at 99⅜. About £240,000 was taken in the shape of specie, and £100,000 withdrawn from the market on Thursday. The transactions in Consols, on Thursday, were large, and much firmness was given to the market by the arrival of 200 000 dollars in gold by the Eagle. The fluctuations in the value of the Consol was very small on that day, the price for Account, in the first instance, having been done at 99⅝, to 99⅜, and afterwards at 99⅝ and 99⅜. Yester

NEW BOOKS, &c.

New ready, at all the Booksellers

BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1853. New Edition, Revised and Corrected throughout to the present time from the Personal Communications of the Nobility. &c. In large vol royal 8vo, comprising as much matter as twenty ordinary volumes, with 1500 engravings of arms incorporated with the text. 50s bound

"The most complete of the Peerages."—Chronicle.

"The standard book of reference touching the aristocracy."—Post.

COLBURN and Co., Publishers, Marlborough-st.

Just published, in 8vo, price 12s. 6d. cloth, the Second Edition, with Plates and Woodcuts, of NAVAL ARCHITECTURE. A Treatise on Ship-building and the Rig of Clippers; with suggestions for a new Method of Laying Down Vessels. By Lord ROBERT MONTAGU, M.P.

COLBURN and Co. Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY NEW EDITION

In small 8vo, price 6s. cloth,

THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY from the Sacred Scriptures. In Two Parts: Part I. Exhortations to Repentance and a Holy Life. Part II. Directions for the Closet; a Prayer for Every Day in the Week. New Edition, edited by the Rev THOMAS DALE, M.A., Canon of St Paul's, and Vicar of St Pancras.

RIVINGTONS, St Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo-place.

NEW.—In small 8vo, price 6s 6d,

THE ENGLISH BEE-KEEPER; or, Suggestions for the Practical Management of Amateur and Cottage Apiaries, on Scientific Principles. With Illustrative Notice. By a COUNTRY CURATE; author of a Series of Papers on Bees in The Cottage Gardener.

LONGMAN and Co. St Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo-place.

Now ready, at all the booksellers, price 1s. bound, with Portraits, &c. VOL. VII. of LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND. By AGNES STRICKLAND. New, Revised, and Cheaper Edition. Embellished with Portraits of every Queen.

The Seventh Volume of this interesting work comprises the Lives of Mary II., Queen Regnant, Consort of William III.

N.B. One more volume will complete the work.

COLBURN and Co, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR KINGSTON'S POPULAR WORKS FOR THE YOUNG.

MARK SEAWORTH; a Tale of the Indian Ocean. With Illustrations. Post 8vo, 6s, cloth.

Mr Kingston discourses so admirably about adventure, that we long to be...with him. No more interesting nor more safe book can be put into the hands of youth."—Art-Journal.

PETER the WHALER; his Early Life and Adventures in the Arctic Regions. With Engravings. Fcap 8vo. 6s, cloth

"A book which the young must read who they have once begun it."—Athenæum.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St Paul's Churchyard.

MRS R LEE'S POPULAR WORKS FOR THE YOUNG.

ANECDOTES of the HABITS and INSTINCT of ANIMALS. With Illustrations by H WEIR. Fcap 8vo, 6s. 6d. cloth

"This is a charming book, and full of information. Never was there a better narrator of animal habits. Great care has been taken to furnish only well-substantiated facts."—Spectator.

ADVENTURES in AUSTRALIA; or, the Wanderings of Captain Spencer in the Bush and the Wilds. With Illustrations. Fcap 8vo. 6s. cloth.

THE AFRICAN WANDERERS. Second Edition. With Engravings. Fcap 8vo. 6s. cloth.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St Paul's Churchyard.

NEW WORKS FOR THE YOUNG

GOOD in EVERY THING; or, the Early History of Gilbert Harland. By MRS BARWELL. With Engravings. Royal 16mo. 3s 6d. cloth

The moral of this exquisite little tale will do more good than a thousand set tasks, abounding with dry and uninteresting truisms."—Neil's Newspaper

"THE DOLL and her FRIENDS; or, Memoirs of the Lady Seraphina. By the Author of "Lasters from Madras." With Illustrations by PRICE. Small 8vo. 5s 6d cloth.

STORIES of JULIAN and his PLAYFELLOWS. Written by his Mamma. With Engravings. Small 4to. 3s 6d plain, 5s 6d coloured.

TALES from CATLAND. Written for Little Kittens. By an OLD TABBY. With Illustrations by HARRISON WEIR. 5s 6d plain, 7s 6d coloured

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St Paul's Churchyard.

COMPANION ATLAS

To Humboldt's "Cosmos." Mrs Somerville's "Physical Geography," &c. &c.

This day is published,

A SCHOOL ATLAS of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY, illustrating, in a Series of Original Designs, the Elementary Facts of Geology, Hydrology, Meteorology, and Natural History; in which the subject is treated in a more simple and elementary manner than in the previous Works of the same Author. By ALEXANDER KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.S.E., &c. &c. Author of the "National Atlas" of "Physical Atlas" &c. Royal 8vo, bound in 8vo, 12s 6d; or on large paper, royal 4to, half-bound morocco, 25s.

"Engages the mind for the abstract pages of Somerville, the luminous researches of Lyell, the records of Murchison, the arguments of Liebeg, and for the lofty and sublime descriptions of Humboldt."—The Sun.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author, uniform with the above,

A SCHOOL ATLAS of GENERAL DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY, constructed with a Special View to the Purposes of Sound Instruction. Half-bound in 8vo, 12s 6d; in quarto half-morocco, 25s.

"These two publications are important contributions to educational literature."—Spectator.

Just published, small 4to, 3s,

THE ENTHUSIAST; or, the Straying Angel. A Poem. By JAMES ORTON, Author of "Exotics."

It affords an adequate assurance that he possesses of intellectual attributes, qualities of something nobler than mere skill in versification. * * * It is not only lofty and definite in purpose but original, and to a certain extent also artistic in construction. * * * It is started here and there with beauties of no inconsiderable splendour and originality. * * * The flight is considerable splendour and originality. * * * The flight is considerable, and for the most part sustained by the boldest learns in modern accurately defined. Through the whole there is a passion for the nobler features of creation. * * * More expressional of exceeding grace scattered through the volume, and there is much to admire in the supplementary discreations."—Sun.

WILLIAM PICKERING, 177, Piccadilly.

DR LAYARD'S OWN NARRATIVE.

This day, with numerous Woodcuts, post 8vo, 9s,

NINEVEH and its REMAINS; a Popular Account of his Researches and Discoveries at Ancient Nineveh. By A H LAYARD, D.C.L. Arranged by Himself for general information.

"The various attempts that have been made to give popular descriptions of the discoveries of Mr Layard's discoveries have been necessity of placing them in a popular form before the public."—Economist.

"Mr Layard was induced to undertake this publication on account of the great curiosity and eagerness of the public to peruse an authentic account of them."—Morning Herald.

"It is with much pleasure that we introduce to our readers this extensive abridgment of one of the most interesting contributions of the modern press. Such men as Mr Layard deserve the gratitude of posterity."—Evangelical Magazine

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. CLXXX., is Published THIS DAY.

CONTENTS:—

1. Sir Roger de Coverley
2. Horace Walpole Garland
3. Diary of General Patrick Gordon
4. Recent Epics
5. Comparative Anatomy—Professor Owen
6. Sebastian Rabmaay in England, &c, 1848
7. Cannon, Musket, and Rifle
8. California versus Free Trade
9. Elgin Marbles and Buckingham Papers: Lord Mahon's History, Vols V. and VI.
10. Lamartine's History of the Restoration
11. Lord John Russell and the Earl of Derby

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE AUTHOR OF "MARGARET MAITLAND."

Now ready at all the Libraries, in 3 Vols.

ADAM GRAEME, of MOSSGRAY. A New Story of Scottish Life. By the Author of "Passages in the Life of Mrs Margaret Maitland," "Merkland," and "Caleb Field."

II.

THE PERILS of FASHION. A Novel. 2 vols.

"We question if ever the perils of fashionable life were more vividly exhibited than in this charming romance, which will however, we think, very popular."—Globe.

III

ADVENTURES of a BEAUTY. By Mrs. CROWE, Author of "Susan Hopley," &c. 3 vols

"A tale of fascinating interest."—John Bull.

IV.

SAM SLICK'S TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR, 2 vols.

"Superlatively entertaining volumes."—John Bull.

DARTON and Co. Publishers, and Holborn-hill.

CHURCH SERVICES, Bibles, and Prayer-books.—The cheapest and largest assortment in London is at HOLMES'S, 35, Oxford-street. Church Services, well bound, 2s; with clasps, 2s 6d; or in two vols, in case, 3s 6d; large printed Church Services, 6s; elegant Gems, velvet Church Services, with morocco cases 21s—very suitable for a present; Bibles, at 2d; handsomely bound in French morocco, 3s 6d; School Bibles, good print, 1s 6d; Pulpit Bibles, 3s 6d; large print Family Bibles, 5s 6d; Prayer-books, 3d; Testaments, 6d. A very large assortment in various elegant bindings. An inspection is respectfully solicited.—HOLMES'S, 195, Oxford-street.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

TO THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Just published, royal 8vo, price 2s 6d, by post 3s.

STANBURY'S PRACTICAL GUIDE to LITHOGRAPHY, and the various uses of the materials supplied by him at his Manufactory, No. 20 GREAT NEW-STREET, DOUGHTY-SQUARE.—This little treatise is a perfect compendium of all the considerata connected with this delightful branch of art, and forms a perfect vade mecum to the student in this interesting department of chemical science.

"This little brochure cannot fail to be most acceptable to the admirers of the fine arts."—Morning Post.

"To the hasty tourist this must be an invaluable instructor."—Sunday Times.

Published by HOULSTON and STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster-row.

This day, Third Edition, much enlarged, 4s 6d,

RECREATIONS in GEOLOGY. By Miss R M ZORNLIN.

Of the same series,

RECREATIONS in PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. By Miss R M ZORNLIN. Fourth Edition. 4s

RECREATIONS in ASTRONOMY. By the Rev. L. TOMLINSON. Third Edit 4on. 4s 6d

RECREATIONS in CHEMISTRY. B. T. GRIFFITHS. Second Edition. 5s

WORLD of WATERS; or, RECREATIONS in HYDROLOGY. By Miss R M ZORNLIN. Second Edition.

LONDON: JOHN W PARKER and SON, West Strand.

THE LADIES' COMPANION, beautifully illustrated with a Portrait of the late Lord George Bentinck, price One Shilling, contains:—Memoir of Madame Du Deffand; by the late Countess of Blessington—For the Fun of It; by T S Arthur—Easter in Poland—Autobiography of Laura Studleigh; by Mrs D Ogilvy.—New Books: Disraeli's Biography of Lord George Bentinck (with Portrait).—The Invasion of England; by the Rev. G. R. Gleig—The Merry, Laughing Girl: by the composer of "A Young Lady's Mo" which May Now has reached an edition of Twenty-five. The present is a lively, sparkling production, calculated to charm wherever it is heard."—Musical World.—Country and Home Life, A Letter from Paris (concluded).—The Garden.—Gossip from Paris, &c &c.

ROCKINSON and TUXFORD, 246, Strand.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE for APRIL. —Embellishments. A Windsor Prize Heifer, and Smithfield Prize Leicester Wethers.—Contents: The Diseases of Sheep—Prize Cottage Allotments—Report of the Council of England and Improvement Society of Ireland. London Farmers' Club—Agricultural Education On Cattle—Sheep and Peas. The Mechanics of Motion. Agricultural Geology. The Rearing and Fattening of Stock. Artificial Manures. Labour and the Poor. Agricultural Intelligence. On Seed Trade. The Rural Population Abroad. On Growing Non-Existence of Wild Cattle. Distribution of the Wild Cattle. Agricultural Statistical Education. Tenant Right. The Statistical Society. Agricultural Reports. Review of the Corn and Cattle Markets. Meteorological Diary. Calendar of Horticulture, &c—ROCKINSON and TUXFORD, 246, Strand.

THE SPORTING MAGAZINE for APRIL, 1852.—Embellishments: Copenhagen, the Property Cadger of his Grace the Duke of Wellington; and "A Family Circle," by J S Hunt, from a Painting by Wright.—Contents: Sporting Diary for February. Ranby to Match; by Craven. Copenhagen, by Cadger The Life of Tilbury Nogo, Esq; by Foxglove. Racing as it is. Harry Hieover Horse-Selling Stables—Sporting Anecdotes, &c; by John Bull. Old Poodle, by Young Pup. Old Hunters and the Druid Hounds and Hunting Establishments, &c. Sporting Tour by Lord William Lennox Angling Reminiscences. Shooting Reminiscences. Cricket. Pedestrianism. Rowing. Yachting. Pugilistic. Stallions for the Season; by Mango. The Coquet Dale Border Songs. Country Quarters. Launceston in the Times, by Peverel. The Pytchley Meet at Crick; by Harraud. Public Amusements. Notes of the Month. Rise of the Odds. Turf Register, &c. Prices 2s 6d. ROCKINSON and TUXFORD, 246, Strand.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MAGAZINE for APRIL, price 9d, contains a plate of ENAAKE-BROUGH CHURCH, Devon, with a Pattern. The Answer to a Question; Sermon for the Week. Christ to the Believer: a Sermon (for Good Friday); by the late Rev R. L. Jones, A. The Missionary Meeting. Sacred Sonnets. Luther at Worms (C Montgomery, M.A.) Deaths of eminent Christians: Bishop Andrews—Archbishop Usher (Rev E Cassan, M.A.) Bishop Jeremy Taylor. The Book of Common Prayer; by the Rev C H Davis, B.A. The Resurrection a Sermon (Easter Sunday); by the Rev B B Hatchard, M.A. Sermon for the Week: no Revelation of God (Rev J Hollins). The Bizarre Mind; by the Rev Isaiah Kelly, A.M. Indians (with Engravings). The Church Catechism; by the Rev B Hobson, LL.B. An Ordination Sermon; by the Rev H S Bridgeman. Conformation by Confirmation. Sacred Sonnets. Dr Pusey's Eirenicon. Armenian Reformation. How should Protestants meet Romanists? by the Rev H Stebbing, D.D. Sermon for the Week: Memorial of the Rev G Morley. Missions at Home. The Synagogue; by H W Richter. The Tomb of Esther (Rev S Burder, D.D.) Thought for Every Day (Biographical) The Jesuit Spy; by the Rev D Kelly, M.A. Juvenile Reading—Treasure Found. Perils of Faith. Public Worship. Notice of Books. Ecclesiastical Intelligence, &c.

JOHN HUGHES, Ave-Maria-lane, and all booksellers.

NEW BOOKS for APRIL.—The First Volume of the

ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY.

Demy 8vo, containing 600 pages in each volume, handsomely printed in a new and very elegant type, illustrated in the highest style of art, and substantially bound in cloth gilt, to each volume, or elegantly bound in calf gilt and lettered, 12s.

NINEVEH and its PALACES. A Narrative of the Discoveries at Nineveh and Babylon. With Details of Manners and Customs, Researches in Babylonia, Assyria, Media, and Armenia. With Descriptions of the Exhumed Sculptures, and particulars of the Early History of Assyria, Babylonia, and the Primitive Empire. By JAMES BONOMI Illustrated with above Two Hundred Engravings, principally from the Assyrian Remains. This volume contains the Cream of the Assyrian Remains recently received at the British Museum.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON COOKERY-BOOK. Published with the sanction of Her Majesty's Commissioners of Victualling, and 1000 Original Receipts, embracing the whole Science and Art of Cookery. By PETER LUMBLEY, Cook to the Queen at Buckingham Palace, Earl Grey, Lord Stafford, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, sprinkled edges, price 12s.

BOSWELL'S JOURNAL of a TOUR to the HEBRIDES, complete volume to "Boswell's Life of Johnson." By ROBERT CHAMBERS, Esq, of Invernam. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 12s 6d. In this volume will be incorporated a complete Index to "Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson."

A STORY with a VENGEANCE; or, How many Joints may go to a Tale. Inscribed to the grander number of Slower Tradesmen, and dedicated by Permission to Mr AWDS B BEACH and Mr SHIBLEY BROOKS. With Send Engraving by John Leech, beg. Mr Sam Slick's Sons in Search. Crown 8vo, in wrapper, price 1s; neat cloth, sprinkled edges, 1s 6d.

THE POLITICAL WRITINGS of LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. With an original Memoir of his Life to the present date, from authentic sources, Critical Notices, &c. In 2 vols 8vo, cloth, price 21s, with Portrait, now first collected and translated in a complete form. These volumes possess great interest. Among the more prominent works of the Prince which they comprise are "Political Reveries," with the Scheme of a Constitution, published in 1832. "Manual of Artillery." On the Extinction of Pauperism," "Historical Parallels between 1688 and 1833," &c.

Now ready, Second Edition, unabridged,

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. Translated from the German of MADE PFEIFFER. Price 8s 6d. Illustrated with Six Views and Engravings printed in the text, and handsomely bound in One Vol. This edition is embellished with numerous engravings of interesting and picturesque scenes, objects, and adventures during Madame Pfeiffer's bold enterprise. They are an important adjunct and embellishment to the text, and a valuable record of travel in remote lands, which will probably when without illustration from the pencil. This the illustrated edition supplies to a demand fairly created by the world, and offers a cheap, elegant, and complete as admirable work.—Morning Advertiser.

THE MORMONS, or Latter-Day Saints. An Account of the Rise and Progress of this New Religious Sect, with Memoirs of the Life and Character of Joseph Smith, the American Mahomet. Illustrated with Forty Engravings from original sources. Handsomely bound, price 2s 6d. One of the most powerful delineations of modern fanaticism that have issued from the press."—Edinburgh Witness.

Shakspeare's Volume to the "Illustrated London Library" will be entitled

MADAME IDA PFEIFFER'S VISIT to ICELAND and the SCANDINAVIAN NORTH. Illustrated with Ten Engravings. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 2s 6d.

The Visit to Borneo, and Madame Pfeiffer's other Works, as they appear

LONDON BIOGRAPHICAL LIBRARY.

In the Press, and will shortly appear, uniform with "Washington's Life," the First Volume of HAZLITT'S LIFE of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. New Edit 8vo, Revised and Corrected by his son, WILLIAM HAZLITT, Esq. To be completed in Four Volumes. This series will comprise Biographies of eminent Statesmen, Soldiers, Divines, Men of Letters, &c. Post 8vo, cloth, with Portraits and Vignettes, price 5s per volume; or handsomely bound in calf gilt, marbled edges, 10s per volume.

Office of the Illustrated London Library, 227, Strand.

CAUTION.—H. WEATHERLEY, Confectioner, reminds the public that his Registered BEEHIVE HONEY DROPS are the only genuine, and, when taken, will prevent DOUBLE-CHIN. Observe—Registered "Honourable Mention." To avoid spurious imitations, each drop is stamped "Weatherley" Sold by Grocers, Confectioners, Chemists and others.—Factory, 54, Theobald's-road.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH.—Now used in the Royal Laundry.—The Ladies are respectfully requested to ask for GLENFIELD PATENT DOUBLE-REFINED POWDER STARCH, which, for domestic use, now stands unrivalled. Sold by nearly all the Oil and Colourmen and Grocers throughout the Kingdom. Any difficulty in obtaining it, Agents wanted apply to MR H WOTHERSPOON, 40, Dunlop street, Glasgow. London Depôt, WOTHERSPOON MACKAY, and Co, King William-street, E.C.

ALLSOPP'S EAST INDIA, PALE, and other BURTON ALES. The public is respectfully informed the Ales of this season's brewings are now ready for delivery, and may be obtained genuine in casks of 18 gallons and upwards, either singly or in any quantity, at their respective stores, as under, where also a list of the bottlers may be had.—The Brewery, Burton-upon-Trent: 61, King William-street, City, London; Cook-street, Liverpool; High-street, Birmingham; the Exchange, Manchester; Royal Brewery, Dudley; 23, Virginia-street, Glasgow.

NEW MUSIC, &c.

THE STATELY SHIPS RIDE ON (Break, break), 3s, and "March for Kaffirland." 2s, by MRS R CARTRIGHT. "The Day is Dark and Dreary," J L HILLTON, Esq. 3s.

CLOUGH and, 26, Old Bond-street.

THE LAUGHING GALOP. By HENRY FARMER.—"This is one of those felicitous morceaux which at once secures public favour. When performed at the Harmonic Society it immediately became the rage, and has been encored at every performance. It is admirably arranged for the pianoforte, and will be equally welcome in the drawing and concert room."—Vide Review, Post free, 2s 6d.

J WILLIAMS, 123, Cheapside.

OH! CHARMING MAY. Written by P. H. HATCH. Composed by G H RODWELL. Sung by all the public singers. This song, of which 30,000 copies have already been sold, is the popular song of the day, and seems destined to an universal popularity. Price 3s, neat post free. Arrangements of this air for piano, flute and piano, guitar and concertina

J WILLIAMS, 123, Cheapside

DONIZETTI'S I MARTIRI (Les Martyrs). The new version of this celebrated work (which, from its character, may be termed the Italian Huguenots) is now ready, including Flandrin's Arrangements by Mr. W. Harding Calcott, Dobler, &c. The whole copyright of the opera, for this country, belongs to ROBERT COCKS and Co., Publishers to the Queen, 6, New Burlington-street, London

NEW SONGS.—THE YOUNG LADY'S DREAM. I'M A MERRY LAUGHING GIRL. Price 2s each. MDME OURY'S three new songs, "Maud" has just increased in popularity and effective songs. The 'Young Lady's Dream,' descriptive of the fancies of a romantic imagination, is certainly a most happy effect of novel-reading on a romantic imagination, is certainly a most happy effect of novel-reading on a romantic imagination, is certainly and original composition. The whole have a most charming melody. "I'm a Merry, Laughing Girl" is by the composer of 'A Young Lady's Mo'! which May Now has reached an edition of Twenty-five. The present is a lively, sparkling production, calculated to charm wherever it is heard."—Musical World.—Country and Home Life, A Letter from Paris (concluded).—The Garden.—Gossip from Paris, &c &c.

ROCKINSON and TUXFORD, 246, Strand.

HENRY LOVELL and N. J. SPORLE'S NEW SERIES of SONGS.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY is a DANGEROUS TIME. Sacred Song. Compass D to F.

DRAW ROUND the FIRE.

Sacred Song. Compass D to E.

EVERGREEN LEAVES.

Ballad. Key G. Compass D to E.

FAINT ECHOES of LOVE. Key F. Compass C to F.

These will be followed by "Hope Deferred," rendered so popular by Madame Sainton. "Hope Deferred" is the composer's favourite ballad, and the Publishers have pleasure in announcing that it will be published immediately).

Sole Agent, G CASE, 32, New Bond-street

MR. CRIVELLI begs to acquaint his Friends and the Public that a Third Edition of THE ART of SINGING, arranged and newly arranged in the form of Conversational Lessons, with Examples and Exercises, may be had at his residence, 71, Upper Norton-st.; and at all the principal Music-sellers.

PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER, BEALE, and CO. have a great variety of New and Second-hand Pianofortes, of every description, for SALE, HIRE, and SCHOOL PARTNERSHIP. Also, Harmoniums, Concertinas, and other esteemed makers, for sale or hire, 201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street

PEACHEY'S PIANOFORTES, for HIRE, of First-class Manufacture, and of every description and price (terms of moderate hire). The option of purchase. Warerooms (packed free).—G PEACHEY (Maker to the Queen), City of London Pianoforte Manufactory, 73, Bishopsgate-street Within, opposite the Marine Society.

PIANOFORTES at Manufacturing Prices.—Messrs BOLDERNESSER and CO., New Oxford-street, beg to inform their friends and the public that they have reduced the price of their Piccolo Pianofortes, in rosewood, setters, walnut-wood, and oak, to 12 guineas each. These Pianofortes are 78 octaves (C to A) in compass, combine all the latest improvements now possessed by the most eminent makers, are consequence of tone, and finished with the same care and attention that has always been combined. Their manufacturers have for many years, and exchanged if not approved of—A variety of second-hand by Broadwood, Collard, and other makers, from 10 guineas. Also a few double-action Harps by Erard, from £10.—N B. Every description of musical instrument tuned, repaired, and taken in exchange.

THE EYES.—Self-Acting Portable Spring Spectacles for all Ages, never slip from the face, and when removed immediately collapse Sold by THOMAS HARRIS and SON, 52, Great Russell-street, opposite the British Museum, and all respectable opticians. Patentee, ANDERSON, Gravesend.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN.

INFANTS' BASSINETTES and BASKETS, and LADIES' WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITTING, for CAPTAIN, SON, and CO., 69, GRACECHURCH-STREET, LONDON, under especial Female Superintendence. The prices are economical, and the Outfits complete and recherché.

BABY LINEN, of superior work, decidedly CHEAP

Parents of a Numerous Family will find this Establishment replete with economy.

SAMPLES, which may be returned, SENT for inspection, on receipt of a London reference or money-order, which will PRICES, sent. POST-PAID

RODGERS'S IMPROVED SHIRTS, 26s, 31s 6d, and 37s 6d the Half-Dozen, are cut upon a new and perfect principle, and will be found to answer the most elegant fit with the smallest cost. Satisfaction is, as usual, guaranteed, or the money returned.

Printed Price Lists, with particulars and directions for self-measurement, and, if required, patterns of the new Coloured Shirtings, sent free by post.—Address, Straits and post-free.

RODGERS and CO, Improved Shirt-Makers, 59, St Martin's-lane, Charing-cross, London. Established 1829.

Exhibition, by Messrs GAIMES, SANDERS, and MICOL, and which are now held in the highest estimation for their elegant designs, beauty of workmanship, and the many purposes to be obtained, wholesale or retail, of the manufacturers, at 32, Birchin-lane, Cornhill; at their City Establishment, 65, Cheapside, now first exhibited; the principal Courts of England and Scotland, several of the continental cities, and at any of the British colonies. Weight 4 ozs, price 1s, carriage paid, with other hats Sample cases forwarded on receiving remittance.

CORK HATS.—The manufacture of these Hats was so defective last season on the part of most houses, as to cause much complaint, that we have spared no pains in making improvements that has been effected since the introduction of silk Hats, and we are happy to say that we have succeeded in using a material still dearer others of acknowledged reputation from attempting to imitate it. Cork Hats, from their lightness and coolness, are employed skilfully, does form the best material for Hats, being durable from its toughness, and very elegant in appearance, and are now worn by the public universally in use. The public are cautioned to purchase these Hats only of experienced makers. Exhibited at the Great Exhibition, Class 30, No. 125.

IMPORTANT to LADIES.—Mrs. NORTON, 22, Strand, has just prepared for the coming Season a new and elegant assortment of DRESSES in the MOST FASHIONABLE STYLE, with Trimmings to Robes, Dressing Gowns, &c, made in the newest and most approved style; but, in consequence of a fall in the price of the goods, she can submit them for inspection, sale, and will feel obliged to her numerous customers for an early visit to her Show-Rooms, to inspect the jewellery of 1852 with the newest designs. Also, Gentlemen's Hosiery, Gloves, clocks, chittering robes and caps, children's frocks, coats, and trousers, Ladies' fancy hosiery and under clothing; gentlemen's and youth's shirts; and she trusts those Ladies who have always favoured her with their orders will now kindly continue to favour her chase and recommend their friends. A discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed on all purchases for Ready Money. The Show-Rooms are at 22, Strand, 31st March. Wedding orders and general outfits punctually attended to. Good references to say one of the country, or town of necessary order or reference in town.—22, Strand, corner of Adam-street.

BURGLARIES.—CHUBB'S PATENT LOCKS.—On the night of the 31st of January a desperate attempt was made upon the Dundee Bank by a set of accomplished thieves. An iron door secured by CHUBB'S PATENT LOCK was the principal object of attack, and the burglars, having exhausted their skill in trying to pick its lock, resorted to the necessity to blow it open by drilling. After hours' work they were alarmed and made a precipitate retreat, leaving all their instruments behind them, without committing the slightest depredation. Chubb, Cross-street, Manchester, was broken into; the thieves picked eight locks of doors and drawers, and then leaving unsuccessfully endeavoured to pick the Detector Lock on a Chubb's Fireproof Safe, they tried to force it open, but failed. The Lock on the second door of this safe has resisted the attacks of burglars.—CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's churchyard, London; 28, Lord-street, Liverpool; 16, Market-street, Manchester; and Telford's Foundry-fields, Wolverhampton.

FRUIT TREES, SEED BEDS, &c.—NEW TWINE NETTING, to protect the bloom of peach, nectarine, and other trees, against the attacks of the SPARROW, 1½d per yard wide, 2d per yard, 3d per yard, 4 inch mesh ditto, two yards wide, 6d per yard. Strong Netting, two or three yards wide, 1½d per yard, four or six yards wide, 3d per yard, exactly the same as advertised by others at double the above prices. Nets made to order. Canting Nets 1s per yard round completes. Drag Nets for ponds, lakes, and rivers, with purse complete, twelve yards long, 21 twenty yards long, £2. Fine nets complete, 1s per square yard. Rabbit Nets, on cord, twelve yards wide, 30 per yard; or 5s per 5 by 4 yards.

The trade supplied at W. GULLINGFORD'S, 1, Strathmore-terrace, Shadwell. Orders by post punctually attended to

MR. HENRY J. HAYCRAFT begs to inform his Pupils and Friends that he has REMOVED from Queen's-road to 95, Albany-street, Regent's-park.

HOLMES'S NEW STEREOSCOPIC DIA-GRAMS. The SECOND SHEET of twelve exceedingly clear DIAGRAMS is now ready, price 2s. Sold by all booksellers, opticians, and toy dealers. Holmes's original Stereoscope, constructed on the very best principle, price 5s. A Book of Diagrams gratis. Post-office orders addressed to Frederick Holmes, 15, Alfred-street, Bedford-square, will have immediate attention

THE REGISTERED SELF-OPENING UM-BRELLA and PARASOL.—This most beautiful, useful, and simple invention will be ready for the public in a few days.—Offices of the Patentee, Warwick-court, Holborn.

CHESSMEN in Ivory, Bone, and Hard Woods of all kinds, at HALLETT'S Ivory Turnery Manufactory, 83, High Holborn. Try his 4s 6d set. The Trade supplied. N.B.—Ivorie and bone chessmen repaired. Ivory turning taught, at hafed per annum.

REEVES' WATER-COLOURS. REEVES' CUMBERLAND LEAD DRAWING PENCILS. 178, Fenchurch-street, London.

MR. B. H. SMART begs to acquaint his friends that he has REMOVED from Connaught terrace, Edgware-road, to No 37, WYNDHAM STREET, Bryanston square, where his "Practical System of Instruction in Elocution, for Courses of English Literature in Schools and Families, Readings, Lectures, &c, may in future be had.

WRITING RAPIDLY IMPROVED.—Mr. CARRIE, the celebrated writing master, gives LESSONS to Ladies and Gentlemen in his highly improved method, by which their writing (however imperfect) can be rapidly improved into a fine and beautiful style, suitable either for professional or mercantile purposes. Arithmetic and Book-keeping, by Single and Double Entry, practically taught. Prospectuses of terms, &c, may be had at the Establishment, 81, London-street, City Cartulary "National System of Penmanship," "Analytical and Commercial Copy Book"

FARNELL'S RAPID WRITER; a New and Complete System of Running-Hand, for Gentlemen and Ladies' Schools, with Case and Full Directions for Adult & Infant-struction, and sufficient paper for 1000 lines in practice. The superfine large post 8vo writing paper, Price 1s

FARNELL'S COPY BOOKS; developing a New System of WRITING, which has produced a very large number of first-rate Penmen, now occupying important situations in public offices, mercantile houses, and banks. Complete in Six Books. Post 4to, price 2d each.

London: JARROLD and SONS, 47, St Paul's Churchyard.

GLENNY'S BALBRIGGAN STOCKINGS can only be purchased at BALBRIGGAN HOUSE, 33, London-street, Fitzroy-square. Superior to our own Nottingham manufacture—Morning Chronicle

LADIES' RIDING HABITS.—Ladies are respectfully informed that the best and most fashionable Riding Habits are made at the Establishment of GEORGE WOOLLEY, 41, Conduit-street, Regent-street, where a variety of ready-made habits, of the most approved style and make, may be had at the shortest notice. Gentlemen's dress coats, Brighton coats, &c.

RIMMEL'S HAIR DYE is easily applied, and imparts instantaneously to the hair, whiskers, &c, a natural and permanent black or brown shade, without danger and inconvenience. Sold at 96, Strand, and 24, Cornhill. RIMMEL, 39, Cornhill, &c. Perfumer, soaps, and all kinds of perfumery and cosmetics

AT the IRISH LINEN COMPANY'S FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, 62, Hart-street, Bloomsbury-square, is daily received, a STOCK of HOUSEHOLD LINENS, in every article of domestic use; Price and Quality not equalled in London. Linen and Cambric Handkerchiefs made to order, from 3s per half-dozen upwards Estab lished 1800

ELEGANT MUSLINS.—New Goods for 1852.—20,000 Pieces BALZARINE, Organdie, and French MOLLINE are now offered for sale in the full dress of eight yards, at say length cut at 4½d the yard. They are beautiful goods, fast colours, and cannot be surpassed in quality at the price. SOPER, late Mayhew, 59, Oxford-street. Merchants and large buyers will find this a desirable opportunity for purchasing.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, and £10 10s GOLD LEVERS, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are warranted not to vary more than a minute per week, and to perform as well as those sold at all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house, for those advertised at lower prices are foreign work. Pamphlet of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s, one will be sent free. Jones's Steam Factory for Watches, 338, Strand.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY, MESMERISM, and such like EXPOSED, and the public mind disabused, by a TREATISE on the ORIGIN of LIFE, which may be had gratis, by post, on application to the BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, Newroad, London.

THOMAS BOULTON'S NEEDLES.—These Needles have been celebrated for the last half-century, and are unsurpassed in excellence by any manufactured in the present day; each needle is separately tested, have highly finished taper points, and perfectly horizontal drilled eyes. They are the favourite needle of many of the leading boxes of the most adepts at fine work. Sold by Owen, 89, Oxford street; Millikin, 18., Strand; Locker, 47, Leadenhall-street; and Pepper, 287, Regent-street.

"Thomas Boulton manufactures, London." on each paper

SALMON and TROUT FISHING.—CHARLES PARLOW, Fishing-tackle Manufacturer, 191, Strand, opposite St Clement Danes, next to Temple-bar Gate (late 81), invites Anglers to inspect his vast STOCK of SALMON and TROUT RODS, and all other articles of Fishing Tackle of the first class, at moderate prices. Best salmon rods, two guineas, best trout ditto, one guinea. Salmon flies from 5s a dozen; gilts ditto, 3s; and trout ditto 2s a dozen; salmon gut from 2s a hank; trout ditto, 1s. Artificial bait of every description. Agent for the celebrated gravitis.

REV. J. LANE, Saltash Parsonage, Plymouth, and many others, lately cured with the delicious and reasonable ALE brewed with the water from "Harry Hill's Well." By tradition Harry Hill was a wonderful parson, in the Irish century, by the water. Kept by the contractors' men. It corrects with speedy and complete celerity fevers, &c.—BUCKLAND, 59, Upper Seymour-street, Portman-square, Sole London Agent.—October brewings are now in fine order. "H Waite, Manager, Stogumber, Taunton.—One Agent appointed in a town.

ARMS, CRESTS, CORONETS, or INITIALS, STAMPED on NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPES, in gold, silver, and colours, in the most elegant manner. Arms painted, Pedigrees traced. MARCUS LAING'S LEAD ADHESIVE ENVELOPES. 6d per 100; cream-laid note-paper, 5 quires for 9d, thick cream-laid note, 1d per quire, 5d per ream; the new Emperor adhesive envelopes, 1s per 100; black-bordered note, 4d per quire, 6s per ream; finest sealing-wax, 4s per lb; sent post free. Wedding cards engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s 6d. Observe—At Henry Rodrigues', 31, Piccadilly, London.

MESSRS. NICOLL'S WAREROOMS are Arranged in several Departments, under the management of skilful assistants, who produce the Best Materials at the most moderate prices, viz., the ANGOLA, the CAMEL HAIR, the TODA. And other and cheaper fabrics, as substances adapted for every season or climate; Uniforms and Outfits, naval, military, and civil; Liveries, clerical, legal, and medical; Gentlemen's Plain Morning and Evening Dress; Boys' Clothing, School, Academical, and Juvenile; and NICOLL'S Wet-and-set-dress is at 114, 116, 118, 120, Regent-street; City, 23, Cornhill.

BENNETT'S MODEL WATCH MANU-FACTORY, 65, Cheapside.—In silver cases at 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 10 gu

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 555.—VOL. XX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1852. [SIXPENCE

FREE TRADE IN LITERATURE.

THE world of Literature, like that of politics, has its great parties and its great questions. The Republic of letters, like other republics, is apt to be filled with strife and jealousy and attempts at misgovernment. It is the common fate of every arena in which men work and struggle. Unfortunately for literature, it has its autocrats, or men who attempt to become so; and still more unfortunately for its interests, the State has judged it expedient to legislate as if literature were the born and sworn foe of good government—a thing to be taxed and worried and oppressed; or, at the very least, to be held aloof and regarded with a mistrustful and unfriendly eye. The consequence is, that, although literature is a power in the realm, the rewards of its professors are by no means commensurate with the intellectual qualities which they display—that the prizes which fall to their lot are few—that the blanks which meet them during and at the close of their career are many; and that, considered even under its most favourable aspects, the condition of the man of letters in this the foremost country of all the world is not such as to be satisfactory to the intellectual toilers, or creditable to a nation that is so proud of its literature, and has so much reason to be so, as England.

Within the last few years it is evident to every observer, that a great revolution has been in progress in the mere trade or business of book writing and bookselling. Books have been made cheaper. The great principle of Free Trade has been at work for the advantage of the reading public. Standard books of the last century, and of an earlier date, in which there is no copyright, and for which there is, consequently, no author's fee to pay, have been reprinted at the lowest possible cost; and the publisher has contented himself with the moderate profit which the fair and open competition of his fellow-publishers has allowed him. Cheap books and cheap periodicals have multiplied; and the Rail, that has operated such great social changes in other respects, has had its due share of influence in the old and respectable trade of literature. Having cheap bread and cheap travelling, the public has demanded cheap amusement and cheap instruction; and many booksellers able to "read the signs of the times" have endeavoured to meet the demand. Were the race of authors utterly extinct, it is likely enough that mere reprints would become quite as cheap as the public interest requires, and that books, like other commodities, would sell at such prices as the cost of production, the fair percentage upon capital, and the taxes levied by the Government would allow.

But the public has a fancy for new works as well as for old ones, and in the production and distribution of new books the principles of Free Trade have not yet been allowed their due scope. A great controversy has arisen among the booksellers upon the question of price; and in this controversy, the booksellers, who stand up for the old and dear rate, take the Protectionist ground, and insist upon the advantages of famine prices for books—not, they would have us believe, in the interest of their own tills, but in the higher interests of literature itself. The dispute has at length been brought, with a view to arbitration, under the notice of Lord Campbell—a great judge, and by no means a contemptible author; and one of the complaining parties, the advocates of the old prices, have been formally heard before him. Under these circumstances, and in the interest of authors as well as in that of the public, we desire to say a few words upon a part of the subject which the great booksellers have not touched upon.

In the first place the public should consider the position of the author, who, having some instruction to give, or some amusement to afford, comes before it, not by the spoken words of the theatre, the platform, or the pulpit, but by the printed words of the book. If it be his first attempt of the kind, the difficulties that stare him in the face are enormous. First and foremost of his enemies is the Government. The material which he uses is paper: Upon that paper the State levies a considerable Excise-duty; and if he print five hundred copies of his work, and only sell a dozen, the duty must be paid upon the whole. If his book be on a subject not immediately likely to attract attention—if he do not strive for popularity, but if in the cause of truth he runs counter to the popular notion or prejudice—the chances are that his venture will remain almost entirely on his hands. Happier, far, is the trader who brings wine or tobacco into the country. He may allow his commodity to remain in bond, and only pay the inexorable Government the duty as he finds a market for any portion of it; but the author must pay on the whole venture at once. This is but the first of the taxes that press upon him. A book has no chance of sale unless it be known, and it cannot be known unless a certain expenditure be incurred for advertisements. Again the Government lays its heavy hand upon him; and, after all, he may, when a few years have elapsed, and his book is dead, have to dispose of his unsold copies to the cheesemonger or the trunkmaker.

But the State is by no means the worst enemy of the young or new author. A far more formidable foe rises up in the person of the publisher. We will take a common case. The author—unknown, as he may be—goes to the publisher with his manuscript. If he be a rich man, as well as an author, there is no great difficulty: the publisher will bring out his book for a certain sum, which the author will pay—and lose;—like the money wagered on the wrong horse, and there will be an end. But what will the publisher charge him? and what percentage of the price at which the book will be published will go into the winning side of the author's account? In the first place, the publisher will strike off a little more than 33 per cent. for allowance to the retail trade (25 per cent., and thirteen books to the dozen); in the next place, he will charge 10 per cent. for publisher's commission; and in the next he will pocket his percentage or profit on the printing, the binding, and the advertising. Conscience or want of conscience is the only meter of these items. It will be seen that these charges, in addition to those which the Government levies upon the author in the way of paper and advertisement duty, very greatly augment the price of the new book. It will scarcely, we think, be denied, that, as far as the public is interested in having access to the productions of new and rising genius, these are drawbacks; and that the tendency of such a complication of bad systems, fiscal and trading, is to injure literature, and to depress and repress literary men.

A BLACK CAMP" OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

In the case, however, of an author who by the aid of time and the strength of his genius has conquered these difficulties, and can go to the publisher with his MS., and be certain of receiving a handsome sum for the copyright, the question again arises, whether the bookselling system, as placed before Lord Campbell by the magnates of the Row and of Albemarle-street, accords with the interests of authors or of the public, or, in the long run, of the great booksellers themselves? We say nothing of the Government taxes in this instance. They remain an evil, as before, and will probably be remedied by this or some other Administration. The question on which we desire to dwell is that raised by the booksellers themselves, and on over which Parliaments and Government have no control. The question resolves itself into these.—Is the percentage of 33½ per cent. allowed to the retail trade not an enormous one? and if retail traders are contented to abate a portion of it, and to take only 10 or 12 per cent., giving the public the benefit of the reduction, have the great publishing houses any reason to complain, or any right to enter into a trade association to defeat the intention and keep up the price of the commodity?

The author can certainly gain nothing by the increased price, and we should think that the wholesale publisher can as certainly lose nothing by the diminished one. If the publisher gives an author £1000 for his copyright, and issues the work to the public at the nominal price of £1, and to the retail trade at 14s., it cannot injure him if the retail trade should push the market by being contented with 16s. This, however, the publishers will not allow. They refuse to supply any such retail trader with copies at the trade price; and hence the hubbub of the last few weeks, and hence the controversy which has lasted with more or less violence and virulence for the last eight or ten years, if not for a longer period.

It seems to us—with all deference to such experienced publishers as have whispered their one-sided arguments in the ear of Lord Campbell—that their case is a bad one, and that common sense and fair play repudiate them. If to sell the whole issue of a book to the retail trade at a reduction of 33½ per cent. remunerates both them and the author, it is a question for the retail trade—and for them only—to decide whether it will not make an abatement for the sake of a more extensive or more rapid market. The public have an undoubted right to complain of the attempt to bolster up the price artificially; and we think that authors, equally with, if not more than, the public, have a right to complain of a system which tends to diminish the number of their readers.

In conclusion, we would remind the "trade," that the retail booksellers are not now the only distributors of literature. Books of a certain weight can be sent to any part of the country by means of the Post-office for sixpence per copy, and of a greater weight for one shilling. These sums are considerably less than the trade percentage of 33½ per cent upon books published at three shillings and upwards. Let the great publishers take care, or they will lose the position they have got. New agencies in the book trade will indubitably arise, if they persist in their present course. Publishing firms will be established to supply the public with good books at a natural and not at an artificial price, and the Post-office will perform the functions of the book distributor. However such a system might operate upon the fortunes of Albemarle-street or the Row, and upon the retail trade in general, we cannot anticipate that anything but benefit to the public and to the authors of good books would be the result. Free Trade is as good for books as it is for bread; and we live in a time when such questions begin to be thoroughly understood, in spite of all the efforts that the friends of monopoly and exclusive privileges may make to confuse them.

Since the above was written, we have been informed, on authority on which we place every reliance, that the Government has resolved not to countenance the wholesale booksellers in their attempts to regulate and control the retail trade. If our information be correct, Messrs. Longman have received notice that they are to supply all the Government works published at their establishment to the retail trade, whether the applicants be or be not members of the trade association for keeping up the price. This is, if true—and we have no doubt of the fact—an important concession, not the less suggestive as coming from a Government that is alleged to be a Protectionist one.

"A BLACK CAMP" IN NEW SOUTH WALES,

AFTER THE ANNUAL GIFT OF BLANKETS FROM THE GOVERNOR.

THE Blacks of Australia are, with the exception of the Boojamen, the lowest and most irreclaimable of the native tribes with which we are acquainted. After strenuous efforts, commencing sixty-four years since, they are now exactly what they were when first discovered. They speak a little English, some have even been taught to read and write well; but, although occasional instances of affection and fidelity are found among them, just as we meet with tame foxes and pheasants, they are as a race truly irreclaimable.

The Illustration on the preceding page represents the Camp of a party of New South Wales Blacks after they have received the annual gift of blankets which it is usual to present to them on her Majesty's birthday. The tent-shaped erection in the centre, in the nearest approach to a dwelling at which the Blacks of this region have arrived. It is formed of a few branches of wood, covered with sheets of the bark of the gum tree, which they strip off with remarkable ingenuity. The men are armed with spears, or the boomerang, a curious weapon which throws at an enemy or game flies in an eccentric direction, returning if required after striking to the feet of the thrower. This was long considered to be peculiar to Australia, until the discoveries at Nineveh proved that it was known to Nimrod and the Assyrians. The club, in native language a nullanullah, is equally employed in smashing out the brains of a fallen enemy and correcting a lazy or refractory wife. Bows and arrows are unknown to them.

These Blacks, with the exception of blankets from the Government, still continue to manufacture very warm and beautiful cloaks of opossum skin, which they wear with the hair side inwards, the other side ornamented with geometrical patterns drawn with wonderful accuracy. The opossum is the Black what the reindeer is to the Lapander: the flesh is their food, the sinews make thread, and the skins are used not only for cloaks but for buckets or water-bags used in crossing deserts.

The Correspondent who has favoured us with the preceding Sketch appends the following well-timed reflections:—"The mysterious and wonderful arrangements of Divine Providence are brought forcibly to our minds on viewing the modes of life of this peculiar people, existing without a wish beyond hunting the forests, and living precariously on food which they obtain by climbing the immense gum trees, wholly ignorant that at their roots the most precious metals has been concealed for thousands of years; generation after generation of aborigines has passed away, unconscious of the riches concealed beneath the surface of their native hunting-grounds, perchance sufficient to have made them the most powerful race under the sun."

Some fine specimens of gold from Australia have, we learn, been transmitted by Mr. Rucker Cook to the British Museum and the Museum of the Geological Society, where they have attracted much attention.

THE RIGHT OF BENIN.—Tuesday night's Gazette contains the announcement, that, on the 11th of February last, Commodore Henry William Bruce, commander in chief of her Majesty's naval forces on the west coast of Africa, issued a notification of the raising of the blockade of certain ports and places in the Bight of Benin. The notification states that the kings and chiefs of Bonk house, Elmina, Chica, Adaffie, Fishow, Porto Seguro, Gomulatu, Little Popoe, Aglowy, Great Popoe, Porto Novo, and Lagos, having entered into engagements with her Britannic Majesty's Government for the complete abolition of the traffic in slaves, their sea-coasts and ports are to be exempt from the operations of the blockade established on the 6th of December last, and to be considered free as heretofore for the purposes of legitimate trade.

The competition among the metropolitan omnibuses which run from Paddington to King's-cross for 1d. each passenger the whole distance, is now so great, that buses run in company. Those which run from Paddington to the Bank now charge 1d. from the former place to Portland-road, and from thence to King's-cross 1d.; but as soon as the latter point is passed, and the competition ceases, the notice respecting the 1d. fare is reversed, and 3d. becomes the lowest fare charged, however short the distance travelled.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Parliamentary session under the new regime of the Prince President presents a striking contrast in its still-life and utter torpor of existence to the bustling, turbulent, factious, debating, declaiming spirit of political vitality which characterised the sessions of the Constituent and Legislative assemblies. The chief and almost only business transacted by the Corps Législatif this week was the passing of a bill for the re-coinage of the copper currency of the Republic.

The approaching military fête of the 10th of May, in the Champ de Mars, meanwhile occupies the public mind in Paris, to the exclusion of almost every other subject. Not only the pomp and magnificence to be displayed on the occasion, but the very general belief that the opportunity will be taken, amidst the enthusiasm of the troops at the moment, to proclaim the Prince President Emperor, enhance in a high degree the anticipations which are formed of it. As has been already stated when the affair was first broached, all the corps of the army and navy will be represented; the regiments of the regiments of the army of Italy, like those of the army of Africa, without exception; as also the military schools, and the regiments created in Algeria—the Spahis, the Zouaves, and the native Rifemen—who have already given their proofs and have become French soldiers. The principal Arab chiefs of Algeria have demanded to be allowed to come with the deputations of the army, which is considered a new proof of their sincere desire to remain united with France. The Champ de Mars is perfectly suited for this great fête. Immense stands, sumptuously decorated, will be constructed before the Ecole Militaire. In the centre will be that of the President; on the right and left those of the great bodies of the State, and of the ambassadors and members of the corps diplomatique. There will also be a stand containing more than 1500 places reserved for foreigners of distinction, who are expected from all parts of Europe. Around the Champ de Mars stands will also be erected for the accommodation of a vast number of spectators. A religious service will give the fête a character of grandeur and majesty. A solemn mass will be celebrated on a monumental altar raised in the midst of the troops, and prayers will be offered for the army, the Prince, and France. The Prince will after wards, from his tribune, give to the chief of each corps the eagle of his regiment, as a souvenir of glory, a symbol of discipline, and an oath of fidelity. The magnificent ceremony will terminate by the filing off of the troops. The day after, the army will offer a fête to the Prince President: there will be military rejoicings in the Champ de Mars, and they will be followed by an immense display of fireworks, got up by the artillery, on the heights of Chaillot. Afterwards there will be a ball at the Ecole Militaire

The eagles are not to be distributed to the National Guard on the 10th of May, but will be presented to that force on the 15th of August

The Minister of Police has issued a circular to the inspectors-general of police, investing them with almost unlimited powers of intermeddling and espionage.

During the parliamentary session the President of the Republic intends to hold receptions at the Elysée every Monday and Saturday evening.

The death of Marshal Gérard is announced. The aged soldier died on Saturday afternoon last. One of his last wishes, expressed while lying on his sick chamber without hope of recovery, was, that he should be buried without any pomp, and that the money generally expended upon persons of his rank should be appropriated to charitable purposes.

The son of Prince Murat has joined the Chasseurs d'Afrique as a private soldier.

It is stated that M. Thiers purposes to travel in Italy, and that passports will be furnished to him by the French Government

The Moniteur publishes the official tabular returns of the revenue on imports during the first quarter of the present year. The amount is 23,928,647f., an increase of 5,740,823f. as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1851, and of 4,673,648f. over that of 1850.

The Moniteur also publishes the returns of the Customs duties in March last, which amounted to 11,985,000f. Compared with those of the corresponding month of 1850, they increased by 2,280,000f.; and with the receipts of March, 1851, by 2,270,000f. The Customs produced, during the first quarter of the present year, 32,928,000f. In 1850, they gave 27,854,000f.; and in 1851, 26,758,000f.

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin of the 19th inst. mention that on that morning the Zollverein Conferences were opened there at eleven o'clock, with a speech from M. de Manteuffel, the Minister-President. He expressed his regret that an agreement had been impossible, but he hoped that the bond of material interest in the proposed development and remodelling of the Zollverein would be preserved in its full strength. It was only when that object had been attained that other questions could be discussed. The speech concluded with a toast for a meeting of the party took place, when it was unanimously resolved that Basil. T. Woodd, Esq., a magistrate residing in the neighbourhood, should be requested to offer himself. With the request Mr. Woodd at once complied, and on Tuesday morning issued his address to the electors, and commenced his canvass.

LIMERICK CITY.—There is likely to be a formidable contest in this city, as Mr. F. W. Russell, who had withdrawn on the occasion of the return of Lord Arundel, is determined to stand, with an amount of Roman Catholic support, notwithstanding the selection of Mr. Potter (solicitor) and Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, as their candidates, by the "Armed Committee."

LISKEARD.—Mr. Elliott, the London brewer, a supporter of the Derby Government, is in the field to oppose Mr. Crowder. Mr. Kendall will not contest the county. Mr. Carew and Mr. Roberts will, no doubt, be returned for the eastern division.

LONGFORD.—Colonel Greville, son in-law of the Marquis of Westmeath, has addressed the electors of Longford as a candidate. His principles are Free Trade, tenant-right, and the repeal of the Ecclesiastical Titles Act.

LOUTH.—The candidates for Louth are Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. J. Meade Clark, and Mr. R. M. Bellew. In his address to the electors, Mr. Bellew promises to vote for Mr. Crawford's tenant-right bill.

PLYMOUTH.—The friends of each of the five candidates namely, Messrs. Rundell, Turner and Mare (Conservatives), Messrs. Bewes, Collier, Bradon, and Bickham Escott (Liberals)—express themselves in confident terms as to the result of the next election. It is acknowledged on all sides, that Mr. Mare's prospects daily improve.

TIPPERARY COUNTY.—Mr. Grace, one of the present members, is engaged in a canvass. Mr. Fitzstephen French also offers himself again. It is stated that Mr. R. Pennefather Lloyd is to try his chances on the Tory and Protectionist side.

STOKE UPON TRENT.—It is stated that Mr. Sneyd has been so encouraged towards all classes of his constituents as to have secured an amount of support which must still greatly exceed any prospect of his rival, Mr. Townley.

LEEDS COUNTY.—It is understood that the Liberal candidates will be put in nomination, and with every prospect of being returned.

SUFFOLK (EAST).—Sir F. Kelly, the Solicitor-General, who has been already returned for Ashburton, is canvassing for this county. He addressed a numerous meeting of electors at Framlingham on Saturday, and in reply to the query whether he would support a motion for the repeal of the malt-tax, distinctly stated that he would not do so, as part of the revenue arising from it was too large for any Ministry to risk its repeal.

TAUNTON.—Mr. Labouchere has announced his intention of again being a candidate for this borough. Mr. Arthur Moore, of 34, Lyde Park-gardens, has also intimated that he again offers himself as a candidate. He avows himself to be decidedly opposed to the continental endowment of Maynooth, an advocate for the removal of the house and window duties, and an enemy to class legislation, whether it emanate from the owners and occupiers of land."

TAVISTOCK.—The Hon. E. S. Russell having announced his intention to retire from the long dying office himself as the candidate who is to have the support of the Bedford family. Much to the surprise of the electors, it was recently announced that Mr. Tidlaway Burgoyne, a descendant of the celebrated General of that name, had not again to offer himself for election unless a requisition was presented to him signed by a clear majority of the electors. The other candidates are Mr. Carter (a Russian), and Mr. Phillimore, who before contested the borough in the Conservative interest.

TYNEMOUTH.—Mr. Hugh Taylor, of London, the Conservative candidate for the borough of Tynemouth, is actively canvassing the electors.

WINDSOR.—It is stated that for the first time within the memory of the oldest inhabitant there will be no "Court candidate" for the borough of Windsor at the ensuing general election. The number of voters now attached to the Royal Household is about 50; tradesmen, pensioners, and others employed on the Royal domain, who would be expected to obey orders, might bring this number up to 120: and there are 710 names on the register. One of the last acts of her Majesty, during the recent sojourn of the court at the Castle, was to issue her Royal commands that no officer attached to her person, however high his position, should interfere with the free exercise of the electoral franchise of her tradesmen at the forthcoming election, on pain of dismissal.

WORCESTER CITY.—Mr. M'Garrell, a London merchant, and a supporter of Earl Derby's Administration, has offered himself in the room of Mr. Rufford, the banker, who has vacated his seat. Mr. Lazarus, a local landed proprietor, "puts up" on the Liberal side.

Mr. Baron Parke made a pun on Monday, in the Court of Exchequer, which deserves to be recorded. The learned Baron, alluding to the judgment pronounced in the court by Mr. Baron Martin in favour of the admission of Jews into parliament, said that he carried further would in future be styled among the Hebrew fraternity the good Samaritan (Sam. Martin)!

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

ALDEBURY.—Mr. Quintin Dick retires; and Captain Temple West, of the Grenadier Guards, son of Admiral Sir John West, K.C.B., is a candidate to succeed him. Captain West is a relative of the Duke of Buckingham, and is grandson to a gentleman who formerly represented the borough of Buckingham in Parliament.

BATH.—Mr. Whateley, Q.C., the Tory candidate, has issued a second address, in which he has considerably modified his principles. On the subject of Free Trade he says:—"I will vote against re-imposing a tax upon the importation of corn, or any other necessary of life, which would, I think, raise the price of bread, for, from much personal intercourse with the poor, I well know the blessing of a cheap loaf. I would, however, heartily concur in any practicable measure for the relief of the agricultural or trading interest."

BERWICK.—There is every probability of a contest for the representation of the borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed. It is rumoured that the Conservative member, Mr. C. Renton, will retire, and that Mr. Richard Hodgson, of Carham, will come forward as one for the borough, to fill up the vacancy on that interest. The other sitting member, Mr. Forster, a Free trader, and two or three other candidates, are spoken of. It has been intimated that Mr. John Stapleton, formerly of the Northern Circuit, a brother of Lord Beaumont, will be a candidate. Mr. Stapleton is stated to be a most decided Liberal.

BEVERLEY.—Mr. Serjeant Channell is in the field as Protectionist candidate for Beverley.

BODMIN.—There are no less than seven candidates for the representation of this borough.

BOLTON.—Mr. Wickham, the Free-trade Conservative candidate, met the electors and non-electors of Bradford on Monday night. The friends of Colonel Thompson and Mr. Milligan, the two present members, speak with confidence of their re-election.

CARMARTHEN.—By the death of the esteemed and venerable Lord Dynevor, and the consequent elevation of the Hon. Colonel George Rice Trevor, M.P., to the peerage, a vacancy has been occasioned in our county representation. D. Jones, Esq., of Pantglas, has offered himself as a candidate for the vacancy created by the removal of Colonel Trevor to the House of Lords. He declares himself a supporter of Lord Derby's Administration.

CORK COUNTY.—In this county the Protectionist cry is still kept up, and two out-and-out food-taxers are to be started. The late unsuccessful candidate, Mr. Morgan John O'Connell, and his relatives, Mr. C. F. Fewen, M.P., and Mr. T. Fewen, have been invited to a public dinner by the Cork Protectionists.

DEVONPORT.—Lord Lounox has been mentioned as likely to contest the next general election for the borough of Devonport and Stonehouse, in opposition to Mr Tufnell and Sir John Romilly, the sitting members.

DOWN.—Lord Castlereagh declines to stand for Down. He tells the electors that if he allowed himself to be put in nomination as their candidate, they would be driven to a lasting state of enmity against those with whom, for their common interest, they should be most closely connected; his Lordship evidently meaning thereby, that they would be placed in hostile opposition to his noble father, the Marquis of Londonderry, and all from amongst his friends, even if successful. he can foresee no gain. Lord Edwin Hill has issued his address to the electors, in the course of which his Lordship says—"Since that one-sided policy (falsely denominated Free-trade) has become the law of the land, it would be unwise at the present time to seek for its repeal."

DURHAM.—The city of Durham will be subjected to a severe contest at the ensuing general election. One of the present members, Mr. Spearman, has announced his intention to withdraw from public life; and in addition to Lord Adolphus Vane and Mr. Thos. C. Granger, another candidate has this week appeared in the person of Mr. Atherton, a barrister on the Northern Circuit, and a "Liberal" of the first water, in his own interpretation of the term.

EAST SOMERSET.—Mr. W. Miles has just issued an address to the electors, in which he states that he shall again appear upon the hustings as a supporter of the present Government.

ENNIS.—The people of Ennis have burnt in effigy their M.P., Mr. O'Gorman Mahon, who is at present canvassing the borough with a view to the next election. The tumult is stated to have risen to such a height on the appearance of the hon. gentleman in the streets, that the peace were obliged to interfere. Nevertheless, it is said that the hon. member is determined to persevere in his canvass, and to go to the poll

EXETER.—The Conservatives have succeeded in getting a candidate, in the person of Mr. George Stucley, the eldest son of the member for North Devon, and the gentleman who was proposed to be set up by the Devon Protection Society in opposition to Sir T. Acland, Bart, who is a Free-trader.

HASTINGS.—Mr. Robert Holland has announced that he does not intend to solicit a continuance of the honour of representing the borough. There are four candidates in the field: two in the Liberal and Free-trade interest, namely, Mr. John Ashley Warre, who contested the borough in 1847, and Mr. John Locke, Q.C., and two Conservatives, Mr. Mangles Brisco, late member, and Mr. Patrick Francis Robertson, are the candidates who come forward as supporters of the Derby Administration.

HERTS.—The Hertford Mercury says:—"We have the pleasure of announcing that the Hon. T. Trevor, Mr. Bosanquet, and Mr. Fuller have acceded to the desire expressed in a very numerously signed requisition which has been presented to them, and have announced their intention to contest the county upon Liberal and Free-trade principles." The three candidates on the opposite side are Mr. Halsey, Sir H. Meux, and Sir E. B. Lytton. The latter gentleman has lasted an address to the electors of his county, in which he declares himself in favour of "remedial measures" to the suffering agricultural interest, and an adherent of the Earl of Derby's policy. He adds that he will, if returned as the representative of the county, vote for the repeal of the grant to Maynooth.

IPSWICH.—Mr. Thomas Benjamin Hobhouse has been invited to contest the borough, in conjunction with Mr. Alexander. Mr. Hobhouse is now member for Lambeth. At present Mr Hobhouse has not definitively accepted the invitation.

KNARESBOROUGH.—On Monday the electors of this borough were startled by the announcement that Mr. Winn, one of the Conservative candidates, intended to withdraw from the field. It was at that time a meeting of the party took place, when it was unanimously resolved that Basil. T. Woodd, Esq., a magistrate residing in the neighbourhood, should be requested to offer himself. With the request Mr. Woodd at once complied, and on Tuesday morning issued his address to the electors, and commenced his canvass.

LIMERICK CITY.—There is likely to be a formidable contest in this city, as Mr. F. W. Russell, who had withdrawn on the occasion of the return of Lord Arundel, is determined to stand, with an amount of Roman Catholic support, notwithstanding the selection of Mr. Potter (solicitor) and Mr. Serjeant O'Brien, as their candidates, by the "Armed Committee."

LISKEARD.—Mr. Elliott, the London brewer, a supporter of the Derby Government, is in the field to oppose Mr. Crowder. Mr. Kendall will not contest the county. Mr. Carew and Mr. Roberts will, no doubt, be returned for the eastern division.

LONGFORD.—Colonel Greville, son-in-law of the Marquis of Westmeath, has addressed the electors of Longford as a candidate. His principles are Free Trade, tenant-right, and the repeal of the Ecclesiastical Titles Act.

LOUTH.—The candidates for Louth are Mr. Chichester Fortescue, Mr. J. Meade Clark, and Mr. R. M. Bellew. In his address to the electors, Mr. Bellew promises to vote for Mr. Crawford's tenant-right bill.

PLYMOUTH.—The friends of each of the five candidates namely, Messrs. Rundell, Turner and Mare (Conservatives), Messrs. Bewes, Collier, Bradon, and Bickham Escott (Liberals)—express themselves in confident terms as to the result of the next election. It is acknowledged on all sides, that Mr. Mare's prospects daily improve.

TIPPERARY COUNTY.—Mr. Grace, one of the present members, is engaged in a canvass. Mr. Fitzstephen French also offers himself again. It is stated that Mr. R. Pennefather Lloyd is to try his chances on the Tory and Protectionist side.

STOKE UPON TRENT.—It is stated that Mr. Sneyd has been so encouraged towards all classes of his constituents as to have secured an amount of support which must still greatly exceed any prospect of his rival, Mr. Townley.

LEEDS COUNTY.—It is understood that the Liberal candidates will be put in nomination, and with every prospect of being returned.

SUFFOLK (EAST).—Sir F. Kelly, the Solicitor-General, who has been already returned for Ashburton, is canvassing for this county. He addressed a numerous meeting of electors at Framlingham on Saturday, and in reply to the query whether he would support a motion for the repeal of the malt-tax, distinctly stated that he would not do so, as part of the revenue arising from it was too large for any Ministry to risk its repeal.

TAUNTON.—Mr. Labouchere has announced his intention of again being a candidate for this borough. Mr. Arthur Moore, of 34, Lyde Park-gardens, has also intimated that he again offers himself as a candidate. He avows himself to be decidedly opposed to the continental endowment of Maynooth, an advocate for the removal of the house and window duties, and an enemy to class legislation, whether it emanate from the owners and occupiers of land."

TAVISTOCK.—The Hon. E. S. Russell having announced his intention to retire from the long dying office himself as the candidate who is to have the support of the Bedford family. Much to the surprise of the electors, it was recently announced that Mr. Tidlaway Burgoyne, a descendant of the celebrated General of that name, had not again to offer himself for election unless a requisition was presented to him signed by a clear majority of the electors. The other candidates are Mr. Carter (a Russian), and Mr. Phillimore, who before contested the borough in the Conservative interest.

TYNEMOUTH.—Mr. Hugh Taylor, of London, the Conservative candidate for the borough of Tynemouth, is actively canvassing the electors.

WINDSOR.—It is stated that for the first time within the memory of the oldest inhabitant there will be no "Court candidate" for the borough of Windsor at the ensuing general election. The number of voters now attached to the Royal Household is about 50; tradesmen, pensioners, and others employed on the Royal domain, who would be expected to obey orders, might bring this number up to 120: and there are 710 names on the register. One of the last acts of her Majesty, during the recent sojourn of the court at the Castle, was to issue her Royal commands that no officer attached to her person, however high his position, should interfere with the free exercise of the electoral franchise of her tradesmen at the forthcoming election, on pain of dismissal.

WORCESTER CITY.—Mr. M'Garrell, a London merchant, and a supporter of Earl Derby's Administration, has offered himself in the room of Mr. Rufford, the banker, who has vacated his seat. Mr. Lazarus, a local landed proprietor, "puts up" on the Libera. side.

Captain Kennedy, late Poor-law Inspector at Kilrush, and formerly of the Sligo Light Infantry, has been appointed Governor of Gambia, in room of Richard G. M'Donnell, Esq.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

WILLIAM MAULE, LORD PANMURE.

THE nobleman, who was the second son of George Ramsay, eighth Earl of Dalhousie, having inherited, through his grandmother, Jane Maule, daughter of the Hon. Harry Maule, of Kellie, the extensive estates of the Earls of Panmure, changed his paternal name and arms for those of the family of Maule, and obtained by royal sign manual warrant, dated 9th September, 1831. The ancient House of Maule is of French extraction, the surname having been assumed from the town of Maule, in the Vexin Français, eight leagues from Paris, and their original seat in Normandy. They had been Grands de Maule, one of the Conqueror's companions in arms. In the 13th century Sir Peter de Maule acquired the Baronies of Panmure and Benvie, in marriage with Christian, only daughter and heir of William de Valoines; and in 300 years later, his descendant, Patrick Maule, of Panmure, a stanch Cavalier, was rewarded by his Royal master, Charles I., with the Earldom of Panmure. This Peer's grandson, the Hon. Harry Maule of Kellie, a zealous adherent of the Chevalier St. George, was father of Jane Maule, through whom the Ramsays have succeeded to the estates of the Maules. Lord Panmure, whose death we record, was born 27th October, 1771. He married, first, December 1, 1794, Patricia-Heron, daughter of Gilbert Gordon, Esq., of Hallcaths, and by her (who died May 11, 1821) had issue three sons and six daughters. The sons are—1. The Right Hon. Fox Maule, M.P., late Secretary-at-War, and now second Lord Panmure, who is heir presumptive to the Earldom of Dalhousie; 2. Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Lauderdale Maule; and 3. the Hon. William-Augustus Maule. Of the daughters, his eldest, Patricia, is the widow of Gilbert Young, Esq., of Youngfield; the second, Elizabeth, is married to Sir Alexander Ramsay, Bart.; the third, Mary, is the wife of James Hamilton, Esq., of Bangour; and the fifth, Ramsay, is married to Donald Macdonald, Esq., of Kingsburgh. Lord Panmure married secondly, in 1822, Miss Elizabeth Barton, but by her had no child. He died at Brechin Castle, on Forfarshire, on the 18th inst.

PRINCE PAUL OF WURTEMBURG.

PRINCE PAUL CHARLES AUGUSTUS, brother of William I., the present, and son of Frederick II., the late King of Wurtemburg, was born on the 19th of January, 1785. His career was that of a soldier, and he served with distinction in the Russian and French armies. For the last thirty years he has been a resident in France. Prince Paul married, on the 24th of September, 1805, the Princess Charlotte, daughter of Frederick Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, by whom, who died on the 12th of December, 1847, he had two sons and two daughters. The elder of these daughters is the wife of the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, and the younger is widow of Duke William of Nassau. Prince Paul's elder son is in the Wurtemburg and the Russian military service, and is married to his first cousin, the Princess Catherine, daughter of the present King of Wurtemburg. Prince Paul's younger son commands the first brigade of the King of Russia's horse guards. Prince Paul of Wurtemburg died on the 16th instant, at his hotel in the Place Vendôme. The Prince's brother-in-law, the Marshal and ex-King Jerome Bonaparte, as well as the Prince President and Prince Napoleon of Nassau, Prince Paul's grandson, were present when he breathed his last. The family of Wurtemburg is Protestant, but the Prince had become a Roman Catholic some time previous to his demise

The Royal House of Wurtemburg is closely allied by marriage with that of Bonaparte. The sister of Prince Paul, whose death we here record, the Princess Catherine, was the devoted wife of Jerome Bonaparte. She shared with him the vicissitudes of Westphalia, and was the willing and affectionate partner of his subsequent adversity. Her death occurred in 1836. The Princess Theodolinda Beauharnais, sister of the present Duke of Leuchtenberg, and first cousin of the Prince President, Louis Napoleon, is the wife of Count William of Wurtemburg, a first cousin of the deceased Prince Paul.

MARSHAL GERARD.

MAURICE STEPHEN COUNT GERARD, a Marshal of France, Knight of St. Louis, and Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, was born on the 4th April, 1773, at Damvillers, a small town in the department of the Meuse. He entered the military career, which began in the first revolution, was rapid and creditable. In 1791 he entered the French army as a volunteer, and he became a General of Brigade in 1806. During that period he shared in the glories of Marengo and Austerlitz. He was made a General of Division in 1812, and a Count of the Empire in 1813. Gérard was ever closely attached to the interests of his imperial master, and he followed his fortunes to Waterloo. On the day of that terrible battle he was with Marshal Grouchy, and in vain endeavoured to persuade the hesitating commander to join the engagement, and succour the Emperor in the emergency to which Gérard refers in his "Memoirs." From 1815 to the accession of Louis Philippe in 1830, Gérard remained out of active service. In August, 1830, he was appointed Minister of War, and was created a Marshal of France. He commanded the Army of the North, and was present at the taking of Antwerp in 1832: in 1834 he was again Minister of War. Marshal Gérard was also twice President of the Ministerial Council; he obtained the Chancellorship of the Legion of Honour in 1836. The gallant soldier, who at the time of his death was Senior Marshal, departed this life on the 17th inst.

SIR HENRY RUSSELL, BART., OF SWALLOWFIELD, BERKS.

THE death of this Baronet occurred on the 19th inst. Sir Henry was the eldest son of the first Baronet, Sir Henry Russell, who filed the office of Chief of the Supreme Court of Justice in Bengal. His mother, Anne Barbara, was sister of Earl Wintworth.

He was born 27th May, 1783, and married twice: his first wife, Jane, second daughter of John Cassamajor, Esq., of Madras, died 29th December, 1808, just two months after her marriage. His second wife was Maria-Cordelia, daughter of Monsieur B Mottet, of Pondicherry, and by her he leaves two surviving sons—Charles, of the Grenadier Guards, and Sir Charles Russell, living Bart. of Swallowfield, and George, of Exeter College, Oxford; besides two daughters, who are married. Sir Henry's eldest son, Henry, died at Cairo, Jan. 20, 1847, aged twenty-seven.

We are glad to find that our statement relative to the extinction of the family of the Right Hon Edmund Burke is incorrect. The late Thomas Haviland Burke, Esq., the great orator's representative, whose memoir appeared in last week's Obituary, has left a son, Edmund Haviland Burke, at present a student at Eton, and a youth of much promise

Mr. Spencer, better known as Father Ignatius, is in Vienna, raising funds for the "conversion" of the Protestants of England.

The town councils of Glasgow and Edinburgh, the merchants of Perth, and several of our contemporaries on the other side of the Tweed, are urging the necessity for the adoption of the telegraphic system, both to cheapen its use and to ensure greater dispatch, that the newspapers may be able to give later news to their local readers

M. Ferdinand Flocon, a member of the French Provisional Government of 1848, was condemned, at Carlsruhe, on the 16th instant, to fourteen months' imprisonment, for having committed the crime of lèse Majesté against the reigning Grand Duke, by publishing in the Démocratie Rhenane. M.M. C. F. Meyer and J. Bastian were, at the same time, sentenced, the first to twenty months' and the second to thirty months' imprisonment, for similar offences. The accused, not appearing, were convicted in contumaciam, and fined by the French subjects the Government of Baden has no means of executing the sentences.

A correspondent of the Dublin Freeman states, that, at the Roman Catholic [illegible] of St. Cuach, a letter of Dr. Cullen was read from the [illegible] synod of the new hierarchy of the [illegible] his Eminence Cardinal Wiseman to [illegible]

Accounts [illegible] Western Australia to the 7th Feb. state that mineral research [illegible] was going on, and that specimens of copper, which had been discovered [illegible] lodes of copper, which had been discovered [illegible] were likely to be thoroughly developed, be profitably worked. An [illegible] (South Australia) paper states that a "nugget" of gold, the first produce of the territory, had been forwarded to England as a present to Prince Albert.

On Monday information was received that Mr. George Frederick Peden, the well-known coal-agent of Lancaster, had gone off, taking with him £500 in cash, the money of the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres. At the instance of the noble Earl, a warrant for the apprehension has been placed in the hands of Superintendent Wright.

The banking-house of Messrs. J. W. and R. Hall, known as the Forest of Dean Bank, was utterly destroyed by fire a few days ago. One of the female clerks, a girl between 17 and 18 years of age, unfortunately perished in the flames.

The New Land Ulsterman says:—"As we are going to press we learn that [illegible] obtained the release of the Irish State prisoners, Smith O'[illegible] Mitchell, and four companions; subject, however, to the condition [illegible] not to set foot in the United Kingdom."

An order has been issued in this county for the construction of thirty iron steam-boats for the use of the Danube [illegible] Navigation Company, of large dimensions and of substantial materials. The order has been [illegible] so as to give employment in the districts—namely, Liverpool, [illegible] Glasgow—where it is well known that the largest number of [illegible] are built, and where the greatest amount of experienced [illegible] is procured.

The [illegible] delivered in London last week increased nearly 200,000 lb. having amounted to 674,742 lb.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

CLAIM OF JEWS TO SIT IN PARLIAMENT.—ALDERMAN SALOMONS.

On Monday last, in the Court of Exchequer, judgment was delivered in the case of "Miller v. Salomons," on the question which has been before the public so much of late, as to the right of Jews to be members of Parliament.

The interest and importance of the matter attracted a crowded attendance in court. Among those present were the defendant himself, Alderman Salomons, M.P., Baron Rothschild, M.P., and Lord Rutherford, of the Scotch Court of Session, and recently Lord Advocate of Scotland.

The case was argued at much length in Hilary Term last, upon the reserved law points of a special verdict which was delivered at the preceding Michaelmas Term, when the matter came before the court as an action for trial. The action was to recover a sum alleged to be forfeited by the defendant under the statutes 1 George 1, sess. 2, c. 13, s. 17, and 6 George 3, c. 53, s. 1, by reason of his having voted in the House of Commons without having taken the oath of abjuration contained in the latter statute. The declaration stated that the defendant was duly returned to serve in Parliament as a burgess for the borough of Greenwich, and that he voted in the House of Commons without having taken and subscribed the above oath, and thereby forfeited the sum of £500. There were other similar counts; but they were abandoned, in order to raise the substantial question in controversy between the parties, and avoid any technical difficulty by reason of more than one penalty being recovered for alleged offences against the statutes committed on the same day.

The special verdict given at this Michaelmas trial set forth the various facts and the history of the case, which are familiar to the public; the manner in which an oath was tendered upon the conscience of a Jew; and the refusal of the defendant to repeat the words in the oath of abjuration, "upon the true faith of a Christian," when sworn as a member at the table of the House of Commons, and that the Speaker on that occasion objected that the defendant had not taken the oaths in the manner required by law, and requested him to withdraw, which, however, he did not do, declaring that he had taken the oath in the form binding upon his conscience, which the special verdict found to be the truth. The verdict then proceeded to state what took place with respect to the signature of the roll, and concluded by submitting to the Court whether the defendant had lawfully taken the oath of abjuration.

The first point which was argued before the Court in Hilary Term, when it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the oath was a Christian oath, and could only be made by a Christian; that it could not be lawfully taken without repeating the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," which, as it was argued, were a necessary and essential part of the oath. For the defendant it was contended that the oath, in substance, that he had taken the oath the plea put in and contended for was, that the repeating of the words quoted was not necessary

The Court now gave judgment, each of the learned judges—viz the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, and Mr. Baron Martin—entering at great length into the various law points and arguments raised by counsel on both sides, and into the history and circumstances of the various enactments bearing upon the subject.

The judgment of the Court was against the defendant, Mr. Alderman Salomons, as the majority of the bench—viz. Baron Alderson, Baron Parke, and the Lord Chief Baron—concurred in holding that the words "on the true faith of a Christian" were of the essence of the oath; and that if these words were omitted, the oath was not taken at all: while the decision of Baron Martin, that them the oath was not taken at all: while the decision of Baron Martin, that them the oath was not taken at all: while the decision of Baron Martin, that them

CHAPELLE ARDENTE OF THE REMAINS OF PRINCE PAUL OF WURTEMBURG, PLACE VENDOME, PARIS.

mander made the best of his way on board, and, near midnight, the ship took up a position southward, blockading the only known available channel through which the pirates might possibly get to sea; the pinnace being despatched to take up a position in shore for the purpose of intercepting them should they put to sea under cover of the darkness of the land. After two days and one night's fruitless search, the report continues:—

"The pirate fleet, now left in our rear, was estimated to consist of 400 men disposed in eight prahus, a force sufficient to devastate any portion of country in this neighbourhood, and consign its inhabitants to hopeless slavery. I have entered more fully into the detail of this circumstance than I should otherwise have done, because the impression appears to be gaining ground that there are no such persons as pirates in these seas; whereas I know, both on the east and west coasts of Palawan, the people are kept in constant dread of them.

"It will be interesting to add, that on our visit to Paloan Bay, Mindoro Island, in December last, the inhabitants informed us that on the 22d May, 1851, seven prahus, each containing about 50 men, suddenly appeared in the bay, ransacked the village, carried off five women and two children, murdering at the same time one man and wounding two others, because they resisted the capture of their families. No doubt they were the same we encountered a few days afterwards in Malampaya Sound, as they stood in that direction after leaving Paloan Bay."

The Illustration is from a Sketch taken by Captain Bate, during the heat of the chase in Endeavour Straits, when the boat was about nine miles from the Royalist. The high land at the back is Malampaya Tabo.

DEATH OF PRINCE PAUL OF WURTEMBURG.

A Royal death has occurred within the last few days at Paris, which has given occasion to much gossip in fashionable and political circles, owing to the alleged change of religion on the part of the Royal personage a short time prior to his decease. This personage was Prince Paul, the only brother of the reigning King of Wurtemburg, and brother-in-law of the ex-King of Westphalia, Marshal Jerome Bonaparte, the uncle of the President of the French Republic. The deceased was in other respects also connected with the great and Royal houses of Europe, as he was father of the Archduchess Helen and of the Duchess of Nassau, and his eldest daughter is the widow of the Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Emperor of Russia.

Prince Paul died on the morning of Friday week, at his mansion in the Place Vendôme. He had for several days before his death been given over by his physicians; and on the day preceding (Thursday) he became insensible and speechless. Prince Nicolas de Nassau, grandson of Prince Paul, the ex-King Jerome, and Prince Napoleon Bonaparte, his nephew, were at the bedside of the deceased, as well as the Russian and Wurtemburg Ministers, on Friday morning, when, it is stated, the Pope's Nuncio entered the room, which caused not a little astonishment amongst those present, as Prince Paul, and the Royal family of Wurtemburg, professed the Protestant religion. It was then asserted that Prince Paul had, in the course of January last, abjured the religion of his fathers, and had been converted to the Roman Catholic religion. The Prince of Nassau on this announcement protested against his grandfather's change of religion being regarded as a valid act, as he considered his relative was not in a state of mind which would warrant its being accepted in the same way as if Prince Paul were in full possession of his faculties unimpaired. The earnestness and promptness of this protest on the part of the young Prince of Nassau arose from the fact that the abandonment of the Protestant faith by Prince Paul would occasion the forfeiture of his right to the throne of Wurtemburg, to which, failing the family of the Prince Royal, he was heir presumptive, and would thus vitiate, and perhaps render null, the title of his descendants to the throne. Important political questions are involved, and their solution will depend upon the light in which jurists will regard his death-bed change of religion, for one of the rumours afloat assigned the period of his embracing the Roman Catholic faith to the fortnight immediately preceding his death.

The Pope's Nuncio and an attendant priest from the Madeleine administered the last sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church to the Prince before his death.

Prince Paul was born on the 19th of January, 1785, and was therefore in his 67th year. He had resided in France for the last thirty years, and was much attached to that country. He had served both in the French and Russian armies. The Prince has left two sons, viz. Prince Frederick and Prince Augustus.

On Saturday and Sunday the mansion in the Place Vendôme was crowded with visitors to see the chapelle ardente in which the remains of the Prince were laid out. The body was attired in the uniform of a lieutenant-general, with the star and the grand cordon of the Royal order of the House of Wurtemburg, and the military cross was laid on a state bed. The Royal crown was placed on a stool at the head of the bed, whilst on the left were to be seen, lying on cushions, the orders of the Legion of Honour, of the Black and Red Eagles of Prussia, and of St. Hubert of Bavaria. The Baron de Waechter, Minister of Wurtemburg, and the persons attached to the legation, wearing the official uniform, sat for some time at the side of the state bed.

The Prince's will was opened on Saturday, with the usual formalities, by M. de Belleyme, President of the Tribunal of Première Instance. It had been entrusted by the Prince to M. Henry Iver, notary public. Prince Nicholas of Nassau, the grandson of the Prince, the Minister of Wurtemburg, and six other witnesses were present. The testamentary executors are MM. Berryer and Mitvalel.

Nothing has been as yet decided as to the funeral, as the orders of the King of Wurtemburg are awaited from Stutgardt on the subject.

In consequence of the death of the Prince, the ball which was to have taken place at the Tuileries on the 19th has been postponed to the 26th inst. The ball of the Minister of Marine has also been postponed to the 27th, on the same ground.

Our Engraving represents the lying of the body in state in the chapelle ardente.

FLEET OF MALAY PIRATES AND "ROYALIST" BOAT IN ENDEAVOUR STRAITS.

BLUNDELL'S PATENT SWEEPING MACHINE.

One of the practical results of the appointment of Sanitary Committees for improving the condition of our towns has been the introduction of mechanical means of cleansing the streets and public roads more economically and effectually than by the scavengers of old. A very useful invention of this class, shown in our Illustration, has lately been patented by Mr. Blundell. This Sweeper consists of revolving brushes, capable of being raised or lowered at will, and working diagonally beneath the machine, which is boxed up, and inside which is the gear-work, which is set in motion by the road wheels. The machine is manufactured by Mr. Croskill, of Beverley, who has lately introduced it to the notice of the local authorities of Hull, before whom a trial has been made, by sweeping several streets in the town; when the gentlemen assembled to witness the experiment expressed their approbation at the manner in which the machine did its work.

We understand that a man and horse, working the machine eight hours per day, at the very moderate pace of two miles per hour, will thoroughly sweep 56,320 superficial yards; and estimating 5s. per day for the horse, 3s. for the man, and 1s. for wear and tear, the work is done at a cost of about 2d. per 1000 yards; depositing the dust, dirt, &c., on each side of the road or street, ready for removal by the scavengers' carts. On macadamised roads the mud or dust is removed with a rapidity unprecedented. The pavement can be swept by hand machines with equal expedition and effect.

BLUNDELL'S PATENT SWEEPING MACHINE.

DR. REID'S SYSTEM OF LIGHTING THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On Monday last Dr. Reid's system of lighting the House of Commons was, for the first time, tried. The arrangement dispenses with the massive chandeliers which are represented in the Number of our Journal for February 7, and substitutes, in lieu of them, rings of gas jets pendant to about the level of the main beams of the ceiling. Panels of the flat part of the ceiling have been taken out; and, in the openings thus made, pyramidal boxes, if they may be so termed, open at the top, and painted a brilliant white, are inserted; and through the opening is pendant the gas-pipe, at the end of which is the ring of jets. This arrangement will be best understood by reference to the Diagrams. Fig. 1 shows the ceiling in perspective, the gas ring being hidden by a contrivance to prevent the great glare of the light from it being hurtful to the eyes. Fig. 2 shows the same in section: a a being the ribs of the ceiling; b, the gas jets, with the shield (c); c c, the conical chamber or box open at the top (d). The same letters of reference serve also for Fig 1. The appearance of the House is completely spoiled by this arrangement: the little compartments so brilliantly white are perfectly ugly and unmeaning; the whole, in fact, quite at variance with the character of the architecture. In addition to these alterations in the ceiling, the stained glass has been taken from two of the windows, and rows of gas jets placed outside to throw a volume of light into the House; this alteration, also, is quite opposed to the richly coloured light which should add its charm to the rich and fantastic Gothic forms. The white light now thrown into the House, in an æsthetic point, makes us regret the absence of the quaint monsters which were in the windows; indeed, the coloured windows are necessary to the style, and in the arrangement originally adopted, of throwing only sufficient light on the windows to show the full colours of the glass, the beautiful appearance of the House was much improved during the night sittings. Our daily contemporaries consider the new mode no improvement on the old as regards light or ventilation; and certainly, as detracting from the unity of the architectural embellishments, to say nothing of the fearful amount of heat which must be generated in very close proximity to the woodwork of the ceiling, the alterations are seriously to be regretted.

DR. REID'S SYSTEM OF LIGHTING THE NEW HOUSE OF COMMONS.

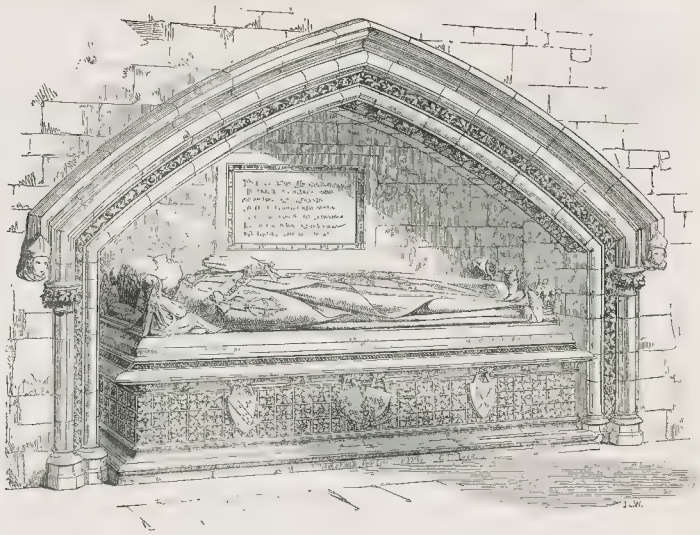
The total amount annually exported on works of arterial drainage in Ireland, and which have been finished, is £150,104 9s. 2d., the amount of the original estimate being £111,646 2s. 4d. The amount actually expended to the 30th of September last on unfinished works was £71,310,455 11s., the original estimate being £1,179,374 12s. 11d. The amount which will be required for the completion of those works is £583,794 8s. 3d. The area by original survey over which those drainage improvements are to be made is 288,253 statute acres, but by the revised survey 214,579 acres.

The Berlin Journals mention a trial of two brothers named Tomaschek, which took place on the 15th, before one of the tribunals of that capital. The brothers were charged with conspiracy and forgery, to procure amounts insured in the London Globe Insurance Office, and the insurance office in Copenhagen, by pretending the death and funeral of Franz, one of the brothers. A coffin, filled with straw and a sleeve-board, was actually buried at Berlin, in 1848, Anton, the second brother, following it to the grave as chief mourner. The medical certificates of death were forgeries, those of the burial were given by the clergyman in full belief that a body had been interred. On these certificates the insurance money was paid.



MONUMENT TO THE LATE EARL OF POWIS, K.G., IN ST. MARY'S CHURCH, WELCHPOOL.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE EARL OF POWIS, K.G.

This beautiful Memorial has just been completed by Mr. Richardson, the sculptor, from a chaste design by Mr. G. G. Scott, architect. It has been erected in St. Mary's Church, Welchpool, by order of the Countess of Powis. It is in alabaster, a material admirably suited for the purpose, but disused for the last two or three centuries.

The figure represents the Earl recumbent in the Garter robes, the hands in prayer, angels at the head, and at the feet the Clive and Herbert supporters and coronet. It rests on a richly diapered table, with shields of arms, and a raised brass inscription, with ruby ground, by Waller. A verse in Lombardic characters, from the 31st Psalm, is incised on the plinth of the effigy. The likeness, which is excellent, was obtained from Mr. Grant's fine portrait at Walcot, and a sketch by Sir George Hayter, but without the aid of a profile. The Garter robes and other details have been carefully studied. The Monument has been placed in its arch of Caen stone, beautifully carved by Philips, on the north wall of the chancel in St. Mary's Church, Welchpool, immediately under Powis Castle. The effect of the whole together is magnificent.

The alabaster, weighing from two to three tons, was obtained from the Chelleston quarry, near Derby, and Tauld, between Hanbury and Tutbury, where alabaster has been worked time out of mind; not only, of late, for pottery and conversion into plaster, but for decorative and sculptural uses. So important a branch of art industry was this in the middle ages, that it oftimes formed an export trade; for one instance of which see "Rymer," vol. 8, p. 510, where King Henry IV. grants a passport to three English workmen to convey their alabaster tomb and effigy across the seas, and put it in Nantes Cathedral, where it remained until lately. It represented John IV., Duke of Brittany. The earliest examples, it is believed, are some Norman carved work in Tutbury Church, and a Crusader in Hanbury Church. There are many beautiful tombs of alabaster still existing in this country, more particularly in the midland counties. In the time of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, Burton-on-Trent was famous for its "marblers in alabaster," as recorded by Leland and Camden. The material seems to have got out of use for monuments about the time of James I.; and Mr. Richardson, who is preparing a paper on the subject, conceives it is in some measure accounted for by the introduction of gunpowder into the pits in lieu of the saw and pick, whereby greater quantities were more readily obtained, but of small and unsound quality, and unfit for sculptural purposes. At Chelleston, while obtaining the Powis block, at a depth of 12 to 16 feet from the surface, were found old iron picks, an oaken ladder, a half-baked jug, and a finely sawn slab of alabaster, with other mediæval witnesses; and at Tauld not only are pits yielding every variety, but extinct pits are observable, and extend from Hanbury Church towards Tutbury. In an ancient survey of this Royal property, the rental is given for these pits and the herbage at £5 8s. by the year, a considerable sum in those days.

At Acton, near Chelleston, in Derby, and other places, according to Middleton, were formerly other quarries which yielded the finest alabaster to be obtained in the county, though closed about his time.

ON THE LOSS OF LIFE AT SEA.

(To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.)

12, Marlborough-hill, St. John's Wood, April 20.

In the sight of every humane person, there can scarcely be an object of greater importance to a country possessing an extensive marine, and involved in all its responsibilities, than one to which, of late, many of your columns have been considerately devoted.

The Legislature has found it to be necessary, and felt it to be a duty, to enact that every ship shall carry boats sound and capacious enough for holding, with due buoyancy, the whole of its company; but the enactment is a mere delusion so long as the means for suspending, lowering, and clearing off boats shall remain in their present defective state.

Not only on almost every occasion of wrecks do many of the boats prove unavailing from this cause, but fatal delay, loss of life, and injury to limbs often take place in getting landsmen, and especially women and children, down into boats after they are lowered. In many instances of wrecks and collisions ships drag their boats down with them, and nearly all on board perish, although it is rare that more than ten minutes do not elapse between the moment of a ship's striking and her foundering. But the evil is not confined to wrecks alone; there is a much more frequently occurring, if less extensive, loss of life to sailors who fall overboard at sea, a large proportion of whom are drowned before boats can reach them.

It is true that the failure in part arises from want of practice in the crew, and of use in the apparatus: but the apparatus itself is essentially defective, to a degree against which no practice and no use could provide; and the question is, whether an apparatus may not be contrived which shall not only require no use to keep it in order, and little practice for using it, but which shall provide with certainty for a rapid descent and clearing off of boats in so secure a manner, that their complement may be safely lodged in them before they are lowered—a point of great importance in all cases, and indispensable where the time of evacuation is limited to but a few minutes.

It is gratifying to notice the humane feeling which has moved so many persons to propose plans for preventing such disasters. At the same time, whatever facility of invention a person may possess, it cannot be exercised with complete success in any case compounded of many requirements, until these shall have been placed in due order before the mind.

Subjoined is a plan contrived with a view to simplicity, certainty of action, and cheapness. Both naval officers of experience and superior mechanicians have examined the apparatus with attention and given it their approval. No personal interest whatever enters into the desire to introduce this invention, for it has been presented to the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, which will obtain any benefit derivable from its use. I am, &c., JULIUS JEFFREYS.

ST. SEPULCHRE'S (ROUND) CHURCH, NORTHAMPTON.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Fig. 1.

In the Diagram Fig. 1, a b is a wheel and axle, or double drum, set vertically in the bulwarks of the ship, and equi-distant between the davits (d d) to which the boat is suspended. Through the axle or smaller drum (b), which is four inches in diameter, a chain or rope is passed, and its ends proceed horizontally in different directions to single pulleys or rollers (e e) at the foot of each davit. Here the chains or ropes take a vertical direction, and are then carried through other pulleys (f and g) to the end of the davits, pass downwards to the boat and form the falls by which it is suspended. When the axle (b) is turned, it winds the chain up upon itself from both directions equally; and in the same manner, when turned the other way, it lets off both chains equally, so that the head and stern of the boat must ascend and descend with strict equality, and the boat travel in a horizontal position, even though it should be much more loaded at one end than the other. The power by which the axle is turned, and the boat steadily hoisted and lowered, is applied to a rope (h) carried round the large "drum" (a), in a reverse direction to the coil of chain on the smaller drum. By making the large "drum" of four times the diameter of the smaller one, or about sixteen inches, a power of four is gained without any of the friction of pulley blocks; and equal, therefore, in effect to a pair of three-sheaved blocks at the end of each "fall." The pulleys in this place, being merely single-sheaved rollers for supporting and directing the chains, require only one sheave-hole, which can be made so free that any kink in the chain or rope could readily pass through it.

Fig. 2

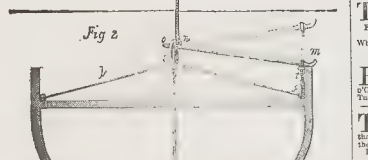

Fig. 2 represents a plan for safely suspending and simply disengaging the boat after it has been lowered into the water. k k are stays, stretching from either side of the boat across the opening to the oval ring (e) at the end of the piece of suspending chain (f), which proceeds from the bottom of the boat, where it is firmly fixed. The point s then becomes the centre of motion, well above the centre of gravity at the thwarts of the boat, and the suspending connexion is effected in a very simple manner by means of a single lever of the first order (m n o), which is a rod of about 4 feet long, tapering from about half an inch diameter at the end m to 1¼ inch at the end o. This lever has a staple firmly forged on it at the point n, lot out one-eighth of its length from o, which staple is permanently fixed to the end of the "fall," so that this lever always hangs to the "fall" by that staple, which divides it into a long arm (m n) and a short arm (n o). To make the boat fast to the "fall," a sailor at each end of the boat has only with the left hand to lay hold of the oval ring (e) at the end of the short chain (f), and as the boat comes up to the ship's side, with his right hand to catch hold of the long arm (m n) of the lever (m n o), as it hangs from the "fall," and to pass the short arm (n o) into the ring e, and then, at the same moment to depress the end m down to the gunwale of the boat. His left hand is now free to secure the end (m) to the gunwale by passing a short cord which is fixed to it round a cleat, as at p. When once made fast this convenient cannot be dissolved by any amount of agitation, but may be set free in a moment by letting the cord (l) loose from the cleat. In the dotted lines the lever is seen rising and on the point of escaping

A model of the invention will, we understand, be shewn this evening, at the Earl of Rosse's conversaziones.

PROPOSED RESTORATION OF ST. SEPULCHRE'S (ROUND) CHURCH, NORTHAMPTON.

THE Annual Spring Meeting of the Architectural Society of the Archdeaconry of Northampton was held on Wednesday week, at Northampton, when the occasion—rather a peculiar one—at the close of the restoration of St. Peter's Church, and at the commencement of the restoration of St. Sepulchre's—was taken advantage of to invite the members in Union to be present. That invitation was so cordially and widely accepted, as to render the meeting what it had been earnestly desired to make it an Architectural Congress. Among the proceedings was a very interesting paper read by Mr. G. G. Scott and Mr. Poole, upon the proposed restoration. We have not room for the report, but give a few particulars.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Northampton, is one of the four remaining round churches in England built after that of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, and is the only one of these singularly interesting edifices now unrestored. Its present condition is most deplorable. Though the parish has always done the substantial repairs, and though much money has thus from time to time been expended on it, the present round part is so encumbered with inconvenient pews and galleries, that it is difficult to distinguish its architectural features, or even to recognise its original form, a form in itself most ill-adapted for congregational worship, and which renders the present chancel and aisles almost useless. With a parish containing (after deducting the new district of St. Andrew's) nearly 6000 souls, there is available accommodation in the present church, and that of a most inconvenient kind, for barely 600. The only satisfactory mode in which the additional accommodation required can be obtained, and the present hindrances to reverential worship removed, is the same which would restore to the building its unique architectural character, viz. by bridge, and at the Offices of the Institution, where lists of subscribers, forms of recommendation, and every information may be obtained between the hours of Ten and Five daily.

STEPHEN J ALDRICH, Secretary.

April 21, 1852.

converting the present chancel and aisles to congregational uses, and extending them eastward to twice their present length, with chancel at the extremity, thus freeing the round part of its present encumbrances, and leaving it as a baptistery or ante-chapel to the rest of the Church. By this means convenient seats will be acquired for 600 worshippers besides such moveable single seats as may be placed in the round part. While the spiritual wants of the parish demand that the enlargement of the Church should be no longer delayed, its extreme interest and architectural interest require that its restoration should be most careful and complete. A committee has, therefore, been formed, with the the bishop and the archbishop, consisting of the vicar, churchwardens, and others, who purpose entrusting the work to the hands of Mr. G. G. Scott, the architect who has successfully superintended the restoration of St Peter's in Northampton. The cost of the undertaking cannot be estimated at less than £4000 —a sum which the parish by itself is quite unable to provide, and which, at the same time, it may be not forthcoming, from the interest which must naturally be felt by all the inhabitants of the town and country in preserving so singular a relict of the faith and chivalry of ancient times, even apart from the more important consideration of the great additional spiritual advantages which its enlargement will secure to the present generation.

The features of the round part are thus characterised by Mr. Poole. In the interior we have a circle of eight cylindrical columns, supporting pointed arches. The columns are decidedly Norman, and the arches, though pointed, are so exceedingly simple, being only of one order, with a flat soffit, that if it were possible to conceive that any Norman arches could be pointed, we might certainly suppose that those were of the same date with the columns. Yet it was a priori very unlikely that if this Church was early of the date assigned to it would have had pointed arches. In consequence it has given rise to various opinions. It has been declared an example of pointed arches of a pure Norman period, accounted for by the foreign influence which might under these circumstances be fairly expected; and an example of the transition period, which commences about 1145. Mr. Poole, some four years ago, attributed these arches to Simon de St. Liz, who died in 1127; but Mr. Poole now considers them to be so recent, as to be separated in their history from the columns it might be 400 years or more. Since that, Mr. Scott has discovered, beyond all possible doubt, that not the arches only, but also part of the columns themselves, are recent, the capitals having been taken off and the shafts lengthened about two feet.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 25.—Second Sunday after Easter. Princess Alice born, 1843.
MONDAY, 26.—David Hume born, 1711.
TUESDAY, 27.—Sun rises 5h. 41m., sets 7h. 14m.
WEDNESDAY, 28.—Mutiny of the Bounty, 1789.
THURSDAY, 29.—London University founded, 1827.
FRIDAY, 30.—Washington inaugurated President of the United States, 1789.
SATURDAY, May 1.—Prince Arthur born, 1850.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 1, 1852.

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m
5	20	5	49	6	16	6	55	7	32	8	3	8	45
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m
9	30	10	12	10	52	11	30	11	55	11	55	11	55

NEW WEEKLY PUBLICATION.

On Saturday next, May 1, price Twopence, the First Number of

THE PEOPLE'S ILLUSTRATED JOURNAL of Arts, Manufactures, Practical Science, Literature, and Social Economy

Published in Weekly Numbers, containing 16 quarto pages, price 2d., and in Monthly Parts. Published at the Office, 11, Bouverie street, Fleet-street;

Where all Communications for the Editor must be addressed, and where Advertisements are received.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY.—BRIGHTON and LONDON.—DR. DARLING will give a series of amusing EXPERIMENTS THIS DAY, at Two o'Clock, at the NEWBURGH ROOMS, BRIGHTON, and on the evenings of Monday next, Tuesday, April 26 and 27; and at the Hanover-square Rooms every Wednesday and Friday.

THE BEHRING'S STRAITS EXPEDITION.—The Subscribers to aid of Mr Rodgers, Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin are informed that the EXPEDITION is DETAINED, in consequence of the funds being insufficient to defray the cost of equipments.

Enbol, Millwall, April 14. D. BEATSON.

RESCUE of Capt. Sir JOHN FRANKLIN, Capt. RICHARD CROZIER, and 126 other brave Officers and Men.—An earnest APPEAL is made to the public to lend their aid (by immediate subscriptions) to Capt BEATSON'S EXPEDITION in search of our less countrymen. Capt. Beatson proposes to start almost at once, and therefore requests that all sums are earnestly requested to be sent by those who wish to aid the cause to the Royal Geographical Society, 3, Waterloo-place; and to 36, Moorgate-street; and the bankers EDUCATION. In an Establishment for the Daughters of Gentlemen (delight city situated on the South Coast, Vanenuse ocean after Easter. There are resident Foreign Teachers and Professors of talent attend. The number of pupils is limited, and the domestic arrangements are very liberal. References given to Clergymen of the Established Church, and to parents of children who have been several years in the house. Inclusive terms from 60 to 80 guineas per annum. Address, F. W., care of Mr. BELLAIR, No. 67, cressenhall-street, City.

CHELTENHAM GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—Established 1578. Number of Boys now limited to Thirty. Under Fifteen years of age at entrance.—Head Master: E. R. Humphreys, L.L.D. Ex. Author of the "Lyra Britannica." Examinations, Lessons, and Work under the Head Master of the Junior Forms by Assistant Masters. The School REOPENED the above SCHOOL on the 14th of APRIL, and he is prepared to receive Additional Boarders. The domestic arrangements will be on the same plan as at present. Home comforting everything as related to promote the cleanliness, comfort, and salutary Home comforting everything as related to promote the cleanliness, comfort, and correct moral habits of the pupils. A Matron and Drill Sergeant form part of the domestic establishment. There are Five Scholarships and Exhibitions in connexion with the School at Colleges in Oxford, none of which is less than £50 per annum. Prospectuses can be had of Dr Humphreys.

CALDWELL'S ASSEMBLY-ROOMS, DEAN-STREET, SOHO, capable of accommodating 1200 persons.—SOIREES DANSANTES every Night. Admission, 6d. per quarter, £1. 1s.—Mr Caldwell undertakes to teach any Lady or Gentleman unacquainted with the science of the Ball-room to enter with grace and freedom. Classes in Oxford, none of which is less than £50 per annum. Prospectuses can be had of Dr Humphreys. R. H. CALDWELL, L.L.D., Sec. Hon. Sec.

CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS will RE-APPEAR, on MONDAY, April 26th, at their ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, King-street, St. James's, for a limited number of Nights only, previous to their departure for the Provinces. Doors open at Seven o'Clock, and the Performance commences at Half-past Seven. Boxes, 5s.; Pit, 3s.; Amphitheatre, 2s.—Private Boxes, 2 guineas. Stalls, 5s. Tickets and Programmes to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre, where Seats may be secured from Eleven till Five daily; and of all the principal Librarians.

ROBIN'S SOIREES.—Immense Success of his last Wonders, and his Fourth and entirely New Programme.—Every Evening, at a Quarter past Eight o'Clock precise, N. and Mdme Robin will repeat their admirable Entertainment, and every Wednesday a Morning Performance, at Half-past Two.—Stalls (reserved), 3s.; Area under the Colonnade, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Places may be secured at Mr Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, Mr Sams, St. James's Library, 1, Regent-street, Messrs Ewer, Addrews, and all the principal Libraries, and at the box-office of the Theatre, 224, Piccadilly, opposite the Haymarket.

MISS HELEN TAYLOR (pupil of Signor Crivelli) respectfully announces that her FIRST CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 28th. Vocalists: Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Helen Taylor, Bassano, Emil Tyrkietz, and Dolby; Signor F. Lablache. Master Bennet, Swift, Whitworth, and Braham. Pianoforte, Miss Kate Loder; violin Mr Ransford. Conductors, Mr C. Lucas. Tickets, seven shillings each; reserved seats, half-a-guinea; may be obtained of all the principal musicsellers and of Miss HELEN TAYLOR, Whitehall.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that their SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on FRIDAY, APRIL 30th, 1852, to commence at Eight o'clock. Vocalists: Miss Dolby, Mrs Rainford, Madame Macfarren, and Madame Ferrari, Messrs Swift, Henry, Horsnail, and Ferrari. Instrumentalists: Herr Peter, Miss Kate Loder, Messrs W. H. Holmes, J. B. Chatterton, G. Genest, Ay. ard, and Signor Regondi. Conductors: Messrs F. Mori and G. F. Kia.-mark. —Tickets, 7s. each to be had at Messrs CRAMER and BEALE'S, and at the principal Musicsellers; Reserved Seats, 10s 6d.; to be had only at Signor and Madame FERRARI'S residence, 69, Upper Norton-street, Portland-place.

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 5, when he will be assisted by most eminent Vocal and Instrumental Talent, with a numerous and efficient Orchestra. Two of Mr Aguilar's latest compositions—a Grand Allegro Maestoso for piano, with orchestral accompaniments; and an Overture, entitled "Alphona"—will be produced.—Further particulars will be duly announced.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS' FIRST PERFORMANCE (this season) of CLASSICAL and MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 5. Subscriptions to the Series (Three Concerts) One Guinea. Single Tickets, 15s. Stalls, 10s. Unreserved Seats, Seven Shillings. To be had of the Musicsellers, and of Mr Richards, 6, Somerset-street, Portman-square.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY next, APRIL 30, Mendelssohn's sacred Oratorio, ELIJAH. Vocalists: Miss Birch, Miss M. Williams, Mrs Lempriere, Miss Clara Henderson; Mr Lockey, Mr H. Phillips, Mr Bodda, and Mr Weiss. The Band and Chorus will consist of about 800 Performers. Conductor, Mr Surman. Tickets, 3s. 6d., Reserved Seats, 5s. and 7s. Orchestra Stalls, 10s. 6d. Gallery, 2s. Centre Area Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. The Rehearsal on Wednesday next, April 28, at Eight o'clock precisely. Admission by Tickets, 2s. 6d. each; or, for reserved seats, 4s. Only Office of the Society, No. 6, Exeter Hall—Reserved Seat Entrance.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER-HALL. Conductor, Mr. COSTA.—FRIDAY, MAY 14, MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH. Vocalists:—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Miss Birch, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Lockey, and Herr Formes. The orchestra, the most extensive in Exeter-hall, will consist of (including the usual band) nearly 700 performers. Principal Violin, Mr. Sainton. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. each; at the Society's office, 6, in Exeter-hall. Subscribers now entering will be entitled to three tickets for the above Concert.

QUEEN'S CONCERT-ROOMS, HANOVER-SQUARE.—Miss MACALPINE and Miss MARGARET MACALPINE have the honour to announce that their FIRST CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms on TUESDAY, APRIL 27th. To commence at Eight o'Clock. Vocalists: Madame Birch, Dolby, Macalpine, and Margaret Macalpine; Messrs Swift, Wrighton, and Whitworth. Instrumentalists—Mr Kuhlmark, Herr Von Holzlegeln, Signor Puzzi, and Signor Bottesini. Reserved Seats, 10s 6d.; Single Tickets 7s 6d. To be had at the Misses Macalpine's residence, 81, Westbourne Park Villas, and of the principal Musicsellers.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—A CLASS for the Practice of PSALMODY and CHANTING, to be conducted by Mr JOHN HILLAH, will be opened on SATURDAY, MAY 1st, at Three o'clock; to meet at the same hour on every following Saturday throughout the year. Terms: Twelve Months, 10s. Six Months, 6s; Three Months, 3s. Prospectuses may be had at St Martin's Hall, or of Messrs J. W Parker and Son, 445, West Strand.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—Programme of M. EMILE PRUDENT'S grand MORNING CONCERT on THURSDAY, April 29th, 1852. To commence at Two o'Clock precisely.—PART FIRST:—Overture "Zanetta (Auber); Duo, Mdlle Josephine Treffz and Emile Prudent (Thalberg); Piano and Orchestra (Prudent), M. Prudent; "Absence," Mdlle. sive Orchestra (Berlioz), M. Meichart. Schott; Introduction, Marche et Pas de Treffz (Caroline Treffz); "La Serenade," "Les Hirondelles," Piano (Prudent); Duo, for Violin et Violoncello, Signori Sivori et Piatti. PART SECOND:—Overture, "Non Plus Ultra" (Beethoven); Lord (Rackel), Mdlle Josephine Treffz; "Les Bois," Chasse pour Piano avec Orchestre (Prudent), M. Prudent; "Ihre bischaari" (Schubert), Herr Reichardt; Wedding March (Mendelssohn). Accompanist at the Pianoforte, Mr F. Aguilar. Conductors, Messrs Jullien and Prudent. Tickets, 10s 6d., Reserved Seats near the orchestra, 21s. To be had of Messrs Cramer and Co, Beonay and Co, Wessel, and Co, and at all the principal Musicsellers.

EGYPTIAN HALL.—HOLY LAND and JERUSALEM.—The Original Great DIORAMA, presenting at the Tower, Villages, and Sacred Sites of Arabia, Syria, and Palestine; Streets of Jerusalem, Scenes of the Nativity, Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Interior of Mosque of Omar, Daily, at 3 and 8. Admission, 1s., Pit, 2s. 6d; Stalls, 3s. 6d.—Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS will OPEN their Eighteenth Annual EXHIBITION on MONDAY next, 53, Pall Mall, near St James' Palace, from Nine o'Clock till Dusk. Admission 1s. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

CLOSING OF THE EXHIBITION.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL-MALL.—The GALLERY for the EXHIBITION and SALE of the WORKS of BRITISH ARTISTS is OPEN Daily from Ten Till Five, and will close on Saturday, May 8. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s. GEO. R. NEWTON, Secretary.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION of FINE ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of the above Association will OPEN for the Season on MONDAY next, at the PORTLAND GALLERY, No 316, Regent-street (opposite the Polytechnic Institution), from 9 A.M. till Dusk.—Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s. BELL SMITH, Secretary.

GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT-STREET.—Now exhibiting Daily, the Grand Moving Diorama, illustrating the WAR in INDIA CAMPAIGNS in INDIA, PORTUGAL, and SPAIN, concluding with the BATTLE of WATERLOO. Afternoon, Three o'Clock; Evening, Eight o'Clock. Admission, 1s, Stalls, 2s 6d; and reserved seats, 3s. Doors open half an hour before each representation

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN for the season. Since March 25th, the following additions have been made to the Collection:—A pair of Nilgau Antelopes, having been presented by the Hippopotamus, Elephant Calf, and other rare animals, died in the winter. Admission, 1s; on Mondays 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—BACHHOFFNER and DR FLIN'S NEW PANTECHNETHECON PICTURE, by FRANCIS FLIN, is NOW OPEN Every Morning and Evening at One and Eight o'Clock, with Dissolving Views, Illustrative of the Manners, Dress and Diving Bell, &c.—Admission, 1s; Schools and Children under ten years of age, half-price.

OPERA BOXES in the BEST SITUATIONS.
ORCHESTRA STALLS, and PIT TICKETS, on Moderate Terms.
At Mr MITCHELL'S, ROYAL LIBRARY, 33, OLD BOND-STREET.
FRENCH PLAYS, every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
PRIVATE BOXES by the Night for every Theatre in London

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—GRAND EXTRA NIGHT. —FIDELIO.—It is respectfully announced that a GRAND EXTRA NIGHT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, APRIL 29, when will be presented (for the first time this Season, Beethoven's celebrated Opera, FIDELIO. Leonora, Mdlle Sofia Cruvelli; Marcellina, Mdlle. Feller; Florestan, Signor Calzolari; Rocco, Signor Lenhil; Jacquino, Signor Mercuriali; Il Ministro, Signor Fortuni; and Pizarro, Signor Coletti; with various Entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, by Mdlle. Carolina Rossi, Mdlle Guy Stephan Mdlle Rosa, Lamoureux, Egger, Allegrini, MM d'Mattea and Mathieu.—Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Opera Box-office, Colonnade, Haymarket.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Final Arrangements.—On MONDAY, APRIL 26, HOCHET DUNE COQUETTE, and BATAILLE DE DAMES. WEDNESDAY, April 28, Le REGNIER a SENLIS, and MDLLE DE LA BEGLIERE. FRIDAY, April 30, Le Barbiere de Seville, and Le Mari a la campagne, being positively the last appearances of M Regnier, Mdlle Desmarets, Mdlle Marquet, and Mdme Roger Selle. Doors will be opened at Seven o'clock, and the performances commences at Half-past Seven. Boxes, 8s; Pit, 3s; Amphitheatre, 2s.—Private Boxes, 2 Guineas. Stalls, 5s. Tickets and Programmes to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre from Eleven till Five daily; and of all the principal Librarians.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr CHARLES KEAN.—MONDAY, APRIL 26th, will be performed the CORSICAN BROTHERS; and the New Fairy Easter Piece. Tuesday, 27th: The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Wednesday, 28th: Shakspeare's Play of KING JOHN, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Thursday, 29th: The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Friday, 30th: The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Saturday, May 1st. The Corsican Brothers, and the new Fairy Easter Piece.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE, ADELAIDE-STREET, WEST STRAND.—On MONDAY, APRIL 26, and every Evening during the week, at Eight o'Clock, a new Introductory Burletta, written by Mr Augustus Brown. After which, an Original Drama, in Two Acts, entitled THE HAUNTED MAN; or, The Ghost's Bargain. To conclude with the Extravaganza of ALADDIN and the WONDERFUL LAMP. A Morning Performance on Wednesday the 28th inst, and Saturday May 1st, at Three o'Clock. Doors to open half an hour previous to the commencement. Private Boxes, Stalls, &c. to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre from Eleven till Five daily; and of all the principal Librarians.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. WARDE.—On MONDAY, APRIL 26, and during the Week, will be presented the gorgeous, historical, and warlike Spectacle of BONAPARTE in EGYPT; or, the Battle of Aboukir; combining life like Scenes in elements and striking characteristics of that Grand Drama. To conclude with the Extravaganza of ALADDIN and the WONDERFUL LAMP. A Morning Performance on Wednesday the 28th inst, and Saturday May 1st, at Three o'Clock. Doors to open half an hour previous to the commencement. Private Boxes, Stalls, &c. to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre from Eleven till Five daily; and of all the principal Librarians.

TWELVE LECTURES on DANTE.—Professor J. CASTO will deliver his SECOND LECTURE: Introduction to the Hell, and Second and Third Canto, on WEDNESDAY, 28th instant, at Hanover-square Rooms, at Three o'clock.—Ticket for the Series 25s; Family Ticket (to admit three), two guineas; Single Ticket (reserved), 3s. Unreserved, 2s. Programme and Tickets may be had at the Rooms, or at Mr. Sams', Library Bond-street.

ROBIN'S SOIREES.—Immense Success of his last Wonders, and his Fourth and entirely New Programme.—Every Evening, at a Quarter past Eight o'clock precise, N. and Mdme Robin will repeat their admirable Entertainment, and every Wednesday a Morning Performance, at Half-past Two.—Places may be secured at Mr Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, Mr Sams, St. James's Library, 1, Regent-street, Messrs Ewer, Addrews, and all the principal Libraries, and at the box-office of the Theatre, 224, Piccadilly, opposite the Haymarket.

MISS HELEN TAYLOR (pupil of Signor Crivelli) respectfully announces that her FIRST CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY Evening, April 28th. Vocalists: Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Helen Taylor, Bassano, Emil Tyrkietz, and Dolby; Signor F. Lablache. Master Bennet, Swift, Whitworth, and Braham. Pianoforte, Miss Kate Loder; violin Mr Ransford. Conductors, Mr C. Lucas. Tickets, seven shillings each; reserved seats, half-a-guinea; may be obtained of all the principal musicsellers and of Miss HELEN TAYLOR, Whitehall.

SIGNOR and MADAME FERRARI beg to announce that their SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on FRIDAY, APRIL 30th, 1852, to commence at Eight o'clock. Vocalists: Miss Dolby, Mrs Rainford, Madame Macfarren, and Madame Ferrari, Messrs Swift, Henry, Horsnail, and Ferrari. Instrumentalists: Herr Peter, Miss Kate Loder, Messrs W. H. Holmes, J. B. Chatterton, G. Genest, Ay. ard, and Signor Regondi. Conductors: Messrs F. Mori and G. F. Kia.-mark. —Tickets, 7s. each to be had at Messrs CRAMER and BEALE'S, and at the principal Musicsellers; Reserved Seats, 10s 6d.; to be had only at Signor and Madame FERRARI'S residence, 69, Upper Norton-street, Portland-place.

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 5, when he will be assisted by most eminent Vocal and Instrumental Talent, with a numerous and efficient Orchestra. Two of Mr Aguilar's latest compositions—a Grand Allegro Maestoso for piano, with orchestral accompaniments; and an Overture, entitled "Alphona"—will be produced.—Further particulars will be duly announced.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS' FIRST PERFORMANCE (this season) of CLASSICAL and MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 5. Subscriptions to the Series (Three Concerts) One Guinea. Single Tickets, 15s. Stalls, 10s. Unreserved Seats, Seven Shillings. To be had of the Musicsellers, and of Mr Richards, 6, Somerset-street, Portman-square.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL.—On FRIDAY next, APRIL 30, Mendelssohn's sacred Oratorio, ELIJAH. Vocalists: Miss Birch, Miss M. Williams, Mrs Lempriere, Miss Clara Henderson; Mr Lockey, Mr H. Phillips, Mr Bodda, and Mr Weiss. The Band and Chorus will consist of about 800 Performers. Conductor, Mr Surman. Tickets, 3s. 6d., Reserved Seats, 5s. and 7s. Orchestra Stalls, 10s. 6d. Gallery, 2s. Centre Area Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. The Rehearsal on Wednesday next, April 28, at Eight o'clock precisely. Admission by Tickets, 2s. 6d. each; or, for reserved seats, 4s. Only Office of the Society, No. 6, Exeter Hall—Reserved Seat Entrance.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER-HALL. Conductor, Mr. COSTA.—FRIDAY, MAY 14, MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH. Vocalists:—Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Miss Birch, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Lockey, and Herr Formes. The orchestra, the most extensive in Exeter-hall, will consist of (including the usual band) nearly 700 performers. Principal Violin, Mr. Sainton. Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d. each; at the Society's office, 6, in Exeter-hall. Subscribers now entering will be entitled to three tickets for the above Concert.

QUEEN'S CONCERT-ROOMS, HANOVER-SQUARE.—Miss MACALPINE and Miss MARGARET MACALPINE have the honour to announce that their FIRST CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms on TUESDAY, APRIL 27th. To commence at Eight o'Clock. Vocalists: Madame Birch, Dolby, Macalpine, and Margaret Macalpine; Messrs Swift, Wrighton, and Whitworth. Instrumentalists—Mr Kuhlmark, Herr Von Holzlegeln, Signor Puzzi, and Signor Bottesini. Reserved Seats, 10s 6d.; Single Tickets 7s 6d. To be had at the Misses Macalpine's residence, 81, Westbourne Park Villas, and of the principal Musicsellers.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—A CLASS for the Practice of PSALMODY and CHANTING, to be conducted by Mr JOHN HILLAH, will be opened on SATURDAY, MAY 1st, at Three o'clock; to meet at the same hour on every following Saturday throughout the year. Terms: Twelve Months, 10s. Six Months, 6s; Three Months, 3s. Prospectuses may be had at St Martin's Hall, or of Messrs J. W Parker and Son, 445, West Strand.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—Programme of M. EMILE PRUDENT'S grand MORNING CONCERT on THURSDAY, April 29th, 1852. To commence at Two o'Clock precisely.—PART FIRST:—Overture "Zanetta (Auber); Duo, Mdlle Josephine Treffz and Emile Prudent (Thalberg); Piano and Orchestra (Prudent), M. Prudent; "Absence," Mdlle. sive Orchestra (Berlioz), M. Meichart. Schott; Introduction, Marche et Pas de Treffz (Caroline Treffz); "La Serenade," "Les Hirondelles," Piano (Prudent); Duo, for Violin et Violoncello, Signori Sivori et Piatti. PART SECOND:—Overture, "Non Plus Ultra" (Beethoven); Lord (Rackel), Mdlle Josephine Treffz; "Les Bois," Chasse pour Piano avec Orchestre (Prudent), M. Prudent; "Ihre bischaari" (Schubert), Herr Reichardt; Wedding March (Mendelssohn). Accompanist at the Pianoforte, Mr F. Aguilar. Conductors, Messrs Jullien and Prudent. Tickets, 10s 6d., Reserved Seats near the orchestra, 21s. To be had of Messrs Cramer and Co, Beonay and Co, Wessel, and Co, and at all the principal Musicsellers.

EGYPTIAN HALL.—HOLY LAND and JERUSALEM.—The Original Great DIORAMA, presenting at the Tower, Villages, and Sacred Sites of Arabia, Syria, and Palestine; Streets of Jerusalem, Scenes of the Nativity, Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Interior of Mosque of Omar, Daily, at 3 and 8. Admission, 1s., Pit, 2s. 6d; Stalls, 3s. 6d.—Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS will OPEN their Eighteenth Annual EXHIBITION on MONDAY next, 53, Pall Mall, near St James' Palace, from Nine o'Clock till Dusk. Admission 1s. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

CLOSING OF THE EXHIBITION.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL-MALL.—The GALLERY for the EXHIBITION and SALE of the WORKS of BRITISH ARTISTS is OPEN Daily from Ten Till Five, and will close on Saturday, May 8. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s. GEO. R. NEWTON, Secretary.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION of FINE ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of the above Association will OPEN for the Season on MONDAY next, at the PORTLAND GALLERY, No 316, Regent-street (opposite the Polytechnic Institution), from 9 A.M. till Dusk.—Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s. BELL SMITH, Secretary.

GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT-STREET.—Now exhibiting Daily, the Grand Moving Diorama, illustrating the WAR in INDIA CAMPAIGNS in INDIA, PORTUGAL, and SPAIN, concluding with the BATTLE of WATERLOO. Afternoon, Three o'Clock; Evening, Eight o'Clock. Admission, 1s, Stalls, 2s 6d; and reserved seats, 3s. Doors open half an hour before each representation

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN for the season. Since March 25th, the following additions have been made to the Collection:—A pair of Nilgau Antelopes, having been presented by the Hippopotamus, Elephant Calf, and other rare animals, died in the winter. Admission, 1s; on Mondays 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—BACHHOFFNER and DR FLIN'S NEW PANTECHNETHECON PICTURE, by FRANCIS FLIN, is NOW OPEN Every Morning and Evening at One and Eight o'Clock, with Dissolving Views, Illustrative of the Manners, Dress and Diving Bell, &c.—Admission, 1s; Schools and Children under ten years of age, half-price.

NOTICE.—The Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS can have their Volumes Bound in the appropriate Covers, Gilt Edged, at 7s. per Volume, by sending them, carriage paid with Post-office order payable to LEIGHTON SON, and HODGE, 13, Shoe lane, London

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The back Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for 1850 and 1851 are now Reprinted, and may be obtained by order of all Booksellers and News-agents at the published price. The Numbers previous to 1850 can be had only in Parts or Volumes.

BOOKS, &c RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.
The Laws of Hos'th.—Webster' Royal Red Book.—The Career of Louis Napoleon.
MUSIC.—There are Deer in the Woods.—Oh, tell me not of Summer's glow.

NEXT WEEK WILL BE PUBLISHED
A MAY NUMBER
OF THE
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
THREE SHEETS—ONE SHILLING!

Among the Engravings to appear in this Treble Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be the following:—

MUSICAL SUPPLEMENT.—The Poetry by CHARLES MACKAY; the Symphonies and Accompaniments by Sir H. R. BISHOP. "The Swallow and the Robin" (Two Illustrations); "Wild Flowers" (Two Illustrations); "Wine and Glory" (One Illustration); "Could we recal Departed Days" (One Illustration); "The Silvery Birch" (Two Illustrations).

Also, "The Last Shilling Day at the Crystal Palace" (two-page Engraving); Pic-Nic in the Time of Charles II., by F. Taylor. L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, by Horsley. "He's Gone," by Dickson. May in Town, by Leech. A May Scene, by Doyle. Cora: a May Legend of Somerset. "The Signal," &c. &c.

Sketches in the Port Phillip Gold Diggings.—Pictures from the Water-Colour Societies' and Portland Gallery Exhibitions. Paris Fashions for May.—And a variety of other Engravings.

Office, 198, Strand.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1852.

THE re-establishment of the French Empire is the prominent topic of the week. The speculators of Paris are betting upon the event at the Bourse and elsewhere, the odds being at present against the realisation of the project. Many circumstances, however, conspire to lend strength to the belief that the 10th of May—the day on which the powers of the President would have expired by the Constitution of 1848—has been fixed upon for a new coup d'état. There is to be a grand review upon that day, at which the National Guard is not to be present; and a host of minor arrangements have been made, all dependent upon the one issue—the Empire. It is evident that, as far as the President is concerned, he earnestly covets the Imperial purple; that he has from the beginning made it his policy to attain it, by fair means or by foul; that it is with him a calculation, a conviction, and a faith that he shall be Emperor; and that if he be deterred, either now or at any future time, from attempting the decisive step which is to fix the crown upon his brow, it will not be from a consideration that he ought not, but that he may not, take it with safety. The people that surround him having so much more to gain by his success, and so much less to lose by his failure, urge him daily to dare all, and to emerge from the present provisional state of the grub Dictator into that of the full-fledged butterfly Emperor; but he himself, though more than willing, is for a while restrained by prudential considerations. Circumstances have recently come to light which will, no doubt, materially influence his decision. It appears that the late Prince Schwarzenberg, whose love of an iron despotism was so excessive that he could forgive Louis Napoleon all the flaws in his title, and all the questionable means by which he attained the supreme power, was not only favourably disposed to his assumption of the Imperial title, but actually addressed the Cabinets of St. Petersburgh and Berlin, and urged the consent of those great Powers to the proposed change, as one that would be of advantage to the cause of order and stability in Europe. The Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia did not, however, coincide in his opinion. The Emperor of Russia fairly and clearly stated, that if the French people chose to name Louis Napoleon Emperor for life, it was no business of his; but if Louis Napoleon chose, by a new coup d'état, to revive and establish an hereditary and imperial dynasty, he certainly should not acknowledge the assumption. The King of Prussia expressed the same determination. How far these serious facts may influence the conduct of Louis Napoleon, time alone will show; but it is more than probable that they will not be without their weight in inducing him to temporise. He is at present undisputed master and Lord of the French people, and his very enemies remain quiescent in the belief that he is a stop-gap—that he must last out his appointed time; and that he will give place, when events are ripe, to the greater man who is destined to overthrow him, and to restore the liberties of his outraged and oppressed country. But, as soon as he endeavours to convert his temporary into the permanent—to transform the autocratic President of a term of years into the hereditary Emperor—their hostility will take a more active shape. Besides, it has transpired that the President met with a most uncordial reception from the working men of the Faubourg St. Antoine, when a few days ago he miscalculated his popularity so far as to venture among them on his return from a visit to Vincennes. It is likely that this fact will also have its weight in inducing him to act warily.

A week ago the time seemed ripe for the Emperorship; but, as the appointed day draws near, the chances of the attempt seem to diminish. The army, it is true, seems full of confidence; but the same power that urges it, can restrain it. In the meantime there is a loan of from 200,000,000f. to 300,000,000f. on foot; and the final result will in no small degree depend on the views of the great capitalists whether the President or the Emperor is more safely to be trusted with it.

IF we may believe the multitudinous voice of Rumour, the act of the Crystal Palace is sealed; and the most marvellous, the most novel, and, as many assert, the most beautiful, building in the world, is no longer to challenge our admiration. It seems somewhat incredible, however, that such should be the case. London, without St. Paul's or the Tower, would almost cease to be London; and London without the Crystal Palace would be almost as bare. A grace and a glory would, in this case, have departed, and Vandalism with a grim smile might say, "I did it." The elegance, beauty, magnitude, and convenience of the building plead for it in vain. The minority who are leagued against it make its very merits the reason for its destruction. "Let it perish," they say, "for it is too beautiful to last. Let it die with its objects, and its memory will survive. It will become mythological in ceasing to be actual, and will rank with the enchanted halls of Aladdin, or with the Russian palace of ice, or with any other marvellous structure that exists only in the pages of romance." It is either too beautiful, or too good, or too large for the toleration of its foes; and if these are to carry the day, as Rumour emphatically asserts, England, proud of her common sense, will offer the not very sensible spectacle of wantonly destroying that which the two most celebrated and most civilised nations of the world, next to herself, most envy her the possession of. While Paris, ambitious of maintaining her ancient renown as the most beautiful capital in the world, fears that the character will no longer be deserved unless she have a Crystal Palace to justify it, and is seriously thinking of constructing a similar edifice; and while America, anxious not to be outdone by the "old country," is meditating whether she cannot have a better, or at all events as good, a palace as that which Paxton built, ours is to come down, and to be sold as broken glass and old iron! But may not Rumour be wrong? May it not have mistaken the apparent apathy of the public, and may not what is supposed to be apathy be simply the result of over-confidence or incredulity? The organ of destructiveness, of which the phrenologists tell us so much, is doubtless large in some individuals; but we are loth to believe in such a national development of the "bump" as the active or passive participation of the public in the demolition of this Building would prove.

We know it is argued that the Building is of no further use, that it would not pay to keep it up, and that, therefore, it is not destructiveness, but good policy, to pull it down. It cannot, however, be taken for granted that the argument is valid. It is by no means proved by the objectors that the Building could not be turned to the highest and best public uses in a variety of ways, or that means might not very easily be found for making it a self-sustaining institution, as well as a means of permanent gratification, advantage, and instruction to the people, not only of London, but of the whole kingdom. Whether it would be most advisable to make it a gigantic conservatory and museum of art and nature, or a perpetual exhibition of the skill and industry of the people of these islands; or whether it might not still more advantageously be applied to both, and many other purposes, we need not now take upon ourselves to decide, or even to inquire. We well know that those who cherish a foregone conclusion in their minds will not listen to reasons, however sound; and, indeed, in this as in other cases, the better the reason the more hateful it is to those who have predetermined not to be influenced by it. But it must be said that there has been a display of great unfairness on the subject. The manner in which the evidence of Sir Joseph Paxton has been perverted into an argument for the destruction of that which he so anxiously wished to preserve, is sufficient proof that the verdict destined to influence the fate of the Building was left to be delivered by its enemies. Yet in a case of this kind, where delay cannot possibly do any harm, and where precipitation can do mischief that may be irreparable, we do hope that time will yet be granted. A more mature consideration of the subject is required. There is no necessity for haste in the destruction of anything but a wild beast, a venomous reptile, or a rag that bears infection or the plague. The most obstinate enemies of the Crystal Palace cannot allege any danger as likely to result from a little more delay in the gratification of their wishes.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following appointments and preferments have recently been made:—Canonry: The Rev. J. D. Jefferson, to Osbaldwick, in York Cathedral. Rectories: The Rev. W. J. Jenkins, to Fillingham, near Lincoln; the Rev. George Gervase Ferry, to Wadington, Lincolnshire; the Rev. C. Smith, to Boothby Graffoe, Lincolnshire; the Rev. John Postle, to a fourth part of the rectory and a fourth part of the vicarage of Felmingham, Norfolk. Vicarages: The Rev. R. C. Arnold, to Ryegate, Kent; the Rev. Robert Emans Crawley, to Potterspury, Northamptonshire; the Rev. C. J. Sterling, to Newton-on-Trent, near Lincoln.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently received testimonials of esteem and regard:—The Rev. Joseph Walis, from parishioners and friends at St. Andrew's, Plymouth, on his removal; the Rev. John George M'Leod, on his resigning the curacy of St. Peter's, Derby, from the parishioners; the Rev. G. W. Warr, of St. Saviour's, Liverpool, from the congregation; the Rev. W. C. Sharpe, curate of the parish, from the parishioners of St. Michael Coslany, in the city of Norwich.

THE Earl of Canterbury has presented the Rev. James Jones Reynolds, B.A., curate of the parish of St. John the Baptist, Bristol, to the rectory of Shaftesbury St. Trinity, with St. Peter annexed, void by the resignation of the Rev. Canon Clerk.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL.—The total receipts of the society from all sources during the year 1851 amount to £147,476. On Friday week the monthly meeting was held at 79, Pall-Mall, when it was stated that the Jubilee fund has now reached £27,000. The following sums were granted from that fund:—1. For the extension of the episcopate, £15,000; of which £3000 are to be applied towards the endowment of a bishopric in the island of Mauritius; £6000 towards a new see in Borneo, part of the diocese of Cape Town; and £5000 towards the endowment of a bishopric which shall include the island of Borneo. A conditional grant was also made towards the endowment of the bisnopric of Sierra Leone, of £5000, which is now nearly, if not quite, completed. 2 For the education of missionary candidates the amount of £8500 was granted in the following sums, viz £.500 for the foundation of four Oriental scholarships at St. Augustine's Missionary College, Canterbury; and £1000 each to six colonial colleges; viz. St. John's and Fredricia, in New Zealand; Trinity College, Toronto; Bishop's College, Lennoxville, in Canada; Woodlands, at the Cape of Good Hope; and St. Thomas's College, Ceylon. 3 The sum of £3000 was directed to be applied to the spiritual aid of emigrants. The sum of £1000 was granted in aid of the projected mission to West Africa from the West Indies. A large sum was also set apart for missionary purposes in the East Indies. General satisfaction was expressed at the above appropriation of the Jubilee fund.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND MUTUAL ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—On Saturday evening, the annual meeting of the subscribers and to and members of this excellent society was held at St. Martin's Hall. This society was established at a public meeting held in May, 1849, for the purpose of affording to schoolmasters and mistresses and teachers in Sunday and week-day schools, conducted upon the principles of the Established Church, an opportunity of making assurances suitable to their peculiar circumstances, and of uniting themselves more closely together by a new bond, as a company almost entirely providing for each other in time of need. The Rev Richard Burgess, B.D, took the chair, and was supported by the Rev. T. Jackson, late principal of the Training College, Battersea; the Rev. D. Coleridge, principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea, and several other clergymen. The proceedings were of a highly satisfactory character.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AT CORK.

The committee of this great national undertaking met again on Tuesday, at their rooms, Stephen's-green, Dublin; Lord Talbot de Malahide occupying the chair. The meeting was a numerous and highly influential one. Mr Deane, the honorary secretary, read a letter from Mr. F. P. Money, enclosing a cheque from Herbert Ingram, Esq., of London, for £10; also, a cheque from Messrs Briggs and Co., of Primrose street, London, oil merchants, and the contractors for the supply of oil to many of the light-houses, &c. both in England and Ireland, and a subscription of £5 from Mr. Charles Geach, M.P. He (Mr. Deane) had lately inspected the Exhibition building at Cork, and was completely surprised at the extent of the works already completed, and the magnificence of the building. It presented an uninterrupted view from the entrance to the end of the southern hall, of 251 feet, independent of the transverse gallery 320 feet long. Both halls to be lit by roof-lights of glass. The available area was 14,272 feet, and the wall space 12,341 feet; of this space no more than 3000 feet now remained for disposal, so numerous had been the applications for space. Mr. Deane then alluded to the large amount of subscriptions that had been received from every quarter; and said that it was evident from this, and the number of applications for space from various parts of Ireland, that the Exhibition would be, in every sense of the word, a great National Exhibition of Irish arts, manufacture, and materials.

The Electric Telegraph Company have just completed their Great Northern system of telegraph, viz Peterborough, Lincoln, Newark, Doncaster, Boston, Gainsborough, Great Grimsby, and on to York, a distance of 220 miles, placing the agricultural district of the Lincolnshire Wolds in immediate communication with London, the West of England, and the North.

DEARTH OF LABOUR IN AUSTRALIA.—By a letter, dated the 27th December, from Portland Bay, dispatched per Port Phillip, it is reported that "the accounts from the mines continue so good that a very great scarcity of labour is being felt. Some people are left without more than one or two men in their establishments, who have been in the habit of employing thirty or forty. They have been obliged to put ten thousand instead of one thousand sheep in a flock; and, although these shifts may be made at the time of the year, though at great risk, from the bush fires, they will not answer in the winter time. Almost all the overseers in the country are gone, or are going; and this is the worst feature in it, that our most efficient men are those who are most likely to do well at the mines. The wool was shorn, but there was no means of getting it down in the country, for want of bullock-drivers."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The Queen and Prince Albert, with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, Prince Alfred, the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa, and Prince Arthur, and accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, left Windsor Castle at twenty minutes before three on Monday afternoon, and travelled by a special train on the Great Western Railway to London. At the Paddington station seven of the Queen's carriages were in readiness to convey her Majesty and Prince Albert and the Royal party to Buckingham Palace, a detachment of the 7th Hussars forming the escort. In the evening the Queen and Prince Albert, with Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, honoured the Princess' Theatre with their presence.

On Tuesday the Queen held a Court, at which the Right Hon. Sir Henry Bulwer, G.C.B., her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Tuscany, had an audience of her Majesty to take leave. On the same day the Queen paid a visit to the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester House, and in the evening honoured the Royal Italian Opera with her presence.

On Wednesday her Majesty held her third levee this season. The French plays were honoured with a visit in the evening

On Thursday her Majesty held a chapter of the most noble Order of the Bath.

The Queen will hold her second Drawingroom on Thursday next.

THE LEVEE.

Her Majesty held a levee at St. James's Palace, on Wednesday last. The Queen and the Prince arrived from Buckingham Palace at two o'clock, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, and were received by the great officers of state.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge and his Serene Highness Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg attended the levee. The Earl of Derby had an audience of the Queen.

The Queen wore a dress of grey moir antique silk, trimmed with black lace, grey ribbons, and white bugles. The petticoat was of white silk, trimmed with white tulle and white ribbons. Her Majesty wore round her head a wreath composed of blackberries and diamonds.

The diplomatic and general circle were both very fully attended, and the presentations were unusually numerous.

THE ORDER OF THE BATH.

Her Majesty held an investiture of the most honourable Order of the Bath on Thursday afternoon, at Buckingham Palace.

Lord Broughton had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him, and was invested with a riband and badge of a Knight Grand Cross (civil division) of the Bath.

The following Knights Grand Cross were afterwards severally introduced, and respectively invested by her Majesty with the insignia of a Knight Grand Cross (military division):—General Sir Peregrine Maitland, Admiral the Hon. Sir Thomas Bladen Capel, Lieut.-General Sir Alexander Woodford, Lieut.-General Sir Henry Frederick Bouverie, and Lieut.-General Sir John Burgoyne. The diplomatic and general circle were both very fully attended, and the presentations were unusually numerous.

The following officers had the honour of Knighthood conferred upon them, and were invested with the insignia of Knights Commanders (military division):—Major-General John Owen, Lieut.-General Thomas Downman, Vice-Admiral the Hon. Sir Anthony Maitland, Lieut.-General Sir Archibald Macleine, Lieut.-General George Charles D'Aguilar, Lieutenant General Henry Goodlake, Lieutenant-General John Bell, Lieutenant General George Brown, Rear-Admiral Phipps Hornby, Rear-Admiral William Fairbrother Carroll.

Admiral Sir Charles Ekins and Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Ballen were summoned to attend the investiture, as Knights Grand Cross, but were unable to be present.

His Royal Highness Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg left Buckingham Palace at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, on his return to the Continent.

The marriage of the Duchess of Sutherland's daughter, Lady Constance Leveson Gower, with Earl Grosvenor, is definitively fixed to take place on Wednesday next.

THE MAGELLAN PIRATES.—Great excitement—according to the latest accounts from Chili (South America)—prevailed at Valparaiso, in consequence of the arrival of the Virago (her Britannic Majesty's steamer) and Chilian brig of war Meteor, accompanying the American schooner barge Florida and British brig Ettra Cornish, with 353 of the revolutionists of the Magellan Straits. They all landed on the 24th of February. Cambiaso, the murderous leader, being heavily ironed, was conducted in a whale-boat (sic), but looked very cool, and amused himself by twirling his moustache, and nodding to any chance acquaintance in the crowd. Captain Talbot, of the Ettra Cornish, Mr. Cornish, passenger, and son of the vessel's owner, and Mr. Shaw, of Florida, and a few others (including one woman), were all shot in cool blood, without any apparent cause, but just to satisfy Cambiaso's craving for blood. As soon as the news reached Valparaiso of the massacre on board these vessels, a despatch was sent to Commo ore M'Cauley, at Callao, then on his way to Panama, who immediately returned to the former port with the United States frigate Raritan. These vessels had been employed to convey the rebel troops from Valparaiso to the Straits of Magellan. When the Virago passed through the Straits, on her way from England to the Pacific, Cambiaso formed the plan of taking her, by inviting the officers to a banquet on shore, there giving them poisoned drinks, and sending picked revolutionists on board. Fortunately, the apothecary of the colony, to his honour and credit, positively refused to be a party to such an infamous affair, and the threat of being shot therefor did not shake him. Ere this, Cambiaso and his associates have probably received their deserts.

FIRE AT SHEPTON MALLET.—Between one and two o'clock on Wednesday morning, the silk-throwing and velvet factory of Messrs. Hardisty, in Shepton Mallet, was discovered to be on fire, and in less than 20 minutes the roof fell in, and the whole of the immense building was in flames. The engines of the town were quickly on the spot, but to save the factory was hopeless, and their efforts were directed to the neighbouring houses, five of which were destroyed. The origin of the fire is not known. Messrs. Hardisty are partially insured. The damage sustained is estimated at between £8000 and £12,000.

THE BRAZILS.—The French Government has received from the officer in command of the naval station of Brazil and La Plata despatches to the 5th of March. At that date Admiral Le Prédour had just placed on board ship for France the expeditionary troops, whose presence was no longer required in that part of the world. The report of the Admiral speaks in high terms of the conduct of the marines and crews under his command. Landed at Buenos Ayres after the battle which terminated the war, and at a moment when the city was overrun by bands of armed men, they contributed powerfully to maintain order and protect property. It was owing to their firm attitude, the report says, that the bank and custom-house stores were preserved from pillage.

GOLD FROM AUSTRALIA.—The vessel Blackfriars, which has just arrived in the London Docks from Sydney, has brought eight packages of gold addressed, and also 22 packages of gold consigned to order. The ship Alert, which has also arrived in the London Docks from the same place, has brought the large quantity of 58 packages of gold dust addressed, and 19 boxes of gold dust consigned to order. The ship Melbourne, from Port Philip, has brought 37 boxes of gold dust addressed to different parties, and also 10 boxes and 44 cases of gold dust consigned to order

MADEMOISELLE JOHANNA WAGNER.—In refutation of what has been termed "sharp practice" in Mdlle. Wagner's transactions with the director of Her Majesty's Theatre, Herr Albert Wagner, father of the singer, has published a letter, the gist of which may be briefly stated. Herr Wagner declares that the director of the Royal Italian Opera, as early as 1850, made several propositions to his daughter, Mdlle. Wagner, to enter into continental engagements, prevented her from accepting; and that, in the autumn of last year, these propositions were renewed; but that, owing to circumstances, wholly uninteresting to the public, Mdlle. Wagner was induced to give the preference to Her Majesty's Theatre, with the director of which establishment she signed a treaty for the present season. Herr Wagner further states, that, in the course of last month, his daughter received several letters from the director of the Royal Italian Opera, to which, considering herself bound to the other theatre, she did not reply. An important stipulation, however, in the engagement with Her Majesty's Theatre, which was to have been carried out on the 5th of March, not having been fulfilled, Mdlle. Wagner, on the 5th of the present month, regarding the old contract as null and void, concluded a new one with the director of the Royal Italian Opera.—Times.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"I MARTIRI," LYRIC TRAGEDY, IN FOUR ACTS; THE MUSIC BY DONIZETTI, THE POETRY BY SCRIBE, AND THE ITALIAN ADAPTATION BY MAGGIONI.

FOUR illustrious names are associated with the opera of "The Martyrs," produced with such signal success on Tuesday night, at Covent-garden, in presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert, Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, and a large assemblage of fashionable, literary, and artistic celebrities, amongst whom must be specified as the "lion" of the evening—the "observed of all observers"—Mdlle. Johanna Wagner, who was in a private box with her father. The four names are Pierre Corneille, Adolphe Nourrit, Scribe, and Donizetti. It was Corneille who wrote "Polyeucte, Martyr," in 1640: it was Nourrit, the celebrated French tenor, who suggested the tragedy to Donizetti as the subject for an opera, at the San Carlo, in Naples, in 1839; but on the eve of representation the authorities prohibited the performances of "Polyeucte" as profane; and poor Nourrit, the night after the prohibition, having been hissed while he was singing, returned to his domicile, and committed suicide by throwing himself out of the window. Curiously enough, Donizetti, who had written Lucia for Duprez, the rival tenor who drove Nourrit from Paris in despair, afterwards adapted "Polyeucte" for the Grand Opéra in Paris, with two old Scribe, for Duprez; and on the 10th of April, 1840, "Les Martyrs" was brought out at the Académie

Royale de Musique, Mdme. Dorus Gras being Pauline, M. Massol, Sévère, the Roman Proconsul; M. Derivis, Félix, the Governor of Armenia; M. Serda, Calisthenes, the priest of Jupiter; and M. Wartel, Nearque, the friend of Polyeucte. Although the opera was rapturously received, it did not remain in the répertoire, the connoisseurs only arriving to hear the third act, and quitting the theatre before the fourth act, to the annoyance of Duprez. The judgment of the Parisian amateurs was, however, quite accurate. The first, second, and fourth acts contain little that will fix the attention of posterity, but the third act has some sublime situations, both dramatic and musical. Schlegel's analysis of Corneille's tragedy is so admirable, that we willingly transfer it here as a key to the libretto. In "Polyeucte," Christian sentiments are not unworthily expressed; yet we find in it more superstitious reverence than fervent enthusiasm for religion; the wonders of grace are rather affirmed than embraced by a mysterious illumination. Both the tone and the situations in the first act inclice greatly, as Voltaire observes, to "comedy." A woman who, in obedience to her father, has married against her inclinations, and who declares, both to her lover (who returns when too late) and to her husband, that "she still retains her first love, but that she will keep within the bounds of virtue;" a vulgar and selfish father, who is sorry that he has not chosen for his son-in-law the first suitor, now become the favorite of the Emperor—all this promises no very high tragical determinations. Scribe has rigidly adhered to the tragedy, putting in action the events which are only described by Corneille. In the first act there is the conversion of Polyeuius (Tamberlik) by Nearcus (Stigelli); in the second there is the arrival of Severus (Ronconi), with his discovery that his early love, Pauline (Madame Julienne), is united to Polyeuius; in the third act there is the condemnation of Nearcus, the avowal of Polyeuius that he is also a Christian, and his condemnation by his father-in-law, Félix; and in the last act Pauline accepts the faith of her husband, and the martyrdom of the Christians takes place, despite of the noble efforts of Severus o save them from the wrath of the High Prettt of Jupiter (Polonini).

The great defect in the music of Donizetti for the "Martiri" is, that he has not grappled with, and embodied, the antagonistic passions of the Christians and Heathens. The opera is, throughout, of one colour, and lacks contrast. In the choruses to Proserpine and to Jupiter the mode of treatment scarcely differs from that adopted to depict the holy rites of Christianity. The Italian composer has sought to imitate Meyerbeer, but has failed to attain the individuality of character so wonderfully observed in the "Huguenots," of which the "Martiri" is but a faint copy. Mr. Costa has made some wholesale but very necessary cuts in the score, and it will be found expedient to excise still more, particularly the divertissement in the second act. The omission of the overture, in which the novel effect of a chorale sung behind the curtain was introduced, is not at all to be regretted. Donizetti took especial pains with the orchestration, but an overture was beyond his grasp. The most effective piece in the first act was the trio in the finale, in six-eight time, "Ah! se in m'ami," beautifully sung by Mdme. Julienne, Stigelli, and Tamberlik. In the second act, Mdme. Julienne made a good impression by her singing of the polacca, "Perché di sedii;" and Ronconi, who has the melodious gem of the opera, a romance, "Amor de miei prim' anni," lighted the auditory, but the finale went off heavily. In the third act, attention was awakened by the duo between Mdme. Julienne and Ronconi, "Approdando à questa riva," beautifully instrumented. Then came the tender air, in six-eight time, "Sapreste oggetto," exquisitely sung by Tamberlik, in the cabaletta of which, "Si, Andrò nel loro tempeo," he took the house by storm, being the announcement of Polyeuius's resolve to overthrow the Pagan idols. In the encore he took the C sharp in alt with thrilling effect. The finale of the third act excited the enthusiasm of the house to the highest pitch. The scene is in the Temple of Jupiter, and begins with a heathen ceremony of the immolation of a victim. Nearcus is condemned, and Polyeuius avows that he is of the same creed. A magnificently-voiced septet, the themes of which will remind the hearer of the "Lucia," was next superbly sung by Mdme. Julienne, Tamberlik, Stigelli, Ronconi, Polonini, and Marini, which was rapturously redemanded. After Polyeuius had broken the sacred vases, the crescendos in the finale were climax upon climax, the amazingly-powerful voices of Madame Julienne and Tamberlik being heard above the combined choral and orchestral masses with electrifying effect. The curtain fell amidst a storm of cheering, and after the artistes had been recalled the presence of Costa was imperiously exacted. In point of conception and execution, this finale may take place with the finest Royal Italian Opera lyric displays. In the last act, the duet in the prison scene between Madame Julienne and Tamberlik was another triumph for the artistes; but the denouement of the martyrdom did not move the sympathies in the manner intended by Corneille and Scribe.

Madame Julienne is a native of Rouen, and was a pupil of the same master as Poultier, the cooper tenor. She has been the prima donna of the Grand Opera n Paris, at which theatre her powerful soprano told amazingly in those works requiring more than ordinary physical power. The quality of her organ and her style are essentially French: she possesses immense energy. Madame Julienne, whose married name is Dejean, must not be confounded with Mdlle. Jullien, of Brussels, or with Madame Julian (Van Gelder), known at Her Majesty's Theatre as Madame Giulani.

With Madame Julienne and Tamberlik, who is now the greatest of dramatic tenors, with Ronconi's fine taste and artistic judgment in the insignificant part of Severus, and with Marini's majestic voice when it is in tune, "I Martiri" will be a very useful, if not a very prominent work in the répertoire. It was given for the second time on the extra night, on Thursday. The pageantry of the third Christian era, under the Emperor Decius, is most gorgeously depicted: the procession in the second act, with the entrance of Severus, being one of the richest spectacles ever witnessed.

A new tenor of promise, Signor Galvani, made his début last Saturday night in "Sonnambula," Amina being charmingly sustained by Mdme. Castellan.

Mdlle. Wagner is to make her début this evening in the "Prophète," in which Mario and Formes will re-appear for the first time this season.

MDLLE. JOHANNA WAGNER.

MADEMOISELLE JOHANNA WAGNER.

THIS celebrated vocalist is the niece of Richard Wagner the Chapel-master of Dresden, whom Liszt, in a recent pamphlet, pronounces to be the greatest composer of the age. The early days of Johanna Wagner were passed at Warsburg, in Bavaria, her parents being engaged at the theatre. As a child she was selected to represent the good spirit in the fairy spectacles, her declamatory powers being remarkable. At fifteen years of age she made a successful début in Abigail, in the comic piece, "Le Verre d'Eau," at the theatre of Ballenstadt. She subsequently appeared as Preciosa and Esmeralda, and made a great sensation in the part of Cordelia, in "King Lear." At this epoch of her career it was remarked that her style was distinguished as much for juvenile grace as tragic energy. Her original destiny was fixed for the drama; but as her parents, who had a reputation as teachers of singing, perceived that she had a good voice, she was taught the character of the Page in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots." Her organ, however, daily increasing in compass and power, she was allotted the part of Cateruna, in Halévy's "Reine de Chypre," and the striking success she met with decided Mdlle. Wagner to quit definitively the legitimate drama for opera.

Her uncle strongly urged her to visit Dresden; but before she went to that city she visited Paris with her father, and there took lessons for six months of Manuel Garcia, the brother of Viardot and Malibran, and the master of Jenny Lind. On the arrival of Mdlle. Wagner at Dresden, she was engaged for five years at the theatre; and from this time she took the line followed by Madame Schroder Devrient, although without any servile imitation of the style of that eminent artiste. In Agatha, in Weber's "Der Freyschütz," and in Beethoven's "Fidelio," she acquired great fame. Her next engagement, owing to political events having affected the Dresden theatre, was at Hamburg, and she was the first singer in Germany who undertook the part of Fidès in Meyerbeer's "Prophète." It was her delineation of the character which spread her name throughout Germany. She afterwards sang in Vienna and Berlin with signal success. In the last-mentioned capital being the successor of Mdme. Viardot in Fidès. The result was, that the Royal Intendant of the Berlin Opera-house entered into an engagement with Mdlle. Johanna Wagner for ten years, on terms far beyond those ever before granted to any prima donna in Germany. In her contract, leave of absence for six months during the year was reserved for the young and gifted artiste.

The répertoire of Mdlle. Wagner is rich and varied; and, owing to her genius, the masterpieces of Gluck and of Spontini have been most successfully revived at Berlin. Iphigénie (en Tauride) and Hyppermestre (en Aulide), and the Grand Prestess in the "Vestale," have been highly popular. Her Alice in "Robert le Diable," Valentina in the "Huguenots," and Fidès in the "Prophète," have displayed her supremacy in Meyerbeer's operas. Her Eglantine in Weber's "Euryanthe" was her farewell part at Berlin, on the 16th of last month. In the revival of Spontini's "Olympia" she was the Statira, surpassing, according to the German critics, the celebrated Milder, who was the original representative. Relstab, the eloquent critic of Berlin, writes of her Statira, "In passion she is a Medusa, in imperious command a Juno, and in pathos a Niobe."

Mdlle. Wagner does not confine her line of characters to the classic models. Her Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, and Romeo, in Bellini's works, have created as great a sensation in Germany as her Fidès, Fidelio, Statira, Alice, Valentina, &c. Her Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni," and Odette in Halévy's "Charles VI.," show the versatility of her lyric capabilities.

Mdlle. Wagner, whilst she has acquired within such a brief period her artistic fame, seems to have inspired her admirers in Germany with the highest respect for her personal qualities. When she quitted Hamburgh, in the spring of last year, for her engagement at Berlin, there was a grand ceremonial at the Tonhalle: she was crowned in public, and the population accompanied her to the railroad, greeting her with prolonged acclamations.

Like Jenny Lind, Mdlle. Johanna Wagner has come to this country with two engagements: Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera have claimed her services in their advertisements. In the prospectus of the former theatre she was duly announced; but, on the 8th instant, she was as positively announced by the Royal Italian Opera This notification was followed by a rejoinder from Her Majesty's Theatre, as follows:—"It is respectfully announced that the talent of Mdlle. Wagner is secured exclusively for Her Majesty's Theatre, by an engagement dated the 9th of November last, and signed by that celebrated artiste and also by her father, Mr. Albert Wagner." On Monday last Mdlle. Wagner, however, arrived in town with her father, accompanied by Mr. Gye, who had met them at Cologne, Mr. Lumley and Mr. Mitchell having travelled in the same train with the prima donna from Hamburgh. It is intimated that a court of law will have to decide on the claims of Mr. Lumley for damages, as Mdlle. Wagner will make her début at the Royal Italian Opera this evening in Fidès.

SCENE FROM DONIZETTI'S OPERA "I MARTIRI," AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—PROCESSION IN THE FORUM

CAPT. KELLETT ("RESOLUTE"), C.B.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY KILBURN. CAPT. SIR E. BELCHER, C.B., COMMANDER OF THE EXPEDITION.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BEARD. CAPT. PULLEN ("NORTH STAR").—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BEARD.

THE ARCTIC SEARCHING SQUADRON.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN PAKINGTON, BART., M.P. FOR DROITWICH, SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.

Sir John Pakington, second son of William Russell, of Powick Court, Worcester, by Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Herbert Perrot Pakington, Bart, of Westwood Park, Worcester, was born at Powick Court, February 20, 1799. He was sent to Eton when twelve years of age, and subsequently entered Oriel College, Oxford, where amongst his contemporaries were Sir Charles Wood, Sir George Grey, Sir Thomas Freemantle, and the present Bishop of Salisbury. Having lost his father and elder brother (William Herbert), he succeeded to the property of his maternal uncle, Sir John Pakington, Bart., who died in 1830, and, assuming the name and arms of Pakington, he left Powick Court and took up his residence at Westwood Park.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN SOMERSET PAKINGTON, BART., SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES. FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY CLAUDET.

At the general election on the Reform Bill, in 1831, Sir John, then Mr. Pakington, was invited to become a candidate in the Reform interest for the county of Worcester; but he refused, and made his first appearance in public life as chairman of the committee of Colonel the Hon. H. B. Lygon, a Conservative, and whom he proposed at the hustings in a speech in opposit on to Reform.

On the first general election after the Reform Bill, and which took place in the winter of 1832-33, he came forward as a Conservative candidate, in opposition to Thomas Henry Cook, Esq., and Colonel Russell, and was defeated by a majority of 600. In the same year he was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Worcestershire; and in the following summer, whilst on a tour in America, a vacancy by the death of Lord Foley occurring in the western division of the county, he was put in nomination during his absence, and was beaten by but a small majority. In the summer of 1834, in accordance with the general desire of the magistrates of the county, he consented to fill the vacancy in the chair of Quarter Sessions occasioned by the retirement of Sir Christopher Smith, Bart., and he has ever since continued to discharge the duties of that position; how much to the satisfaction of his brother magistrates may be judged from the fact that last year they paid him the compliment of requesting him to sit to Sir John Watson Gordon for a full-length portrait, to be placed in the County Hall, "as a mark of their approbation of the manner in which he had discharged the duties of the chair of Quarter Sessions for seventeen years."

At the general election under the short Conservative Administration of Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Pakington exerted his influence at Droitwich in favour of the late John Barneby, Esq., and who was returned by a majority of three, whilst he himself again unsuccessfully contested the western division of the county, in opposition to Captain Winnington, by whom he was defeated. But at the general election, on the accession of her present Majesty, in 1837, Mr. Barneby was returned for East Worcester, and Mr. Pakington for Droitwich. His first speech in Parliament was in the following session, on the Canada Clergy Reserves Bill. His previous visit to America enabled him to speak from his own observation, and he subsequently received several complimentary addresses from Canada, both in his speech on that occasion and the part he took in the debates on the affairs of Canada. Following up the same course, he afterwards moved for a committee, which he obtained, and of which he was appointed chairman, to inquire into the state of Newfoundland. The new constitution for the island was framed in accordance with the suggestions of the committee, and in the debates upon the measure Mr. Pakington took a leading part, and was subsequently chairman of a committee appointed to inquire into the state of the West Indies, in connexion with the cultivation of sugar, and took an active part in debates on West Indian distress. But it is not only to these colonial questions that Mr. Pakington has given attention in Parliament. He carried a bill to regulate the election of coroners; one for the regulation of beer-houses; and an act for the reformation of juvenile offenders. He brought forward a measure, in which he was defeated, for the discouragement of bribery at elections. He was chairman of the committee on turnpike trusts; was an active member of the committee on prison discipline; and, both in debate and committees, in 1850 and 1851, opposed the various measures for the transfer of financial powers of county justices to county boards, proposed to be appointed for the purpose. He supported the Government of Sir R. Peel up to the proposal of his measure for the abolition of the Corn-Laws, and to which he gave his most strenuous opposition. But notwithstanding his adverse vote upon the Corn Bill, Sir R. Peel, as a reward for his former support, recommended him to her Majesty for the honour of a Baronetcy, and the title was conferred upon him in 1846, the original title having become extinct at the death of Sir John, of Westwood Park, in 1830.

From the period of the passing of the bill for the abolition of the Corn-Laws, Sir John Pakington did not offer any active opposition to Free-trade, considering that the measure should be allowed a fair period of trial.

Sir John had given notice of a motion for the present session to prevent the further reduction of the Sugar Duties; and on the construction of the present Ministry hereceived the appointment of Secretary of State for the Colonies.

In 1832 the right hon. Baronet married Mary, daughter of Moreton Aglionby Slaney, Esq., of Shiffnal, Salop. She died January, 1843, leaving a son, John Slaney, born 1826, married, 1847, to Diana, daughter of George 4th Earl of Glasgow.

In 1844 Sir John married, secondly, Augusta, third daughter of George Murray, Bishop of Rochester. She died in 1848, leaving a son, Herbert Perrott Murray, born February 1848; and in 1851 Sir John married thirdly, Augusta Anne, widow of Colonel Davies, of Elmley Castle late M.P. for Worcester.

Our Portrait is from a Daguerréotype by Claudet.

THE EARL OF DESART, UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.

John Otway O'Connor Cuffe, third Earl of Desart, son of the second Earl, by Catherine, eldest daughter of Maurice Nugent O'Connor of Mount Pleasant, King's County, was born at Desart House, county Kilkenny, October 12th, 1818. In 1820 he succeeded his father in the peerage. He graduated at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1838, and until the end of 1841 spent almost the entire time at sea in his own yacht.

At the general election in 1842, jointly with Mr. Thomas Gladstone and in opposition to Messrs Gisborne and Moffatt, he contested Ipswich, but was unseated on petition. In 1846 he was elected a representative Peer of Ireland. Since he took his seat in 1847 his Lordship has spoken frequently in debates on Irish affairs.

In the session of 1850 he supported the Earl of Stradbroke's amendment to the Address to the throne, and which referred to "distress amongst cultivators of the soil, especially in Ireland, aggravated by the pressure of local taxation." The Earl of Desart urged that agricultural distress was general, that in Ireland it was severest, because there the people had less capital to bear up against the heavy restrictions imposed upon them. In the Royal speech the distress of an interest which their forefathers were wont to consider the great and vital interest of the country, and upon which all the others rested, was cloaked over by reference to the prosperity of manufacturers, and even their prosperity he believed to be uncertain and ephemeral. This was the first year that in certain counties in Ireland the land lords had been unable to get in their rents—the rates of four or five shillings in the pound took everything—all classes, the landlords, labourers, and tenants, were flat prostrating to utter annihilation and ruin—and there was more distress in that country by the legislation of man than by the visitation of Providence. It was said, improve your farming—invest more capital in the land. He was sick of the cry "invest more capital in the land;" capital would find its own level, and investments be made where there was the most profitable return. He did not place much reliance upon statistics, but he found that the agricultural and landed interests far exceeded in number and value the manufacturing interests; and he did not think an interest of such vast importance should be sacrificed to a few. As a proof that manufacturing prosperity was not dependent on low prices, he showed an increased import of cotton in 1838, though in that year wheat had averaged 66s., and some was taken out of bond even as 70s. Under Free Trade manufacturers could send out their goods so cheap as to command markets abroad, although at prices barely remunerating them; but such exports, however, might be stopped by glut or hostile tariffs, a system which would add to the revenue of foreigners, and bring down prices in a scale unremunerative to our manufacturers, and crushing to the labourers; or we might be compelled to pay for foreign produce in bullion, leaving our mills idle and operatives starving, and enabling foreigners with raised prices at home, owing to the influx of our bullion, doubly to profit by the unnatural cheapness of our productions. It was said that the landed interest sought a war of classes: he deprecated any such objects, it was the men who, for their own selfish ends and by illegal combinations, attacked the other interests of the country, who had sought such ends, and he looked to a restoration of the system of Protection to enable England to maintain the rank she had held among the nations of the earth.

THE EARL OF DESART, UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES. FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY CLAUDET.

In the same session his Lordship moved a resolution condemnatory of the system of outdoor relief in Ireland, and subsequently an amendment on the Irish Franchise Bill, raising the qualification to £15, which he carried on a division against the Government, and on which he again divided the House when the bill was returned from the Commons, with a compromise of £12, but on which last division he was defeated.

His Lordship married, in 1842, Elizabeth Lucy, third daughter of the first Earl Dawdor, a Lady of the Bedchamber to the Queen.

Our Portrait is from a Daguerreotype by Claudet.

THE ARCTIC SEARCHING EXPEDITION.

We resume our record of the departure of Sir Edward Belcher's Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin.

On Saturday morning, the North Star, Commander Pullen, left Woolwich, towed by the Adder steam-vessel, and arrived at Greenhithe about two o'clock P.M., where the whole of the vessels of the Expedition were stationed to have their compasses adjusted by Captain Johnson.

By desire of the naval authorities, Mr. Watkins, manager of Mr. Beard's photographic establishment, sent one of the operators to Greenhithe during the day, for the purpose of taking portraits of the officers of the Expedition, and the following had their portraits taken on the deck of the Assistance, under highly favourable circumstances, by the photographic process, the sun shining with unclouded brilliancy:—Captain Sir Edward Belcher, C.B., Commander of the Expedition; Commander George H. Richards, Lieutenant Walter W. May, Lieutenant John F. Cheyne, Master John F. Lonsy, Surgeon David Lyall, M.D., Clerk-in-Charge James Lewis, and Midshipman Pym and Groves. The officers of the Resolute, the Pioneer, the Intrepid, and the Pioneer were also taken by the photographic process previous to their departure

On Monday morning the Duke of Northumberland, First Lord of the Admiralty; Rear-Admiral Phipps Hornby, Commodore Sir Thomas Herbert, and Captain Alexander Milne, Lords of the Admiralty; Captain Sir Baldwin W. Walker, Surveyor of the Navy; and Captain Hon. Frederick T. Pelham, private Secretary to the First Lord, arrived by the 10 o'clock down-train at the North Kent Railway for Greenhithe; and on their arrival, at four minutes before 11, were received by Captain Sir Edward Belcher, C.B., Commander of the Arctic Expedition, who conducted their Lordships to Greenhithe pier, where the thoroughfare barge of the Pegard, flag-ship at Woolwich, on board the Assistance flag ship of the Arctic squadron. Their Lordships were received by the officers, and the crew were mustered on deck, and every one of them passed before their Lordships, who appeared much pleased with their general robust and healthy appearance. After going below to witness the arrangements for the comfort of the officers and the crew, with which the Board of Admiralty appeared highly satisfied, they left the barge of the Pegard, accompanied by Sir Edward Belcher, and went on board the Resolute, Captain, Kellett, C.B., where they were received by that gallant officer and the officers of the ship, the crew were mustered, and the ship inspected in a similar manner as on board the Assistance. The Intrepid, Commander M'Clintock, and the Pioneer, Lieutenant-Commander Osborn, the two screw-steamers, and the North Star, Commander Pullen, were also visited by their Lordships, after inspecting them the Board of Admiralty landed at Greenhithe-pier, and returned by the half-past one o'clock up-train from Greenhithe to London.

In the afternoon the Prince of Canino arrived, and inspected the three vessels. During the day, Captain Washington, R.N., visited the whole of the vessels of the squadron, having brought down a box for the commanding officer of each of the boxes was six cases of dolls, dressed by the ladies of Woolwich, and intended as presents for the Esquimaux. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean have, with great liberality and kindness, sent to the Arctic ships a quantity of theatrical dresses for the use of the theatre, which always proves a source of a fertile and successful source of amusement in previous expeditions.

The Admiralty ordered a condensing apparatus for the Arctic ships, the construction of which has been superintended by Mr. Kilburn, of Regent-street. Dr. Donovan, of the Resolute, takes charge of the instrument.

A number of ladies have presented Captain Sir Edward Belcher with 22 handsome silk flags, and a number of other articles for the comfort of the officers.

On Tuesday the whole of the ships of the squadron were paid in advance.

On Wednesday the vessels of the squadron started from Greenhithe at a quarter before five o'clock P.M.; and about twelve at noon were brought up at anchor about twenty miles below Gravesend, for the purpose of communicating with the commanding officers of the Basilisk and Desperate steamers, and relieving the steam-tugs of their previous duty.

The Monkey steam-vessel left Woolwich on Wednesday evening with duplicate sets of sails for the screw steamers of the Arctic Expedition, to render them doubly supplied in that necessary description of stores, as these vessels will be most actively employed even when their coals are all consumed. The decks of the whole of the vessels were piled up with fire-wood. Among the stores was a large quantity of strong Burton ale in casks, procured, by direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, from the brewery of Messrs. Samuel Allsopp and Sons, of Burton-on-Trent. E. M. and J. Rettie have supplied stoves to the Resolute, the little room and consume few coals in comparison to the large stoves. Arnott's stoves have also been supplied to the Pioneer. Captain White has presented jars of his curry, and bottles of his anti-scorbutic remedy for scurvy; and Mr. Arrowsmith several of his new maps, with Penny's and Sir Rae's recent discoveries.

Captain Sir E Belcher, Commander of the Expedition, was born in 1799; entered the navy in 1812. For his services he was awarded a post commission in 1841; the decoration of C.B. immediately following; and the honour of Knighthood in 1843. His well-known "Narrative of a Voyage Round the World, performed in H.M.S. Sulphur, during the years 1836-42," fully developes his important services during that period. To Sir Edward Belcher is also attributed the authorship of a "Treatise on Nautical Surveying."

THE REPUTED MURDER OF MR. BOYD IN THE PACIFIC.—On Friday week Messrs. Mark and Lennox Boyd, brothers of Mr. Benjamin Boyd, who, it was reported, was lately murdered in one of the Solomon Islands, had an interview with the First Lord of the Admiralty, Messrs. Boyd appeared in Greece. In the first instance, that their motive in making the request for an interview arose from a slight hope that their brother may still survive, as there was no direct evidence, from the statements of Messrs. Criswell, Crawford, Webster, and Sarsfield, of the schooner Wanderer, as reported in the public papers, that he had been actually killed by the natives. In referring to the subject of Captain Denham's proposed expedition to the South Seas for survey and discovery, the Messrs. Boyd seemed to suggest whether it might not be desirable that the captain should be instructed to proceed to the Solomon Islands with a view of inquiring into all the circumstances connected with the report. The Duke of Northumberland was of opinion that the wisest course would be for them to communicate with the American Minister, who had already expressed a desire to render every service, and who would, no doubt, urge upon his Government the expediency of directing the attention of American whalers in the Pacific to the circumstances of the case. Meanwhile, every assistance would be afforded by the Admiralty, if anything occurred to justify the intervention of our Government; and he begged Messrs. Boyd to communicate freely with him should any facts come to their knowledge that might strengthen their present impression as to their brother being still alive, or having been alive at the time of the departure of the Wanderer from the Solomon Islands.

POWERFUL ANTIDOTE.—M. Menière relates in the Gazette Médicale some of the experiments of which he was a witness wh le travelling in Germany with M. Orfila. During their visit to the Museum of Natural History at Prague, they introduced to Professor, who received them very kindly, and was happy at having an opportunity of showing them his experiments with the antidotes against vegetable poisons, and particularly strychnine and morphine. After relating the various discoveries had made on himself, he proposed to perform an immediate experiment. He took into an apothecary for fifteen decigrammes (thirty grains) of acetate of morphine, which, after it had been examined by M. Orfila and declared to be pure, he put on his tongue and swallowed, to the great alarm of all present. One minute after he swallowed about the same quantity of a white powder, and the poison produced no effect whatever on him. He related that he had made the same experiment on animals and on plants, and invariably with the same result. He appears to have done the same with strychnine, and always with impunity, until the last time, when he unfortunately lost his life.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Their Lordships re-assembled after the Easter recess.

CHANCERY REFORM.

The LORD CHANCELLOR laid on the table and moved the first reading of a Bill for the Abolition of the office of Master in Chancery. It was intended by the bill to reduce the number of Masters to five, and to confine their jurisdiction to the winding up of all causes at present before them. The noble Lord adverted also to a second bill in preparation, for a more general improvement in the administration of the law.

Lord CRANWORTH spoke in favour of the principle of the bill; and Lord CAMPBELL, in expressing his concurrence, declared that the great root of all the delay in Chancery was the constant reference of causes from equity to common law courts, and back again.

The LORD CHANCELLOR explained that the bill in contemplation would contain a proviso calculated to effect a partial remedy of that evil.

The bill was then read a first time.

The Bishopric of Quebec Bill passed through committee.

The Mutiny Bill, and the Marine Mutiny Bill were each read a third time and passed. Adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House met at the close of the Easter recess.

The Sheriffs of the City of London appeared at the bar of the House, and presented a petition from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of the city of London, against the Charitable Trusts Bill.

NEW WRITS.

Mr. F MACKENZIE moved the issue of a new writ for the east division of Suffolk, in the room of Lord Rendlesham, deceased.

Mr. HARDCASTLE moved that a new writ should be issued for Tavistock, in the room of Mr. Trelawny, who has accepted the stewardship of her Majesty's manor of Hempho-me.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave notice, that on Thursday, the 29th of April, he would move that, on every Thursday following, orders of the day have precedence of notices of motion.

METROPOLITAN GRAND JURIES.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a bill to render it unnecessary to summon grand juries within the metropolitan district, and for the amendment of the law relative thereto.

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S CHARTER.

Mr. HERRIES (the President of the Board of Control) moved for a select committee to inquire into the operation of the act 3 and 4 William 4, c. 85, for the better government of her Majesty's Indian territories, and to report their observations thereon. It was, he said, unnecessary for him to fatigue the House by entering into a history of the rise and progress of our possessions in India, and he would, therefore, only refer to the act of 1833, which changed the whole character of the East India Company, for they at that time ceased to be traders, and became the agents of the British Government for administering the affairs of our Indian empire. It was an inquiry into the operation of this act that he asked for the appointment of a committee, as the charter of the Company must very shortly terminate, it being only for a period of twenty years. It would, therefore, be for the Crown and Parliament to consider whether they would renew the last charter, with certain modifications, or adopt a new system altogether for the government of India. Since the passing of the act of 1833 the revenue of India had increased under the management of the Company; but, on the other hand, the charges had also increased, and 20 millions had been added to the debt, owing to the wars which had taken place in that quarter. It was, however, satisfactory to know that the state of the Company was prosperous, and that, notwithstanding the expenses of those wars, the revenue did not fall very far short of the expenditure, and on the whole the existing system had worked satisfactorily.

Mr. ANSTEY moved as an amendment the addition of the following words, "And that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, representing the lateness of the season, the near approach of the period when the powers and authorities under which the government of her Majesty's Indian dominions is now carried on will naturally determine, and the urgent importance of obtaining a thorough insight into the condition of those dominions, and into the feelings and wishes of all its subjects, native and European, resident within the same, before Parliament is called upon to pass any measure for continuing the said powers and authorities; and praying her Majesty for that purpose to take the necessary steps for providing the immediate inquiry into British India, duly instructed and empowered to commence and prosecute all inquiries in the premises, and to report the evidence, together with their observations thereupon, to both Houses of Parliament." The learned gentleman commented at much length on what he called the misgovernment of India, and the tyranny by which the population was held down in a state of poverty by the East India Company's system of taxation, and which, he said, crushed everything like enterprise. The land-tax was a tax upon crops rather than upon land, and the salt-tax was a shameful monopoly in the hands of the Company, tending to the injury not only of the revenue, but of the health of the people. It was a fact that the first appearance of cholera in India was immediately following the imposition of the tax on salt by Warren Hastings. The hon. and learned gentleman also commented on the charges of corruption alleged to be made against and brought against which Colonel Outram, one of the Company's most valuable officers, had lately received at the hands of the Bombay Government.

Mr. H. BAILLIE contended that the natives who had petitioned against the present management of Indian affairs had no wish that a special commission should be sent out. With respect to the weight of taxation alleged to be pressing it, he did not think that it complained could devise any means by which £25,000,000 of revenue could be raised less obnoxious or oppressive than those now adopted.

Sir F. SCOTT supported the original motion, expressing a general concurrence in the views of Mr. Herries.

Mr. HARDINGE said he quite agreed in what had fallen from Mr. Baillie, and considered, the state of the finances of India, as to the poverty and oppression of the population of India to be greatly exaggerated.

Mr. HUME expressed his satisfaction at the inquiry proposed to be instituted by Mr. Herries, but he thought it would be better to postpone discussion until after the inquiry which is now to be instituted should have terminat d; and on the part of the great company he represented he would say that their most anxious wish was that the inquiry should be as full as possible, and that it might lead to beneficial results for our Eastern possessions. He expressed his absolute assent ent at the statements made by Mr. Anstey, and said that no one was justified in making such statements without some accurate information to support them; and the hon. gentleman had stated no grounds whatever to warrant him in the indiscriminate charges he had made. He denied that the land-tax was at all a tax on crops; for, in fact, it varied not according to the crops, but according to the productive power of the land.

Sir R. INGLIS thought the natives of India had a claim to a much larger amount of religious instruction than had been hitherto accorded to them. He hoped the hon. member for Poole would withdraw the pursuit in his amendment, but allow the select committee to be appointed.

Lord J. RUSSELL reminded the House that the proposed committee was not to decide what was to be the permanent government of India, but to collect information. The Government, he conceived, would retain in their own hands the right to bring forward what propositions they might think proper on the subject, and Parliament to act upon them as they might deem fit. He was not dissatisfied with the experience of the present system; under the act of 1833 he believed this country had performed its duty to India—the people had been protected from the tyranny of both kings, and justice had been impartially administered, education had been promoted, and political morality disseminated—and, therefore, in its main features, he was favourable to its renewal.

Mr. GOULBURN called the attention of the committee would be specially directed to the question how far the means of extending a knowledge of the Christian religion, which, under the act of 1833, had been introduced, had been successful, and to what extent they could be safely carried.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY suggested the appointment of an officer to examine and report on matters of finance

Mr. MANGLES concurred with Mr Goulburn in his wish to extend to our Indian fellow-subjects the blessings of Christianity; but believed, if it were attempted as part of our system of government, the object in view would be retarded.

The amendment was then negatived without a division, and the original motion agreed to.

The Passengers Act Amendment Bill passed through committee.

The Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill, and the Secretary of Bankrupts Office Abolition Bill were severally read a second time.

The Exchequer Bills (£17,742,800) Bill, and the Linen, &c. Manufactures (Ireland) Bill, passed through committee.

The Poor-law Board Continuance Bill was read a second time.

The Poor Relief Act Continuance Bill was considered in committee.

The Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill, as amended, was considered, when two clauses were added, on the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, for protecting commissioners, and introducing regulations in regard to a summons.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.

The Royal assent was given to-day to the Mutiny Bill and the Marine Mutiny Bill, and several private bills. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Wellington, and the Marquis of Salisbury. Their Lordships then adjourned during pleasure.

The Patent Law Amendment Bill and the Bishopric of Quebec Bill were severally read a third time and passed.

MAYNOOTH.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE put a question to the noble Earl at the head of the Government, with the view of ascertaining the intentions of her Majesty's Ministers in respect to the continuance of the Parliamentary grant to the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth.

The Earl of DERBY replied, in substance, the answer he had formerly given to a similar question. The Government, he said, had no present intention of altering the existing law; but, if circumstances should occur to lead to an alteration in their views, due notice should be given of it.

Earl GREY contended that the subject was one which ought not to be left in doubt, and that the noble Earl was bound to state whether his opinions upon it now were the same that he had expressed in 1845.

The Earl of DERBY confessed that he had been greatly disappointed by the result of the measure of 1845.

In the course of the subsequent discussion, the Marquis of LANSDOWNE stated that if it were contemplated to repeal the grant, he would oppose any such proposition.

After a few words from the Bishop of CASHEL and Earl GREY in explanation, the subject dropped.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

NEW WRIT.

On the motion of Mr. F. MACKENZIE, a new writ was ordered to issue for the city of Worcester, in the room of Mr. F. Rufford, who has accepted the office of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds.

PROGRESS OF BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE.

On the motion of the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, it was agreed that on Thursday, the 29th of April, and every Thursday following, orders of the day have precedence of notices of motion.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he was prepared to fix a day for bringing on the budget?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied that he had, before the holidays, stated that he hoped to be able on the 19th (Monday last) to fix such day; but he had not promised to do so, and a particular reason connected with the public business still prevented his doing it. He said, in answer to a second question from Lord John Russell, that he would shortly name the day.

MAYNOOTH.

Mr. SPOONER postponed his Maynooth motion until the 4th May.

Mr. BERNAL complained of the postponement of the subject, as use was being made, throughout the country, of the Maynooth cry. He wished to know whether Mr. Spooner would "stick" to his new appointment

Mr. SPOONER replied that the postponement had been rendered necessary by the state of the motion paper, and that he would assuredly bring on the question on the day now appointed.

BRITISH SUBJECTS ABROAD.

In reply to Lord Dudley Stuart the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated, with reference to the outrage alleged to have been committed by the police at Leghorn upon a corporal of Marines named Braggs, belonging to her Majesty's ship Warspite, that the British Government had not accepted the punishment of eight days' imprisonment, inflicted upon one of the police officers, as a sufficient reparation, and that communications were still going on with the Tuscan Government respecting this case, as well as that of Mr. Mather.

VESTRIES.

Sir DE LACY EVANS obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the act for the regulation of vestries, with reference to joint parishes.

THE REV. MR. BENNETT AND THE VICARAGE OF FROME

Mr. HORSMAN moved, "That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to direct inquiry to be made whether due respect was paid to the decrees of the constitutions and canons ecclesiastical of the Church of England, in the recent institution of Mr. Bennett to the vicarage of Frome-Selwood." The hon. gentleman entered at great length into the history of the case of Mr. Bennett; called in question the conduct of the clergymen who had certified to the Bishop the orthodoxy of the rev. gentleman during the three preceding years the conduct of the bishop of London in giving him a certificate, however qualified that certificate might be—and the conduct of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, in having, under the circumstances, instituted Mr. Bennett to the vicarage of Frome, against the wishes and remonstrances of the inhabitants of the district. There was no redress to be obtained for such proceeding so legitimate as that of the House of Commons asking the Queen to interfere and purge the Church of this great scandal, and thus prove herself the real Defender of the Faith.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER did not rise for the purpose of offering an opinion upon the circumstances brought by the honourable gent eman at the conclusion; but he felt strongly the inconvenience of discussing such matters in a popular assembly. The motion, however, of the hon. gentleman appeared to bear no proportion to the magnitude of the case, nor indeed did he suggest any specific remedy. They would, therefore, before agreeing to the motion, well consider if it could lead to any redress of the grievance. For his own part he believed there must exist a power of appeal to the Archbishop, and if so it was precautious to bring the case before Parliament, it should be the subject of legislation, and not a mere motion for an address to the Crown. He hoped the hon. gentleman would not press his motion to a division, for, however important the subject, he believed that it would be felt that that House was not the proper tribunal before which it should be introduced. The precedent of their interference would lead to endless discussions, for no hon. member could take place who might not be made the subject of a similar motion. The right hon. gentleman concluded by moving as an amendment the previous question.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL said, as a general rule, that such discussions should not be brought forward in that House; but this case formed an exception, for when the House paid for the maintenance of the Established Church, they had a right to see that the clergyman maintained in the parish for which they were paid.

Mr. NEWDEGATE begged of the Government not to ignore the motion without devising some means of rendering the authority of her Majesty effective in repressing the abuses complained of.

Sir J. PAKINGTON said he agreed with Mr. Newdegate that the subject was one demanding inquiry and redress, but he did not think that that was to be effected by the motion of the hon. member for Cockermouth, which was simply an attack on the Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was advanced in years, and with health very much impaired.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL could not admit the right of the House of Commons to deal with such questions; but at the same time the inconvenience of dealing with them was so great, that he thought it would be better to leave the matter in the hands of the Government, if it would pledge itself that it was one which must be dealt with, and that it would take the necessary inquiries into all the facts of the case, with a view to a remedy.

Mr. GLADSTONE was ready, from his partial knowledge of the case, to confirm the statement made by the hon. member for Cockermouth. He objected to the motion, for he objected to all vague and indefinite pledges, and thought the matter should be left in the hands of the Governme t.

Mr. WALPOLE admitted that a case had been made out demanding inquiry; and the Government moved the previous question, in order to give time to the Government to make that inquiry in a friendly spirit, and communicate the result to the House.

Lord R. GROSVENOR hoped that, after this pledge, Mr. Horsman would withdraw his motion.

Mr. HORSMAN replied, and said he must decline a friendly inquiry, for he could well imagine what would be the result of such an inquiry, but he was quite willing to leave the subject in the hands of the Government, if it would pledge itself that it should become the subject of a judicial and not a friendly inquiry.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the difficulty he felt was that he did not know how a judicial inquiry could be made, and he would not, therefore, assent to it; but he would promise that a friendly de facto inquiry should take place.

The House then divided, and the numbers were:—

For the previous question	.. ..	100
Against it	.. ..	80
Majority	.. ..	— 20

Mr. Hersman's motion was accordingly lost.

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES.

Lord DUDLEY STUART moved for copies or extracts of any communications which have passed between the Government of this country and Turkey, and other foreign Governments, respecting the Hungarian and other refugees detained at Kutayah, from the date of the last dispatch on this subject, a copy of which has been laid before this House, up to the present time (in continuation of papers already presented to Parliament).

Mr. HUME seconded the motion.

Lord PALMERSTON said, as far as he was concerned, he could see no objection to the production of the papers, nor had any objection existed to their production on the part of the Government or of any hon. member.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said there had been a great deal of acrimonious feeling between some foreign Courts on the subject of the Hungarian refugees, and he thought it therefore desirable that such feelings should not be revived. As, however, the noble Lord opposite (Lord Palmerston) saw no objection to their production, he had no wish to adhere to his first impression, and would consent to the motion.

Lord J. RUSSELL expressed his satisfaction that the papers were to be produced, for the negotiations were most creditable to this country.

The motion was accordingly agreed to.

The Land Securities Bill and the Lands-in-Trade Bill were read a second time. Adjourned at twenty minutes past nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon until half-past five o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. CRAWSHAY BAILLIE took the oaths and his seat for the Monmouth boroughs.

THE CAPE.

Mr. ADDERLEY presented a petition, forwarded by the municipality of Cape Town, on behalf of a public meeting, complaining that the Legislative Council had resolved to prevent the passing of the ordinances sent out to the colony, to authorise the forming of a new Constitution, and praying that a bill (the draft of which they transmitted) might be agreed to by the Imperial Parliament in order that effect might be given to those ordinances, and that thus that measure of justice might be granted to the colony which was denied by its local legislature.

THE "BIRKENHEAD" STEAM-SHIP

Captain SCOBELL asked the Secretary of the Admiralty whether the attention of that department had been directed to the expediency, or otherwise, of fitting vessels in compartments? He also wished to be informed whether the Birkenhead had been fitted in compartments, and if so, in how many?

Mr. A. STAFFORD replied that the Birkenhead had been fitted in compartments, and the number of its compartments was five.

IRISH FISHERIES.

Mr. CONOLLY moved the second reading of the Irish Fisheries Bill.

Lord NAAS admitted that the state of the law was unsatisfactory, but doubted how far a private member was capable of placing matters upon a better footing. The question had undergone the serious consideration of the Government; and should they see any just and practicable mode of dealing with it, they would bring in a comprehensive measure. In the meantime he must oppose the motion now made

After remarks from Mr. Monsell, Mr Scully, Mr. Henry Herbert, Captain Jones, Sir William Somerville, and Mr. Whiteside,

Mr CONOLLY withdrew the motion, expressing a hope that the Government would take an early opportunity of dealing with the question.

CHURCH PATRONAGE.

Mr. FERRAND moved the second reading of the Building of Churches, &c. Bill; but the Speaker having intimated at once that the clauses were by no means the scope of the title, Mr. Ferrand withdrew it for the present.

The Parish Constables Bill was read a second time.

The Enfranchisement of Copyholds B. I passed through committee.

The Industrial and Provident Partnerships B ll was read a second time, and referred to a select committee.

The Proclamations for Assembling Parliament Bill was also read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Lord Redesdale presided on the woolsack, in the absence of the Lord Chancellor.

ST. ALBAN'S DISFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

The Earl of DERBY, in moving the second reading of the bill, entered into a detail of the circumstances which had given rise to the measure, and occasioned considerable merriment by reading extracts from the evidence of the several witnesses examined before the recent Commission, in which it was admitted that the great body of the electors were in the habit of selling their votes to the highest bidder at every election for the borough of St Alban's.

After a brief discussion upon the question whether the prayer of a petition presented to the House for counsel to be heard against the measure ought to be granted, the bill was read a second time.

Lord REDESDALE then moved that counsel be heard at the bar against the bill.

This gave rise to another discussion, which resulted in a division, when the motion for hearing counsel at the bar against the bill was carried by a majority of 41 to 18.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

NEW MEMBER.

Sir F. Kelly took the oaths and his seat for the borough of Harwich.

NEW ZEALAND

Sir W MOLESWORTH would be glad to know when Government intended to bring in their bill for conferring a constitution upon New Zealand?

Sir J FARINGTON said he should move a resolution for the purpose next Monday week.

THE CLERGY IN CANADA.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL wished to know if her Majesty's Government had any intention of bringing in a bill to extend the provisions of the Clergy Reserves Canada Act

Sir J. FARINGTON said Government had no intention of bringing in any bill to alter that Act this session.

EXPULSION OF CLERGYMEN FROM AUSTRIA.

Mr. ANSTEY would be glad to know if Government had any objection to lay the correspondence which had taken place on this subject with Austria before the House.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said there would be no objection when the negotiations now pending in the matter were brought to a close.

TAXES ON KNOWLEDGE.

Mr. M. GIBSON then brought under the notice of the House the policy of deriving revenue from taxes upon knowledge, and moved in separate resolutions:—That such financial arrangements ought to be made as will enable Parliament to dispense with the duty on paper: That the newspaper stamp ought to be abolished: That the tax on advertisements ought to be repealed. He thought the proper time for bringing forward such a motion was before the Budget was produced; for he knew by experience, if he waited until afterwards, he would be told that it was impossible to entertain it, because the financial arrangements of the year had been completed. He was himself in favour of all these resolutions, but he had separated them in order to test the opinion of the House upon each. He admitted that the repeal of the paper duty would not have much effect with respect to high-priced books; but, as to cheap publications, the effect would be great. If the duty would not enable the publishers to reduce the price still further, it would nevertheless have the beneficial effect of enabling them to improve the quality of these publications by paying for good authorship out of the money thus saved. He could see no reason, if the duty on paper were repealed why this country shall not become the paper manufactory for the whole world; and the question was, therefore, in a great degree an agricultural one, for the manufacture of paper was one peculiarly suited to agricultural districts. With respect to the advertisement duty, it was a most impolitic impost, and as unjust as it was impolitic, for it imposed the same duty upon a servant advertising in five lines for a situation as it imposed on the capitalist whose advertisement extended to a column. The right hon. gentleman then dwelt upon the impolicy of the newspaper stamp, advocating the propriety of allowing the cheap publications to communicate news as well as literary amusement to the reader.

Mr J STUART seconded the motion

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he was bound to consider the question purely in a financial point of view, and in that respect he could not concur. He could not see the House a surplus of £1,500,000 sterling of revenue. On Friday next he would have to make his financial statement, and then it would be for the right hon. gentleman, and those who concurred with him on this question, to assert the principles and measures embodied in that statement, or to take an opposite course. He reminded the House that they should be cautious how they dealt with the indirect taxation of the country, when there was such an outcry against that direct taxation which was necessary to enable them to effect any reductions in indirect taxation. In opposing the motion, he wished it to be understood that he did so entirely from considerations of revenue.

Mr. MACKINNON considered it reasonable that the Chancellor of the Exchequer should be allowed to make his financial statement in the first instance, and he therefore moved the adjournment of the debate for a fortnight.

Mr CRAWFORD seconded the motion for adjournment, and said, if the Government would undertake to deal with the taxes question he would receive the boon as thankfully as if it came from an Administration more in accordance with his own views.

After a few words from Sir F. Thesiger, Mr. GIBSON agreed to the adjournment of the question.

In the course of a conversation that ensued, an impression was conveyed that the remarks of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the advertisement duty were to be taken as an indication of an intention to repeal that duty.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, therefore, rose and stated, that he wished it to be distinctly understood that no observations of his admitted of being construed into that sense.

The debate was then finally adjourned

The House then rose shortly after eight o'clock.

FATHER GAVAZZI'S LECTURES.—On Wednesday this Italian ecclesiastic commenced a series of lectures at Wilde's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, his object being to demonstrate that Italy, as a nation, does not sympathise with the measures and public conduct of the Papacy. He denied that "Pope" and "Italian" were convertible terms; and maintained that the Italians who had obtained names in the world's peerage had consistently opposed the usurpations and tyranny of the Popes. The oration, which occupied upwards of an hour in the delivery, was listened to with the most profound attention.

ETON COLLEGE.—The school opened on Monday last. In the course of next week the whole of the students will have assembled. The authorities of the college have instructed G. R. Booth, Esq., of Wandsworth-road, to light up the college with his patent vegetable oil gas, on account of its wholesomeness and purity, being free from the arsenic and sulphurous vapours contained in coal gas, and nearly four times as brilliant. On Friday week the upper and lower schools, cloisters and gallery, quadrang., Weeding's-yard, and the boys' new gallery were lighted up for the first time. The gas is supposed from a very simple apparatus erected in the brewery-yard, occupying but a trifling space of ground, and answers admirably. The old organ in the college chapel is to be taken away, and a magnificent new one erected in that part of the edifice nearly opposite to Lupton Chapel. A beautiful new stained-glass window, subscribed for by old Etonians, has been commenced in one of the south windows of the chapel; and an important improvement has been made to the entrance into Eton by the pulling down of a house at Spier's-corner, and continuing the wall to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Luxmoore.

OPENING OF HOMERTON COLLEGE.—This college, established as the training institution of the Congregational Board of Education, was opened on Tuesday. The Rev. John Harris, D.D., principal of New College, delivered the inaugural address. A conversazione was provided in the afternoon for the visitors, and a conversazione took place in the evening

On Tuesday, the Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway was opened as far as [illegible] by a special train, consisting of two engines and 27 first-class carriages, [illegible] persons.

A [illegible] has been [illegible] med at Paris for inquiring into the [illegible] and records of Evangelical Protestantism.

In the year ending the 5th of January last there were 24,514,000 gallons of proof spirits [illegible] in the United Kingdom. The duty paid on proof spirits for home consumption in the year amounted to £5,017,318 7s. 4d. At the [illegible] (5th January last) there were 17,005 gallons not duty paid [illegible] bonded stores on the 5th of January there were 7,024,315 gallons of spirits.

At the Marlborough-street Police-court, on Tuesday, a woman, [illegible] has been charged with stealing a couple of jugs, committed suicide while in the cell by hanging herself to the bar of the window by which light is admitted into the place.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

FAIRSERVICE—1. Complaints are made of subscribers making no acknowledgment of having received their copies of the Tournament games, which occasions a good deal of confusion. 2. The "Game played between Messrs Anderssen and Staunton in the Tournament book of games, a move of each side has been omitted. After move 31 introduce White P to K R 3d Black P to K R 4th

QUIX—We cannot take notice of communications so addressed. If, instead of indulging in silly speculations as to why some gentleman with haverings need, was not regard to the writer had civ. requested his inquiry, it would have been answered

WELL-WISHER. The best way to ensure a reply the same week is to send your communications early, by Tuesday if possible.

R P, Sewt 6—See the notice above to "Fairservice"

VICTOR. Much too simple

A C, Jonesboro, United States. Your problems were duly received, and shall have insertion. 2. The "Game Backhouse" has never been translated into English. It was begun some years ago by one of our leading players, but by the adoption of our notation it threatened to become so voluminous that the task was prudently relinquished

COLONEL, Zwolle—Will our obliging correspondent favour us with his address? We can then communicate more fully on the subject of the Problems than it is possible to do in the restricted space of the paper. He will find the "famous" Indian Problem (perhaps the finest four-piece position extant) published every month on the wrapper of the Chess-player's Chronicle. The promised copy of Von Nieveit's Treatise (.792) will be much prized.

E M M—They shall appear

G H T—The typographical errors detected in the first issue of the Tournament games have been corrected since; and a list of the errata will, we have no doubt, be sent to those who have the first edition

R F G—Again, but incorrect, since Black may for his second move play K to Q 3d, and avoid mate in three moves

A MEMBER is thanked for his obliging inquiries

HASSLING. It must entirely depend upon circumstances

R R, of Ashford—Ashwell have attention

R B, Blandford. You cannot Castle to get out of check

R P P—The corrected version shall be examined

B W F. The two Problems now received shall be reported on next week. Those previously sent were inadmissible

ARTHUR A. Capar—This report of Mr Lowenthal's visit to the Fife Chess Club reached us too late

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 428, by Fairservice, Philo Judy, Midge, Qakr, and E M H, of Hull: B W F, of Farwich, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 429, by Agnes, M P, Quis, Jack of Shrewsbury, Downham, M E R, Colonus of Zwolle, and W B I, B W F are correct

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 430, by Cubiscan, J M, of Sherburn; M E R, B W F, D'Orsay, J W B, of Wrexham; Derwyth, Beevers, Turist Niet Sophis Krohn, A. merle, R R, of Ashford; St Edmund, Downham, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF ENIGMAS, by J M, of Sherburn; Derwyn, Turist Niet, M P, R R, of Ashford; St Edmund, B W F, are correct. All others are wrong.

 In our next we shall give a fine Problem, hitherto unpublished, by the Rev H Bolton, and some excellent games just played by the great Russian masters, Jouanch and Schumoff

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 428.*

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q B 2d (disch)	R to Q 4th	4. R to Q B 6th	Kt takes R; or
2. Q takes R (ch)	K takes Q		R takes R
3. R takes Q P (ch)	P takes R (best)	5. B mates

* The solution given last week as that of 428 was the solution of 427

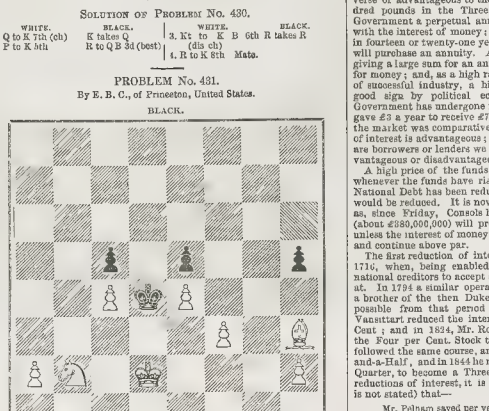
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 430.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to K 7th (ch)	K takes Q	3. Kt to K B 6th	R takes R
2. P to K 8th	R to Q B 3d (best)	(dis ch)
		4. R to K 8th	Mate.

PROBLEM No. 431.

By E. B. C., of Princeton, United States.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

INSTRUCTIVE GAMBIT BETWEEN MM. KIESERITZKY AND SZEN.

(Allgaier Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. K.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	23. Q to her B 8th	K to K 2d
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P	24. Q Kt to K 3d	R takes K Kt
3. Kt to K B 3d	P to K Kt 4th	25. P takes R	Q takes P
4. P to K R 4th	P to K Kt 5th	26. Kt to Q 5th	Kt to K 2d
5. Kt to K 5th	P to K R 4th	27. R takes K R P	Kt takes Kt
6. B to Q B 4th	R to K R 2d	28. R to K R 8th (ch)	K to Q 2d
7. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3.	29. P takes Kt	Q takes P
8. Kt to Q 3d	P to K B 6th	30. Q to her 8th (ch)	K to Q B 3d
9. P to K Kt 2d	Q B to K 3d	31. Q to her B 8th (ch)	K to Kt 3d
10. Q B to K Kt 5th	K B to K 2d	32. Q takes K Kt P	R to K B 2d (d)
11. B takes Q B	P takes B	33. R takes Kt (ch)	K to R 2d
12. Kt to K B 4th	K to Q 2d	34. R to K R 8th	P to K 6th
13. P to Q 5th	P to K 4th	35. P to K 6th	P to K 6th (e)
14. P to K 6th	Q to K sq	36. R to K R 3d	R to K 3d
15. Q to her 3d	P to Q R 3d	37. Q R to Q sq	P to K B 7th (ch)
16. Kt to Q 3 3d	Kt to Q B sq	38. K to B sq	Q to K 4th
17. Q to her B 4th	B takes B	39. K to his 2d	Q takes Q Kt P
18. P takes P	P to Q Kt 4th	40. Q to K B 5th	Q to her Kt 5th
19. Q to her Kt 4th	P to Q B 4th (a)	41. R to K R 4th	Q to her B 6th
20. Q to her 5th (b)	Q R to Q R 2d	42. Q to her 2d	Q to her Kt 7th
21. Q to her Kt 6th (c)	K R to Q 2d	43. R to K R 7th	R takes R
22. Q Kt to Q sq	Q R to Q Kt 2d	44. P takes R, and wins.

(a) This bold advance of the infantry serves as a momentary check to White's attack, but in the end it leaves the black King too much exposed for safety

(b) Better than taking the Pawn in passing, because it retards the freedom of the adverse pieces

(c) P to K Kt 5th seems also an embarrassing move.

(d) An ingenious attempt to open a counter attack, which, without great care on White's part would have wrested the game from him in spite of his superior forces

(e) Mr. Szen pays this disheartening end game admirably. Disclaiming even the appearance of surrender, he maintains his ground inch by inch to the very last.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 733.—By an AMATEUR.

White: K at K Kt 2d, Q at K Kt 8th, B s at K B sq and Q Kt 6th, P s at K 4th and Q 2d.

Black: K at K B 5th, Q at Q R 3d; P s at K Kt 6th and 6th, K 4th, Q 5th, and Q Kt 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 734.—By the Same.

White: K at his 2d, B at K B 2d, Kts at K R 4th and K B sq; P s at K R 3d, Q 3d, and Q B 4th.

Black: K at K B 5th; P s at K R 4th, K B 4th, Q 5th, and Q B 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

CHESS REUNION OF PLYMOUTH, DEVONPORT, AND THE NEIGHBOURHOOD.—The first meeting of the Chess amateurs in this part of the country took place, as we announced, on Thursday week, and was complete, and eminently successful. At an early hour of the evening a large and most respectable assemblage of visitors had congregated in the New Hall, at Stonehouse; and after partaking of the refreshments provided for the occasion, a ballot for opponents was taken, and the respective parties sat down to their "prince, y sport" with that zest and keenness which Chess-players only know. Upon the conclusion of the contests, Dr. Perry rose, and, as a member of the St. George's Hall Committee, expressed his gratification at seeing so numerous a party congregated together beneath the roof of their noble Hall. He trusted that one of the objects of the present would be to dispel every undue feeling of rivalry, and in its stead to cement a bond of union between the Chess-players of the three towns. The company separated, after an evening of really social and intellectual enjoyment, at half-past eleven o'clock.

CONSOLS AT PAR.—REDUCTION OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Last week Consols were called at par, the Three per Cents were at 100, and there was great cheering on the Stock Exchange. Only once before in the present century has this circumstance happened, and only three times before since the National Debt became a great national burthen. We will lay before our readers a few interesting particulars connected with the subject.

The practice of borrowing money for a perpetuity, or on interminable annuities, was begun in the reign of William III. Previous Sovereigns were borrowers; but their loans were for a limited period, and when repaid when their wars were at an end. He and his immediate successors borrowed without any intention to repay, and began a debt that has since been increased to the amount, in 1851, exclusive of unfunded debt, of £769,272,562. Instead of borrowing money as private individuals do at some current rate of interest, it was from an early period customary with the Government to fix the rate of interest, generally at 3 per cent., and as the market rate was high or low to promise to repay a larger or smaller amount of principal. Hence the mass of the debt was contracted in a three per cent. stock, and the amount of the debt was augmented nearly two-fifths more than the sum actually lent to the Government.

In 1751 the different Three per Cent. Stocks were consolidated into one stock, which has ever since been known by the name of Consols, and with successive additions has ever since formed the principal portion of the National Debt. Prior to that consolidation, the Three per Cents rose in 1737 to 107, the highest point they ever reached. Again, in 1745, they rose to 100; and from that time to 1784 they were always below par. In 1844 Consols were at 113, and on Friday last they reached 100, being only the second time Consols have been at par since they were created, and only the fourth time within 160 years that a three per cent. annuity in perpetuity has been worth £100 or more than £100.

The funds have undergone some fearful vicissitudes. In 1700, on the death of the King of Spain, they fell to 80 per cent., "whereby," says the historian, "great distress ensued to many." After the peace of Utrecht, in 1716, they rapidly rose; and between 1730 and the rebellion in 1745, they were never below 89; but during the rebellion in 1745 they sank to 76. They fell to 55⅝ in 1782, at the close of the American war; and, mounting afterwards to 97⅛ in 1792, fell in September, 1797, to 47⅝. This was the lowest they ever reached. Between that and the highest point, 107, attained in the year 1737, the difference was equivalent to 117 per cent., sufficient to annihilate many fortunes, or to confer great wealth on those who purchased when the funds were at the lowest.

It is customary to speak with approbation of the high price of stocks, and it is advantageous to stockholders wishing to sell; but it is the reverse of advantageous to those who wish to buy. To possess one hundred pounds in the Three per Cents means a right to claim from the Government a perpetual annuity of £3. The price of annuities varies with the interest of money; and as that is high, as a sum doubles itself in fourteen or twenty-one years, a proportionately less sum paid down will purchase an annuity. A high price of the funds, or the necessity of giving a large sum for an annuity, is equivalent to a low rate of interest for money; and, as a high rate of interest is a proof of high profit and of successful industry, a high price of the funds is not considered a good sign by political economists. The security offered by our Government has undergone no change for the last thirty years; and as it gave £3 a year to receive £75 or to receive £96, the interest of money in the market was comparatively high or low. To all borrowers a low rate of interest is advantageous; to all lenders, the reverse; and thus as we are borrowers or lenders we speak of a high price of the funds as advantageous or disadvantageous.

A high price of the funds being equivalent to a low rate of interest, whenever the funds have risen to par or above it, the interest of the National Debt has been reduced, or an expectation has prevailed that it would be reduced. It is now talked of, but apparently without reason, as, since 1797, Consols have declined in spite of their immense amount (about £830,000,000) will prevent the reduction of interest upon them, unless the interest of money remains permanently low, and Consols rise and continue above par.

The first reduction of interest was made by Sir Robert Walpole in 1716, when, being enabled to borrow at a low rate, he induced the national creditors to accept a lower rate than they had lent their money at. In 1794 a similar operation was carried into effect by Mr. Pelham, a brother of the then Duke of Newcastle. No similar reduction was possible from that period almost to our own time. In 1822 Mr. Vansittart reduced the interest on a Five per Cent. Stock to Four per Cent; and in 1824, Mr. Robinson, the present Earl of Ripon, reduced the Four per Cent. Stock to Three-and-a-Half. In 1830 Mr. Goulburn followed the same course, and reduced the new Four per Cents to Three-and-a-Half, and in 1844 he reduced the Three-and-a-Half to Three-and-a-Quarter, to become a Three per Cent. Stock in 1854. By the several reductions of interest, it is estimated (what Sir Robert Walpole saved is not stated) to have—

Mr. Pelham saved per year	..	..	..	£565 000
Mr. Vansittart "	..	..	..	1,230,000
Mr. Robinson "	..	..	..	370,000
Mr. Goulburn, in 1830	..	..	..	778,000
" 1844	..	..	..	645,000
Total	..	..	..	£3,568,000

To which must be added the prospective saving to take place in 1854 of £620,000, making a total annual reduction of charge by a reduction in the rate of interest of £4,188,000. Notwithstanding that reduction, the annual charge was not less in 1850 than £27,902,572; and we cannot flatter our readers with the hope of any further reduction at present. Californian and Australian gold has had no effect in raising price, very little effect in lowering the rate of interest, which was lower in 1844 than it is in 1852, and gives no reasonable prospect of, as some persons have said, facilitating the liquidation of the National Debt.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

(SECOND NOTICE.)

ANTHONY has several remarkably effective pieces, chiefly landscapes, in which his peculiar study and method of handling are exemplified in a manner which must command respectful attention, if not in every instance unqualified approval. This artist has certainly one property all his own, which distinguishes him from the ordinary run of landscape painters of our day, and that is a constant seeking after variety, and a turn for experimentalising, which, if it does not always lead to glorious results, procures a store of valuable and interesting experience. In his treatment of foliage he is marvellously creative. Giving all due importance to the local colour and various characters of trees, he deals in light and shade with wonderful skill. The dark recesses of impenetrable gloom of parts are marked with a depth of tone which makes the superincumbent branch almost stand out in relief; and the lights which pierce through in other parts are thrown in here and there, so that we almost see the sky beyond, and feel the pervading atmosphere between it and the eye; and all this without any spottiness and glitter, the fear of which induces cautious landscape painters to generalise their foliage into masses more or less opaque. Of the former characteristic the clustering ivy upon the venerable village church, in the "Village Bridal" (No. 200), is a happy instance; the latter is remarkably exemplified in No. 372, "Shadows from the Leaves." But the most striking work which this artist exhibits on the present occasion is, unquestionably, No. 230, entitled "The Ferry Twilight." The constituent elements of this work are simply some farm buildings on the edge of a calm sheet of water, which, only partially broken by the introduction of the ferry-boat and some punts, occupies the lower portion of the canvas, whilst a cold evening sky covers the upper part; more than two-thirds of the whole being thus devoted to air and water. The peculiarity of the picture consists in the bold manner in which the various objects on shore and afloat are reflected upon the surface, or rather re-integrated in the very depths of the water. The effect, when viewed from across the room, and through a roll of paper, is perfectly illusive, and we strongly suspect may be partly attributable to a study of the properties of the Daguerreotype. Upon close inspection we remark that the water which looks so translucent at a distance is laid on with a roughness of surface and thick impasto, especially at the points where the shadows fall upon it, in many respects at variance with the ordinary method of water-painting. No. 430, the "Glen at Eve," is successful as to the foliage, but not in respect of the rocks, which have a chocolate look, and the figures introduced into the foreground, which are decidedly an eye-sore. No. 88, "Thoughtful Honor," is a picture in a totally different line, showing the interior of a poor cottage, with a young mother thoughtfully contemplating the cradle in which her young infant reposes. The idea is suggestive to every heart, and its unity is not spoiled by the introduction of any irrelevant accessories. There is the same boldness which we remark in this artist's other works in the use of colour as an essential element of effect, which viewed as a whole is agreeable. In conclusion, however, we must add, that in details of drawing, particularly where the human figure is concerned, Mr. Anthony is often careless, and occasionally incorrect—a fault which we should be glad to see him overcome.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

Clint's landscapes are characterised by great truthfulness and a healthy tone of colouring. No. 238, "View near Parkstone, Dorsetshire," is an extremely happy example of English rural scenery; the village nestling in the middle ground, and in the distance the river striking out right and left. The a i [illegible] tive is well managed. 169, "A Sunset," is a clever little bit, a rich and harmonious effect being produced with great simplicity and boldness of colouring.

Herring, as usual, revels in cattle subjects: his farmyards are stocked with horses, pigs, poultry, done to the very life. In the first named, however, he appears to have studied upon a few favourite models, and the portraits, particularly that of the old familiar white horse, are at once recognisable. There is a want of judgment, however, in the general treatment, more especially in the colouring, which deprive these productions of the classic interest with which they might otherwise be invested. 151, "Cromwell's soldiers in possession of Arundel church," of which they made a guard-room and stable, otherwise a well-studied picture, is unattractive on account of the monotonous coldness of the colouring. Woolmer, on the other hand, whilst evincing a happy skill in the treatment of the human figure, in fanciful subjects, sins by an undue predilection for a sickly hue, and a mixture of pale green, yellow, &c., which pervades more or less all his pictures. This is especially the case in 227, "The Bride," where there is not a single sober tone suffered to intrude to relieve the factitious glitter. The subject, as a composition, is prettily treated, as will be soon acknowledged on an inspection of our Engraving of it. In his "Dorothea" the colouring is so tawdry and spotty as to detract all interest from the figure, which happens to be extremely well studied. "Eve (256) nursing her First-born" is commonplace in treatment, and might as well be termed Mrs. Smith or Mrs. anybody else. "The Lady in the glass case" (326) pleasingly realises the well-known story in the "Arabian Nights." The face of the heroine is a pretty one, and the figure nicely defined through a light drapery; and the stagey glare of colouring is, perhaps, less out of keeping here than in other works by the same hand. The "Adam and Eve driven out of Paradise," which hangs in the Great Room, is in every respect a failure.

"THE BRIDE."—PAINTED BY A. J. WOOLMER.

F. Underhill exhibits a single workof very noticeable merit, 264, "A Gleaner," whose healthy, rosy face is surmounted by a straw hat jauntily put on, the whole producing a very picturesque and agreeable effect.

J. Danby has two pieces, one "A Ship on Fire" (15)—a commonplace subject, with which it is very easy to do something, and impossible to do much, and which we certainly consider to be beneath his talent; the other, a very nice view of "Loch Long, with Carrick Castle" (371), in which his broad glowing tints are happily introduced.

Boddington has several landscapes in his own real, genuine style, telling of healthful study in the open fields, by the winding river, and on the mountain top. We could wish, however, for the infusion of a little poetry into their treatment, which would ensure the productions of this conscientious and painstaking artist a much higher rank and a much more enduring fame than any purely local sketches can ever lay claim to.

G. W. Willis has three very pleasing designs—(139) "The Shepherd's Home" and (326) "Highland Hospitality," both interiors; and (422) "A Highland Road." We have engraved the second named the story of which is very intelligently told, without any attempt at exaggeration. The colouring, however, is not quite so effective as might be desirable in so small a subject, and which we see so admirably accomplished in the works of the late Wilkie, as well as those of Goodall and some others of the present day.

Mrs. Hurlstone presents us with a small panoramic homily upon the "Women of England in the Nineteenth Century" (271), which we could wish had been spared us. The canvass is divided into two compartments with arched tops: in the one is a scene in an opera-box, with several ladies eating ices, and flirting with an officer in regimentals, whilst the "pet of the ballet" is performing her accustomed pas; in the other is a dull dark garret, the details of which are rendered visible by a single rushlight, beneath whose flickering rays an emaciated girl painfully realises the "Song of the Shirt," "stitch, stitch, stitch," &c. In the angles above are represented the lady hunting, the poor girl harnessed to a waggon in a coal-pit, &c.—all to carry out the contrast to its most painful limits. Not to say that the picture is badly executed, we would really submit that it was conceived in bad taste, and can lead to no useful or kindly result. There have been rich and poor in all ages of the world; and it is neither generous nor just to lay to the door of the ladies of England of the nineteenth century, the sins of neglect and selfishness which this picture, if it means anything, would seem to imply.

J. W. Glass is guilty of a pun and a trick of art in a piece of very small dimensions, entitled "A Blue of the deepest die." The pun consists in dressing the lady bookworm in a blue dress of eye-killing intensity; the trick in heightening the "effect" by introducing the light from above, and at the back of, the figure, which throws the white collar and the tip of the toe into preternatural relief. It is needless to remark, that in every one of these achievements Mr. Glass violates the true principles of art, and disregards the harmony of nature, upon which they are founded.

"HIGHLAND HOSPITALITY."—PAINTED BY G. W. WILLIS.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—SCENE FROM THE NEW DRAMA OF "THE CHAIN OF EVENTS."—THE SHIPWRECK.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

The Chain of Events" attracts and will continue attractive, notwithstanding its extraordinary length. It was a bold venture; but proved, by the result, like most bold ventures, to be a wise one. The management is not of the faint-heart school, and through good and evil still works its way successfully. The perfection of Mr. C. Mathews's acting carries him through an up-hill part with an air of ease which begets confidence and conciliates attention. The difficulty vanishes in the nonchalance of the actor; the art is so perfectly concealed, that the assumption appears the most natural thing in the world, though the elements of the entire character, both as written and spoken, are inherently artificial. Next to the admirable acting is the unparalleled mounting of the play. We give an Illustration of the second act, which is composed of the shipwreck. Dialogue in the scene, there is little or none; nothing, indeed, but the exclamations of the sufferers, and the cry of "Save me! save me!" from the drowning man (the future pseudo-Marquis) to the will-stealing footman, who finds in him a ready and unsuspecting agent. The tossing and rolling of the vessel amidst the tumult and the darkness, made visible by the lightning flash, was managed with a reality that brought at once sea, sky, and storm-tossed bark not only before the imagination, but the vision. Then the sudden going down of the ship! It was terrible. The shriek of the audience almost substituted that of the crew. Scenic effect and the mise en scène may be said to be brought in these days to perfection. Madame Vestris was the first to pay proper attention to it; she it was who led the way for Macready, and she still secures the precedence by superior excellence. The completeness of the performances at the Lyceum have been of good example, and public gratitude is due to the management.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

The comedy of "Money" has been revived, for the purpose of further testing the merits of Mr. Barry Sullivan. His Evelyn is, indeed, an intelligent and elegant piece of acting; and we have no doubt that this actor will gradually grow into public favour.

We this week furnish an Illustration from Mr. Mark Lemon's burlesque, "O Gemini." It is from the last scene the conflict between Chateau Renaud and the avenging brother. The fight is with lath foils, which are broken, and the contest is ludicrously prolonged with the splintered points. The satire is here well applied, and both Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Buckingham are comically effective. The merit of this burlesque is increased by the difficulty of the subject. Mr. M. Lemon has not translated the theme into another, but found his salient points in the original subject. For the melodramatic dressing he has simply substituted the literal prosaic version; for the stage ghost, he has given the turnip-headed one o vulgar frolic, and reduced the ghost story to the absurdity of profane belief. It is a spurious spirituality that believes in apparitions, and there is always a sense of the ludicrous in ghost stories; but it is hard to hit the precise point where incredulity begins to perceive the ridiculous. Philosophy, of course, ignores the possibility altogether as a mere matter of definition, since a spirit, becoming visible, ceases to be spiritual, and becomes a materialised substance—a bodily presentment. They should be called apparitions, and not ghosts. The ordinary mind has an instinctive sense of this; even the most ignorant feel the influence; and the caricaturist should so manage the argument as not to impugn the true doctrine of spirits, while sporting with the vagaries of superstition. We think that Mr. M. Lemon has hit the mean.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.—SCENE FROM THE NEW BURLESQUE OF "O GEMINI."—THE COMBAT.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The return of Mdlle. Sofie Cruvelli in Norma, of Gardoni as Pollio, and of Lablache as Oroveso was enthusiastically greeted on Saturday night. The acting and singing of the young prima donna were distinguished by the same beauties and defects of last season. The tendency to exaggerate certain passages produced fatigue and uncertainty of the voice; but, with all her eccentricities of style, Mdlle. Cruvelli has the elements of a great artist, and it will be entirely her own fault if she should fail to occupy the highest position on the lyric boards.

Rossini's sparkling "Italiana in Algeri" was given for the second time on Tuesday, with Mdlle. Angri, Calzolari, and Ferranti.

On Thursday, for the extra night, Rossini's "Il Barbiére" was revived; Mdlle. Sofie Cruvelli being the Rosina; Calzolari, the Count; Feriotti, Basilio; Belletti, Figaro; and Lablache, Dr. Bartolo.

DRURY LANE.

There has been a wordy warfare between the lively lesses and the "tender tenor," which ended in the secession of Mr. and Mrs Sims Reeves, and the substitution of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison in Balfe and Bunn's "Bohemian Girl." It is not our custom to notice squabbles behind the scenes, but the manifesto of Mr. Sims Reeves must not be passed over in silence: inasmuch as it is important for the public to know whether it be the manager, or the artist, who is the cause of perpetual disappointment in the attempt to establish a National Opera. Now it is quite silent from the tone of Mr. Sims Reeves' appeal, that he considers himself the ground-landlord, the proprietor, the renter, the lessee, the manager, and the Alfas of Drury-Lane Theatre. This is a delusion which must be dispelled by Mr. Reeves as quickly as possible; as, after all, he were a Mario or a Tamberlik, he would simply be a member and not a monarch of a large establishment. Mr. Sims Reeves must remove his lyric crown, and remember that he was but an employé, and with a one of her Majesty's subjects, although he did draw from the treasury a salary nearly as large as that of a Minister of State or of a Judge. That he was not indispensable, has been proved by the full houses since his departure from Beethoven's "Fidelio" was produced on Tuesday, for the début of Madame Falconi, a vocalist known in our concert-rooms formerly under the name of Madame Beckhotts. She has a very fine voice, and sings like an accomplished artiste. Her reception was very cordial. Miss Rebecca Isaacs was the Marcellina; Mr. Fêdor, Florestan; Mr. Whitworth, the Governor; Mr. Drayton, Rocco; Mr. S. Jones, Fernando; and Mr. Manvers, Jacquesco: and the execution of the opera was careful and consistent under Schira's able direction.

MARYLEBONE.

Mdlle. Anna Georges appeared on Monday as Helen in the "Hunchback." Her personal appearance was greatly in her favour, but her style at present is too elaborate and indiscriminately slow to realise expectation. There is however, great promise of her becoming an artiste; and when practice shall have given her facility, she may hope for popularity.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE.—The introduction of some ebony Marionettes, as Ethiopian Serenaders, has proved very successful. The make-up of these figures is capital, being striking facsimiles of the original and popular troupe. Their performance is very clever, and nightly elicits great applause.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The symphonies at the third concert were the No. 9 of Mozart, and the No 8 of Beethoven; the overtures were Weber's "Der Freyschütz," and Cherubini's "Anacreon," and the instrumental displays those of the accomplished Miss Kate Leder in Webe 's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, and of M. Sainton in a Violin Concerto of his own composition. In this scheme there was no attempt at novelty; but it afforded unmixed gratification to the subscribers, from the perfection of the execution under Costa's artistic inection.

The vocalists were Madame Castellan, Miss Dolby, and Mr. Benson, whose sing-ing of the classic pieces allotted to them won the unanimous suffrages of the auditory.

The fourth concert will be on the 3d of May.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The first matinée of the eighth season was given on Tuesday at Willis's Rooms. Mr. Ella, in his Interesting Record, announces that the number of members this season has been considerably increased. This and continued patronage has prompted the able director to increased exertion, and in no former campaign has such talent been concentrated as will be heard during the present series of concerts. Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 18, No. 6S, in B flat, and Mozart's Quintet in D, No. 4, were included in the opening programme; the executants being Sivori (first violin), Herr Molique (second violin), Mr. Ourry (first viola), Mr. Webb (second viola), and Piatti (violoncello). Moralt, from Munich, is a nephew of the veteran pianist John Cramer, and cousin of the late eminent tenor player Moralt. Pierre Moralt is also one of the famed Moralt Quartet Brothers, of Munich. Mr. Ourry is a valuable accession as a quartet performer. Madame Pleyel was to have been the pianiste, her first appearance here since 1846; but, owing to indisposition, was unable to appear. The début of Madame Castellan, the gifted Bohemian pianiste, and unexpectedly took place. Her performance of pieces by Bach, Beethoven, and Liszt created a great sensation: she is a most remarkable player, quite young in years, but thoroughly in mechanism, and possessing in an eminent degree the highest order of artistic feeling.

MONTHLY CONCERTS.

At the fourth concert at St Martin's-hall, on Wednesday, the evidence of progress of Mr. Hullah's Upper Singing Schools was manifested by the execution of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the principal parts being sustained by Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Chambers, Miss Williams, Miss Kent, Messrs. Lockey, T. Williams, Bodda, and Whitehouse.

MUSICAL EVENTS.

M. Billet gave his fifth pianoforte performance on Tuesday night at St Martin's-hall; and on the same evening Mr. Kuilmark, at the Queen Anne-street Rooms, had his third concert of Classical and Modern Pianoforte Music. The Beethoven Quartett Society had the second meeting on Wednesday, with Mdlle. Couion, Sevri, Sainton, Hill, and Piatti as executants.——On the same evening Miss Mossent gave a soirée musicale at her residence in Stratton-street.—— Mdlle. Speyer, a clever pianiste, had her second soirée musicale on Thursday, at the Queen Anne-street Rooms, assisted by Herr Moralt, violin: Mdme de Lozano and Herr Standidi, his first appearance in London these five years: Mr. Aguilar and Signor Balletta were the accompanyists.——Last night, at Exeter-hall, the Sacred Harmonic Society, under Costa's direction, performed Mendelssohn's "Elijah" Mdme Clara Novello, Miss A. Lodor, Miss Dolby, Miss Wilkinson, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Walker, A. Novello, Smythson, and Herr Formis, being the chief singers.——The second concert of the Royal Academy of Music will be given this morning (Saturday).——On Monday will be the third concert of the Amateur Musical Society, the first concert of the English Glee and Madrigal Union, and Herr Janus's concert of the Ancient Concerts.——On the same evening will be the annual performance of Handel's "Messiah," for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians. On this occasion it will take place at Exeter Hall, under Costa's direction; and the Sacred Harmonic Society will afford choral aid, the chief singers being Mdme Clara Novello, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Swift, Mr. Benson, Mr. Phillips, Herr Formès, &c.——Mr. Hullah's last pupil concerts will be on Tuesday.——On Wednesday will be the third concert of the New Philharmonic Society, at which Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony will be repeated; Mr. Neate's sixth quartet, and pianoforte soirée; and the first meeting of the Quartett Association.——Herr Rudolph Schacker, a distinguished composer and pianist, has arrived in town from Vienna for the season.—— The committee of the Norwich Musical Festival have decided that, in addition to Dr. Benelict's "Israel Restored," a new oratorio, "Jerusalem," by H. H. Pierson, Esq., who once occupied the chair of music at the Edinburgh University, shall be produced. The meeting will commence on the 20th of September.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

A new comic opera in two acts, "Galathée,"—by Jules Barbier and Carré, and the music by M. Victor Massé—has been successfully produced at the Paris Théâtre de l'Opéra Comique.——At the 125th representation of Meyerbeer's "Prophète," at the Grand Opera in Paris, the receipts were nearly 10 000 f.——Alboni has arrived in Paris from Madrid, and contemplates a tour to the United States.——The Duke of Saxe Coburg's opera, "Casilia," has been brought out at Brussels with the greatest success; the principal parts sustained by Mdmes. Barbot and Cabel, MM. Barbot, Carman, and Marchisio. The work will be produced at her Majesty's Theatre this season.——Jules Benedict, the pianist and composer, had left Pisa for Sitt.gardt. his natal city On the 16th ir.; he directed the performance of his opera, "The Crusaders," before the King of Wirtemberg and the Grand Dukes of Russia, brothers of the Princess Royal of Wirtemberg.——The great musical festival o associated Belgian, French, and German choralists will take place at Lille on the 30th of June.

LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—At the fourth of these entertainments, on the 21st instant, at Exeter Hall, Mdlle. Jetty Treffz made her first appearance this season, and was heartily greeted. She was encored in a ballad by Mozart, "Forget me not," and in Moore's "Love's Young Dream." She also introduced a new song by Kucken, the composer of "Trab, trab," which was well received. Braham was encored in "Sons who love" and in the "Old English Gentleman." The Misses Broughlam, Miss Stabbach, Mis Rose Braham, Miss Jacobs, Miss Allayne, Herr Reichart, Mr. G. Tedder, Sivori, Lavigne, Bottesini, Rémusat, Billet, Schimon, &c., afforded their aid in the attractive programme.

From a return just issued, it appears that the income, with balances, of the Duchy of Lancaster, in the year ending Michaelmas last, amounted to £38,999 3s. 9½d., out of which £12,000 was paid to her Majesty's Privy Purse. After various payments the balance was £9287 8s. 5½d.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

BANQUET TO HER MAJESTY'S MINISTERS.

On Saturday last a magnificent banquet was given to her Majesty's Ministers by the Goldsmiths' Company, at their magnificent hall. the chair was occupied by the Prime Warden, Alderman W. J. Copeland, M.P., supported by the Premier, the Right Hon the Earl of Derby; the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Duke of Northumberland; the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marquis of Downshire, the Earl of Hardwicke, Earl de Grey, the Earl of Wilton, the Earl of Verulam, Viscount Newport, Viscount Hardinge, the Bishop of London, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Walpole, and Mr. Johnston, &c., several members of the leading public and banking companies of the City, and the officers of the Goldsmiths' Company, amounting in all to about 110 guests.

After the usual loyal toasts had been given, the "Health of the Bishop of London" was drunk. The right rev. prelate briefly responded.

The "Army and Navy" was responded to by the Duke of Northumberland and Viscount Hardinge, the distinguished veterans of both services.

The next toast was the "Health of their brother goldsmith, the Earl of Derby, and her Majesty's Ministers," which was drunk with acclamation.

The Earl of Derby, in returning thanks, said,—Amongst the strange revelations and strange changes which have taken place, perhaps few are calculated to produce so great an effect—few have produced so great a feeling of astonishment and wonder as the recent discovery, in various quarters of the world, of that which was heretofore considered as one of the precious metal—that which is the staple of the industry of your craft. Hitherto that metal had been considered as confined to a very limited space, to quarters capable of but small extension, and spread over a very small portion of the world; but suddenly, to the astonishment of the world, in various distant regions, at one and the same time, it came pouring in upon us with a profusion astounding to all classes and all ranks, in effect which it is difficult to foresee; but it is not difficult to say that it must work a strange and extraordinary revolution in the system of society and in our commercial relations (Hear.) But, gentlemen, it is not only in the country or discovery of gold that new resources have been opened to us. Up to within a very short time there existed, as with regard to gold, a popular delusion that the field of statesmen and of politicians was almost as limited. It was supposed that the crop of statesmen was one of very limited amount. But, which, if you were supposed to dig, you must dig in certain favoured localities, and confine your search to them. (Laughter and cheering.) I am happy to think, gentlemen, that I have been to some degree instrumental in dispelling that illusion. (Loud cheers.) The fortunate adventurer, who was honoured by the commission of her Majesty to do the best he could for her service, has ventured bold y to open a new mine, and I am happy to say that in the opinion of competent judges, so far as it has been worked, the ore raised has contained as large a proportion of sterling metal, with as little admixture of dross, as any that was ever drawn from the bowels of the earth. (Hear, hear.) Now we were fortunate enough (Cheers.) in finding not only new resources have been opened to us. Up to within a short time there existed, as with regard to gold, a popular delusion that the field of statesmen and of politicians was almost as limited. It was supposed that the crop of statesmen was one of very limited amount. But, which, if you were supposed to dig, you must dig in certain favoured localities, and confine your search to them. (Laughter and cheering.) I am happy to think, gentlemen, that I have been to some degree instrumental in dispelling that illusion. (Loud cheers.) The fortunate adventurer, who was honoured by the commission of her Majesty to do the best he could for her service, has ventured bold y to open a new mine, and I am happy to say that in the opinion of competent judges, so far as it has been worked, the ore raised has contained as large a proportion of sterling metal, with as little admixture of dross, as any that was ever drawn from the bowels of the earth. (Hear, hear.) Now we were fortunate enough (Cheering.) By such a course, whether assaulted at home or abroad, permitting neither assault nor insult on the part of anybody, we have endeavoured to shall best discharge the arduous duties which have been cast upon us, and be warrant the confidence reposed in us by our gracious Sovereign, and best merit the confidence and support of that people over whose interests we are called to watch; and, gentlemen, whether our course be long or short, I trust, to recur again to the metaphor that has been used, it is our hope and trust, as it will be our exertion to secure, that when our career is closed, the country will have no right to regret having subjected us to this our first essay."

MANSION HOUSE.—On Tuesday the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress entertained at dinner the members of the Court of Common Council and their ladies, of the wards of Coleman-street, Aldersgate, Aldgate, Bassishaw, Blanchgreate, Bread-street, Bridge, Broad-street Candlewick, Castle Baynard, Cheap, Cordwainers, and Cornhill. There were also present Mr. Alderman Cubitt, M.P., Mr. Sheriff Cotterell, Mrs. Cotterell, and about 200 private friends of the Lord Mayor. Covers were laid in the Egyptian Hall for 250

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—On Wednesday evening the ordinary monthly meeting of the members of the Society of Arts, for the institution, Jonn-street, was held at Monteagle in the chair—when a paper was read by Mr. Digby Wyatt upon the principles which should determine form in the decorative arts.

BRITISH ORPHAN ASYLUM, Clarence, Slough.—The seventieth anniversary festival was held at the London Tavern; the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. The children in the schools, 102 in number, were brought into the room, and sang two appropriate hymns. The subscriptions and subscriptions announced in addition, a donation of £850 which had been paid to the credit of the institution by Admiral Sir J. Ogle and Mr. Henry Denton, the trustees of the late Mrs. Ogle, who had left a sum of money to be applied as their discretion for that purpose. The total receipts last year were £2835 18s 4d, and the total expenses were £2483 15s 8d.

GOVERNESSES BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The ninth annual dinner of the friends of this institution was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern; Lord Farnham in the chair. The report stated that the ladies' committee have themselves investigated exactly 1000 individual cases—receiving and considering 4318 applications from governesses, being a total of 5318 cases of relief given in the course of the year, an amount of £6000. The annuities to the aged have been steadily increased, as fast as could be done from vested capital, not from income. Forty-nine ladies are now receiving a small but certain income. The sum invested in this branch of the charity is about £30,000. The provident fund now exceeds £90,000, the savings of nearly 800 ladies, invested in Government security. The number of governesses for the time when they can work no longer. The savings-bank account is £7422. The registration free of expense saves thousands annually to governesses; more than 1000 ladies have availed themselves of it, and nearly 800 have been provided with situations. Of the 1090 ladies who have sojourned in the "Home," all speak with gratitude—all wish to come again. Eighteen ladies are now the accredited inmates of the asylum for aged governesses. The subscriptions announced in the course of the evening amounted to about £1000.

WESLEYAN REFORM.—On Tuesday evening a meeting of the adherents of Wesleyan reform took place at Exeter Hall, Strand, for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings and recommendations of the Conference Memorial Committee, and of the President's select laymen. Mr. G. W. Harrison, of Wakefield, occupied the chair. The secretary read a declaration of principles, which stated that it had been deemed expedient, in vindication of the rights and liberties of the people called Methodists, to prepare a document setting forth their objects and intentions, and expressing a full and entire approbation of all persons who members, who had been expelled in consequence of the recent proceedings of the Conference, was essential to the future peace and prosperity of the connexion. The Rev. William F. Griffiths, one of the expelled ministers, proposed and the Rev. W. L. Horton seconded, a resolution protesting against the claim of the President's select laymen to be representatives of the Methodist people, and denouncing the proceedings of the Conference Memorial Committee as an insult to the Methodist societies, and subversive of the true interests of Christianity. The motion was agreed to, and was followed by other resolutions of a similar tendency.

NATIONAL SHIPWRECK INSTITUTION.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this society was held at the London Tavern; Rear Admiral his Grace the Duke of Northumberland presiding. The report stated the appeal for new Duke of Northumberland presiding. The report stated that the appeal for new ones in the spring of last year had been responded to by subscriptions amounting to upwards of £2000; that various life-boats had been established around the coast, and that during the past year there had been 701 wrecks, involving the loss of 1,000 lives; that since the establishment of the institution, in 1824, the society had granted as rewards to persons instrumental in saving life from shipwreck, 77 gold medals, 495 silver medals, and £8457. The total number of persons saved by persons who received rewards during the past year was 230; and since the establishment of the society, 7378, exclusive of the crews of several vessels, the numbers of which were not ascertained. The report was adopted, and, some routine business having been transacted, the meeting separated.

MASTER MARINERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On Thursday evening the annual meeting of this society was held at the Bridge-house Hotel, 4 Old Dare. Esq., presiding. It appeared from the report that the number of shipDare. Esq., presiding. It appeared from the report that the number of ship-wrecks of vessels connected with the society in the year 1849 50 was 26, and the same number occurred in the year 1850-51; whilst from the last 4th April, 1851, to the same date this year, the number was only 14. The expenses of the society during the past year were £1358, and there still remained to the credit of the society £5993, being £59 over the account of last year The report was adopted, and £200 cet aside to give countenance of £10 each.

SOCIETY FOR DISTRESSED GENTLEWOMEN.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this charity was held at the offi e, Sackville-street, Piccadilly; the Right Hon the Marquis of Cholmondeley presiding. It appeared from the report that during the past year £500 had been expended in the relief of 286 widows. The income for the year was £—, and the expenditure £585 6s. 11d.

TALLOWCHANDLERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On Thursday the anniversary festival of this excellent charity was celebrated at the London Tavern; the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presiding, supported by the Sheriffs, the Under-sheriffs, and about 80 other gentlemen. The chairman having made an eloquent appeal on behalf of the charity, and stated that there were now 44 pensioners on its funds—the sum receiving 15s per month and the women 14s a subscription was entered into, which amounted to upwards of £500

The Chancellor of the Exchequer acknowledges the receipt of the half of a £500 note from "L. M.," for unpaid income-tax, with interest.

SURREY DISPENSARY.—The anniversary festival of the patrons and subscribers to this excellent charity, about 130 years established, was held on Wednesday, at the Bridge House Hotel, London-bridge, Southwark. About one hundred gentlemen were present. T. W. Freshfield, Esq., M.P., occupied the chair. In the course of the evening it was stated that the number of persons who availed themselves of the advantages of the institution averaged from 5000 to 6000, of whom about 800 were attended at their own homes, and of these 600 were midwifery cases The report stated that the property belonging to the charity amounted to £7388 8s. 11d., 3½ per Cents standing to the account of the general fund of the charity, and £241 19s. 10d., 3½ per Cents vested on account of the building fund. For the year ending Midsummer, 1851, the income amounted to £2869 13s 1d., and the expenditure to £1717 8s. 4 and there was in the hands of the treasurer a balance of £18 4s. belonging to the general fund, and £32 11s. 8d. belonging to the building rent fund. The subscriptions announced in the course of the evening amounted in the whole to about £400, including £105 5s. fresh subscriptions, and a donation of £100 from Mr. Robert Barnes, of Great Dover-road.

LONDON HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL.—The Earl of Albemarle presided at the anniversary festival of this institution on Wednesday evening, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. There were present a large number of ladies; and amongst the gentlemen we observed—The Marquis of Donro, Rev. J. Gossett, Mr. J. Uwins, R.A., &c. Mr. Paine proposed the "Duke of Wellington and the Army." The Marquis of Donro, in reply, said that the Duke was in the enjoyment of everything that should accompany old age, and he was affected with nothing which could interfere with his health or cheerfulness. Mr. Paine proposed the "Memory of Samuel Hahnemann;" and the chairman afterwards proposed the "Homœopathic Institution," which he stated to be in a most prosperous condition. Subscriptions to the amount of £712 were announced.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.—The 78th anniversary festival of this charitable institution took place on Wednesday, at Freamasons' Hall. About 50 gentlemen sat down to dinner. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge presided, and was supported by the Right Hon. the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Admiral Sartorius, and several other persons of distinction. The chairman, in proposing "Prosperity to the Royal Humane Society," said it appeared that the officers of the society had granted rewards to the amount of 175 recovered. Sixteen honorary silver medals had been voted for extraordinary courage and risk of life, and 23 honorary medals for exertions of a less degree of importance. The total number of persons restored to life during the year had been rescued from a watery grave were paraded through the room, after which the medals were distributed, and the other toasts having been disposed of, the company separated. The collections and subscriptions amounted to upwards of £800.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—In pursuance of a requisition most t numerously and respectably signed, directed to Francis Smedley, Esq., High Bailiff of the city of Westminster, a meeting was held on Saturday at noon, for the purpose of considering the opinion of the inhabitants with reference to the retention of the Crystal Palace. The meeting was numerously attended The High Bailiff, Mr. M Gregor. M.P., Mr. Geesin, Mr. T. Atkinson, Dr. Lankester, Mr. J. W. Marshall, Mr. Leach, M.P., and Admiral Sir G. Sartori n addressed the meeting, resolutions being agreed to that the Crystal Palace ought to be preserved in its present state; and that, arranged as a winter garden, and with collections illustrative of the various sciences, and art, it would greatly tend to the amusement and instruction of the people. Meetings have been held during the week in Finsbury, and other parts of the metropolis, in support of the continuance of the Crystal Palace.

METROPOLIS WATER SUPPLY.—On Tuesday the committee of the House of Commons to which this subject has been referred re-assembled.—Mr. Becket in the chair—when, after hearing Professors Cooper and Brande on the question of the chemical peculiarities of Thames water, the committee passed the first clause of the Government measure, which sets forth "that from and after (a date to be named) it shall not be lawful for any water company to take for the supply of the metropolis, or of any part thereof, any water from any part of the river Thames below Teddington Lock, or from any part of the tributary rivers or streams of the river Thames below the high-est point where the tide flows or meets such tributary rivers and streams respectively."

METROPOLITAN SANITARY ASSOCIATION.—A deputation of this body, headed by the Bishop of London, and comprising the Rev. Dr. Cumming, the Rev. C. Kingsley, Mr. B. Hawes, M.P., and several other gentlemen, waited on the Earl of Derby on Wednesday afternoon, to present a memorial to his Lordship to call his Lordship's attention to the sanitary evils now pressing

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Her Majesty's steamer Conflict, from the river Plate, arrived at Queenstown, Cork, on Friday week, having on board the late Dictator of Buenos Ayres, General Rosas, his family, and suite. The Conflict left the river Plate on the 16th February, touched Saints on the 9th of March, and was bound for Portsmouth, but was obliged to put into Cork owing to head-winds. It is stated that during her voyage one of the boilers burst, by which four men were killed. The General and his party landed and walked up to their residence.

It has been announced that the new iron screw ship Chusan, which has been built for the service between Singapore and Sydney on the bi-monthly Australian company of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company, will proceed from Southampton for Sydney the 15th of May, calling at the Cape of Good Hope, Adelaide, and Melbourne. Her capacity is 700 tons, and she is intended to carry about 35 first and 15 second cabin passengers.

Mr. Walpole's Militia Bill is, it appears, most unpopular with the masses. Numerous meetings have been held during the last few days in London and various parts of the country for the purpose of petitioning against it.

The fund for the testimonial to the late Archbishop Murray now amounts to about £1100, the names of Lord John Russell, Lord Carendon, the Marquis of Camericarde, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Ellesmere, the Earl of Fortescue, the Earl of St. Germans, Lord Heytesbury, the Marchioness of Westlesley, Lady Stafford, Sir William Somerville, the Marquis of Headford, the Marquis of Kildare, Chief Baron Richards, &c., being among its contributors.

During the past week some men engaged in deep-draining operations on land situated at Clapcot, near Mamesbury, the property of J. Neild, Esq., M.P., discovered a race stone vault, composed of massive flag-stones, roughly yet firmly made. On removing the top, they discovered the mouldering remains of what was once an oak outer coffin, in a state of extreme decay, portions of which exceeded four inches in thickness. Enclosed, in almost as perfect a state as when first deposited, there was an ancient and very rude lead coffin, weighing at least 2 cwt.

On Sunday a fire, originating in the extensive premises belonging to Mr. J. Hill, camp equipage and wholesale trunk manufacturer, at 212, Piccadilly, destroyed the workshops, and seriously damaged the rear of the building, together with the adjoining houses, belonging severally to Mr. Thomas Stillman, surgeon; Miss Amelia Price, milliner; and Mr. J. Everard, fruiterer. The last named was insured for only one-fourth of his loss. On Monday morning another fire broke out in the Rainbow Tavern, in Queen-street, Ratcliffe. The inmates, who were in bed at the time, experienced much difficulty in effecting their escape. The landlord, having first succeeded in gaining the street, was in the act of rescuing his wife by means of a ladder placed against the window, when a sound broke, and she fell to the ground, happily, however, receiving but a slight hurt. The servant maid, who jumped out of an upper window, has received some serious injuries. The rest of the family escaped unhurt. The premises, which fell in soon after the fire, were insured.

A few days ago, at the village of Renton, near Dumbarton, seven children perished in a fire which destroyed two houses.

Potato planting is going on vigorously in Ireland, owing to the fineness of the season. An abundant harvest, not only of that produce, but all of real crops, is confidently expected from all quarters of the country. A society being of the most gratifying kind, and the weather and state of the soil everything that the farmer could wish.

No great is the scarcity of labourers in the western counties of Ireland, especially Mayo, that large numbers of boys have been taken from the workhouses at 6d. a day, and they can out loudly for an advance to 8d.

The Council of the College of Surgeons have definitively received the new charter from the queen government of the college from the Queen. Since the reception of the charter the council have been busily engaged in framing the necessary by-laws, which we believe are now completed, and will shortly be promulgated.

The French National Academy of Medicine is set down in the budget of 1852 for 44,700f.; the Institute for 886,300f.; the expenses of the five academies, the library, and the secretary's office (that establishment, amount to 38,000f. The academy of medicine is fixed at 15,00f. for salaries, making up 220,00f. in all. The College of France has 28 professors, of 5000f. salary each. The Museum of Natura. History has 15 professors of 5000f. each, a librarian of 3000f., a sub-librarian of 2400f., and 10 assistant naturalists of 3000f. The travelling expe ses of the naturalists is fixed at 25,000f. The sum allowed for repairs and keeping in order the Jardin des Plantes is 215,000f.

By accounts received from Rome, dated the 10th of April, we are informed that Mr. Manning, brother of Archdeacon Manning, has been just received into the Roman Catholic Church, together with his wife.

The Oxford Chronicle states that the Rev. Henry James Coleridge, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, has been appointed by the Roman Catholic Church. The rev. gentleman was formerly scholar of Trinity College. In Michaelmas Term, 1849, his name appears in the first class "in Literis Humanioribus." He is now residing at St. Clement's, Ottery St. Mary, Devon.

Mr. Shepherd, the chairman of the Hon. hast India Company, has presented an Addiscombe appointment, and since exchanged it for a direct one, to Alexander Bennet, the only son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Bennet, of the Bengal Horse Artillery, who fell on the 18th of January, 1849, during the retreat from Cabu.

In the latter part of last week a fancy sale of ladies' work on behalf of the Chinese Female School, Singapore, took place at the Girls' School-room, East-street, Manchester-square, under the auspices of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, the Hon. the Dowager Lady Grey, the Ladies Boyle, Lucas, Pepys, and Hankey, Miss Hankey, &c. The school-room was finely attended, and the articles so dis ea ted sold prices

On Friday morning week, the Triton, bound from Bremen to Carlisle, was aground off Portland, when a gale came on from the eastward, and in working up, ran into the Triton aindships, doing her considerable damage by the collision. The Dutchman was low in the water, and her hull receiving a fearful shaking, sank and went down in deep water. The crew, however, were all soon on board ; saved, except the master and his brother, who were fortunately picked up by a pilot boat.

It appears by an account of the receipts and expenditure of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ending the 31st December, 1851, just printed, that the total receipts from all sources during the year amounted to £61,272 2s. 7d., and the payments to £53,598 16s. 2d., leaving a balance of £7619 6s. 5d. The payments made during the year to the trustees of the Prince of Wales for his use amounted to £40,316 11s. 6d. The remaining £13,000 expended during the year was for salaries, surveys, repairs, and incidental charges. The amount abstracted out of those receipts for the purchase of donations and charities" amounted to £168 3s. 1d. The income-tax paid by his Royal Highness during the year was £1694 13s. 3d.

A boy ten years old recently drowned himself at Derby, from mortification at his mother having discovered that he stole 6d.

The proprietors of the Bank of Manchester (being one of the chartered joint-stock banks which stopped payment about ten years ago) have given notice that they will resume business. Many of these proprietors were interested in such banks ranging between £10,000 and £30,000.

By advices received from Erzeroum, it appears that cholera has again broken out with severity in Anatolia, where the pestilence commenced before its recent visit to this country and the rest of Europe. It has appeared at Soudk Bounk, near Selemandria, and it is also reported that typhus was raging at Ismeran, as well as Taoreez. The local government, in a state of alarm, are taking measures to cleanse the city, in the hope of preventing it from visiting Erzeroum. There can be no doubt once that it will not spread and take its former course.

The project for the establishment of a Crystal Palace in the Champs Elysées is going on with great activity. A company, formed of capitalists, has already subscribed the amount necessary for the undertaking, and it is accepted on assuming the guarantee by some wealthy bankers of a number of English and foreign artists. M. Salandrouze de Lamornaix, commissary of the Government at the London Exhibition, is at the head of the company.

The total number of acres of land under the cultivation of hops in England in the year 1851 was 43,245a. The duty collected on hops at the growth of 1851 amounted to £336,623 1s. 10d. The total number of pounds weight of hops charged with duty in the several collections in the United Kingdom in the year 1851 was 37,642,9 9 lbs. Under the Hop Duties Act, the importation of hops into the United Kingdom to foreign countries in the year 1851 was 302,263 lbs., and in 1850, 381,864 lb. The exportations from 1835 to 1851 inclusive were 904 6 0 lb. The importation of foreign hops has ceased, only 484 cwt. having been imported during the year 1851, while 953 cwt. were exported, the greater portion of which went to the United States.

About midnight on Monday a destructive fire, supposed to have been caused by an incendiary, destroyed three houses in the market place of Preston. The damage done to two only of the houses will be covered by insurance

A gravestone in Middlesborough churchyard, Scotland, was broken and defaced, last week, by order of "the pastor," the Rev. Mr. Fee, because the full amount agreed to be given to him for a lowing it to be placed there had not been paid.

Abraham Ovens, condemned at the late Monmouth assizes for murder, his child, was executed at Monmouth on Friday week.

The Customs authorities have directed that applications to them for permission to warehouse goods in terms of the clause provided for by the 26th section of the act 8 and 9 Vic., cap. 94, viz. "in warehouses of special security to mix any wines of the same sort, arising from the casks at import brands," may in future be dispensed with, provided a written undertaking given to the comptroller of warehousing accounts to that effect. Special application, however, is still to be required for any indulgence in respect of mixing or blending wines in bond, not prescribed by the above enactment.

A method of obtaining and applying motive power by counterbalance weights, so arranged as to counterbalance each other during the return strokes of the engine, and thereby to require little or no expenditure of power on returning to their original working positions, has been patented by Mr. Finnkener, of Citeaole

Information was received at the chief police-station, Scotland Yard, on Monday, that an accident had taken place on the London and North-Western Railway upon the 5th inst., on the Colonel's residence at Brighton, which led to the escape of Eighteen noses. Immediately on receipt of the intelligence, the principal officers of the detective police commenced operations for the capture of the delinquent.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The "First Spring," although recommended by the 2000 guineas and 1000 Guineas Stakes, looks weak on paper; in fact, strengthens the prevailing opinion that a radical change is necessary to enable Newmarket to stand its ground against the host of competing race meetings that have sprung into existence in the course of the last half-dozen years. The races commence on Monday, and will, as usual, be spun out until Friday; it might well be brought to a close on Thursday. There is only one other meeting in the cs.ndar, viz. the Hambledon Hunt, which is fixed for Thursday. The Steep e-chase calendar for the week is "blank," and coursing is at an end for the season.

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—The following quotations are in almost every case governed by the closing offers :—

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.
7 to 2 agst Maldstone	4 to 1 agst Homebrewed
CHESTER CUP No change.
BETS.
11 to 2 agst Hobbis Noble	14 to 1 agst Augur
15 to 1 — Cleverbone	16 to 1 — Little Harry
30 to 1 agst Filus

YORK SPRING MEETING.—TUESDAY.

The CRAVEN STAKES of 5 sovs each, and 30 added. Lord Zetland's Radulphus (J. Mat son), 1. Mr. J. Osborne's Lady Agnes (J. Osborne), 2.

The ZETLAND STAKES of 10 sovs each, and 50 added.—Mr. Wcflinden's The Queen (G. Oates), 1. Lord Zetland's Grapeshot (J. Marson), 2

The FLYING DUTCHMAN'S HANDICAP of £100 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.—Lord Zetland's Voltigeur (J. Marson), 1. Mr. J. Anson's Haricot (E. Harrison), 2.

The CHAMPION HANDICAP of 10 sovs each, and 50 added.—Lord Derby's Croupier. 1 Mr. H. Stebbing's Sir Charles Napier, 2

The SELLING STAKES of 5 sovs each, and 25 added. Mr. Dawson's Miss White, 1. Mr. Hessel.ine's The Setter, 2.

WEDNESDAY.

The DERBY TRIAL PLATE of 100 sovs. Sir C Monck's Gossamer (J. Marson), 1. Mr. J. Osborne's Lady Agnes (J. Osborne), 2.

The YORK SPRING CUP of £100. Mr. Morris's Vatican (F. Butler), 1. Mr. Pedley's Paquesta (Charlton), 2.

The TWO HANDICAP of 5 sovs each.—Mr. H. Brown's Rattlecap (T. Dodd), 1. Mr Bell's Ann Eliza (Skeene), 2.

The EGLINTON STAKES of 10 sovs each.—Lord Derby's Longbow (F. Butler), 1. Mr. John Osborne's Lady Agnes (J. Osborne), 2.

The CONSOLATION SCRAMBLE of 50 sovs. Mr. J. Osborne's The Puritan, 1. Mr. H. Walter's Agnes Wickfield, 1.

The YORK PLATE.—Mr. Meiklam's Cleveland. Mr. J. Osborne's Priam the Third, 2.

ROYAL LEAMINGTON RACES.—TUESDAY.

The RACING STAKES of 3 sovs each, and 15 added.—Mr. B. Land's Prospect (Lowe), 1. Mr. Oldham's Lunette (Custance), 2.

The LEAMINGTON HANDICAP of 5 sovs each, and 25 added.—Mr. G. Drowe's Cassellan (Knight), 1 Mr. B. Land's Certio (H May), 2.

The TEA HANDICAP of 5 sovs each, and 5 added

NEW BOOKS, &c.

In small 8vo, price 1s. in fancy wrapper,

THE WORLD in its WORKSHOPS: a Practical Examination of British and Foreign Processes of Manufacture, with a Critical Comparison of the Fabrics, Machinery, and Works of Art contained in the Crystal Palace. By JAMES WARD.
London: WM. S. ORR and CO, Amen-corner.

"THE FLOOD CAME AND TOOK THEM ALL AWAY."
Just published, 18mo, 3s. 6d., cloth interest.

A SERMON on the HOLMFIRTH FLOOD. By the Rev JOSHUA FAWCETT, A.M., Incumbent of Wilsey Chapel: to which is added a detailed account of the awful visitation, as Holmfirth, obtained from correct sources.
The profits arising from the sale of this book will be given to the Holmfirth Fund.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co; and Hall, Virtue, and Co.
Brighton: W J Taylor

MISS SELLON AND THE SISTERS OF MERCY.
Now publishing, price 6d.

A REJOINDER to the REPLY of the SUPERIOR of the SOCIETY, to a Pamphlet entitled "Miss Sellon and the Sisters of Mercy." By the Rev JAMES SPURRELL, M.A., Vicar of Great Shelford, Cambs.
London: HATCHARD, 187, Piccadilly. Plymouth: J B Rowe.

Price 1s each, neatly printed in foap 8vo, with numerous Illustrative Engravings,

RICHARDSON'S RURAL HANDBOOKS.
New Editions. Revised and Improved.
DOMESTIC FOWL | MINT, and IRRIGATION
THE PIG | By JAMES MALTON
THE HIVE and the HONEY BEE | HOUSE and MANURES
THE DOG | By JOHN DYNAH
THE HORSE | THE COW: Dairy Husbandry
THE PESTS of the FARM | and Cattle Breeding By M M
LAND DRAINAGE, EMBANK- | MILBURN
* * Will be known and described in the Newcastle Courier.
London: WM S ORR and Co, Amen-corner.

Just published, price 9s 6d, the 3d Edition of

THE DICTIONARY of PRACTICAL RECEIPTS, containing upwards of 5000 Receipts in Trade and Manufactures, Domestic Economy, Ornamental and Scientific Processes, Chemical and Medical Preparations. By CHARLES FRANCIS, F.L.S. J ALLEN, 30, Warwick-lane, and all Booksellers.

New and improved edition, with numerous woodcuts, price 4s,

MONS. LEPAGE'S LEHRBUCH der PARIS; being a selection of phrases a person would hear if living in France; with a vocabulary of the words and idioms.
By M. LEPAGE, author of "The Gift of Fluency in French Conversation." "The Last Step to French," &c
"M Lepage is the best colloquial instructor we know of His dialogues on the sound of French is rare and the parts of speech are of first-rate excellence."—Court Magazine.
KEYMGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange; and Messrs Longman.

PROFESSOR BALFOUR'S TEXT-BOOK OF BOTANY.
Price 12s 6d,

A MANUAL of BOTANY: being an Introduction to the Study of the Structure, Physiology, and Classification of Plants. By JOHN HUTTON BALFOUR, M.D., F.L.S., F.R.S.E., Professor of Medicine and Botany in the University of Edinburgh Second edition, 678 pages, with 830 wood-engravings
"The most masterly digest of the subject which has yet appeared."—Witness.
"Beyond all comparison the best introduction to the most delightful of all sciences."—North British Mail "Remarkable for comprehensiveness and cheapness."—Scottish Guardian. "Very complete"—Atlas. "A most valuable and comprehensive Information."—Morning News. "Admirably arranged."—Bentley's Magazine. "The model manual of botany."—Tait's Magazine
GRIFFIN and Co, London and Glasgow.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA METROPOLITANA.
Volume 21, price 12s 6d

A MANUAL of METALLURGY; or, Practical Treatise on the Chemistry of the Metals. By JOHN ARTHUR PHILLIPS—Mineralogy, mining, mechanical preparations of ores, smelting of fluxing, refining of iron, the smelting of iron, copper tin, lead, and other common metals; the processes for erasing, washing, and the amalgamating of gold and silver ores, and the important subject of assaying, are treated of fully and practically. The Work is illustrated by 19 Engravings, exhibiting the most approved furnaces and machinery.
GRIFFIN and Co, London and Glasgow.

EXHIBITION, 1851. JURY REPORTS.

THE REPORTS of the JURORS on the Subjects in the 30 Classes into which the Exhibition was divided will be issued in two editions, one in large type, forming 2 vols, super-royal 8vo, of about 1000 pages each, price Two Guineas, and the other in small type, double columns, forming one vol, super-royal 8vo, of about 1000 pages, price One Guinea. Both editions will be uniform in size with the "Official Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogue." As only a limited number of each edition will be printed (or the type cast, and the work will not be reprinted), subscribers are requested to send in their names, with a remittance, at once, on account of the 1 vol Edition, and the 2 vol account of the 2 vol Edition. The balance to be paid on publication.
SPICER BROTHERS, Wholesale Stationers, Great New-street, Fetter-lane.
About May. WM. CLOWES and SONS, Printers.
Official Catalogue Office, Tudor-street, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—On the 1st of May will be published Part I. of his Royal Highness Prince Albert's picture of the Great Exhibition. By MESSRS. MAUL, HAGHE, and D. ROBERTS, R.A.; which will contain, TUNIS, No 1, the SOLLYREEN, the MEDIÆVAL COURT. Each Part will appear in rapid succession.
The publishers beg to announce, that in consequence of their late arrangements with the artists, by which the lithographs are to be executed in the same size as the original drawings, they have not finished in price to non-subscribers on the completion of the first volume to 8s per part.
Persons wishing to secure early impressions of this magnificent work are requested to send their names at once to any bookseller or to the publishers—Messrs. ROBERSON, 114, New Bond-street.

WHEELER'S ILLUSTRATED INDESTRUCTIBLE BOOKS for CHILDREN. Printed on a material expressly manufactured.
The Story of the GOOD SHEPHERD and the GOLD-HUNTER.
The Story of LITTLE LOUISA the FOUNDLING.
The Story of DISOBEDIENCE and its PUNISHMENT.
The Story of DAME FORTUNE and her MAGIC WHEEL.
The Story of the INDIANS and the BOX of BEADS.
The story of POPKINS and the PERFORMING PIG. Also,
WHEELER'S AMUSING NARRATIVE for BOYS and GIRLS. Demy 16mo. Illustrated with numerous Wood Engravings and beautiful Frontispiece. Price 1s 6d each.
London: J E PARKER (late Wheeler and Co), 44, Paternoster-row.

8vo. cloth, price 4s; or with Hartley's Frofacn, 8s,

SWEDENBORG on HEAVEN and HELL; being a Selection of Things heard and Seen.
SWEDENBORG'S APOCALYPSE REVEALED. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, price 24s.
SWEDENBORG on the DIVINE PROVIDENCE. 8vo., cloth, price 6s.
Sold for the Society for Printing and Publishing Swedenborg's Works (established 1810), and sent carriage free, by W. NEWBERY, 6, King-street, Holborn.

Fourth Edition, 2s 6d, with numerous cases,

DR. MADDOCK on CONSUMPTION, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic Cough, and Loss of Voice. "We recommend the work with the greatest confidence to our readers. To many families it will prove an inappreciable boon."—Medical Gazette.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.

FALLACIES of the FACULTY, price 2s 6d. "This is a bold book, a very bold book, and we recommend persons who have been dosing themselves with drugs to kick out the apothecary and buy it."—Spectator. "Almost as entertaining as a novel."—Westminster Review. By the same Author, "The Forbidden Book," 8vo, price 1s 6d cloth; "The Sanitary Reformer," on the ordinary revelations of modern practice, with a new mode of treating without bloodletting or mercury. Fourth Edition, Remodelled, and other valuable Illustrations of the Spine, &c. &c.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Stationers-court; J OLLIVER, 59, Pall-Mall.

AN ESSAY on VITALISM. Post free, 18. Vital Heat: the many treats of the principles upon which the founders of the Vitalic treatment cure disease and sustain health. Epilepsy: its cure in a short time. Nervousness, gout, piles, scrofula, and a large class of nervous diseases instantly cured by mild treatment.—Address, Dr. LEIGH, Medical Electrician, 7, Leicester-square, Hospital Consultation Rooms and Museum, 67, Great Russell-street, opposite the British Museum. A Lecture on Wednesday; Patients received.

ELECTRO-BIOLOGY.—Mr. G. W. STONE begs to announce that his WORK is NOW READY, containing the philosophy of the above science, together with complete instructions how to experimen. 12mo. price 3s 6d.
Home Now to Mesmerise. Price 1s. Post-free. Dublin James M'Glashan 50, D'yer Pl. Glasgow Strange and all Booksellers

In 8vo. thick vol. the Tenth Edition, enlarged, price 16s.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE: a Popular Treatise on the Prevention and Treatment of Diseases, with Plain Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases, with a Collection of approved Prescriptions, Directions for Diet and Regimen, the means of affording Assistance in Accidents and other cases of emergency, Management of Children, Doses of Medicines, Hints for the Sick Nurse, Management of Infectious Diseases, Observations on Climate, and Tables of Analysis of the Mineral Waters of France and Germany, &c. &c. By THOMAS J. GRAHAM, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England.

"One object is prominently evident—the author's sincere desire to benefit his suffering fellow-creatures. To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is only to manifest a proper regard for their welfare."—Literary Journal, July, 1843.

"It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London Weekly Review.

"Undoubtedly the best medical work for private families in the English language. It is invaluable."—Literary Times, April 1852.
DISPENSARY, 79, Charlotte-street, Bloomsbury, and 187, Piccadilly, and DISPENSARY and Co, Paternoster-row; Hamilton, 187, Piccadilly, and Tegg and Co, 85, Queen-street, Cheapside. Sold by all Booksellers.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

COLBURN and Co.'s NEW PUBLICATIONS.
I.
THE LIFE of MARY DE MEDICIS, Queen of France, Consort of Henry IV, and Regent of the Kingdom under Louis XIII. By Miss PARDOE, author of "Louis XIV," &c. 3 vols 8vo, with Portraits, &c (Just ready.)
II
THE LITERATURE and ROMANCE of NORTHERN EUROPE: with copious Specimens. By WILLIAM and MARY HOWITT 2 vols. 21s. "A work replete with interest to the scholar, the philosopher, the antiquarian, and the general reader."—Post.
III.
FIVE YEARS in the WEST INDIES. By CHARLES W DAY, Esq. 2 vols, with Illustrations, price 21s.
IV.
CANADA as it WAS, IS, and MAY BE; with an Account of Recent Transactions. By Sir JAMES E ALEXANDER. 2 vols, with Maps, &c, 21s.
"A very valuable and interesting work, forming a complete history of this important colony."—John Bull.
V.
THE NEW NOVELS
OF
ADAM GRAEME, of MOSSGRAY. By the Author of "Margaret Maitland," "Merkland," and "Caleb Field." 3 vols.
II
AURELIA. A Novel. 3 vols.
III.
THE PERILS of FASHION. 3 vols.
"A highly entertaining and popular novel. The world of fashion is here painted by an artist who has studied it closely, and traces its lineaments with the utmost delicacy and truth."—Morning Post.
IV.
TAYLOR'S BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL.
Fourth Edition. Revised, Enlarged, and Illustrated with 100 Engravings, price 6s.
THE NEW NOVELS

THE BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL; or, Practical Hints on the Management and Complete Preservation of the Honey Bee. By HENRY TAYLOR.
London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster-row; of whom may be had, by the same Author, Rural History, Economy, Farming, and Rural Affairs, published by them, may be had gratis.

Just published, post 8vo, price 7s 6d,

THE LAWS of HEALTH, in relation to Mind and Body. By LIONEL J BEALE, Surgeon. "We gladly welcome Mr Beale's book. The observations are those of an experienced and intelligent practitioner, and do equal credit to his head and heart."—Lancet. "Mr Beale reviews comments and physical conditions in health and in disease, from the cradle to the grave, and points out the importance of a right training of mind and body in our earliest years. All mothers will be benefited by such as delighted with this part of his work."
London: J CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

TUITION.—An Oxford Undergraduate, reading for his last examination, wishes to devote Two or Three Hours Daily to the INSTRUCTION of PUPILS. Terms, 2 guineas per week. Address, Rev H. Post, 6, Cumnor-terrace, Cumnor.

ETIQUETTE of the BALL-ROOM, and Guide to the New and Fashionable Dances; containing a simple and correct description of the Steps and Figures of Quadrilles, Valses, Polkas, Galops, Schottische, the Gorlitza, Mazourkas, Cossack Dances &c. With Hints and Instructions respecting the Duties and Deportment of Ladies and Gentlemen in public and private Soirées Dansantes. By Mrs NICHOLAS HENDERSON, Teacher of Dancing, 19, Newman street, Oxford-street. New Edition. Price 1s; post-free, 1s 4d. * * This is the best Guide published.
London. Sold by GEORGE BIGGS, 421, Strand; and all Booksellers.

PRIVATE TUITION.—A CLERGYMAN in the West of England having engaged a first-rate CLASSICAL TUTOR for his two Sons, the elder of whom is preparing for Oxford, and the younger for a public school, would be glad to receive into his family a PUPIL, to read with either the one or the other. The most unexceptionable references will be given Terms: above 16, 120 guineas per annum: under 16, 100 guineas. Address Rev H. N. Post office, Clifton.

MR. B. H. SMART begs to acquaint his friends that he has REMOVED from Connaught-terrace, Edgware-road, to No 27, WYNDHAM-STREET, Bryanston-square, where his "Terms for Instruction in Elocution, for Courses of Reading Literature in Schools and Families, Readings, Lectures, &c, may is hours be had.

CIRCULATING PORTFOLIO of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS by the BEST MASTERS.—Messrs. DICKINSON have just published a Prospectus of the plan on which they have on HIRE Drawings by all the finest Masters of the day, viz. Harding, Cox, Fripp, Duncan, Topham, Tayler, Copley Fielding, Hunt, Fripp, &c. which can be sent to Subscribers to all parts of the country.—DICKINSON and Co, 114, New Bond-street.

SMART'S WRITING INSTITUTION, 5, Piccadilly, between the Haymarket and Regent-street.—Open from Ten till Nine daily. Persons of all ages received (privately) and taught at any time most convenient to their own convenience, one hour each. No classes, no extras. Improvement guaranteed in eight or twelve easy lessons. Separate rooms for ladies. Terms, one guinea (if preferred) Mrs. Smart will attend.—For terms, &c., apply to Mr. Smart, as above.

ARMS, CRESTS, CORONETS, or INITIALS, for MARKING on NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPES, in gold, silver, and colours, in the most elegant style, at half the usual charge "ILLUMINATED" DIES for STAMPING, 10s 6d. Steel Plate, 100 creams-laid note-paper, 4s per ream; black-bordered ditto, 5s per ream; thick-bordered ditto, 6s per ream; 6s per ream: finest sealing-wax, 4s per lb; card-plate printed in a copperplate hand, 2s for 50 copies; if printed for 4s 6d. "Guide to Heraldry," 2s. Piccadilly, London.

THE ROYAL TURKISH TOWELS, under the Patronage and Patronage of her Majesty the Queen, which received a Prize Medal at the Great Exhibition.—The Brown Linen combines the advantages of a Bath brush with the qualities of a towel: the Cotton is the softest towel ever made, and absorbs moisture without the necessity of using friction. To be had of all respectable Linendrapers.

IRISH MANUFACTURE.—TODD, BURNS, and CO, General Warehousemen, DUBLIN, are prepared to supply Families and Shipping with every article of the growth and Manufacturers' prizes. Patterns sent per post on receipt of a letter stating two postage stamps. All parcels to be paid for when delivered by T. B. and Co's agents; and all orders from the following Agents punctually attended to.—Messrs. Cash, Birmingham, Manchester, Bristol, Liverpool, Hereford.—Dublin, Jan 30, '52

THOMAS BOULTON'S NEEDLES.—These Needles have been celebrated for the last forty years, and are unsurpassed in excellence. They are manufactured of the best spring steel, have highly-finished taper points, and perfectly burnished eyes. Sold in packets, each containing a very variety of sizes and cases adapted for presents, by Owen, 98, Oxford-street; Millikin, 16, Strand; Lonsdale, 4, Regent-street, City; and by many others.
"Thomas Boulton, manufacturer, London," on each paper

CARPETS.—BRIGHTS SPLENDID VELVET TAPESTRIES.—These goods have the appearance, power, and durability of carpets cheaper than hand-woven goods, the patterns more elaborate, and the quality equal to any. Brussels Carpets of the same quality, 2s 6d per yard; reduced, 2s. Tweed and Worsted Damask, warranted, 154 inches wide, from 6s 6d per yard. Chenny Carpets, Floor Cloth, &c.—HICK, REEVE, and HOLMING, 4, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, opposite Howell and James's

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth-brush searches thoroughly into the divisions, and cleanses the teeth in a most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose; lit. Peculiarly powerful Nail-brushes, with the double fibre; Flesh-brushes, Hair-brushes, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush that cleans harmlessly in nasc-like the hair. Immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponges, at METCALFE, RINGLEY, and SON'S only Establishment, 1, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.—Metcalfe's Alkaline Tooth-Powder, 2s per box.

HEAL and SON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of BEDSTEADS, sent free by post, contains designs and prices of Cots, Cots and Cradles, Children's Bedsteads in Iron, Brass, Japanned Wood, Polished Birch, Mahogany, Rosewood, and Walnut Woods; also, their Priced List of Bedding; and their new Warerooms enables them to keep one of each design fixed for inspection. They have also, in addition to their large stock, a Show-room for the best designs of Parisian Bedsteads, both in Wood and Iron, which they have just imported.
HEAL and SON, Bedstead and Bedding Manufacturers, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

THE RAINBOW.—The first Grand Display of SPECTACLES in all the Colours of the Rainbow, at No 6, Edgware-road.—Since the cooling of the World's Wonder, Beech and Berlin Spectacles, in Black Frames, Black Damask and Waxed Cord, have been actively engaged in designing and manufacturing the most beautiful novelties by the loans of Iglass, Gems, Precious Stones, and Metals, formerly for the first Exhibition of Spring Silks for 1852, in all the lovely tints and colours of the rainbow. Ruby Spectacles, Emerald Spectacles, Sky Blue Spectacles, Rose Pearl Spectacles, very chaste ditto, 3 and 3½ guineas, worth 5½; rich Gimel Silks (wide width), 3s 9d per yard, usual price 5s 6d.; very rich wide French Poult de Soies, in every new mixture of colourings, 4s 6d per yard, regular price, 5s 11d; beautiful Striped, Check-d, and Gland Silks in every diversity of style, at 1s 6½d., 1s 9½d, and 1s 11½d per yard (all-length warranted). Several cases of Black Satins, Black Damask and Waxed Cord, Plain Black Satins, &c. also a fine Royal Black Satin-cut &c., cheaper than ever offered before, with about 600 fancy Silk Dresses (various), at 5s 6d the full dress.
For the convenience of Ladies in the Country, Patterns sent to all parts (postage free).
OBSERVE Messrs BEECH and BERRALL'S Silk, Shawl, and Fancy Warehouse are Nos 63 and 64, Edgware-road, London.

NEW MUSIC, &c.

THE PEASANT POLKA, as performed by Kalenty's Hungarian Musical Company, nightly encored, decorated with the most enchanting Polka ever composed, is arranged for full-length portraits of the performers; price 2s 6d: ditto for septet, 2s. DITTO 3l. Cranbourne-street, Leicester-square, Soho, Publisher of the Music as played by the Hungarian Company.

DANSE.—COULON'S QUADRILLE.—The Description of this new Quadrille has well received amongst the Nobility to be found in the Second Edition of COULON'S HANDBOOK, page 67—Published by JULLIEN and Co, 214, Regent-street. Free by Stamping
M Coulon's Juvenile ACADEMY and Evening Class for the practice of this new Quadrille, and of all other dances, NOW OPEN for the season. Private lessons given, and Schools attended in and out of town. Apply as 48, Great Marlborough-street.

NEW MUSIC.—MENDELSSOHN.—Two Motets, arranged for Organ or Pianoforte, 1s 6d each; Mendelssohn.—Ave Maria Motett, arranged for two Performers, 4s 6d Moliqne-Song. "My Favourite," 2s. Kritger—Chants d'Occasion, Fantasia for Pianoforte, 3s. Krest—Six Morceaux de Salon, Violin and Pianoforte, two Books, 3s each. Pianoforte Romances, Violin and Pianoforte, 3s. Fanchs—Le Carneval de Naples, Caprincio for Violin and Pianoforte, 3s. Fanchs—Le Carneval de Naples, Caprincio for Violin and Pianoforte, 4s; Fanchs—Valse Brillante, for Violin and Pianoforte, 3s Mainzer's Music Book for the Young, 1s. Kalkbrner s FiftyMs solos, 1s Introduction of Two, Three, and Four part Songs and Choruses for the use of Classes Numbers 1 to 6 published, 6d each.
ROBERT COCKS and Co, Newgate-street

MR CRIVELLI begs to acquaint his Friends and the Public that a Third Edition of THE ART of SINGING, enlarged and improved, in the form of a Grammatical System of Rules for the Cultivation of the Voice, may be had at his residence, 71, Upper Norton-st.; and at all the principal Music-sellers

NEW SONGS.—THE YOUNG LADY'S DREAM. THE MERRY LAUGHING GIRL. Price 2s each, sent postage free.—"Miss Poole has just introduced these two pleasing and effective songs. The 'Young Lady's Dream' is descriptive of the effect of novel-reading on a romantic imagination, is a most happy and original composition. The other song must have already made every parlour ring with the 'laughing Girl' is by the composer of 'A Young Lady's Dream,' and is equally successful in the new style it presents to us Nor! which Miss Poole has selected to charm wherever it is known."—Musical Review.—DUFF and BODDEN, 65, Oxford-street.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLES of MUSIC Taught in an Easy and Amusing Manner by means of a Dissected PIANOFORTE KEY-BOARD. By CATHERINE ANDREWS, "The First Principles of Music." 4to. Price 12s 6d to 30l. The design of the Dissected Pianoforte Key-Board is to map out the harmonic and melodic practice of reading music upon the keys of a pianoforte instructive and amusing. Young beginners often find it very perplexing to connect the black keys of a pianoforte one to a be.ongs and also the difference between a tone and semitone. These difficulties are entirely removed by the use of the Dissected Key-Board, so that a child of four years of age may easily, and almost imperceptibly, comprehend the position of the keys, and learn to play a tune and its semitones. It will be found to be indispensable in the education of every family school, as it will save the trouble and anxiety every family and school, as it will save the trouble and anxiety every family and school, as it will save the trouble and anxiety every family or school, whilst the piano is engaged by some other pupil. A full description in the manner of using it is given in the little work which accompanies it We quote the following from a letter addressed to Miss Lloyd, from William Gardiner, Esq, Author of "Music and Friends," &c :—"Your musica. toy is not so call-it—the most useful toy I ever saw, and is connected with science."
London: sold by JOHN F SHAW, 37, Southampton-row, Russell-square, and Paternoster-row; and all Booksellers, Musicsellers, and at Toy-shops.

PIANOFORTE by ERARD.—For SALE, a Grand Pianoforte by Erard, cost 110 guineas, with 7 octaves, patent check action, metallic plate, and all the latest improvements, in fine condition, and a great bargain. Also a fine cottage piano, cost 70 guineas, price 35 guineas. To be seen at 64, New Bond-street, London.

PIANOFORTES.—CRAMER, BEALE, and CO. have a large assortment of PIANOFORTES of every description, New and Secondhand, by Broadwood, Erard, Collard, and other eminent makers, for HALE or HIRE.—201, Regent-street, and 67, Conduit-street.

PEACHEY'S PIANOFORTES for HIRE, of first-class manufacture, every description and price (terms moderate), Pianofortes purchased or exchanged. Lists (gratis and free).—G PEACHEY (Maker to the Queen), City of London Pianoforte Warehouse, 73, Bishopsgate-street Within, opposite the Marine Society.

TOLKIEN'S 25-GUINEA ROYAL MINUTO PIANOFORTES, nearly 7 octaves, O G full, metallic plate, with all late improvements, in elegant rosewood case, with fine-toned and touch.—TOLKIEN, manufacturer, 37, 38, and 39, King William-street, London-bridge.

THE PIANOFORTE BAZAAR, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square, London.—This extensive establishment is now open for the sale of New and Second-hand PIANOFORTES, SAFE, CHAMBER, and CABINET ORGANS, of every description, Pianofortes and all kinds of Musical Instruments. The PIANOFORTE GALLERIA contains a large assortment of Pianofortes, and affords an excellent opportunity for their immediate sale. Goods entrances in Gloucester-mews East, by King-street or Dorset-street, Portman-square.

PIANOFORTES at Manufacturing Prices.—Messrs HOLDERNESSE and CO, 444, New Oxford-street, London, beg to inform their friends and the public that they have reduced the price of their Piccolo Pianofortes, in rosewood, mahogany, or walnut cases, to 18 guineas, and their 6½ octave Pianofortes are 6½ octaves (C to A) in compass, combine all the latest improvements, are pronounced by amateurs and professors to be unrivalled for their tone and touch, fitted with the same care and attention that those of more costly character. Manufactory in the Pimlico road, has hitherto distinguished their manufacture. A variety of secondhand Pianofortes, by the most approved Makers, from 15 guineas and Broadwood, Collard, Erard, and other makers, from 25 guineas. Every description of musical instrument tuned, repaired, and taken in exchange.

INDIA and BRITISH SHAWLS CLEANED the brilliancy of the colours preserved. Re-Pointed and Drawingroom Suites Cleaned, Dyed, and Furnished. Black Dyed Mourning Orders executed with the utmost dispatch. Carpets and Curtains, Dyed, Cleaned, and Repaired, by MANUEL BROTHERS and Co., Dyers, 8, Ivy-lane, Newgate-street, London.

GREAT SALE of EMBROIDERY $80,000 yards Cambric Jaconet and Book Insertions.
10,000 pieces Cambric Jaconet and Book Muslin Flounces, $6,000 yards Cambric Jaconet and Book rich wide Flouncings, from 9d per yard.
Rich Embroidered Handkerchiefs, Habitshirts, Gloves, &c. (All first-class work), at one-third the usual price.
16,000 yards of Valenciennes Lace and Edging, from 2½d per yard. (Patterns sent by post, free.)
Address, W W SWEATS, 264, Regent-street.

SECOND DELIVERY OF SPRING AND SUMMER SHAWLS from 8s 6d to 25s the full Dress.
The Rich and Elegant Designs of BALZARINE, Organdie, and French MUSLINS are now offering at 2s 11½d the full dress of eight yards; or any length cut at 4½d the yard. The Patterns are beautifully good, fast colours, and cannot be had in the yard.—HOOPER, muslin printer, 53, Oxford street. Merchants and large buyers will find this a desirable opportunity. Patterns sent free.

FRENCH ORGANDIE MUSLINS.—The French Muslin COMPANY have taken the centre by assault Premises, 247, Regent-street, corner of Argyll-place. The NEW DESIGNS and have now on Show some thousands, many of the designs of which are surpassingly beautiful, and all of the highest excellence in every respect. They are now offering them at the literally absurd price of 2s 11½d the full dress of eight yards, and cut any length at the same price. Sample of 36 posses stamps.
Address—FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 16, Oxford-street, 16 doors from Tottenham-court-road

FRENCH BONNETS.—Parisian Millinery Depôt.—To Cash Purchasers wishing to avoid the Charges of Private Millinery—Lewis and Allenby have now on Show some thousands of the designs of which are surpassingly beautiful, and all of the highest excellence in every respect. They are now offering them at the literally absurd price of 2s 11½d the full dress of eight yards; or any length cut at the same price. Sample of 36 posses stamps.
Address—FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 16, Oxford-street, 16 doors from Tottenham-court-road

BONNETS.—Parisian Millinery Depôt. To Cash Purchasers wishing to avoid the Charges of Private Millinery—Lewis and Allenby have now on Show some thousands of the designs of which are surpassingly beautiful, all of the highest excellence in every respect. They are now offering them at the literally absurd price of 2s 11½d the full dress of eight yards; or any length cut at the same price. Sample of 36 posses stamps.
Address—FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 16, Oxford-street, 16 doors from Tottenham-court-road

BONNETS.—Parisian Millinery Depôt.—To Cash Purchasers wishing to avoid the Charges of Private Millinery—Lewis and Allenby have now on Show some thousands of the designs of which are surpassingly beautiful, all of the highest excellence in every respect. They are now offering them at the literally absurd price of 2s 11½d the full dress of eight yards; or any length cut at the same price. Sample of 36 posses stamps.
Address—FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 16, Oxford-street, 16 doors from Tottenham-court-road

TO MODELLERS and DESIGNERS.—WANTED, by a large Establishment in the Silver and Plated Trade, a first-rate DESIGNER and MODELLER, who has had experience in the Manufacture.
Address J H W, 1, Sherrard-street, Golden-square.

A CHEMIST and DRUGGIST in the East of London having accepted a Public Appointment, is desirous of effecting an immediate TRANSFER of a BUSINESS he has conducted for the last eighteen years. Premises convenient, stock amists and fix. terms, moderate rent, 36 years lease which can be had. A first part of which may remain upon good security. No Agent need apply. Address MP S, Ralp Brothers and Co, 125, Lower Thamesstreet.

REEVES' WATER-COLOURS. REEVES' CUMBERLAND LEAD DRAWING PENCILS.
113, Cheapside, London.

COCKERELL & CO.'S BEST COALS ONLY. Purfleet Wharf, Earl-street, Blackfriars; Eaton Wharf, Lower Belgrave-place, Pimlico; and No. 1, Coal Exchange. Cash price, 22s per ton.

RIMMEL'S TOILET VINEGAR is far superior to Eau de Cologne, as a trash and beautiful tonic for the toilet or bath, a reviving perfume, and a powerful disinfectant for apartments and sick rooms. Price 2s 6d and 5s. Sold by J. RIMMEL, 39, Gerrard-street, Soho, and by all Perfumers and Chemists.

HAIR MEMENTOS.—ARTIST in HAIR.—DEWDNEY sends to Ladies resident in any part of the Kingdom a BOOK of SPECIMENS for two postage stamps. He also bracelets, rings, and elegantly mounts in fine gold, Hair Bracelets, Brooches, Rings, Chains, &c, at charges the most moderate.—DEWDNEY, 192, Tottenham-court-road.

INFANTS' NEW FEEDING BOTTLES.—From the Lancet:—"We have seldom seen anything so beautiful as the Nursing Bottles introduced by Mr Ream, of Oxford-street. They are adapted to all kinds of food; and have at the same time a simple, which no infant will refuse: unequalled for cleanliness and durability." Sent free by post, 2s extra. Mr. REAM, 196, Oxford-street. Each is stamped with my name and address

STAYS SUPERSEDED.—GREAT EXHIBITION ELASTIC BODICE.—Stiff Stays destroy natural Beauty, and cause Spinal and Pulmonary Disease. MARTIN'S ELASTIC BODICE is without Whalebone or Lacing, at the same time affording sufficient support for the most delicate lady or child recommended by the faculty. Can be sent by Post. H and S H MARTIN, Inventors and Sole Manufacturers, 56, New Oxford-street, London. A Pamphlet, on receipt of a stamp.

AT the IRISH LINEN COMPANY'S FAMILY LINEN WAREHOUSE, 43, Hart-street, Bloomsbury-square, Always on Sale, a Stock of HOUSEHOLD LINENS, in every article of domestic use; Price and Quality not equalled in London. Families furnished with Cambric Shirts made to Order, from 40s per half-dozen upwards.—Established 1800

HOPPER'S BLACK CURRANT COUGH ELIXIR, a concentrated preparation of the fruit, and the most healing, soothing, and expectorating demulcent in the Materia Medica; is the only medicine recommended by physicians as a safe and effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and Consumption.—Sold in bottles, at 1s 1½d and 2s 9d each by all Patent Medicine Dealers; Blackman-street, Borough; Jackson Chesapside; Sanger, Oxford-street

IMPORTANT to FAMILIES.—For making a good strong JELLY or BLANCMANGE, use GLASSE and HOPE'S WHITE GELATINE, perfectly tasteless, having no fishy smell, at one-half the price. To be had, wholesale, at the Works, Brandon-street, Walworth; of the following Agents in London; and at all respectable Grocers and Chemists in the country:—PETTY and WOOD, Ship, Whitechapel; Ely, City; Hayward, Cheapside; Handford and Davies, High Holborn; Hank, grocer, 193, Tottenham court-road; Nash, 211, Borough, Ware, confectioner, Great Coram-street, Russell-square.

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—REDUCTION in the PRICE of TEA.—The scarcity and price of good congou tea having so much increased of late, and is this sum, added to the duty, via 2s 2½d per lb, makes the total cost 3s 10½d to the public. We are now enabled to offer at 3s per lb. as much be evident, however, that whilst a duty, the same on all kinds, forms so large a portion of the cost of the article, a small increase in price must produce proportionately better quality.—DAKIN and DAKIN, tea merchants, 79, Strand, corner of Northumberland-street.
COMPANY. Tea Merchants, who sell teas at merchants' prices, at Number One, Saint Paul's Churchyard. March 5, 1852.

COLT'S REVOLVERS.—Patent Repeating Fire-arms.—Specimens of COLT'S FIRE-ARMS, which attracted universal attention at the Great Exhibition, and which are unequalled upon the Continent, may be seen, and instructions be obtained for the Drill Establishment, where all persons desirous of becoming proficients in the use of Colt's Revolving Fire-arms can be initiated, at Colt's Offices, 1, Spring-gardens, Cockspur-street, London. Address of the manufactory, New York. Colt's Improved Pocket Revolvers, 5 and 6 shots.

WATCHES and CHAINS.—GEORGE CORDING offers a large assortment of first quality at lowest prices. Silver Watches, 2l 2s; Gentlemen's, 3l 3s; Ladies', 2l 12s 6d; Gold Watches, 4l 4s; and six guineas; Ladies' elegant Gold Swiss Watches at 4l 14s, 5l 5s, and the very best 6l 6s. English Lever, 5l 5s; Geneva, 3l 3s; Gold Chains, 3l 3s; and twelve guineas, and the highest excellence, sixteen and eighteen guineas. Chains in great variety, 10s to 30l.—23L Strand, four doors west of Temple-bar.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, and £10 10s GOLD LEVERS, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are warranted and skilfully adapted for all climates. The great reduction of price sets aside all rivalry, either of the town manufacturers or any other house that pretends to compete with it. Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s, one will be sent free to any part of the kingdom. Established 1845.

GOLD CHAINS by Troy Weight and Workmanship.—WATHERSTON and BROGDEN, Manufacturing Goldsmiths, established A. D. 1792, beg leave to call the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public generally to the Stock they have just manufactured, and now offer for Sale at their MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. The system of weighing chains against sovereigns being one of the greatest frauds ever practised on the public, Watherston and Brogden sell their gold at its bullion value; their sterling made on the very lowest possible terms, which is charged with reference to the intricacy or simplicity of the pattern. A general assortment of Gold Chains always on the premises.—Manufactory, 24, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London.

DEANE'S TABLE CUTLERY has, for more than 150 years, received extensive and increasing public patronage. The Stock comprises every variety of Table Forks, and Knife Handles, Carved, Dessert, and Fish Knives, Steels, and Sharpening Instruments, Cases, and Canteens, Tea Trays, Urns, and Kettles, Fenders, Stoves, Fire-irons, Culinary Utensils, Baths, Toilet Ware, Turnery, Iron and Wire Bedsteads, Bedding, Mattresses, Blankets, Quilts, Counterpanes, Sheets, Table Linen, Carpets, Rugs, Oilcloths, Clocks, Lamps, Gasaliers, Tea and Coffee Pots, Papier Maché Tea Trays, Tea Caddies, Work Boxes, Dressing Cases, Writing Desks, &c. &c. Lists, with Engravings, sent free by post. DEANE, DRAY, and CO, Wholesale and Retail Cutlery and Furnishing Ironmongery Warehouse, London-bridge.

MECHI'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE may be had GRATIS, or will be sent post free, on application at 4, Leadenhall-street, and 112, Regent-street, Cornhill. Razors, Scissors, Strops, and Magic Paste are renowned throughout the civilised world; he exhibits also the most splendid stock of Paper Mâché articles, Dressing-cases, Work-boxes, Tea-trays, Writing desks, &c. in London. Everything for the Toilet and Work-table. Table Cutlery of first-rate quality. Ivory Chessmen, Chess-boards, &c. Mechi's charming amusement on a wet day

RODGERS'S IMPROVED SHIRTS, 26s. RODGERS'S Real Hand-Down, are now in a

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 556.—VOL. XX.] SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1852. [THREE NUMBERS, ONE SHILLING.

THE EXCISE DUTY ON PAPER, AND THE TAXES ON KNOWLEDGE.

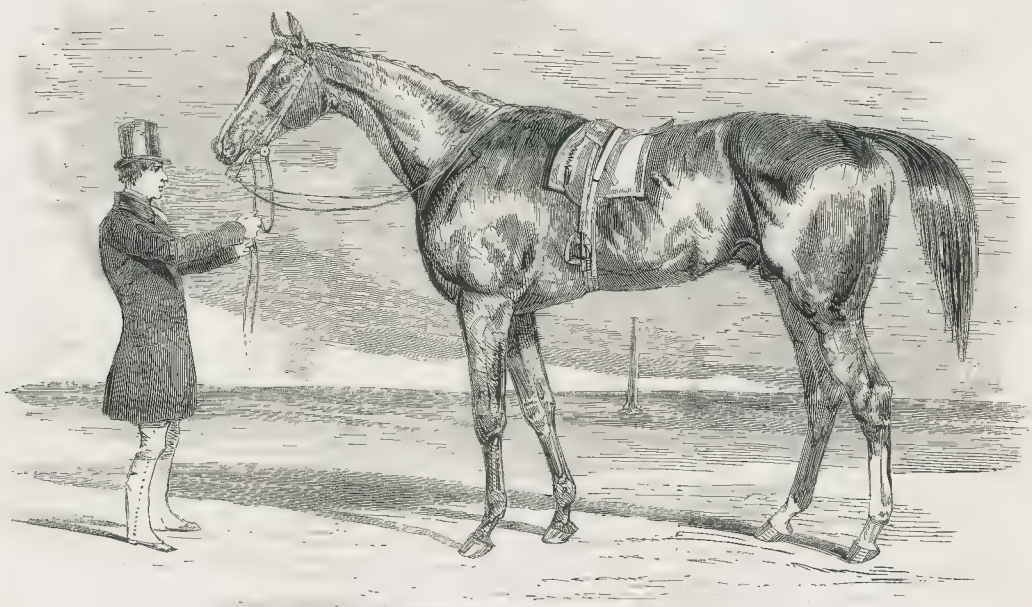
ONE of the most interesting, and, we would fain hope, one of the most important debates of this broken and uncertain session of an expiring Parliament, took place on Mr. Milner Gibson's motion for the repeal of the three duties which are known as the "Taxes on Knowledge." Mr. Gibson's treatment of his subject was forcible and comprehensive; and, had he pressed his motion to a division, it is likely, from the state of the House, that the principle would have been affirmed in one or two, if not in the three, instances. Doubtless he acted on good advice and with due consideration in consenting to an adjournment of the debate. Mr. Disraeli, who has raised the expectation of the country for his forthcoming Budget, who has avowed that he has no fear of an untaxed press, who is himself one of the most distinguished literary men of his age and country, who stands somewhat in need of a little increase of popularity, and who, it is to be remembered, voted on one occasion against Excise duties upon paper, will perhaps render it unnecessary for Mr. Gibson to bring forward his motion again in its present shape. In a word, it appears to be the general impression that the Excise duties upon paper are doomed, and that the duty upon advertisements will fall with them. Either of these boons would entitle Mr. Disraeli to public gratitude—to the esteem of the class of which he is an ornament, and to the especial thanks of all who trade or read.

Upon the question of the Stamp Duty upon newspapers, which is more thoroughly and intensely a tax upon knowledge than either of the other two included in the terms of Mr. Gibson's motion, public opinion, in and out of Parliament, can scarcely be said to be so ripe or so unanimous. Mr. Disraeli does literature the justice to admit that he is not afraid of it; and the friends of a free press have his positive avowal, that, in dealing with the subject of the "Taxes on Knowledge," as he will shortly be called upon to do, he will consider them under the one aspect of the revenue. This of itself is a triumph. Perhaps, even on this point we may be permitted to hope that the first literary man who ever in this country held the high office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, may also be the man who is destined to abolish the taxes upon literature, and to emancipate intellect from the fiscal burdens which impede though they cannot prevent its natural development. Such a result would atone for much that his political opponents disapprove in the previous career of Mr. Disraeli, and would indissolubly associate his name with triumphs far superior to any which mere party can achieve. The extension of education is highly needful. All admit it; but scarcely one politician or theologian will agree with any other politician or theologian as to the means to be adopted to secure it. There is one means, however, by which the end might be attained, not by the enactment of new laws and by interference with the scruples of any man's conscience, but simply by the abolition of those old laws whose operation prevents knowledge from being rendered cheap and accessible to the people. Education would, in this case, take care of itself, and freedom of action, which has done so much for the material greatness of England, would add the crowning glory to its work, and raise the moral and intellectual character of far lower substrata of society than have ever yet been fully permeated by the benign influences of art, science, literature, and religion.

Taking it for granted, after what occurred last week, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not indisposed to abolish one or all of these taxes, if he can do so without injury to the revenue, we hope to draw his attention to the peculiar nature of the Excise duty upon paper, with the view of showing him that the loss of revenue consequent upon the emancipation of the paper manufacture would be nominal, and not real. The Advertisement duty we dismiss, because the amount is so trifling, that it is not worth the while of the Minister to defend it on the ground of its productiveness, and because he himself has renounced all others; and the question of the Stamp duty upon newspapers, which opens up very different subjects of policy, we reserve for another opportunity. At present we confine ourselves to the Excise duty upon paper, which stands upon its own merits, and appeals to interests and to classes of a different and more extensive kind.

In the first place, if we inquire what this particular tax produces to the Exchequer, we find it to be about £800,000 per annum. This is a large sum, no doubt; but if it can be proved that the gain is counterbalanced by a loss in all probability far greater, Mr. Disraeli may see reason to abandon the impost, on the only ground on which, by his own admission, he would seek to maintain it.

If we look at the capabilities of Great Britain and Ireland for becoming a great paper manufacturing country, we find them to be far greater than those of any other country under the sun. In addition to a large supply of linen and cotton rags, derivable from her home resources as well as from abroad, it should be borne in mind that England imports and uses more cotton than any other nation, and may be said to clothe the whole world with cotton goods. Cotton waste, or refuse, so abundantly supplied by her multitudinous mills and factories, forms, next to rags, the most available material for the manufacture of paper. This supply is all but illimitable; and were the business of paper-making as free as that of calico-making, it might reasonably be expected that the extension of the one would keep pace with that of the other, and that England might at this moment supply the world with paper as beautifully and cheaply as she does with cottons. But this is notoriously not the case. We scarcely ever see the word "paper" in any list of British exports; and Englishmen skilled in the art of converting the worthless refuse of cotton, straw, chaff, and other vegetable materials, into this beautiful article of necessity as well as luxury, establish themselves in Sweden, Denmark, Russia



STOCKWELL," THE WINNER OF THE 2000 GUINEAS STAKES, AT THE NEWMARKET SPRING MEETING, ON TUESDAY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Belgium, the United States—anywhere, in fact, where [illegible] be free from the vexatious and trade-destroying visitations of the Excise-officer. This fact becomes the more noteworthy when we consider that England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland abound with streams of pure water, all admirably adapted for the purposes of the paper manufacturer; and that the establishment of paper-mills on the banks of these simple rivers could not fail to provide employment for hundreds of thousands of the rural population. But, so far from such mills being established from time to time, we find, upon investigation, that year by year their number is growing less; and that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was reminded, in a very practical and business-like letter read to the House of Commons by Mr. Milner Gibson, that the paper-mills which were formerly at work on the beautiful rivers of counties so near the metropolis as Bucks and Herts, are closed and deserted, or crumbling to decay. By no less means the paper manufacture is becoming, as it were, congested. It is falling into few hands; and, instead of being diffused through the agricultural districts, as it might be, is gradually becoming concentrated in populous places. As a friend of the agricultural interest, as well as of the general commerce and trade of the country, we think that Mr. Disraeli will admit that a revenue of £800,000 per annum may be too dear a price to pay for such results as these, even were there no such weighty considerations as those connected with the purely educational and literary part of the question to throw into the balance on the same side.

We have so often had occasion to speak of its impolicy in a literary point of view, that we prefer at present to consider the duty under its commercial aspect. Newspapers, periodicals, and books, highly important as every intelligent man will admit them to be, are not the only articles for which paper is valuable as an article of commerce, and with which Great Britain and Ireland, with the nurture of manufacturing and other facilities at their command, might set the competition of the world at defiance. Were it not for the £800,000 per annum, which makes our literature all but inaccessible to the masses of the people, we might, after providing for the wants of our own population more abundantly than ever, export to all parts of Europe, America, and Asia with which we carry on every other branch of trade, large quantities of paper for stationery. We might also supply the world with paper-hangings for rooms, and call into profitable employment the talent of hundreds if not of thousands of draughtsmen and designers for their decoration. We might bring to greater perfection the beautiful manufacture of papier maché, which we now carry on at a disadvantage, whenever we wish to introduce it in competition with that of other countries, which, happily for them, are not troubled with the pest of an Excise; and our wholesale and retail traders in almost every branch of trade, some of whom pay a tax of as much as five or six per cent. for packing-paper, and who in consequence stint themselves as much as possible in the use of it, would not only be free of an onerous burden, but would consume twice or thrice the quantity of paper to which they now confine themselves. The increased employment that this would afford may be easily imagined, and the farmers' friends might secure to themselves the greater part, if not the whole of it, in the rural districts. The busy water-wheels would once more go to work by the side of many a now silent and secluded stream. Straw and many other agricultural materials, not hitherto used for the purpose of paper manufacture, would find a daily increasing market; the workhouse would be thinned of their inmates; and the voice of cheerful industry would be heard in many a corner from whence we now hear nothing but the cry and wail of complaint and misery. Leaving out of consideration, as unnecessary to the strength of a case which can stand without it, the purely literary benefit which would ensue from the emancipation of the paper trade, the consequent establishment of printing-offices in paper-mills, and the necessary reduction in the price of all books which would certainly follow, and placing it solely on a fiscal and commercial basis, we submit that the total abolition of the Excise duty on paper would be no injury to the revenue; that what we lost on one side we should more than regain on the other; that, while the local taxes would feel the benefit in the reduction of poor-rates, the general taxation of the country would draw more than the difference in the increase of Customs and other duties which would be paid upon the luxuries of life by a well-employed, well-fed, and well-clad people.

Mr. Disraeli has a noble chance of benefiting the farmers, pleasing the Free-traders, and increasing the prosperity of the country, by one operation. We shall continue to hope that he will not lose sight of it.

NEWMARKET FIRST SPRING MEETING.

MONDAY

The poverty of the sport a consequence of the state of the ground renders it almost unnecessary to say that the leach was thinly attended.

Match, £100. Lord Robbisdale's (the Naboh (Flatman) beat the Duke of Bedford's Hugo (Pettit).

Match, £200. Mr. Maguire's f. by Ion out of Paima (Day) beat Lord Chesterfield's [illegible] (Goodwin).

[illegible] 50 sovs each.—Duke of Richmond's Harbinger (Flatman), 1. [illegible] (Day), 2.

[illegible] Lord Exeter's Nutshell (Pettit), 1. Lord Exeter's Hotchpotch [illegible].

TUESDAY.

Queen's Plate of 100 guineas.—Mr. Delamere's Harp (Bartholomew), 1. Mr Baron's Necklace (Feakman), 2.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Rogers's Leybourne K(Rogers), 1. Mr. Barton's Ibrahim (Flatman), 2.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Rayner's Pesto (G. F. Sharp), 1. Mr J. M. Stanley's Abdallah (Charlton), 2.

The Two Thousand Guinea Stakes of 100 sovs each.—Lord Exeter's Stockwell (Norman), 1. Duke of Richmond's Homebrewed (Flatman), 2.

Sweepstakes of 300 sovs each.—Mr. Greville's Barcelona (Flatman), 1. Lord Exeter's Miss Agnes (Aghman), 2.

Match; £600.—Mr. Payne's Glenluce received. Sir J. Hawley's Bilberry paid.

WEDNESDAY.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.—Duke of Richmond's Harbinger (Flatman) walked over. Lord Exeter's Stockwell withdrew his stake.

Selling Handicap of 10 sovs each.—Mr. W. E. Hughes's Sophistry (Bartholomew), 1. Duke of Bedford's Clam (Bailey), 2.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.—Mr. Payne's Glenluce (Flatman) walked over. Lord Cowen's Poodle withdrew his stake.

Plate of 50 sovs each.—Mr. E. H. Clark's Edward of York (Flatman), 1. Mr. Armstrong's Excel (Charlton), 2.

THURSDAY.

The Queen's Plate.—Bardolph, 1. Edward of York, 2.

Handicap Sweepstakes.—Guy Mannering, 1. Edward of York, 2.

The One Thousand Guinea Stakes.—Kate, 1. Lacy in Waiting, 2. Lancelot (3d), 3.

We have arrayed the winner of the Two Thousand Guineas Stake. The following are the details of the race:—

Lord Exeter's Stockwell	..	..	..	..	1
Duke of Richmond's Homebrewed	..	..	..	..	2
Sir R. Egerton's Filmer	..	..	..	..	3

The following were not placed:—Mr. Howe's Daniel O'Rourke, Lord Exeter's Ambrose, Duke of Bedford's Maidstone, Lord Ribblesdale's Lapidist, Duke of Richmond's Heraldkin, Mr. B Way's Starleton.

Stockwell took the lead at starting, followed by Stockwell, with whom the others were closely laid up, and many running at his quarters. About half a mile Stockwell then went in advance, Homebrewed 2d, Filmer 3d, Filmer third, and Daniel O'Rourke next, and in this order the race continued to the [illegible], Stockwell maintaining the lead and winning in gallant style by half a [illegible], who was beaten about two lengths from the winner, Maidstone a bad fourth, Daniel O'Rourke fifth, beaten a long way. Time, 1 min. 48 sec.

A very strong day on the Beach Lay afternoon, although very much below what we have usually seen on the "Two Thousand" day, was numerous. It included the Duke of Rutland, Duke of Bedford, Marquis of Exeter, Lords Chesterfield, Rendlesham, Maidstone, Uxbridge, Lichfield, Keane, Clifden, Alfred Rothschild, Osborne, Villiers, Exmouth, J. Manners, Lady Maidstone, Lady Keane, &c.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Considerable interest has been excited in Paris by the boldness of the course which has been taken by one of the Courts of law in opposition to the despotic decree of the Prince President, which confiscated the property of the House of Orleans.

The question as to the validity of that organic law of spoliation arose out of the recent violent seizure, in conformity with its provisions, by officers of the Executive, of the domains and châteaux of Neuilly and Monceau (which we noticed a week or two back), and it was brought before the Court of Premiere Instance (the civil tribunal of the department of the Seine), in order to try the merits of that forcible entry upon these sections of the Orleans property. The court was crowded with an audience anxious to learn if there was yet left in France a body capable of thwarting the absolute dicta of the Dictator. M. Descontures, the substitute of the Procureur of the Republic on the occasion, called on the tribunal to declare itself incompetent to deal with the question. M. Paillet, in the name of the Orleans family, argued for the competence of the tribunal; and M. Berryer followed on the same side. The tribunal, after an hour's deliberation, delivered a judgment declaring itself competent, and postponed the affair for a fortnight for the purpose of its being argued on its merits. The decision of the bench was received in court by enthusiastic marks of approbation.

The following are the reasons on which the judgment of the Court is founded:

Considering that the members of the family of Orleans, proceeding as proprietors of the domains of Neuilly and of Monceau, either in virtue of the donation of the 7th of August, 1830, or in quality of their father and on behalf of the Princess Adelaide, their aunt, or in virtue of a possession of more than twenty years, amounting to prescription; considering that their proceeding has for object the property of these two domains; considering that at the ordinary tribunals are exclusive competent to take cognisance of questions of property, validity of contracts, and prescriptions; that this principle has always been applicable to the State as to individuals; that for these reasons, it pertains to the tribunal also to apply the law to the facts which have given rise to the present proceedings; the Court declares itself competent, postpones the cause for fifteen days in order to be heard on the merits, and condemns the Prefect of the Seine to the expenses of the present case.

But the Court of Première Instance will not be permitted to deal with the question any further, whether on its merits or on any technical grounds that the ingenuity of lawyers might devise. The will and intentions of the President of the Republic on the matter have been indicated with unblushing effrontery in a truculent article in the Patrie, the organ of the Elysée, which was intended to intimidate the judges. The writer reminds the judges of their oath of fidelity to the President, and tells them that they can at liberty to construe the oath as pledged in a general way to the Chief of the State, but that they must understand it as a special pledge of fidelity to the person of the Prince; and some observations are added about anarchy having fled from the streets and taken refuge on the bench. The way being thus cleared for a bold stroke, the case has been ordered to be taken from the jurisdiction of the Court of Première Instance and referred to the Council of State, one of the three great bodies which has just been formed under the new Constitution, and which is composed almost solely of the closest partisans and adherents of Louis Napoleon and the new order of things, and there the matter rests for the present. No other court has control over the decision of the Council of State.

There was a grand review of troops in the Court of the Tuileries on Monday, at which the President distributed decorations to the troops; after which he proceeded to the races in the Champ de Mars, which was the first Spring meeting of the Paris turf this year. The pomp and style of the President and his entourage on the occasion was quite Royal. In order to win the favour of the army still further, a decree has been promulgated ordaining that 1851 shall be reckoned as a year of campaign to all troops employed in the suppression of the disturbances of December last.

The following inscription is to be placed in letters of gold on the coffin of the Emperor, at the Invalides:—

Napoleon Bonaparte, born the 15th August, 1769, chef d'escadron of artillery at the siege of Toulon, in 1793, at the age of 24; Commander of Artillery in Italy in 1794, and General-in-Chief of the Army of Italy in 1797, at the age of 28; he made his expedition to Egypt in 1798, at the age of 29; was nominated First Consul in 1799, at the age of 30; Consul for life after the Battle of Marengo in 1800; Emperor in 1804, at the age of 35; abdicated after Waterloo in 1815, aged 45; and died 5th May, 1821, aged 52

On Sunday morning, at ten o'clock, the wooden barrack of the pyrotechnic establishment in the Bois de Vincennes was blown up. It contained all the rockets and stars intended for the fireworks of the 10th of May. All the workmen were absent at breakfast when the explosion took place. It is said to have been caused by the heating of the salts in the composition of the rockets, as they were not sufficiently neutralised. The loss is estimated at nearly 60,000f.

On Tuesday, a military funeral service, in honour of Marshal Gerard, was performed at the Invalides. The Prince President was represented by General Roguet. Marshals Jerome Bonaparte, Excelmans, and Vaillant, and a large number of general officers and senators, were present at the ceremony, which, notwithstanding the wish expressed by Marshal Gerard that his funeral display should be made, was on the same scale of military splendour as the service for Marshal Sebastiani. The Patrie, in enumerating the persons present on the occasion, specially names King Jerome, for whom a distinguished place had been reserved, as also Prince Napoleon, son of King Jerome. The Moniteur likewise designates Jerome Bonaparte as King Jerome. The Royalstyle and title is thus gradually made familiar to the eyes and ears of the "citizen" Republicans

The Moniteur contains a decree, by which the officers of the navy, and other functionaries connected with that department, are ordered to take the oath of allegiance within a month

The official report of the Extraordinary Commissioner, Colonel Espinasse, to the south of France, who was sent to give pardon to all the recent insurgents (with the exception of fifty chiefs of the revolt), has been published. He states that, out of 4000 insurgents, he was only able to pardon 200, and commute the sentence of 100. The peaceable inhabitants viewed with alarm the return of such persons to society, and their feeling against any idea of amnesty was most determined. He further states his regret, that the mixed commission had by unwise leniency lost an opportunity for suppressing anarchy such as might not occur soon again. The result of this report is, that a decree has been published by the President of the Republic, ordering that from this time all applications for pardon, not granted by the mixed commissions, must be made according to the ordinary forms, and conformably to existing laws and regulations.

The last member of the Parliament of Burgundy, in the ante-revolutionary times of the last century, M. Juillet de St. Pierre, died last week, near Dijon, in his hundredth year.

M. Teste, the ex-Minister of Louis Philippe, who was found guilty of accepting bribes a few years ago before the Court of Peers, died, on Sunday last, at Chaillot, outside Paris.

TURKEY.

The latest advices from Constantinople (dated the 15th ult.) refer to an angry correspondence between Austria and the Porte on the subject of the troubles in Bosnia, and the ill spirit openly manifested in that city towards Austrian subjects. Report says that the demands made upon the Sultan are likely to receive an unreserved denial. The Egyptian question was believed to be near a satisfactory arrangement, owing to the conciliatory advice given by Sir Stratford Canning, which the Porte expressed himself willing to adopt.

UNITED STATES.

The accounts this week from New York (dated the 15th ult.) mention, in addition to other casualties, the occurrence of another of those gigantic accidents with which the steam communication of the Union is so intimately associated in the European mind. The disaster in this instance was a steamboat explosion, which took place on the 9th ult. at Lexington, Missouri. The Saluda, bound to Council Bluffs, burst her boilers, killing 100 passengers, Mormons, on their way to the Salt Lake.

A great flood had occurred in Texas, doing a vast amount of damage. In other parts of the country, also, there were very destructive floods. At Cincinnati the Ohio had risen sixty feet perpendicular above the low or summer level.

A warehouse containing between 4000 and 5000 bales of cotton was destroyed by fire on the 11th at Savannah. The ice on Lake Erie was moving slightly, but still remained impassable.

With respect to political news, we learn that the Whig members of the New York Legislature have nominated General Scott for the Presidency, and the Missouri State Democratic Convention have expressed a preference for General Cass. The State general election in Rhode Island has gone for the Whigs, with the exception that the present Democratic Governor has been re-elected.

Kossuth arrived at Charleston on the 9th ult., and left on the 10th, but no enthusiasm was shown by the populace. In "the far west" it would appear to be otherwise, at least judging by the following extraordinary telegraphic communications, which appear in the New York papers:

Cincinnati, Saturday, April 10.

A resolution passed the Senate of Ohio to-day, to loan the arms of the State to Kossuth.

Cincinnati, Monday, April 12.

The resolution passed by the State Senate on Saturday to loan the arms of the State to Kossuth was taken up in the House this morning, and laid on the table by a vote of 44 to 28

The President was about to appoint a United States consul to Manchester.

The line of electric telegraphic communication is now complete between New York and New Orleans, a distance of 3000 miles; and thus, owing to the difference of longitude, a message telegraphed from New York at ten o'clock A.M., arrives at New Orleans when it is nine o'clock A.M. at that place: in other words, an hour before it started!

We learn from Panama, under date of the 3d ult., that passenger-trains are now run on the Panama Railroad as far as Buena Vista, to which point it was opened on the 2d ult. The chief engineer expected to have the road opened to Frijoles on the 15th ult., leaving only twelve miles of river navigation. The regular trans-Isthmus line of steamers had, at which place the passengers by the steamer previously took to the wharf, thus avoiding the danger and inconvenience attending the landing in small boats at Chagres, which latter place was being deserted very fast. Many houses were being removed to Aspinwall, which was beginning to assume the appearance of a busy and thriving city.

From California the latest date is to the 17th of March. The most important part of the news refers to a great freshet in the interior, caused by the rains, the loss of property, and the incidents connected with it. The passengers by the steamer express as the best spirits; and, though they endured many privations, they were generally pretty well satisfied with the produce of their labour. The yield of gold this season was thought likely to be greater than during any preceding year

Crime was on the increase. Several murders had been committed in the interior by Indians, some of whom were arrested, tried, and convicted, according to the Lynch mode of procedure. In San Francisco burglary was of frequent occurrence. Hardly a night passed over without one or more houses being forcibly entered and plundered.

WEST INDIES.

The accounts received this week by the usual monthly mail from the Islands are of little interest. From Jamaica, under date March 31, we learn that the public mind continued in the best spirits; and, though they endured many privations, they were generally pretty well satisfied with the produce of their labour. The yield of gold this season was thought likely to be greater than during any preceding year

Crime was on the increase. Several murders had been committed in the interior by Indians, some of whom were arrested, tried, and convicted, according to the Lynch mode of procedure. In San Francisco burglary was of frequent occurrence. Hardly a night passed over without one or more houses being forcibly entered and plundered.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Accounts have been received by her Majesty's ship Amazon, dated March 7th, from which we learn that hostilities had been partially suspended by the Kaffirs, who had sued for peace; but, as they would not agree to the terms of unreserved submission which Sir Harry Smith laid down, he was arranging a plan of operations on an effective scale, and would take the field on the 25th of March, with the whole of the levies, with whom, in person, he intended to cross the Kei.

Colonels Mitchell and Eyre, in the Amatolas, had been very successful. They had destroyed the whole of the crops, taken large quantities of cattle, and killed twenty-six of the enemy, with a loss to the British of three killed and wounded

A desperate engagement had taken place on the north-eastern frontier, between a parcel under Commandant Gilfillan and a large body of Tambookies, in which the latter lost 160 men and 1000 head of cattle; the burghers had five killed and three wounded

Macomo retained his hold of Waterkloof, with, besides his own clan, 2500 allies. Their expulsion appeared almost hopeless.

Colonel Pole and the 17th Lancers had destroyed all the enemy's crops in the Kahoosa

The Hydra, having on board General Cathcart, had not arrived at the Cape; neither had the Megæra, with the service companies of the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade on board.

Part fifty of the crew of the late Birkenhead have come home in the Amazon, including the second master, Mr Richards; two clerks, assistant-surgeon, sergeant of marines, and four privates. The other part of the crew, and a number of soldiers, are in the hospital at Cape Town, from bruises and sore feet, &c., occasioned at the wreck and their march overland from Danger Point.

The Dutch barque Juno, Captain Chevalier, from Batavia to Dordrecht, was wrecked, March 2, on the fatal Cape Laguelhas; and two ladies and three children, passengers, were drowned.

ALTERATION IN THE MAIL SERVICE.—It is in contemplation to make the foreign steam-packets now sailing from the port of Southampton to such other ports as to land and embark mails and passengers, thereby saving at least sixteen hours in the delivery of letters in London and Liverpool; time in such matters being of the utmost importance to the commercial community as well as to Government.

A NEW BULLET.—Captain Maher has invented and registered a new bullet, which is intended to supersede the necessity of rifling guns. The bullet is shaped like the Minié, but is not intended to hold any cap. The small quantity of powder used, owing to the form of its base, is supposed to expand the lead sufficiently to attain a l purposes. But the chief feature is that the ball is itself rifled, if we may say so, instead of the barrel. Captain Maher's plan will answer for rifling to the very muzzle of the gun or musket. This invention is secured under the name of the "Mars" bullet. It is said that it will suit cannon as well as muskets, and, should it be generally used, will be found economical as well as effective

OPTIONAL PAYMENT OF LETTERS TO HELIGOLAND.—GENERAL POST-OFFICE, April, 1852. On and after the 1st of May next, the postage of letters transmitted by packet, viâ Hamburg, between the United Kingdom and the Island of Heligoland, may either be paid in advance or the letters may be forwarded unpaid, at the option of the sender, except in the case of registered letters, the postage of which, as well as the registration fee, must, in all cases, be paid in advance. The postage upon letters addressed to Heligoland is 6d. when not exceeding half an ounce in weight, is, when exceeding half an ounce and not exceeding one ounce, and so on according to the scale for charging inland letters.

BURGLARY NEAR LIVERPOOL.—On Wednesday night, seven men, with their faces blackened, entered the house of Mr. J. M'Farlane, land-steward to the Marquis of Salisbury, who resides at Speke, near Liverpool, and after threatening the inmates, and threatening them with destruction if they made any alarm and resistance, the villains rifled the house of one gold and two silver watches, a £10 note, and £20 in gold, together with a quantity of port wine, sherry, and whisky. The police are on the burglars' trail.

M. Gustave de Beaumont, ci-devant Minister to our Court from the French Republic, has just established himself as a wine merchant of Burgundy, at Casselnau.

A return printed on Thursday shows that the quantity of guano imported into the United Kingdom during the following years was—In 1841, 261 tons; in 1842, 20,396; in 1843, 3092; 1844, 164,251; 1845, 283,300; 1846, 89,263; 1847, 89,392; 1848, 71,414; 1849, 83,438; 1850, 116,925; and 1851, 243,516.

The Mayor of Southampton, Mr. Andrews, entertained the directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam-packet Company at a grand dinner on Wednesday, in honour of the renewal and extension of the company's mail contract. Upwards of 200 guests were present, including the borough members, Sir A. Cockburn and Mr. Wilcox. The Mayor presided, and several eloquent speeches were made. In the evening there was a grand ball.

At the last meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Great Exhibition of 1851, the report to be presented to the Queen was decided on, and it was agreed that in its arc, acting under the charter of incorporation, they would only require one secretary, to which post Mr Edgar A. Bowring was appointed.

DEATH BY STARVATION OF THE PATAGONIAN MISSION.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

H.M.S. Dido, Valparaiso, February 14, 1852.

SIR,—In inclosing the accompanying narrative connected with the fate of the Patagonian Mission Society in Tierra del Fuego for your information, and which, perhaps, may be deserved worthy of publication with interesting and explanatory the able Sketches* which are herewith submitted to you, I would observe, that what I have written is entirely at your disposal; merely adding, that the original papers and journals from which my narrative has been compiled will be sent to Mrs. Gardiner.

H.M.S. Dido, W. H. Moorshead, C.B., Captain, left Plymouth Sound on the eve of the 30th October, 1851; a day or two previous to which a letter was received from the Admiralty, enclosing an application from Mr. Pakenham Despar, secretary of the Society, requesting, as the Dido was going to the Pacific, she might call in at Picton Island, Tierra del Fuego, to ascertain the fate of the Mission. On our passage there we called in at the Falkland Islands, to pay the wages, if possible, of them. They had not been heard of there, but we received on board a quantity of essentials for their sustenance and preservation, which a merchant there had been waiting for some time to send to Picton Island. We arrived at the Falklands on the 21st of December, and left on the 6th of January. On the afternoon of Sunday the 11th, while beating up to New Year's Islands, Staten Island, we observed on one of the islands a staff with some sort of a flag on it; so we ran in and anchored. The next morning, boats were sent away to search various parts. What we saw as the staff was a piece of cotton print, but no other traces of per-ons having lately been there. At the head of a little snug bay, in New Year's Harbour, we discovered a large boat, with the words "Aladin Aferuadi" on her stern; and about 200 yards from her, on the beach, was a small piece of board, with the intelligence that on the 16th October, 1851, the P. E. Davidson, New York, Captain Smyley, was there, bound to relieve the missionaries at Picton Island. "The next day we left. Reached Picton Island on the 18th, where in our rambles, we discovered traces of Com. Gardiner's party having been there, and saw the c.. tions on the rocks he writes about in his journal, which induced us to go to Spaniard Harbour, where, sad to relate, we discovered the unfortunate end of the whole party.

We left Spaniard Harbour on the 22d January, and reached this place on the 10th of Feb., favourable weather having been granted us during the whole passage from England.

I remain, &c.,

HENRY S. DYER, Pmr. and Purser

The Patagonian Mission party consisted of Commander Allen Francis Gardiner, of 1826; Messrs. Maidment and Williams, catechist; Irwin, Carpenter, John Badcock, John Bryant, and John Pearce, boatmen They left Liverpool on or about the 7th of September, 1850, on board the Ocean Queen, which vessel was going round Cape Horn, and on to California. On the 4th October they sent letters home by the Peter Rose, from Rio de Janeiro to London; and again they had an opportunity of sending to their friends by a Spanish vessel bound to Rio de Janeiro, the 16th of the same month; by the latter vessel Captain G. wrote to Mr. Latrobe, at Monte Video, informing him of the destination of the mission party, and requesting him to permit the vessel employed by him between Monte Video and the Falkland Islands to visit the mission at Banner Cove, with supplies, as soon as convenient. One of the party, named Badcock, soon after the embarkation, had an attack of fever, which was prevalent at the village from which he came—viz. Mousehole, near Penzance, in Cornwall; the other two boatmen subsequently had attacks, which yielded under the care of Mr. Williams. Mr. Maidment, the voyage, suffered much from sea-sickness. On the 5th December the Ocean Queen anchored in Banner Roads, Picton Island, Tierra del Fuego. Between that date and the 19th the mission were landed, and their boats got in some measure fit for service. The Ocean Queen left for her destination on that day. Also the Captain G. and his party in their two boats—one named the Pioneer, an open boat; the other the Speedwell, a decked one, with two dingeys (small boats). His purpose was to examine the north side of the channel, in the hope of finding a secure anchorage, as recommended by the natives, where he might uninterruptedly complete the fittings of his boats. On getting away from Banner Roads, the Speedwell touched the ground; the Pioneer rounded a point of land and shut the Speedwell in The former proceeded with the two small boats in tow, thinking the consort was following. While going over the north shore the wind freshened, and the dingeys broke adrift, and were never recovered a very sad loss to them. The Pioneer found, about 17 miles from Picton, a very beautiful expanse of water entered into by a snug cove; they were perfectly landlocked. It had the appearance of a lake, the land about was perfectly wooded, green slopes with ornamental copses of trees skirted its margin, and altogether it was to the eye at most lovely spot. They moored to the shore for the night. On account of it coming on to rain they had great difficulty in kindling a fire. (It is perhaps unnecessary to state that the warmth of a fire is seldom unacceptable in these regions). This harbour was named by Captain G. Bloomfield Harbour, in testimony of his respect for his valued friend Sir Thomas Bloomfield. Not finding any appearance of the consort's approach, he became very anxious about her, and resolved to return in search of her; he therefore left at 5 A.M. In consequence of along beat, he did not reach Banner Roads till late in the evening, when, to his relief he caught a glimpse of her at the anchorage, and immediately stood in. On nearing her, they shouted with all their strength; but all was still; not a sound was heard but the plashing of the oars and the murmur of the surf on the outer beach. It was an awful suspense. They still approached, and still lauded, uttering all their voices; but no reply: their worst apprehension seemed to be confirmed, each in his own mind imagining the natives, emboldened by the weakness of the crew of the Speedwell, had availed themselves of the opportunity, and overpowered them. When they neared her, no movement or sound was heard, and they fully expected that they had all been murdered. At length a voice was heard from below, which was at once recognised, and one by one their companions appeared. The most gloomy moments had given place to hearty congratulations. It was then 8 A.M., and as Capt. G. thought it absolutely necessary the boats should be put in a seaworthy condition, which could not well be done with all their provisions, &c. in them, and there being a number of natives about Banner Cove and its neighbourhood, he purposed to effect it in Bloomfield Harbour, where he had previously observed an old wigwam, but no natives. Accordingly, that morning both boats started. Unfortunately, soon after, the Pioneer became becalmed, and, requiring a little water, he pulled in again to the anchorage, the Speedwell remaining outside in the Channel. The loss of the two small boats caused him to run close in on the beach to get the water: it was then one o'clock, Sunday morning. At daylight they were awoke by the voices of natives, two of whom were preparing to get on board, but with great concern they found the boat aground, the tide having receded. At this time nothing was seen of the Speedwell. It may as well, perhaps, be stated here, that on overhauling their stores after the Ocean Queen had left them, they found that one item (which, perhaps, might have been the means of saving some of them, if not all), viz. gunpowder, had not been landed with the rest of their things, and that one flask and a half was all they had in their possession.

To resume the narrative. The natives alarmed them much, and they were apprehensive of an attack. There they were, high and dry; their situation tempting indeed, if the people had any intention of molesting them. But they remembered Him who, by the mouth of his apostles, has said, "Who shall harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" and they accordingly united together in prayer, committing themselves to the gracious protection of the Almighty. The natives observed them attentively, and their manner became more quiet. Shortly after the Speedwell hove in sight; but, on account of the wind, could not get near enough to render them any assistance. After this more of the natives came around them, and some few fish were purchased with buttons, knives, &c.; still they could not divest themselves of the idea that an attack was meditated. However, as soon as the boat was afloat, they were quietly allowed to move from the spot, and they went on to join their companions, who had anchored in Banner Cove. There they remained unmolested till the 4th of January, 1851, when rather a formidable force came into the place in different parties—first three, then two, afterwards three more, canoes. As they approached they divided, three coming alongside of ever so boats, while the other two remained near one of their wigwams. Besides the women who paddled, there were two men in each canoe. Thinking so large an assemblage was for some hostile purpose (sixteen men were counted in all,), orders were given for leaving the cove. While we were steadily getting ready, bundles of long oar spears were noticed in some of the canoes: and while on shore the natives belonging to the other two boats were putting baskets of pebbles from the beach into them. The cables were instantly cut, the stern anchor hove up; but, on account of their boats having been lashed together, it was some little time before they could clear each other and get their sails to draw. The wind, also, was light, and they considered the natives would take advantage of all these circumstances, and commence what certainly had all the appearance of a meditated attack. The Speedwell unfortunately again touched ground, and for a few minutes it was doubtful whether she could be got off. Most providentially, by means of oars, she was got into a little deeper water, and they proceeded out of the Cove. The natives were observed to be busily engaged in securing the little raft that had been used by their people backwards and forwards to the shore as a boat, and which was cut adrift when they started from their moorings. Their intention was to have gone over to Bloomfield Harbour, but the state of the wind would not permit it. Lennox Harbour was the only safe place to which they could go, and thither they proceeded; meeting, on the passage of twenty-seven hours, calms, light airs, numerous islands, and a hard north gale, which, after they reached Lennox Harbour, rendered their situation very critical, as they feared being driven upon the rocks. It was necessary to examine the bottoms of the boats, they were b... but the Pioneer was thrown by a sudden gust of wind amongst ... rocks, fortunately without receiving any injury. The tide was very high when they were beached; and they were obliged to remain there until the 17th before they were again afloat. Only two or three natives were seen there, and they were friendly. On the 17th they entered Harbour for Bloomfield Harbour, but when near the entrance they perceived a large assemblage of natives. Thinking they would not be able to work well in the boats with so many about them, they altered their plans, and stood towards Spaniard Harbour, where they arrived on the 20th. The next day they landed, and discovered a river which emptied itself near where they were lying in the boats, which was named Cook's River, in remembrance of the Christian lady who had been to great a benefactress to the Missionary cause. Finding when they lay was in rather an exposed anchorage, they shifted on the 23rd to a cove on the west side of the harbour (not far from where they first lay), which they named Earnest Cove, in anticipation of the fruits which they prayed might attend their labours in behalf of the inhabitants of those islands. Here their principal troubles and anxieties commenced, and here they ceased; but I must not anticipate. On the 1st of February it blew a hurricane, a heavy swell set into the bay, occasioning a high surf on the beach, during which the Pioneer was driven on a small rock in the bay, and then on to the beach, damaged beyond their repairing right over her. After this their attention was first given to save, if possible, their provisions, bedding, stores, &c., which was effected at no little risk. All that was saved was removed to a cavern close by, and which was named Pioneer Cavern. This place Lennox Harbour was ... ed on shore during their stay in Earnest Cove. They soon found this cavern very damp, and rheumatic pains came on; the tide, also, at times rose very high, and came some way inside, rendering their position anything but agreeable. For these reasons they landed what remained of their boat close up to the bank, and converted her into a sleeping apartment. On account of the highness of the surf, they were not able to communicate with the Speedwell for two or three days, when they found her and the party on board her all right.

On the 18th February a very high tide rose again, and carried away many things out of the cavern, amongst which was Captain G.'s purse, containing 68 8s. (his all), his rings, reference Bible, &c.

On the 23d Mr. Williams was suffering much from an attack of rheumatism brought on by having to wear damp clothes. In order to give him more space in the sleeping boat, Captain G. had a shed erected against the face of a projecting rock, which was afterwards called the Hermitage. There he resided. On account of the dampness of the place a fire was kept up. We arose one morning and found it very low; when all at once it burst into a flame, and he was completely burned out of it. The next morning he went to look at his old dormitory, when, to his surprise he found that part on which he usually laid his head was covered with large pieces of rock. A few hours before he had been regretting the loss of the place; but on seeing the pieces of the rock, his regret was soon exchanged for a humbling sense of the compassion of the Almighty to so warning him from a spot of such danger. On the 17th of March Mr. Williams saw evident symptoms of scurvy in John Badcock, which determined Captain G. to return to Picton Island, if possible, for the provisions that were hid in the woods, so as to enable him to prove better for the sick. On the 18th Mr. Williams was able to be moved into the Speedwell, and the wind being favourable they left (the whole party) on the 19th, and dropped their anchor at Banner Cove on the 23rd On Lemon tue next day, they discovered in a wigwam a party of natives, consisting of five men, five women, and three children; as usual, they were importunate, but, on the whole, peaceably inclined. The next day they removed in the Speedwell to Tent Cove, the better to be able to recover their provisions; viz. on cask of pork and three of biscuit. On the 26th, Captain G. was busily employed looking over books containing notes describing their circumstances, and where they were to be found should any vessel arrive in search of them. On prominent portions of rock were also painted the words, "You will find us in Spaniard Harbour" as the last place he visited before he left. He was surprised by hearing the voices of natives, and four canoes were seen approaching the cove. Preparations had been made for a hasty retreat in consequence of the continued illness of Mr William s and John Badcock, as also in case the natives should prove to be many force. We soon hurried on board, but found that two of the three casks of biscuit had not been brought off, to recover which he thought it would be unsafe to make the attempt. Some few natives came alongside, but their manner was not liked. During the night a strict watch was kept, and a peculiar noise was heard in the wood, which he interpreted into a signal which had been previously arranged by the natives. This became a great source of alarm to them. Fortunately, at four the next morning, the wind, which had before been adverse, changed, and they immediately took advantage of it and got away. The natives were observed to be on the alert, with fires lit in their canoes. Some of them followed; but, finding the Speedwell was too fast for them, they returned. On the 4th they resumed their former anchorage in Spaniard Harbour. On the 21st of April, after experiencing a hard gale, the boats were sent off to Cook's River and secured to the right bank, having an anchor out in the stream ready for hauling off when found necessary. Mr. Williams and John Badcock continued ill up to this time, principally, it is supposed, from a recurrence of vegetable food having a tendency thereto. From Every care was taken to economise their provisions, and what, under other circumstances, would have been considered unpalatable, was cooked and eaten. A penguin, a shag-fish thrown up on the beach, portions of dead birds, &c., did not prove disagreeable. On the 1st of May they found, using the greatest care, they had but three weeks' provisions. Their allowance was then reduced, the strongest saying as little as possible, to enable the sick to have a larger quantity

On the 25th of June poor Badcock died; for some days previous he had suffered much from difficulty in breathing, and had become extremely weak. Shortly before he expired he begged Mr. Williams, who was lying sick in the boat beside him (in Cook's River), to join him in singing a hymn; he then repeated the 39th of Wesley's collection, "Arise my soul, shake off these guilty fears." He sang it through with a loud voice, and then ceased to breathe. On the 30th, after after ding the funeral of Badcock, he returned to the cavern; on reaching it, he found Mr. Maidment in the act of leaving, as the tide was then rising very fast, and some of the things Mr. M. had previously carried into the cavern for better security. There being no time to lose, they hurried away from it, and had great difficulty in reaching the beach o' account of the surf. Mr. M. was twice taken off his legs. Rain and sleet were then falling. On reaching their sleeping boat they endeavored to get in danger of being swept away, the tide being still rising. They then proceeded to the Hermitage, and there they were afraid of being hemmed in, but did not leave it before kneeling down and thanking their Heavenly father for the mercies they had experienced. There they then went into the wood, but the drippings from the trees were worse than the rain that was falling; so that, unable to find any shelter, they remained until 9.30 P.M., standing up or pacing about in an exposed place. With the exception of a very small piece of wood, they had had nothing to eat since the morning. They were wet, cold, and hungry; and could not venture to sit down, as every thing was dripping around them. At this time the tide appears to have fallen, and they were enabled to get round to the Speedwell, where they rejoiced. There resting on Captain G.'s sleeping in his bed, while Mr. Maidment slept on another man's. The next day they went back to Earnest Cove. On their way they again experienced the care of their Heavenly Protector near the beach they found a large rock cod, which had evidently been thrown up by the surf. Their sleeping boat was all right. The condition of the party on the 8th July was lamentable indeed. Mr. Williams was fluctuating from extreme exhaustion to comparative ease; the rest were daily becoming weaker; so all thoughts of going to Picton Island for the two casks of biscuit were abandoned. They l... their remaining eight weeks on short allowance: with all the ... privations, not one word of complaint appears to h... They passed their full reliance on the mercies of Him whom they had desired to serve, by attaching themselves to the mission, and fully expected a vessel bringing them succour would arrive. At this date the remains of all their stock was as follows:—One pound of salt pork, one pint of peas, nearly one pound of tea (damaged by salt water), six ounces ... ed up on the beach, two cakes of chocolate, and two mice. They were carefully collecting mussels, which, with the addition of wild celery, had enabled them so long to preserve even the very small quantity of provisions; they being exhausted, nothing but the latter articles, viz. mussels and celery, would remain to them.

I am not in possession of any particulars from the 8th July till the 7th August, wherein he (Capt. G.) states in a prayer that the Lord has seen fit to bring them very low, and supplicates Him, if it his good pleasure, yet to grant them the supplies they stand so much in need of; but that should it be his will that none of the mission should survive, that He would raise up other labourers who may convey the early truths of the Gospel to the poor blind heathen around them.

The latest date found is the 6th of September: it is a note addressed to Mr. Williams: wherein he says Mr. ... laidment had left him on Tuesday the 2d (the cavern was not more than 300 yards from the boat), and had not again returned to him, and doubt s not but what he had ... ter, that he (Mr. G.) had not tasted food for five days ... nor thirst. It is very probable that within ... ing intimated, as some parts quite obliterated, but nearly as above.

"My dear Mr. Williams,—The Lord has seen fit to call home another of our little company. Our dear departed brother left the boat on Tuesday afternoon, and ... has since remained ... doubtless he is ... ence in Heaven. ... he served faithfully. Yet a little while, and though ... Almighty to sing the praises ... throne. I neither hunger nor ... st, though ... days without food. ... Maidment's kindness to me ... heaven.—Your affectionate brother in Christ,

"Sept. 6, 1851." (Signed) "ALLEN F. GARDINER.

From the ... statement I must, therefore, conclude that the two bodies found at C... ver were those of Mr. Williams and ... ce, ... ering ... ; it is unreasonable to suppose ... ived Captain Gardiner, who died as stated by here ... r ... ; but the party, beyond its being marked by an earnestness ... cause. But, as a brother officer, I beg to ... my admiration of his conduct in the moment of peril and danger, and his energy ... ; while him to high professional credit. At one time I find him surrounded by hostile natives and dreading an attack, yet forbearing to fire, and the savages awed and subdued by the solemnity of his party kneeling down in prayer. At another, having failed to secure a boat which drifted away, he digs a channel under her, and diverts a fresh-water stream into it, and I find him making an anchor by filling an old bread cask with stones, bending it to a small rectangular wooden crosses over the head will answer. There could not be a doubt as to the ultimate success of a mission here, if hearts supported, but I venture to ... hope that ... some ... another without entrusting their ... to practical men, accustomed to commercial affairs, who would have seen at a glance the hopeless ... sality of any such, not educated for the occasion, sailing out of her w... ing her arms, and forgetting some of the requisites of a law torn from the Falkland Islands. Painful and unsatisfactory as my report of the fate of the party ... I trust that it may be considered the magnitude of the efforts to relieve, at least any further anxiety on the part of their surviving friends I have, &c., (Signed) W. H. MOORSHEAD, Captain.

SOCIAL EFFECTS OF THE GOLD DISCOVERIES IN AUSTRALIA

The daily papers publish several letters on this subject from residents in the colony to their friends in this country.

The following interesting communication addressed to the editor appeared in the Times of Wednesday last:

Sir, In case you may think ... extract from a letter written ... by ... a few weeks ... ship, might interest your ... I beg to put them ... dispo... , to the total ... ion, &c. ... produced by the ... ts in Australia, is dated December 31, 1851. In regard to the ... numbers, he says:

"I have cross-examined ... ing man, on ... n depend, have seen the returns at the mines, and have come to the conclusion (and which is confirmed by those who have conducted the business among them extensively) that a fair working man can make full £1.00 a year on the ground, clear of his expenses, at the present rate of food; that nine out of ten will do less than ... ; and that one in ten will do more. ... dinner ... ; this makes the ... e £10.000 in two months; ... men ... ded at ... £40.000. When ... hundreds of thousands of mine-laborers ... n go into, imagine the magnitude of the effects to be produced on the world."

The mines he represents ... be inexhaustible for centuries. Nevertheless, he expresses a ... on desire to ... and of gold as soon ... ed; and at this we need not wonder, as he is entirely left ... out any servant, or ... to groom his own horse, while at his ... is cook and housemaid and ... in man of all work. He adds

"Some curious statistics ... let me ... be picked up out of the unnatural state of the labour market here. One whom I heard lately from a member of our club was an odd one. The gentleman, a large sheep-owner, and not a ... ...

NEW RAILWAY AND GENERAL TRAFFIC BRIDGE AT DRESDEN.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

During Longchamps the days were rather cold for the spring toilettes to present themselves in their full elegance; but the mild weather which succeeded has enabled us to anticipate the shapes and stuffs that will prevail this year. Bonnets are undergoing a slight change, very gradual and almost imperceptible; yet from one year to the other the difference is already very great. The shapes are small, a little sloped behind from the crown, but not falling so low as last year; the leaf is very open in front, but nevertheless tightens to the head: formerly the bonnet was worn rather on the shoulders than on the head. These shapes are common to capotes. Taffetas bonnets are no longer worn; capotes de crêpe, so much worn last year, are no longer in fashion.

La mode, the real mode of the year, is the straw bonnet. For the morning toilette the straw-work is of yellow and black mixed, and less openworked, lined with a simple ribbon, plaited at the inside of the leaf: a broad ribbon crosses the outside, sometimes placed quite straight and in all its breadth, two-thirds on the leaf, and one-third on the bottom; or, making the fichu a little at the bottom, it comes back, and, being plaited near the rim, it is tied underneath the chin, and terminates in broad strings. This is very simple for the morning, and has a certain elegance of bon gout which will be appreciated. The edge of this ribbon is sometimes ornamented with a little fringe of lace or blonde, ver narrow. More dressy bonnets are worn of paille vegetal open-work, endlessly varied. The linings are rose, white, blue, cerise, lilac, green, or groseilles: they are also ornamented with flowers in tufts, or falling in clusters, with little plumes, with black lace, gauze, taffetas, in the most graceful and freshest combinations possible. We have seen a flower a little detached above the others which compose the tour de tête, and only on one side; but this studied and pretentious style is, we hope, destined to a short career.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

Robes.—In addition to the dresses of last month, we have some of such marked patterns that we scarce know who will dare wear them. They have been a good deal worn on the stage by the most celebrated actresses; perhaps they will remain the undisturbed property of these ladies without finding their way into the salons. They are plain dresses Scotch patterns, of very lively shades, on a white ground. Nothing has been changed in the shapes since last month, only that for light summer dresses, such as barège mousseline, the corsage is made plaited at the shoulders and at the waist. Moreover, the corsage of this kind of dress is terminated by a broad ribbon, which falls with large ends on the skirt: these ribbons are about four inches in breadth. The summer mantelets are in tulle, ornamented with velvet galons, very narrow, and terminated by flounces of lace; the form is rounded in front, and does not descend low behind.

The Illustrations.—Dress of Valencias, Albanaise pattern. Corsage with a basque skirt, ornamented with a ribbon to match the stripes of the flounces. Corsage closed in front like a riding-habit. Cap, à froid (the caul) de taffetas, with trimming of Malines lace. Capote in crêpe, mauve colour, with flowers. Mantelet black, ornamented with four velvet bands laid on flat, and running round, with deep fringe of silk. Dress of grey taffetas, with two flounces only, flower pattern. Bonnet with the back covered above the curtain, or with two long ends hanging on the shoulders: this is an especial novelty. Straw bonnet worked in lozenge shape, trimmed with a tuft of flowers, the border of the curtain ornamented with a straw trimming like the leaf of the bonnet. Straw bonnet of sewed open-work, bottom of taffetas. Cap with the caul of Brussels lace, with flat bows on the side, one large bow on the back. Mantelet of Indian mousseline, white, with three flat tucks on the border, and two flounces of mousseline, with festooned mitres.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN BERKSHIRE.

On Saturday a most disastrous fire broke out at Harwell, a considerable village about six miles from Wantage, on the Wallingford road, about six miles west of the Didcot railway station. In consequence of the dry state of the weather and the materials of the buildings, being most part of them thatched, the flames raged with great fury. The wind was blowing fresh during the time, and the burning flakes were carried from one farm and cottage to the other, so that in the course of four or five hours the greater part of the village was in flames. Harwell extends nearly half a mile in length, and from one end to the other nearly every farm and cottage suffered: nine farms and twenty-three cottages are stated to have been consumed. The farmers had much trouble in saving their live stock; their stacks of hay and corn are totally consumed, together with their produce in the barns. It is a most lamentable thing to witness many of the poor cottagers who have lost their little all, and have no place of shelter: scarcely a house is left standing. On Monday portions of grain, and here and there a stack of corn and hay, were burning; and the stacks of chimneys, which remained standing amid dense volumes of smoke, gave the scene an awful appearance. Thousands of persons visited the ruins on Sunday from most of the surrounding towns and villages. We have not heard that any person has been burnt, but a great deal of plunder was committed. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary; it commenced at nine o'clock, at a straw rick belonging to Mr. Roby. The conflagration was not entirely subdued until nine farm premises, some of very great extent, and more than twenty dwelling-houses, were consumed. The loss is immense, and in many instances falls on poor persons, some of whom had invested their little property in cottages. It is hoped

NEW RAILWAY AND GENERAL TRAFFIC BRIDGE AT DRESDEN.

This novel structure across the Elbe, which at once provides a railway viaduct and a bridge for general traffic, was designed by two engineers, named Lohse and Riedrich, in 1849, but has only just been completed; and was opened on the 19th of April, at nine o'clock in the morning, when their Majesties the King and Queen of Saxony, the members of the Royal family, the Ministers of State, the corps diplomatique, and an immense concourse of people in carriages and on foot, passed over the noble Bridge, which then received the name of "Marien-Brücke," in honour of her Majesty the Queen of Saxony.

A platform was raised at the end of the Bridge, in the Ostra Allée, in the Old Town, on which their Majesties took their station; when the King desired the principal persons who had been engaged in the direction of the building of the Bridge to approach, and in very flattering terms complimented them on the successful termination of their stupendous work, &c. His Majesty then conferred on, and handed to Herr von Crausshaar, the Director of the Silesian and Bohemian State Railroads; Herr Lohse, Herr Peters, and Herr Riedrich, the engineers, the insignia of the Saxon order pour le Mérite.

This Bridge, which is a beautiful embellishment to the town, forms the last connecting link between the Atlantic, the North Sea, and the Adriatic, now that the difficulties of crossing the Simmering, in Styria, are overcome.

The accompanying Sketch shows the entrance to the two branches of the Bridge, taken from the New Town. The construction has been an engineering work of great difficulty, on account of the nature of the bed of the river. The ceremony of cutting the first turf took place April 26 1846; so that the labour has occupied six years.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

RARE BIRD SHOT ON THE FIRTH OF FORTH.

On the 2d ult., Oliver Colt, Esq., of Rownhams, Hants, whilst shooting on the Firth of Forth, had the good fortune to bag, with various other wild-fowl, a beautiful specimen of the Great-billed or Surf Scoter (Pidonia perspicillata, Flem.), shot in Musselburgh Bay. The bird, which is very rare, has recently been exhibited to the Royal Physical Society at Edinburgh. It is an adult male; the plumage black, with a round white spot on the forehead; and another, somewhat triangular, on the back of the neck: the bill is curiously dilated, is of a reddish orange colour, with a black patch on its base at each side, and in front of this a bluish-white spot. The bird is about twenty-one inches in length, and was easily distinguished by the above striking characters. Very few instances of the capture of the Surf Scoter have been recorded. Its native habitat is North America, where it is abundant; and Dr Smith remarked to the Physical Society, that this, so far as he was aware, was the second time the bird had been captured in the Firth of Forth, and the third or fourth time it had been observed in Britain. Dr. Smith stated that he had been enabled to exhibit the bird by the politeness of Mr. Dickson, one of the firm of John Dickson, and Co., gunmakers, Prince's-street, Edinburgh.

GREAT-BILLED OR SURF-SCOTER SHOT IN MUSSELBURGH BAY, FIRTH OF FORTH.

HOMERTON COLLEGE.

On Tuesday week, April 20, the inauguration services of the Training Institution of the Congregational Board of Education took place at the premises of the board, in Homerton, and were most numerously attended. The proceedings, after the introductory services, were opened by an inaugural discourse by the Rev. John Harris, D.D., Principal of New College, London. This was Dr. Harris's first appearance in the field of education on the principles of the board. Mr. Samuel Morley, the treasurer, presided, and conducted the business with characteristic spirit and urbanity. To a considerable extent the chief localities of England were represented by the company; and the mighty metropolis was not wholly wanting. Dr. Harris's oration was the object of intense and universal admiration. The rev. doctor drew attention to the leading characteristics of the movement which led to the present result, showing the objects to be education, the special training of the educator, education inseparable from religion, religious education sustained by voluntary or social benevolence, parental responsibility, and the rendering of the day-school auxiliary to the Sunday-school, and especially to the Christian Church. Such are the heads of the oration, which is reported in full in the British Banner of April 21. At the close of Dr. Harris's address, a hymn was sung, and the Rev. John Kennedy concluded the service with prayer.

The company then dispersed in groups over the buildings, minutely inspecting the school premises. The entire arrangements frequently called forth expressions of the highest admiration.

An excellent cold collation was provided in the College at three o'clock, which was served in two of the largest rooms in the building; Samuel Morley, Esq., presiding at one table, and John Crossley, Esq., at the other.

The tables having been removed, both parties assembled in one room, and the business of the day proceeded, under the presidency of Mr. Morley, who, in his introductory address, stated, as a most hopeful circumstance, that they had been able to purchase and extend the building in which they were then assembled at a cost of £10,000; and that they took possession of it without one shilling of debt. The chairman concluded by rendering the thanks of the meeting to Dr. Harris, who acknowledged the same, characterising this voluntary project as one of the greatest movements of the present age.

The company were then addressed by Mr. Mulligan, M.P.; Edward Baines, Esq., of Leeds; Josiah Conder, Esq.; Dr. Campbell, Dr. Cox, and Professor William Smith. Mr. Conder alluded to the many pleasant reminiscences connected with Homerton College, and the joy which would be generally felt that the building had not become alienated from the congregational body. It would be consecrated to purposes quite in harmony with those to which it had been devoted for nearly a hundred years. (Hear, hear.) He strongly advocated religious education, bringing forward instances in proof of its great superiority over any mere secular system. He was an old warrior in the cause, and it was his duty to oppose the bill of Lord Brougham. (Hear, hear.) They had been battling this subject for thirty years, and although the war had not ceased, great advances had been made, and there was every prospect that a larger number of men holding right views on this subject would be returned to Parliament at the general election than had ever yet been elected at one time since the House of Commons had existed. (Cheers.)

At six o'clock an adjournment took place from the College to the school-rooms, at the bottom of the gardens, where tea had been provided; this having been disposed of, the company assembled in the large room, when John Crossley, Esq., was unanimously called to the chair, and addressed the company. He was followed by Mr. Conder, who spoke on "Home Education among the Puritans and early Nonconformists;" the Rev. T. Scales, of Silcoates; the Rev. Joseph Vincy; the Rev. R. Redpath, of the United Presbyterian Church; Mr. Baines, who spoke upon "The Evils of Free Education;" and the Rev. J. C. Harrison, on the "Educational Responsibilities of Parents." The Doxology having been sung, the company separated.

For the full report of the proceedings, the reader is referred to the Patriot and the British Banner.

HOMERTON COLLEGE: NORMAL SCHOOLS OF THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF EDUCATION

Homerton College occupies the site of a mansion wherein, nearly a century ago, the Rev. S. Hawtyn resided and kept a school. About the year 1768, the society formed in 1730 for the education of candidates for the Protestant Dissenting Ministry (known as the King's Head Society, from the place at which the committee met) removed here their seminary from Mile-End, purchased the copyhold, and fitted up the mansion as a residence for the principal and the students. The Congregational Fund Board had, as early as 1695, granted aid to young men preparing for the Dissenting Ministry, placing their students under the tutorship and domestic care of various pastors. In 1754, this Board united with the King's Head Society in support of the academy of which Dr. Conder, Dr. Gibbons, and Dr. Walker were the first tutors. About the same time (1756) a society was formed for educating young men for the ministry in the West Riding, with which originated the institution, first at Heckmondwicke (from 1756 to 1783), under the Rev. Mr. Scott, and subsequently at Northowram and at Rotherham. The Fund Board supported also a theological academy, which was first established under the Rev. J. Lavington, at St. Mary Ottery, in 1752. But Homerton Academy (as it was called) is believed to have been the earliest foundation of a collegiate character among the Independent Dissenters.

On the death of Dr. Walker, who had sustained the office of classical tutor for nearly thirty years, in 1770, the Rev. Daniel Fisher, of Warminster, was chosen as his successor, and became resident tutor; Dr. Conder wishing to relinquish the charge of presiding over the domestic establishment. On the decease of Dr. Conder, May 30, 1781, Dr. Fisher was raised to the theological chair; and Dr. Benjamin Davies, of Abergavenny, was chosen classical tutor. Dr. Gibbons, the biographer of Watts, and author of several other works, survived his first colleagues till February 22, 1785. He was succeeded in his tutorship by the Rev. Dr. Henry Hayo, who was removed by death in 1793, when the office of third tutor was superseded by other arrangements.

Dr. Davies having resigned his office as classical tutor in 1787, owing to domestic affliction, the Rev. John Fell, of Thaxted, became his successor and resident tutor. He died in September, 1797, and was succeeded, as classical and resident tutor, by the Rev. John Berry, of West Bromwich, who, three years afterwards, resigned the office on accepting the pastoral charge of the congregational church at Camberwell. The Rev. John Pye Smith had at this time but recently finished his studies at Macsborough College; but, young as he was to be placed at the head of an academical institution, he had already distinguished himself by his attainments as a linguist, a mathematician, and a theologian, and he received the vacant appointment. On the 16th of January, 1801, Mr. Pye Smith delivered to the students his inaugural address; and, in 1806, was permanently appointed divinity tutor.

In 1822 a new building was erected, immediately behind the site of the old mansion. The total cost of the edifice was £9453. The new building received the name of Homerton College.

RUINS OF THE FIRE, ON SATURDAY LAST AT HARWELL NEAR ABINGDON.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

For fifty years (up to 1850) Dr. Pye Smith presided over the institution, latterly in association with Dr. William Smith, the accomplished editor of the "Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities," &c. In that year, a plan which had long been under consideration, for consolidating the three foundations of Homerton College, Highbury College, and Cavendish College, was carried into effect; and thus the termination of the venerable tutor's long and distinguished public career was coincident with the relinquishment of the College as a separate institution. The last change was consequent upon the disposal of, but not any relinquishment on the part of many supporters of the old institution and other attached friends to the interest with which he had been so long associated, to its being continued, though in an altered form, as a Congregational College. Highbury College had been purchased for the purpose of converting it into a normal training-school in connexion with the Established Church, and it was therefore suggested that Homerton College could not be devoted to a more appropriate use than that of being made a normal training institution of the Congregational Board of Education. As the subscription for this object was accordingly commenced, the premises and requisite alterations of the building have been effected, at an outlay of about £1 600.

In the present building are the residences of the principal, board-room, library, and lecture-rooms, dining-hall, apartments of the housekeeper, bursar, and others, with the offices. The centre building contains the apartments of the matron of the female department, lecture-rooms, dormitories for fifty students, lavatories, and bath-rooms. The eastern side of the building is appropriated to the male, and the western side to the female departments. The buildings in the rear are model and practising school-rooms; comprising an infantory or infant school-room, a juvenile school-room, an industrial school-room, and an upper school-room. Each has several commodious class-rooms, and behind the building is a large play-grounds.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 2.—Third Sunday after Easter.
MONDAY, 3.—Invention of the Cross.
TUESDAY, 4.—Sertorius taken, 1799.
WEDNESDAY, 5. Napoleon died, 1821.
THURSDAY, 6.—Battle of Prague, 1757.
FRIDAY, 7.—Sun rises 4h. 23m., sets 7h. 36m.
SATURDAY, 8. Half-Quarter Day. Easter Term ends.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON-BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 8, 1852.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m.	M. h. m.	M. h. m.	M. h. m.	M. h. m.	M. h. m.	M. h. m.
1	1	1	2	2	3	3
7	7	8	8	9	9	10
12	13	13	14	15	15	16
19	19	20	20	21	21	22
25	25	26	26	27	27	28
31	31	32	32	33	33	34
37	37	38	38	39	39	40
43	43	44	44	45	45	46
49	49	50	50	51	51	52
55	55	56	56	57	57	58
2 1	2 1	2 2	2 3	2 3	3 4	3 5
7	7	8	9	9	10	10
13	13	14	15	15	16	16
19	19	20	21	21	22	22
25	25	26	27	27	28	28
31	31	32	33	33	34	34
37	37	38	39	39	40	40
43	43	44	45	45	46	46
49	49	50	51	51	52	52
55	55	56	57	57	58	58
3 1	3 1	3 2	3 3	4	4	4
7	7	8	9	10	10	11
13	13	14	15	16	16	17
19	19	20	21	22	22	23
25	25	26	27	28	28	29
31	31	32	33	34	34	35
37	37	38	39	40	40	41
43	43	44	45	46	46	47
49	49	50	51	52	52	53
55	55	56	57	58	58	59
4 1	4 2	4 3	4 4	4 5	5 5	5 6

OPERA BOXES in the BEST SITUATIONS.
ORCHESTRA STALLS, and PIT TICKETS, on Moderate Terms,
At Mr MITCHELL'S ROYAL LIBRARY, 33, OLD BOND-STREET.
FRENCH PLAYS.—Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.
PRIVATE BOXES by the Night for every Theatre in London.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—First Appearance in this country of Mdlle. ROSE CHERI, and Début of MADAME THIERRET, MONDAY next, MAY 3d, in the favourite comedy of GENEVIEVE, and two ordinary new pieces, entitled "LA FILLE DU GARDE-MARINE" and "LE MARI DE LA DAME DE CHOEURS." Doors open at Seven o'clock, and the performances commence at Half-past Seven.—Boxes, 5s.; Pit, 3s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. Private boxes, stalls, and tickets may be obtained at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office of the Theatre daily, from Eleven till Five o'clock.

ROYAL PRINCESS' THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr CHARLES KEAN.—MONDAY, MAY 3d, will be performed, for the First Time, a New Fairy Easter Piece, in Two Acts, entitled THE NEW FAIRY EASTER PIECE. To conclude with a New Easter Piece, in Two Acts, entitled THE CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN. On Wednesday, May 5th, and during the Week, the Performances will commence with a New Fairy Easter Piece, in Two Acts, entitled THE NEW FAIRY EASTER PIECE. To conclude with a New Easter Piece, in Two Acts, entitled THE CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN. On Friday, for the First Time, a New Easter Piece, in Two Acts, entitled THE GERMAN BROTHERS. A Farce and the new Fairy Easter Piece. Preliminary to which THE GERMAN BROTHERS. A Farce and the new Fairy Easter Piece.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr WARTON. On MONDAY, MAY 3d, and during the Week, the Performances will commence with the gorgeous Equestrian Spectacle of HONEPARTE IN EGYPT; or, NAPOLEON AT ACRE. To be succeeded by Mr BARRY'S classic and humorous SCENES in the Circle, in which he will introduce his Unrivalled Performing Dogs, Monkeys, Goats, Pigeons, &c. To conclude with the Grand Equestrian Spectacle of THE WOMAN-HATER. Admission to the Pit, 1s.; Boxes, 2s.; Gallery, 6d. Private Boxes, Stalls, &c. to be had at the Box-office of the Theatre daily, from Ten till Five, and of the following Libraries:—Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; and Mr. Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE, ADELAIDE-STREET, Regent-street.—Mr PAUL PRY and Mr WILLIAMS will take leave of the Public, previous to their departure for the Provinces, on MONDAY, MAY 3d, when the most popular Entertainment will be repeated. To conclude with a PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Commence at Seven o'clock. Stalls, 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Private Boxes, 10s. 6d. and 15s. Box-office open from 11 to 4. Stage Manager, Mr. Lindsay.

ROYAL MARIONETTE THEATRE, ADELAIDE-STREET, Regent-street.—Mr PAUL PRY and Mr WILLIAMS will take leave of the Public, previous to their departure for the Provinces, on MONDAY, MAY 3d, when the most popular Entertainment will be repeated. To conclude with a PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Commence at Seven o'clock. Stalls, 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Private Boxes, 10s. 6d. and 15s. Box-office open from 11 to 4. Stage Manager, Mr. Lindsay.

MISS KATE HICKSON (Pupil of Manuel Garcia) begs to inform her friends and the public that her SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on THURSDAY, MAY 6th, when the most eminent vocal and instrumental performers will assist. Tickets 7s. 6d. each, to be had of Miss KATE HICKSON, 74 York-street; Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street; Robert Ovrier, Old Bond-street; and of the principal music shops.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS'S FIRST PERFORMANCE of his Season of CLASSICAL and MODERN PIANOFORTE MUSIC will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 5. Beethoven Trio in E flat, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Op. 70, No. 2; Beethoven Quartett, Op. 59, No. 3; Solos for the pianoforte, by Beethoven and Schumann; Variations, Beethoven Pianoforte and Violoncello; Beethoven Sonata in C minor, Pianoforte and Violin; Beethoven Sonata in A flat, Pianoforte and Violoncello, &c. Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS will be assisted by Mr. HOLMES, Mr. PIATTI, and Mr. HOWELL. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had at Mr. Brinley Richards's, 51 Berners-street.

MR. LUCAS respectfully announces that the THIRD MUSICAL EVENING will take place at his residence, 51 BERNERS-STREET, on WEDNESDAY, MAY 5th, at Eight o'clock precisely. Programme, Quartett, No. 2, in G minor, Op. 10, Beethoven; Variations, Beethoven Pianoforte and Violoncello; Beethoven Sonata in C minor, Pianoforte and Violin; Beethoven Sonata in A flat, Pianoforte and Violoncello, &c. Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS will be assisted by Mr. HOLMES, Mr. PIATTI, and Mr. HOWELL. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had at Mr. Lucas's, 51 Berners-street.

MR. AGUILAR respectfully announces that his ANNUAL MORNING MUSICAL SOIREE will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY, MAY 5th, to commence at Half-past Two o'clock precisely. Vocalists, Mrs. Endersohn, Miss Dolby, Herr Reichardt, and Mr. Aguilar. Instrumentalists, Mr. Blagrove, Mr. Lucas, Mr. Piatti, and Mr. Aguilar. Conductor, Mr. Aguilar's most complete and effective Quartett Band. Programme will be duly announced. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of Mr. Aguilar, 9, Newman-street, Oxford-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—H.R.H. Prince Albert, Patron.—THIS DAY, MAY 4, WILLIS'S ROOMS. Half-past Three.—Quartet (Posthumous) D'flat, Op. 64, Beethoven; Quartet in A, No. 3—Mendelssohn; Trio in C minor, Op. 66, Mendelssohn; and "Les Patineurs," from the "Prophète," arranged by Liszt (first time); Pianoforte Duet in E minor, Op. 10, Kalkbrenner; Solo, Pianoforte, Signor Piatti. Pianiste, Miss Poyal (her first appearance at the Musical Union). Vocalist, Madame Viardot. Stalls, 10s. 6d. each; to be had only at CRAMER and CO.'S, 201, Regent-street.

J. ELLA, Director.

EXETER-HALL.—DANIEL, an Oratorio (sixth chapter), by GEORGE LAKE, FRIDAY, MAY 21. Also Mendelssohn's Psalm 95 and Mozart's Requiem. Vocalists—Miss Messent, Stewart, Fellowes, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lawler, Phillips, and Weiss. Conductor, Mr. Hullah. Tickets, 3s. 6d. and 10s. 6d.; to be had at the Society's Office, 2, Exeter-hall.

EXETER-HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—Braham, Mrs. Endersohn, and Miss Dolby, Stewart, Sharpe, and Winsbeck. (Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar.) On the MORNING of MAY 5th the FIFTH of the LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS, when the above eminent artists will appear together with others of celebrity. Stalls, 5s. and 3s. Tickets, 1s. and 2s. each. Commence at Half-past Seven. May be had of Mr. Aguilar, 9, Newman-street, Oxford-street, and of all Musicsellers.
JOSEPH STAMMERS, Director, 2, Exeter-hall.

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S ASCENT of MONT BLANC. Illustrated by Mr WHEELER. EVERY EVENING, at Eight o'clock.—Stalls, numbered and reserved (which can be taken from a plan at the Hall every day from Eleven to Five), 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Also, EVERY Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Three o'clock. A MORNING REPRESENTATION every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at Three o'clock. Stalls, 2s.; Area, 1s.; Gallery, 6d. Children under Ten years of age, half price. Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

ROBIN'S SOIREES.—Immense Success of his last Wonders, &c. at St. Peter's Hall entirely New Programme.—Every Evening, at a Quarter past Eight o'clock precisely, Mr and Mrs. Robin will repeat their unrivalled entertainment; and every Wednesday and Saturday Afternoon at Three o'clock. The Lecture on Legerdemain, Optics, Ventriloquism, &c., as Mr and Mrs. Robin will perform the Wonders of Nature and Art, and Mr. Robin will exhibit his Unique Collection of Curiosities, Models, Machines, &c. Stalls, 3s.; Second Seats, 2s.; Area, 1s.; Gallery, 6d. Doors open at Seven and Two. Mr. Robin's Residence and Museum, 3, St. Peter's-terrace, Cambridge-road, Mile-end, opposite the Hayden.

MUSICAL NOVELTY at the HOLY LAND DIORAMA, EGYPTIAN HALL.—H. SHLEY CHANTS and MELODIES, illustrated by a full choir, including Mr. ISAAC and Mr. FAHEL, who sings in all dialects of the Holy Land. Diorama, its unique entertainment, "A Musical Journey," with the Music and Melodies of every land and every language. Admission, Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—BACHHOFFNER'S NEW PATENT PNEUMATIC LIGHTING GAS FIRE will be EXHIBITED and EXPLAINED on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at Half-past Three and on Tuesday at Three. There are Seven Lectures on Music, by George Buckland, Esq., illustrated by Old English and Patriotic Songs, every evening, except Saturday, at Eight o'clock. A Lecture by Mr. Pepper, on Optics, and Appel's Patent Dip for the preservation of Timber, every Evening at Quarter past Nine. The Diving Bell, and Dissolving Views of Rochester Cathedral, every evening. Admission to Science Lectures, 1s.; Children under Ten years of age, half price.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS. The Eighteenth Annual EXHIBITION of this Society is now OPEN at their GALLERY, 53, Pall Mall, near St. James' Palace, from Nine o'Clock till Dusk. Admission, 1s.
JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN to VISITORS DAILY. The Collection now contains upwards of Fifteen Hundred Specimens: a fine series of Antelopes having been added to the Hippopotamus, Elephant Calf, and other rare animals, during the winter. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays 6d.

GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT-STREET.—Now exhibiting Daily, a Grand Moving Diorama, illustrating the WELLINGTON CAMPAIGNS in INDIA, PORTUGAL, and SPAIN, concluding with the BATTLE of WATERLOO. Afternoon, Three o'clock; Evenings, Eight o'clock. Admission, 1s.; Stalls, 2s. 6d.; and reserved seats, 3s. Doors open half an hour before each representation.

PRINCE of WALES' BAZAAR; or, the Crystal Palace of Regent-street, 207 to 209, and 210, Regent-street. This Bazaar fitted up in a style of superior taste and elegance, and attempted in it every other respect, is OPEN DAILY, from Ten till Six, and contains seventeen Stalls and Fancy Articles in great variety, together with a splendid Assortment of British and Foreign Bijouterie and also a fine GALLERY of PAINTINGS for SALE, by the Old and Modern Masters. Admission, 1s.; on Mondays 6d.

HINDOSTAN.—This GRAND MOVING DIORAMA is NOW OPEN DAILY, at 12, 3, and 8 o'clock, at the ASIATIC GALLERY, Baker-street Bazaar, Portman-square. Admission, 1s.; stalls, 2s.; reserved seats, 3s. and 5s. 6d. "Painted by Mr. Phillips, with the figures and animals by Mr. Louis Haghe, and the shipping by Mr. Knell, a rare and harmonious conjunction of talent has been brought to bear for the production of a gorgeous scene."—The Literary Gazette. "The Diorama of Hindostan is confessedly the most extraordinary exhibition that has appeared in the present century."—Morning Herald.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—The back Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for 1850 and 1851 are now Reprinted, and may be obtained by order of all Booksellers and Newsagents at the published price. The Numbers previous to 1850 can be had only in Parts or Volumes.

NEW READING-CASE FOR THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."—We recommend our Subscribers, who are desirous to have their Numbers bound at the expiration of each Half-year, to provide themselves with our convenient and elegant Reading-Case, for protecting the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS during perusal. The price is 2s., and it may be had of all Booksellers and Newsagents.

WITH THE
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
OF NEXT SATURDAY, MAY 8,
A SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

THE PATAGONIAN MISSION.—Next week we shall Engrave the Sketches received from the writer of the narrative at page 231 of the present Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, detailing the death by starvation of Captain Gardiner and his companions upon the Patagonian Mission to the neighbourhood of Cape Horn.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1852.

THE Ministry, that, on coming into office, felt and avowed itself to be in a minority, has unexpectedly found itself in a majority. It seems to be no longer a Ministry on sufferance or of necessity, in default of any and every other, but a Ministry on its own merits, with an obedient House of Commons to work in its behalf, and a prosperous career before it. And how has the marvellous transformation been effected? Has it propounded any new, bold, popular, and statesmanlike measure? Not one. Lord John Russell has been the agent of its good fortune; and the measure on which it has achieved its victory is one which it inherited from its predecessors. Lord John Russell threw up office unnecessarily and pettishly because the principle of his Militia Bill was affirmed by Lord Palmerston in a manner somewhat stronger than was pleasant or convenient, and has opposed the present Government for bringing in a bill very similar to his own. The result has been the disgust of all sides of the House, a discomfiture of the Liberal party almost amounting to a break-up, and a movement in favour of the present Ministry by all those impartial politicians who dislike factiousness, and who think the good government of this country of somewhat more importance than the personal vanity or pretension of any man or any set of men—in Parliament or in Downing-street. Some people go through the world by the willing help of their friends, and others by the involuntary assistance of their foes. The Ministry of Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli may have something for which to thank its Protectionist friends; but the opposition of Lord John Russell has proved of far greater service in strengthening its position than anything the Ministers themselves or their avowed friends have either done or said.

But the position of parties in the House of Commons is remarkable and peculiar. A Minister resigned, whose principles were in the ascendant, who was backed by a working majority, and who was supported in all the fundamental portions of his fiscal, social, and general policy by the bulk of the upper and middle, and nearly the whole of the working classes; and a Ministry came into office whose long-avowed principles were in the course of abandonment even by its own members, which was not supported by a majority in the House or out of it, and that had no single prestige in its favour. And for all this Lord John Russell is answerable, for, as he is turning his back on power (or even, if he will not admit that it was his Lordship alone who did it. There was no necessity why he should have resigned office, but he resigned it. There was no necessity why, after resigning, he should have recommended an opponent of diametrically opposite opinions; but he did so, overlooking the fact that he was not defeated on a Free-trade question, and that the Main Question, in strict constitutional practice, to have recommended to his Sovereign was Lord Palmerston, and not Lord Derby. Neither can it be said that, now Lord John Russell is out of office, there is a necessity why he should resume it again; and yet his Lordship acts and speaks as if there were. He seems to think that, having made Lord Derby Minister, his sole business is to unmake him as fast as possible. But the country and the great party—superior alike to Whigs, Tories, and Protectionists—that great party which desires good Government and freedom for the people to work and to thrive, is beginning at last to be fully convinced that there is no necessity whatever for the leadership of Lord John Russell. Like the late Sir Robert Peel, his Lordship has broken up a party. But, unlike that illustrious statesman, he has broken it up, not for the sake of the country, but for the sake of his own wounded pride and that of his family connexions. We do not anticipate, however, that much, if any, evil will result from Lord John Russell's extraordinary course of proceeding. The new Parliament will bring together many new men; new alliances and combinations will be formed, and a new leader will be found for the great Free-trade and Liberal-Conservative party. But what is as curious as anything else in the present position of state affairs, is the fact that no less a personage than the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, Chancellor of the Exchequer, seems to be aspiring to this high post. He disavows any intention to restore the Corn-Laws, and avows, at the same time, his conviction that the great defect in Lord John Russell's Reform Bill of 1832 was, that it did not sufficiently enfranchise the working classes! Such a conversion, if it takes place, will be as remarkable as the abandonment of Protection by Sir Robert Peel in 1846. We can only hope, for the sake of the Prime Minister, and especially for the sake of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that if they really mean to adopt the policy which they formerly opposed, they will find no one to do by them as Mr. Disraeli did by Sir Robert Peel.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The festivities of the Court have kept the Queen and her Royal Consort actively engaged during the past week. On Friday, the 23d ult., her Majesty entertained at dinner the Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Constance Leveson Gower, the Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, and the Lord Grosvenor, and a distinguished party of the relations of the Sutherland and Grosvenor families, in celebration of the matrimonial alliance since solemnised in the Royal presence at the Chapel Royal.

On Monday morning the Queen and the Prince, with the Royal children, went to the Gallery of Illustration, in Regent-street, and viewed the new Diorama illustrating the campaigns of the Duke of Wellington. In the afternoon her Majesty and his Royal Highness went to Claremont to pay a visit to the Countess de Neuilly and the French Royal family; and in the evening the Queen and the Prince honoured the Princess' Theatre with their presence.

On Tuesday her Majesty and the Prince Consort went to the Lyceum Theatre, to witness the new drama called "A Chain of Events."

On Wednesday morning the Queen took an airing, in company with the Duchess of Kent, to the Chapel Royal, to witness the marriage of the Lady Constance Leveson Gower and the Earl Grosvenor. The Earl of Derby had an audience of the Queen during the afternoon; and in the evening her Majesty had a large dinner party, at which the Duchess of Kent and Lord and Lady John Russell were among the guests.

On Thursday her Majesty held her third Drawingroom for the present season at St. James's Palace.

The Countess of Charlemont has relieved the Countess of Desart in her duties as Lady of the Bedchamber-in-Waiting to her Majesty. Lord Polworth has relieved Earl Talbot in his duties as Lord-in-Waiting to her Majesty.

THE DRAWINGROOM.

The Queen held a Drawingroom on Thursday afternoon at St. James's Palace. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Royal suite, arrived from Buckingham Palace soon after two o'clock.

His serene Highness Prince Nicholas of Nassau attended the Drawingroom.

The Queen wore a train of pink moire antique silk, trimmed with white blonde and white roses and acacias; the petticoat was of white satin, trimmed with white tulle and wreaths of white roses and acacias.

Her Majesty's headdress was composed of white roses and acacias, ornamented with diamonds.

The diplomatic circle having been introduced, several presentations took place.

The general circle was very numerously attended, and a great many young members of the aristocracy made their debût on the occasion.

The dresses were remarkable for their splendour and beauty.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Baroness de Speth, went to Claremont on Monday, to pay a visit of congratulation to the Countess de Neuilly, on the return of her natal day.

The Duke and Duchess of Cumberland gave a magnificent entertainment on Saturday evening last to a family party of forty distinguished guests, in celebration of the then approaching marriage of their youthful relatives Earl Grosvenor and Lady Constance Leveson Gower. The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk gave a similar entertainment on Monday evening.

The Countess of Hardwicke had a brilliant assembly on Thursday evening, at the noble Earl's mansion, in St. James's-square.

Miss Coutts gave a grand ball on Monday night, at her mansion, in Stratton-street. The réunion was attended by upwards of 600 members of the aristocracy. Miss Coutts will have another ball on Monday next.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—The marriage of the Lady Constance Leveson Gower with Earl Grosvenor took place on Wednesday last, at the Chapel Royal, in the presence of her Majesty and the Prince Consort, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and a distinguished party of the aristocracy, whose parties illustrating this interesting event, and actual drawings made on the spot, in our next Number, we defer for the present any descriptive details. The marriage of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn with Miss Marie Wynn, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, G.C.B., and niece of Lord Carington, took place at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, on Wednesday last. Lady Carington gave a grand breakfast on the occasion at Whitehall.

THE DANISH SUCCESSION.—The first Conference of the Plenipotentiaries appointed to settle this important question was held on Saturday at the Foreign-office. It was attended by the Ministers of all the Powers who signed the former protocol on the subject, with the addition of the Prussian Minister. The proceedings were of a purely preliminary nature, but it is understood that a second conference will speedily be held, at which the question will be fully entered into. To the announcement we can only add our hope that none of those complications which have caused the regulation of the succession to the Danish Crown to appear an almost interminable matter may again occur to prevent a speedy settlement of the question in a manner the once satisfactory to the great European Powers, and consistent with that freedom of choice which is the undoubted right of Denmark.—Times.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.—A convocation was held on Wednesday for the purpose of electing two scholars on Mr. Viner's foundation. There were four candidates to five vacancies. The successful ones are—Joseph William Chitty, of Balliol College, and Henry Mitchell Hull, of University College. Both these gentlemen are registered as first-class men. The scholarships are tenable for ten years, and are worth £30 per annum. Mr. Viner, by will, dated 1755, left about £12 000 to establish a professorship, and endow fellowships and scholarships of the common law.—At a meeting of Heads of Houses, held on Tuesday, the Rev. William Thompson, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College (author of "Outline of the Laws of Thought"), was chosen to be Bampton Lecturer for the ensuing year.

FRIEND OF THE CLERGY.—This society held its second anniversary festival at the London Tavern on Wednesday; Sir W. P. Wood in the chair. In the course of the evening it was stated that the society had relieved 83 necessitous clergymen, 2 wives, 23 widows, 29 daughters, and several personages; to the amount in all of £1247 10s. 8d. Upwards of 19 pensioners, who would receive together £160 a year. They had now 92 candidates on the general object, and the applications on the special object were most numerous. The subscriptions announced amounted to the respectable sum of £2617, including 600 guineas from John Lord, Esq., and 100 guineas from the chairman.

DIOCESE OF GLOUCESTER.—At a meeting of the clergy and laity of this diocese, held on Wednesday in the large room of the Bell Inn, Gloucester, in compliance with a resolution adopted at the meeting recent y held in the Hanover-square Rooms, on the subject of the periodical holding of diocesan synod, after some opposition, resolutions were agreed to in favour of the revival of synodical action in the Church. The Rev. Mr. Collins (of the diocese of Ripon) occupied the chair.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The following appointments and preferments have recently been made:—Colonial Deanery: The Rev. H. B. Macartney to Melbourne, Australia. Hon. Canonry. Rev. W. H. Parker to the Cathedral Church of Norwich. Minor Canonry: Rev. W. W. Gibbon to Bristol Cathedral. Rectory. Rev. W. D. Fellowes to Bere-Wallop, Hampshire. Vicarages: Rev. R. West to Tenbury, in Worcestershire; Rev. W. Bulmer to Fryston Ferry, near Ferrybridge, Yorkshire; Rev. T. Greenland to Wenhaston, in Suffolk.

The Lord Chancellor has presented the Rev. G. A. P. Linskill, M.A., chaplain to Lord Dinorben, late curate of Stanhope, Durham, to the rectory of Bankinor, near Sittingbourne, rendered vacant by the death of the Rev. Edmund Blenkinsopp Coxe, M.A.

The Bishop of London has appointed the Rev. Charles Mackenzie, M.A., rector of St. Benet, Gracechurch-street, and head master of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar-school, Southwark, to a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have received testimonials of esteem and regard: The Rev. J. Collinson, vicar of Swanbourne, Bucks, from his parishioners; the Rev. W. H. Duck, from the congregation of St. Silas, his parishioners; the Rev. W. Dodsworth, from the parishioners of Appleton-le-street, Yorkshire, of which place he was the curate for upwards of seven years; the Rev. D. T. Gladstone, of St. Thomas, Leeds, from the ladies of his congregation; the Rev. C. Bagnall, from the inhabitants of New Basingbroke, Lincolnshire; the Rev. J. S. Hall, late of Stanley, Yorkshire, from the parishioners; the Rev. A. W. Leeworth, from the parishioners of the congregation of St. Mary's Episcopal chapel, Broughty Ferry; the Rev. J. Bowes, on resigning the vicarage and curacy of Card, from the inhabitants, the Rev. T. Morrell, from the pupil teachers at Kidderminster, on his departure; the Rev. H. G. Robinson, of Holy Trinity, Preston, Lancashire, from the parishioners and congregation, on his resigning the incumbency; the Rev. A. Keane, late of St. John, Bridgwater, Somerset, from the inhabitants; the Rev. W. J. Rundell, late of Wilton, Northwich, Cheshire, from the congregation; the Rev. Sampson, of Stondsted, St. Margaret's, Herts; the Rev. C. R. Tate, late of West Camdon, Surrey; the Rev. W. Wignall, of St. Saviour's, Bamber-bridge, Lancashire; the Rev. T. Wilson, of St. Ann, Turton, Lancashire, from the congregation; the Rev. J. Bur on, on his resigning the curacy of St. George's church, Ramsgate from his parishioners and friends.

The Arnold prize, for an historical essay, has been awarded to Thomas R. Campbell, B.A., of St. John's College, Oxford.

The report of the Commission for Inquiry into the University of Oxford was presented on Tuesday, at the Home-Office, for the purpose of being forwarded to her Majesty.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE RATE.—On Tuesday last a deputation from the metropolitan parishes, headed by Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., and Sir Benjamin Hall, M.P., waited upon Mr Walpole, the Home Secretary, at his official residence, with the view of inducing the right hon. gentleman to use his influence for the reduction of the police rate for the county of Middlesex, which in the new assessment of the county magistrates raised to an enormous amount. It was stated that, in 1847, through the system of quarterly re-assessing the county, the assessments were raised from £6 367,476 to £7,792 168, although, when the police were first established, it was intended by the Legislature that the then county assessment should form the basis of the police rate. In St. James's parish the police rate was suddenly raised from £4,000 to £10,548, at the very time that they reduced the local expenditure from £47,000 to £32,000. Lord Dudley Stuart and those acquainted with the duties of a police force assured him that that force might be safely reduced 1000 men. The Chief Commissioner of Police also admitted that a reduction from sixteen to fifteen ought to be made. The Home Secretary highly approved of the uniformity of rating; and, without pledging himself to any particular course, assured the several representatives of the different parishes that the subject would engage his most serious attention, and he would do all in his power to meet their wishes.

THE ART UNION OF LONDON.—On Tuesday the annual meeting of the subscribers and members of this society was held, by permission of Mr Charles Mathews, at the Lyceum Theatre, for the purpose of receiving the council's report, and for the distribution of the amount subscribed for the purchase of works of art for the past year. Lord Londesborough took the chair in the absence of Lord Monteagle, the president of the institution. The report of the council, which was adopted, stated that the subscriptions of the present year amount to the sum of £12 903, showing a considerable increase on the amount collected in 1851. The reserved fund now amounts to £4740. The following is a statement of the receipts and expenditure: Amount of subscriptions, £12,903 5s; rent and hire for purchase of pictures, bronzes, statuettes, tazzas, and prize engravings, £6449; cost of engraving of the year, £3640 19s 4d; printing, advertising, and other expenses, including reserved fund of 24 per cent, £2813 2s 8d; total, £25,806. The total sum appropriated to the purchase and production of works of art, including the cost of engraving, is £9,089. Mr. Godwin stated that £150 000 had been granted to the promotion of art since the formation of this society. The distribution was then proceeded with, and amongst the numerous prizes drawn were the following:—The Rev. H. Sibthorpe, entitled to a work of art of the value of £2000. The Venerable Archdeacon Bickersteth, Shrewsbury; and Mr. J. Douglas Lucas, Maize-hill, Greenwich, each entitled to a work of art value £150. Mr. A. Mitchell, Manchester; Mr. W. Swainson, Wa worth; and Mr. J. Wallace Bolton, each entitled to a work of art of the value of £100. The drawing of the numbers for the forty statuettes and thirty tazzas followed; and, after some routine business connected with the distribution had been transacted, a vote of thanks to the noble chairman concluded the proceedings of the day.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—On Wednesday evening a meeting of this society took place at the institution, John-street, Adelphi—Earl Granville in the chair—when a paper was read by Mr. Owen Jones, in connexion with the Great Exhibition, the title being, "An Attempt to define the Principles which should regulate the employment of Colour in the Decorative Arts."

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this society took place at the rooms of the institution, in Hanover square; Sir George Clark in the chair. A report was adopted, which stated that the total income for the year exceeded that of 1850 by the sum of £11,495, and that of 1849 by the sum of £17,582, the gross receipts for 1851 being £26,463. The total sum expended in 1851 was £22,380. The funded capital had been increased by £4500; and many valuable presents had been received, which fully compensated for the loss sustained by the society from casualties in the menagerie.

LONDON HOSPITAL.—On Thursday evening the 112th anniversary festival of the hospital was celebrated at the London Tavern; his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge presiding. In proposing the toast of the evening, his Royal Highness stated that he had visited the hospital the previous day, and could bear testimony to its admirable arrangements. The number of in-patients during the past year was 4091, and of out-patients 17,252, making a total of 21,113; of whom 9126 were suffering from accidents. The regular income of the hospital was only £10,500, whilst the annual expenditure exceeded £12,000 leaving a large margin to be supplied by subscriptions and donations. The subscriptions of the evening amounted to near ly £1800.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the members of this society was held at the London Tavern, on Monday evening; Mr. Henry Pownall in the chair. By the report it appeared that during the past year 50 pensioners had died, and 30 had been admitted on the funds of the society, from which they received 4s. a month. Fifty candidates had been admitted on the £4 4s. list, and had been elected to receive pensions of £10 10s. per annum. The total number of pensioners at present on their list is 341, the amount expended in the relief of whom during the past year was £1936 12s. 7d., and there remained a balance in hand on the year's account of £133 5s. 4d.

LONDON COLONIAL TRAINING INSTITUTION.—The Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury presided over the annual meeting of the friends of this institution, held on Monday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street. The report, which was adopted, stated that twelve months ago the average number of applicants each week rejected amounted to 40; whilst during the past year the number had increased to 70. There were 74 young men under a course of industrial and religious instruction at the institution, Great Smithstreet. From 1850 cases, 214 were admitted; 50 left after a few days; 150 were to go through the probation; others had been sent to the colonies. 11 had enlisted as soldiers, and only one discharged for robbery. The applicants were all criminals, elected for various terms of imprisonment, from one month to seven years' transportation. The total amount of receipts was £1938 10s., and the expenditure £1668, leaving a balance on the year of £335 10s., out of which was a debt due to the treasurer of £196 18s. 8d., but from other liabilities they were still in debt £100.

FARMERS' AND MARKET-GARDENERS' COMMITTEE.—A meeting of the committee of Market gardeners from the various parishes within the metropolitan sewerage district was held on Monday, at the Exchange Tavern, Mark-lane, to consider the rating of agricultural and market-garden land for the purpose of sewerage; Mr. M. W. Merryweather Turner, barrister, in the chair. A resolution was agreed to for the appointment of a deputation to wait upon Lord John Manners, to represent to his Lordship the unfairness of levying these rates, and to request that the Government would introduce a measure into Parliament to exempt land used for agricultural or market-garden purposes from rates to be levied under the act for such sewerage.

SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—At the annual meeting, on Monday last, Mr. Collier pointed out the folio edition of our great poet's works, printed in 1632, with the manuscript corrections and alterations made by some owner of the volume not long after its publication. These were examined by his neighbours present; and, as they are of high importance, especially as that of many important passages, it has been determined to print them by themselves in an 8vo volume, which is now in preparation.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND METROPOLITAN TRAINING INSTITUTION.—Th annual meeting of this institution was held on Wednesday, at Highbury College; the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. The report, which was adopted, stated that there were 51 students admitted into the institution since its opening, seven of whom have obtained scholarships entitling them to exhibitions, and others have been appointed to schools. The number of students now in residence is forty-three. The receipts during the year have amounted to £3963 7s. 6d., the expenditure to £2727 3s. 10d. The amount in hand to commence the ensuing year is £307 1s. 3d.

LONDON SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND.—At the annual meeting of the promoters of this charity, held on Monday, at the Hanover-square Rooms (the Right Rev. Bishop Carr in the chair), it was stated in the report that the income of the society during the past year had exceeded that of the previous year by £300. The receipts of the year amounted to £1015; but, owing to extraordinary expenses the balance remaining in hand was only £87.

ROYAL OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL, MOORFIELDS.—At the annual festival of this charity, held on Wednesday, at the Albion, Aldersgate-street—the Lord Mayor in the chair—it was stated in the course of the evening that the institution (of which the Queen is the patroness) has had under its treatment, since its establishment in 1805, no fewer than 230,000 persons, 9457 of that number having been treated last year. The average cost of the patients during the last year had only been 1s. 8d. per head. Subscriptions amounting to £400 were announced.

BETHLEHEM HOSPITAL.—At a special meeting of the governors of this hospital, held on Monday, it was recommended by the committee in their report that there should be appointed a resident medical officer of a very superior order, who, with the present apothecary, should have the entire management and control of the patients and servants, and, by devoting the whole of his time, should secure to the establishment a more perfect attention to the various cases coming under observation.

ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this society was held at the London Tavern; J. Lavers, Esq., presiding. It appears from the report that there are now in the asylum 170 patients, making the number in many 190 persons, irrespective of 11 discharged and 3 deceased that day. Amongst the donations during the past year were—S. M. Peto, Esq., M.P., £1000; J. W. Shepherd, Esq., £140; J. R. Durrant, Esq., £110; and a legacy of £2000 was also received under the will of the late Lieut.-Col. Colebrooke. The report was adopted, and 15 patients elected into the hospital, out of a list of 103 approved candidates.

REFUGE FOR ORPHANS, AND GIRLS FROM RAGGED SCHOOLS.—On Thursd y the annual meeting of this society was held in Grosto-p ace, Paddington; the Right Hon. the Earl of Waldegrave in the chair The receipts for the year were £486 18s 9d. and the expenditure £496 10s. 9d., leaving a balance in hand of £61 8s.

PRAYER BOOK AND HOMILY SOCIETY.—On Thursday the annual meeting of this society was held at the Hanover-square Rooms; the Marquis Cholmondeley in the chair. The report stated that the publications of the society now embraced thirty languages. During the year 1877 ships had been visited by the society's agents; 2048 prayer-books had been sold at reduced prices, and 472 selected homilies given to the crews. Emigrant vessels had been supplied with 433 prayer-books, 13,859 books of family prayer, 2154 selected homilies, 1186 collects and catechisms, and a large number of homilies for rewards. The income of the society was £2305, and the expenditure £2407, leaving a balance in hand of £48. The report was adopted, and some formal business transacted.

FIRE IN BERMONDSEY.—Soon after midnight on Saturday morning, a fire broke out in New Weston-street, Bermondsey, which destroyed the warehouse and seriously damaged the contiguous premises of Messrs. Margetson and Co., leather dressers. Considerable injury was also done to the premises of Messrs. Mundy, tanners, of Mr. Reed, skin-dresser, and to the Wesleyan chapel in the same street

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The births registered in the metropolis for the week ending Saturday, April 24, were Males, 789; females, 859; total, 1648. The deaths during the same period were—Males, 859; females, 863; total, 1021. By the official report it appears that some improvement is now perceptible in the public health, as indicated by a declining rate of mortality, in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1841-51 the average number of deaths was 920, which, if raised in proportion to the increase of population, becomes 1012. On reference to the table of late decades, an improvement in the returns of the previous week is observable, the numbers recorded as deceased of the respiratory organs, they having fallen from 2.4 to 172. Bronchitis has declined from 102 to 71; pneumonia, from 77 to 61. The epidemic class of diseases exhibits a total number of 264 cases in the present return, which, the average, corrected for increase of population, is 195. Small-pox was fatal last week to 29 children and 9 adults. In 6 of the 38 cases it is stated that the subjects had been vaccinated previously. From the observations of the Registrar-General, it appears that the disease is getting rife amongst the population. Deaths from measles, 16; scarlatina, 38; hooping-cough, 35; croup, 13. Six persons died of erysipelas. Diarrhœa was fatal in only one case, although, in the previous week, the number was 15. There were 3 deaths from tetanus (lock-jaw), two of which were apparently idiopathic, and the third was occasioned by an injury from a cartwheel.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was 29 821 inches. The mean temperature of the week was 46 degrees, which is rather below the average of corresponding weeks in ten years. The mean daily temperature was below the average on every day of the week, except Thursday and Friday. On Monday it was only 39 7 degrees, which is nearly 7 degrees below the average, it continued rising till Friday, on which day it was 53 3 degrees, and then 5 degrees above the average, on the following day it was to 44 4 degrees. On Sunday and Monday the wind was generally in the north-east; on Tuesday it was in the south-west, on Wednesday, in the south east, and on the last three days, in the east.

ELECTION INTELLIGENCE.

TAVISTOCK ELECTION.—On Wednesday the election for this borough concluded in favour of Mr. S. Carter, who had 141 votes; the numbers for the other candidates being—for Mr. Trelawny 89, and for Mr Phillimore 80. The vacancy was occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Trelawny, who, however, had subsequently consented to stand again if re-elected.

WORCESTER ELECTION. On Wednesday, also, Mr. W. Laslett, Worcester-trader, was returned without opposition as the representative for this place, in the room of Mr. Francis Rufford, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

EXETER.—The Solicitor-General, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, has taken leave of his political friends at Exeter in the following address:—"Since I had the honour to address you, soliciting your support at the general election, I have been invited to come forward as a candidate to represent the eastern division of the county of Suffolk, in the place of the late Lord Fulcon, who is a member of the present Parliament. Should I be returned at this election, which is appointed for the 1st of May, I may also be encouraged to add to present my visit as a candidate there at the general election. In the meantime you have been pleased to solicit a gentleman of your own county, every way unexceptionable, to become a candidate to represent you, together with your present respected member, Sir John Duckworth, and that gentleman has responded to your call. Under these circumstances, it becomes my duty to offer my sincere and grateful thanks for the support of those who were so good to honour me with their support, and at once to take my leave of you, with the most earnest wishes for the success of your cause, and for the continued well-being and prosperity of your ancient and loyal city."

TOWER HAMLETS.—A placard has been posted extensively about the borough requesting the electors not to promise their votes, as "two candidates will come forward on the principle of opposition to Ministry and coalition."

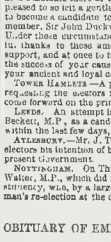
LEEDS. An attempt is, after all, being made to re introduce Mr. William Beckett, M.P., as a candidate for re election for Leeds. Several meetings have, within the last few days, been held in his favour.

AYLESBURY.—Mr. J. Temple West, of Eaton-square, has announced to the electors his intention of becoming a candidate. He is attached to her Majesty's present Government.

NOTTINGHAM. On Thursday last a lengthy address was delivered by Mr. Walter, M.P., which did not appear to meet the approval of the Radical contingent, who, by a large majority, have decided against the honourable gentleman's re-election at the dissolution of Parliament.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE GRAND DUKE OF BADEN.



LEOPOLD, or rather Charles Leopold Frederick, Grand Duke of Baden, and Duke of Zæhringen, was the third son of Charles Louis Frederick, and was born the 29th August, 1790. He succeeded to the grand ducal throne on the demise of his brother, the Grand Duke Louis, the 30th March, 1830. He had previously married Sophia Wilhelmina, daughter of the unfortunate Gustavus IV., King of Sweden, who was dethroned in 1809, and died in exile in 1837. By this consort, who survives him, Leopold leaves issue four sons and three daughters. His eldest daughter, the Princess Alexandrina, is the consort of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, and the sister-in-law of Prince Albert. Louis, the eldest son of Leopold, succeeds him as Grand Duke of Baden: he is the hitherto reputed, but is unfortunately in a state of mental incapacity. His next brother, Prince Frederick, born in 1826, has assumed the government of Baden, as Regent. The Grand Duke Leopold died on the 24th instant.

Besides being connected by marriage with the present Royal family of England the Grand Duke Leopold was maternally related to that of Bonaparte. The Grand Duchess Dowager Stephanie, the widow of the Grand Duke Charles Louis, the nephew and predecessor of the Grand Duke Leopold, whose death we here record, is the cousin of the present Louis Napoleon, through his mother, the Queen Hortense. The Princess Stephanie was adopted by the Emperor Napoleon as his daughter. The Princess Mary, the third daughter of the Grand Duchess Dowager Stephanie, is the present Marchioness of Douglas.

SIR ALEXANDER RAMSAY, BART., OF BALMAIN.

This respected Baronet died on the 26th ult., at 21 Baker-street, London. He was the eldest son of the late Alexander Ramsay, a descendant of Sir Thomas Burnett, Bart., of Leys), who succeeded to the estates of his maternal uncle, Sir Alexander Ramsay, Bart., of Balmain, and assumed the surname of Ramsay, and was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom in 1805. The Ramsays of Balmain are a family of great antiquity in the county of Edinburgh, being lineally descended from the Hon. Sir John Ramsay, Knight, of Balmain and Taxque, who was created by King James III. Lord of Parliament in 1484, under the title of Rothwell, but who, subsequently, adhering to the unfortunate Sovereign against the Scottish nobles, suffered outlawry and confiscation.

Sir Alexander Ramsay, whose death we record, was born 14th February, 1785. He married, 1st August, 1811, Jane, eldest daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Blackhall, and by her, who died in 1819, he had three sons and two daughters. He married, secondly, 26th December, 1822, Elizabeth, second daughter of William and Lord Samuraay, by whom he had issue one son, Allan. The eldest son of the first marriage is the present Sir Alexander Ramsay, third Baronet, born in 1811, who is married to Ellen Matilda, eldest daughter of John Entwisle, Esq., M.P., of Foxhulles, and has issue.

The will of the late King of Hanover, written in German, and translated into English, has been deposited in the archives of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and letters of administration granted to Charles Klingemann, Esq., the lawful attorney of his present Majesty George King of Hanover, heretofore the Crown Prince of Hanover, the sole executor. The will was made on the 31st of October, 1851, and is in substance as follows, commencing—"Ernest August, King of Hanover, Prince of Great Britain and Ireland, Duke of Cumberland, and Duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg," &c., appointing as soon the Crown Prince and the future successor to the Crown, and his immediate descendant, the then reigning Monarch of Hanover, to be guardian of his children and grandchildren, but in case around the crown descend to another branch, say that of the prince of Cambridge, and such treateably and personal inheritance to go to his own right heirs, but from the aforegoing trust is excluded all moneys in the Crown treasury, the superior courts and in the administration of the theatres. There are no specific bequests nor any legatee mentioned in the will, the whole of the property remaining in the hands of the trustee as a family trusteeship." The will is signed "Ernest August." In the will it is mentioned that his late Majesty's life was insured in the Equitable Life Office in the sum of £5000, which, with the bonus of his advanced age, must be considerable. The wool of the personal estate sworn to in this country, under the probate, was £50,000.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert have entered their names to be put at the head of a subscription list for the relief of those whose relatives were drowned at the wreck of the Birkenhead steam troop-ship. The members of the Cabinet have also subscribed. The committee of [illegible] fund has nominated Miss F. S. Salmon, eldest child of the late Paymaster of the Birkenhead, as a candidate for admission into the Royal Naval Female School at Greenwich, should it [illegible]. Up to the present time nearly £1000 has been subscribed to the Borough and United Service funds in Portsmouth.

A parliamentary return just printed shows that, in the session of 1849, 4 months for the adjournment of the House, or the delay, or to report progress, were put from the chair; in the session of 1850, 86; and in 1851, 74. The total number of questions put from the chair during the progress of the Lord's Essential Bills for the last session amounted to 418. Of these, 43 were put by the Speaker, and 75 by the chairmen of committees.

At the recent anniversary of the Society of Antiquaries, the noble President, Viscount Mahon, announced that Mr Forbes Sutherland, a fellow of the society, recently deceased, had bequeathed the sum of £10,000 to that corporation for the promotion of historical research and antiquarian investigation.

The town of Weydah, on the west coast of Africa, has been frequently bombarded by Mr. Hutton's factors, for which he has some valuable property. At every bombardment [illegible] the ruins of the town the charred remains of 150 slaves, who had been unable to escape, burning [illegible] chained together by the neck. This is supposed [illegible] to be annually for sacrifices. The king of Dahomey, where the King of that [illegible] resides, is also reported to have been burnt.

At a meeting of the vestry of Marylebone, on Saturday, resolutions were carried to in favour of a clause proposed to be introduced into the bill for the continuation of the Poor Law Amendment, exempting parishes having the management of their own poor by boards of guardians, elected under a local act, from the operation of such bill.

The official paper of Rio, Brazil, received by the last packet, contains a decree reducing the oppressive anchorage dues on British and all other foreign vessels from 900 rs per ton to 3000 rs., or, in English money, from 2s. 8d. ton to 8s. This is a very valuable concession, and will be felt to be a great relief by all shipowners engaged in the trade with Brazil.

Messrs. James Dingwall and John Picton Boots are appointed members of the Legislative Council of Prince Edward's Island. Mr. William N. Steves is appointed a member of the Legislative Council of New Brunswick. Mr William Davies is appointed a member of the Council of Dominica, during the temporary absence of Dr Fergusson.

A dinner took place at the Plough Hotel, Cheltenham, on Friday week, on the occasion of the presentation to Earl Fitzhardinge, by members of the Berkeley hunt and other sportsmen of this district, of a splendid piece of plate subscribed for in testimony of the sportsmen's appreciation of the noble Lord's generosity in maintaining a pack of fox-hounds and noble stud for hunting the Berkeley and Cheltenham country.

The Brighton Gazette states that the oyster fishery off the coast of Sussex is still carried on very extensively. No less than thirty-five sail of smacks, trading from Shoreham, arrived in the harbour at Brighton on one day in the previous week, laden with oysters.

On Sunday morning, about three o'clock, the new ship Falcon, said to be the finest sailing vessel that ever left the port of Liverpool, left the Mersey bound for Port Phillip, with between 300 and 400 emigrants on board. As the Falcon stood out to sea, she fired two guns as a parting salute.

The Right Hon. Sir Stratford Canning, Ambassador at Constantinople, is to be raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Redcliffe, in the county of Somerset.

The Earl of Cawdor has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Carmarthenshire, in the room of Lord Dynevor, deceased.

Mr. Feargus O'Connor, M.P., sailed last Saturday from Liverpool in the royal mail steam-ship Europa, for the Cape of Good Hope. The object of Mr. Feargus O'Connor's departure for America is, it is said, to avoid the commission of lunacy that has been issued against him.

According to the financial statement of the Metropolitan Sewers Commission, the balance in hand on the 17th of April was £6334 16s. 6d., which, after payments made to the amount of £4164 3s., leaves as the available balance in sum of £2,170 13s. 9d.

Mr. Leland dated January 24th, received last week from an Assistant-Surgeon of the British Navy, stationed at Hobart Town, to a relative in Ireland, it appears that Mr. Thomas F. Meagher, one of the recent political exiles in Van Diemen's Land, had effected his escape immediately after he had received a letter to the police magistrate of the district, informing him that he did not wish his ticket of leave extended.

A petition to the Lord-Lieutenant, praying for a remission of the sentence upon Mr. Smith O Brien and his companions in exile, was on Saturday last put in circulation in Dublin, and in the course of a few hours received a number of influential signatures.

His Royal Highness the Prince Consort has headed a new list of subscriptions in aid of the funds of the Portsmouth Sailors' Home, with a donation of £50.

On Sunday morning the Lord Bishop of London delivered a sermon at St. Mark's Church, North Audley-street, in aid of the Royal Orthopædic Hospital, Bloomsbury-square. The collection amounted to £57 4s. 4½.

As William Garner, of Broad Heath, a wheelsmith, lately deceased, was crossing the railway between Manchester and Ardwick-green, on the Sunday's station, on Saturday afternoon, he was thrown down by one of the buffers of an engine that suddenly came up, and, passing over him, severed both his legs from his body. He died at the station an hour after the accident. He has left a widow and three children.

On Tuesday, a gentleman unknown, apparently about fifty-five years of age, died suddenly at the railway station, Richmond, Surrey. On his person was found a letter addressed to the ship Thames, addressed from Richard Street, signed "Samuel Shipton."

On Tuesday the first stone of a building at Brixton, intended for the education and maintenance of the orphan children of freemen of the City of London, was laid by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, attended by the Sheriffs, Messrs. Cotterell and Swift, Aldermen Musgrove, Challis, and Salomons, and the members of the committee.

The New York Herald states that Lola Montes has engaged a son of Mrs. Ware, a celebrated poetess, to write a sort of epic drama for her, embodying the principal events of her wayward life, and introducing into the play the most characters with whom she was brought in contact.

A letter from Vienna, dated April 21, states that all Kossuth's relatives have been set at liberty by the Austrian Government, and that they were to leave the country on the 1st of May.

Sir John Eardley Eardley Wilmot, Bart., of the Midland Circuit and Lincoln's Inn, has been appointed Recorder of the borough of Warwick, vice Mr. Mellor, resigned.

By the American papers we learn that Mrs. Bloomer was killed in Bridge-street, Bowery, by her husband.

A ship, of about 1400 tons, supposed to be of American build, laden with mahogany and cocoa-nuts, was taken in with, in February, in the latitude of Lisbon, and longitude 12° W., and 38° N., and was seen rugging and sails carrying, but with masts and yards standing, by the Baldar Fishery, arrived at Bristol.

The supply of the sub-committee on the subject of the Crystal Palace, to the report of the treasury Commission, was on Monday issued, and urges various reasons why the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the cost and applicability of the Crystal Palace ought not to be acted on.

The Horse Guards on the river front of the Palace will consist of [illegible] being covered with a variegated pavement, and the windows in the basement story are to be ornamented, and protected with iron railings and gratings. The public will shortly be admitted to this interesting and pleasant promenade, and have from it an excellent view of the southern front of the new palace, and a capital view of the river from Westminster-bridge to Vauxhall-bridge.

Dr. Vanzel, a young physician of Livron (Drôme, France), died on the 8th of April, of hydrophobia, a cause, it has in his thumb from a young dog about a [illegible] old, and a mother and sister.

Hartley House, the residence of Sir William Heathcote, Bart., has been damaged to the extent of £900 or £600, by a fire which broke out on Saturday morning last. The building was formerly the residence of Richard, son of Oliver Cromwell.

The Government require to be voted for law and justice for the current year, as stated in a Parliamentary document printed on Monday, the sum of £1,934,874, against £1,907,511 in the preceding year.

From a Parliamentary paper just published it appears that for the year 1852-53 £470,732 is required for education, science, and art. In last the sum was £433,940; and in 1850, £414,802.

Rio de Janeiro is about to be lighted with Mr. Stephen White's patent [illegible] lamps, which are now in use in [illegible] towns in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alexander Spearman and Mr. Wentworth Dilke have been elected members of the Commission for the Exhibition, in recognition, it is understood, of their zealous and gratuitous services in the first assembling of the finance committee, and the other of the executive committee. Captain Steel, who had been a commissioner ex officio during the whole work of the Exhibition, but who had retired upon coming to be chairman of the First India Company, has also been elected a commissioner.

THE AMERICAN CLIPPER SHIP, "WITCH OF THE WAVE."

THE AMERICAN CLIPPER SHIP, "WITCH OF THE WAVE."

This large and beautiful clipper-built ship, commanded by Captain Millett, recently arrived in the East India Docks, Blackwall, from Canton, having made one of the most extraordinary and rapid voyages on record; she also brought one of the most valuable cargoes of tea that perhaps ever entered the port of London, having on board no fewer than 19,000 chests of the choicest quality.

This vessel is of 1400 tons burthen, and was built at Salem, near New York, in the course of last year. She first proceeded to California, thence to Hong-Kong and sailed from Whampoa, near Canton, on the 8th of January; made the passage to Java Head in seven days twelve hours; then had the wind W.S.W. to N.W. for several days, with a light trade wind, and made the Cape in twenty-nine days; then encountered strong easterly winds from the Western Isles, and took a pilot off Dungeness on the 4th of April, making the passage from China to the Downs in ninety days—a trip surpassing the celebrated runs of the Oriental and Surprise clippers.

Had she not encountered the strong easterly winds up Channel, she would have made the voyage several days earlier; as it was, she was only four days beating up from the chops of the Channel, while some of our large vessels were nearly a fortnight doing the distance.

The Witch of the Wave left the river on Thursday, the 22d ult., and while in the docks was an object of great interest, her bows and general appearance being similar to the America yacht, which carried off the plate at Cowes last year.

By the above it will be seen that she sailed round the world in ten months and a half, including loading and discharging at the above ports. The greatest distance she ran on the voyage was 338 miles in twenty-four hours.

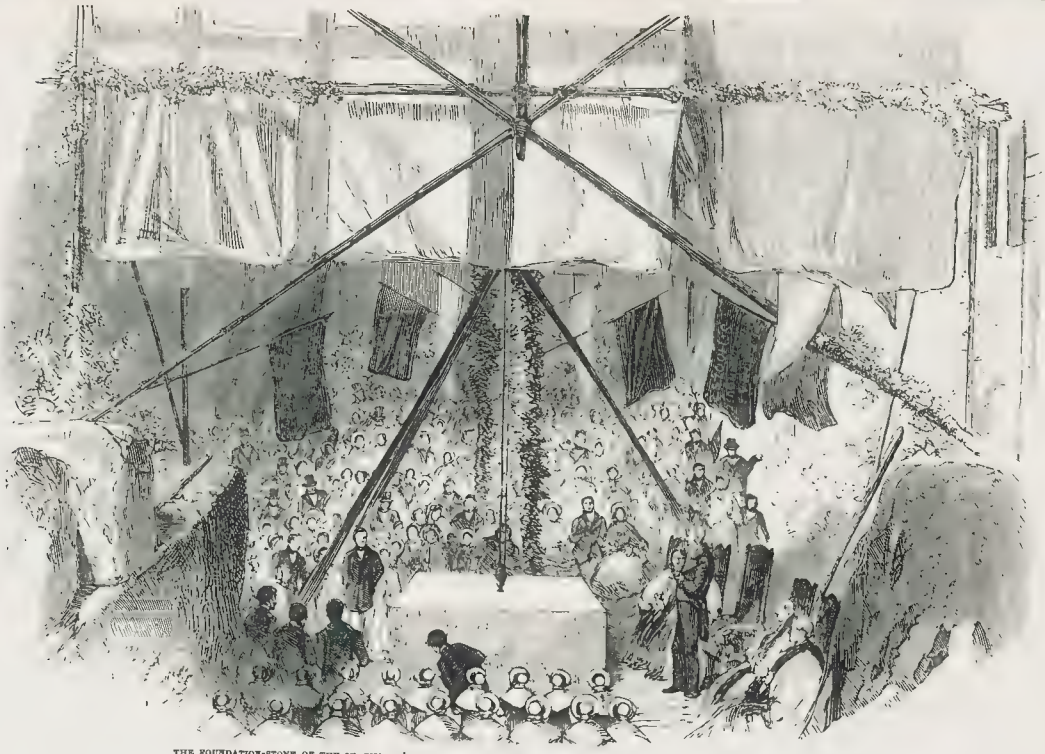
DEPARTURE OF THE ARCTIC SEARCHING EXPEDITION.

We this week complete our Portrait Illustrations of the officers of the third Government Expedition, which has just left our shores, in search of Sir John Franklin and his companions; and, bearing in mind the determination and energy of the commander and the officers of this new Expedition, we are warranted in anticipating happy results. First, is Lieutenant Sherard Osborn, who commanded the same vessel, the Pioneer, during the late search. Next is Commander M'Clintock, who was with Sir J. C. Ross, and also in Captain Austin's late Expedition, in which he made the wonderful journey from the wintering-place of the squadron to Melville Island and back. Third on the line is Commander G. H. Richards, who, since 1849, was second captain of the Acheron steam surveying vessel, on the East India station. The details of the departure are as follows:—

Her Majesty's ships Assistance, 2, Captain Sir E. Belcher, C.B.; Resolute, 2, Captain H. Kellett, C.B.; North Star, 2, Commander William J. S. Pullen; Intrepid, 2, screw steam-ship, tender to the Resolute, and Pioneer, 2, screw steam-vessel, tender to the Assistance, arrived at the Great Nore, from Greenhithe, at 7.30 A.M. on Wednesday week, the first three in tow of the Lightning, Monkey and African steamers respectively. At 9 A.M. her Majesty's steam-vessel Myrtle, Mr. W. S. Bourchier master commanding, conveyed Captain C. Hope, Superintendent of the Dockyard, and senior port naval officer (pro tem.), on a visit to Sir E. Belcher, returning at noon with the captains of the several ships, who were entertained at luncheon by Captain C. Hope. A dockyard cutter was kindly placed at the disposal of the officers belonging to the ships in port, for the purpose of affording them an opportunity of visiting the Arctic exploring squadron, of which many availed themselves. At one P.M. the Myrtle, with the broad pendant of Captain C. Hope flying, returned to the Nore with the officers, who came into port. Between one and two P.M., signal was made to the Resolute, Desperate, and the other steamers to get up their steam; and at three o'clock the squadron weighed anchor and started on their voyage, the sailing-vessels being each in tow of a tug-vessel, and carrying with them the hearty wishes of every one for success in the enterprise in which they are engaged.

LIEUTENANT OSBORN, COMMANDER OF THE "PIONEER." MR. ALLARD, MASTER OF THE "PIONEER." COMMANDER M'CLINTOCK ("INTREPID.") MR. PULLEN, MASTER OF "THE NORTH STAR." COMMANDER RICHARDS ("ASSISTANCE").

THE ARCTIC SEARCHING SQUADRON.—(FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY BEARD.)



THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF THE ST. THOMAS' CHARTERHOUSE SCHOOLS, LAID BY THE MARQUESS OF LANSDOWNE, ON WEDNESDAY.

LAYING OF THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF THE ST. THOMAS'S (CHARTERHOUSE) NEW SCHOOLS.

On Wednesday, at twelve o'clock, the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new building for the Schools of St. Thomas, Charterhouse, took place on a piece of ground on the eastern side of Goswell-street, immediately facing St. Thomas's Church, in the presence of the Most Noble the Marquess of Lansdowne, the Lord Bishop of Lichfield, the Bishop of St. Asaph, the Venerable Archdeacon Hale, the Rev. Mr. Rogers, the Treasurer of the Schools, and Incumbent of St. Thomas's, and a very numerous attendance of the clergy and gentlemen interested in the advancement of the means of education. The ground was tastefully decorated with evergreens, the subscribers being accommodated with raised seats.

On the arrival of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the procession was formed in St. Thomas's Church, from which it advanced to the site of the Schools in the following order:—Children of the Schools, and their pupil teachers; the committee; the Rev. Mr. Rogers, the Bishop of Lichfield and St Asaph, the Marquess of Lansdowne, the clergy, &c.

The noble Marquess having taken up his position in front of the stone, and the usual preliminaries having been made by Mr. Nixon, the builder, under the direction of Mr. Escott, the architect, the Rev. Mr Rogers addressed his Lordship, and related the origin of the Schools, and the encouragement and assistance he had received from the Marquess himself. It had always been his opinion that a clergyman might do a great deal of good by decent and common attention to schools, and in that conviction he had acted. The locality needed the appliances of instruction; and, on his induction to the living, he was desirous of furnishing them. He commenced operations in a blacksmith's shed, which was filled with boys nearly as soon as opened. He then engaged a workshop, which was immediately filled with girls. He had met with great assistance in his endeavours from the Marquis of Lansdowne. He might mention, as a proof of the need of education in that populous and humble district, that a petition having been signed in favour of the schools by the inhabitants, a thousand or more in number, two-thirds of the signatures were crosses. The rev. gentleman, in an eloquent address, descanting on the private and public virtues of the noble Marquess, concluded by requesting his Lordship to lay the stone.

The Marquess of Lansdowne said it afforded him the greatest satisfaction to be present on any occasion which could tend to assist the means of education. The late Government had done much for education, and he hoped all future Governments would pursue the same course. After some further observations, the architect handed his Lordship the trowel. The stone was lowered, his Lordship standing at the eastern side spreading the mortar, and the stone was laid. The children then sang the 100th Psalm, the Bishop of Lichfield reading the usual prayers.

The Bishop of St. Asaph then addressed the assemblage in lieu of the Bishop of Lichfield.

Mr. Hobhouse having addressed the Marquis on the part of the committee, expressive of their sense of the honour he had done a district with which he was in no way connected, his Lordship briefly expressed his acknowledgments.

The Rev. Mr Rogers presented the noble Marquess with the silver trowel, which had been subscribed for by the teachers and scholars, who desired its acceptance, which his Lordship received with much emotion.

After the anthem of "God save the Queen," the procession returned to the church, the children being regaled with wine and cake in the Schools. The proceedings then terminated.

In the district where these Schools are located they must prove of great utility The district forms part of the parish of St. Luke, and contains a population of 9000 inhabitants, chiefly, if not entirely, composed of the poorest and most ignorant class, many of them employed in the City as porters and artisans, and more getting their livelihood in the streets. The district, indeed, includes Golden-lane, Whitecross-street, and their several adjoining courts. It is manifest that such persons cannot contribute towards the designed building, and therefore the assistance of the more wealthy is desirable.

Mr. Rogers commenced the operations of which he spoke in 1845; in 1846 he obtained a piece of ground adjoining the church for the purpose of building schools. Two rooms were built capable of accommodating 550 children, costing £1750. When first opened he found great difficulty in getting the parents to pay even 2d. per week; but gradually they began to appreciate the proposed benefit, and it was possible to raise the school fees to 3d., 4d., and 6d. One reason for this advance was the introduction of superior masters and the pupil-teacher system. The number of scholars, also, has increased: The numbers at present in the School are:—Upper Boys' Schools, 290; lower ditto, 190; girls and infants, 350, making a total of 790. Such was its success, that the Marquess of Lansdowne moved the Committee of Council on Education to make an extraordinary grant of £800 to wards the proposed new buildings. The estimated cost of the new erection, including freehold site, is £6000.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE IN HYDE-PARK.—PROPOSED NEW ENTRANCES, AND ADDITIONS.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

We should add, that at the close of the ceremony on Wednesday, the children were regaled with a small cask of wine, sent by some benevolent person in Berkshire, free of all charge; and with 1000 buns from Mr. Tolfrees, of No. 4, Wilderness-row.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—PROPOSED ADDITIONS.

By a'd of a model which we have had the opportunity of inspecting, we learn that Sir Joseph Paxton proposes certain alterations in the Crystal Palace, for the purpose of converting it into a Winter Garden, and adapting it to other scientific purposes. These alterations are shown in the illustration upon the preceding page. They consist in extending the ends in a circular form, so as to present two large court-yards for the various objects that so large a scientific building would require. The eastern and western entrances would diverge in three directions; namely, one grand entrance leading to the centre of the building, whilst the others, taking a circular form, would lead to the two 48-feet avenues next the outside of the building, thus leaving a large court-yard on each side the grand entrance.

To each end it is proposed to add four glass towers, for the purposes of ventilation and covering the chimneys, coke being used for heating the building.

It is further proposed to construct entrances at Prince's Gate, to be of glass, and lead direct from the Knightsbridge-road to the end of the Transept Galleries, thus providing two covered pathways over the Park drive.

The model, showing the above additions, has been ably constructed by Mr. Robert Cogan, 43, Leicester-square. It has been placed in the Crystal Palace. Mr. Cogan is also re-painting smaller models of the Exhibition Building, as memorials of the structure.

On Tuesday a crowded meeting of the friends of the movement for the preservation of the Crystal Palace was held in Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. In one of the side galleries were the Duchess of Sutherland and the Marquis of Stafford, and the whole body of the vast hall and the gallery were crowded. Among the gentlemen who were on the platform were the Duke of Argyll, Earl of Harrowby, Sir Joseph Paxton, Mr. Ackroyd, M.P.; Mr. Hume, M.P.; Right Hon. C. T. D'Eyncourt, M.P.; W. Williams, Esq., M.P.; the Rev. Dr. Cumming, Admiral Sir George Sartorius, Colonel Sykes, H. Mundsay, Esq.; P. Wakley, Esq., M.P.; — Gesch, Esq., M.P.; — Heywood, Esq., M.P.

The noble chairman, on opening the business of the meeting, read a letter he had just received, signed "A working-man of Dorchester," enclosing £20 in support of the movement.

The following resolution, which was proposed by the Earl of Harrowby, and seconded by Mr. Hume, was carried unanimously:—

"That the frequent contemplation of works of the fine arts, of historical and literary monuments, and objects of natural history, is eminently conducive to the instruction, refinement, and rational amusement of the people; and this meeting views with satisfaction the increased facilities lately given to the public to view the collections contained in the British Museum and the National Gallery, whilst the decorous conduct of the people visiting those collections and of 1851, which would enable us to place all our regiments in an effective proves that they fully appreciate every opportunity of rational recreation; and this meeting, taking into consideration the admirable arrangements of the Great Exhibition of 1851, is of opinion that the Crystal Palace should be preserved on its present site for the instruction and recreation of the people."

The Duke of Argyle said he was not ashamed to confess that his conviction has been arrived at through the ordeal of doubts. (Cheers.) The resolution he had to propose was—

"That in the opinion of this meeting the Crystal Palace can be maintained on the self-sanporting principle under a joint trust established to afford the highest guarantees for the use to which it may be applied."

The resolution having been seconded by Mr. Wakley, M.P., was also carried.

Measures having been taken for the appointment of a deputation to wait upon the Earl of Derby with a view of inducing Government to assent to a committee of inquiry, and for the presentation of a petition to be presented to the Queen for the preservation of the Building, Sir Joseph Paxton entered into a statement of re sonal matters and details connected with the erection and progress of the Crystal Palace, and read a letter from the Earl of Carlisle, the concluding paragraph of which ran thus:—

"You have my best wishes, and I make no scruple of saying at all times that I consider the destruction of the Crystal Palace would be as perverse and senseless an act of Vandalism as of the barbarous ages. To add, when the enjoyment it would be capable of affording to such large masses of the people is considered, a very unwise and ungracious one on the part of the Government and the aristocracy to insist upon."

The following gentlemen and gentlemen have consented to act as trustees if the proposed plan be carried out: viz. the Duke of Devonshire, Duke of Argyle, Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl of Harrowby, Earl of Burlington, Earl of Carlisle, Lord de Mauley, Viscount Palmerston, M.P., Lord Londesborough, Baron Lionel Rothschild, S. M. Peto, Esq., &c.

After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

Meetings were held in Southwark and other parts of the metropolis during the week in support of the same object.

Among the subscriptions received from England within the last few days (as one chiefly collected by the exertions of C. P. Roney, Esq.) in support of the projected Industria. Exhibition at Cork are—Messrs. Maudsley, Sons, and Field, engine-manufacturers, London, £10; Mr. John Asbury, railway carriage manufacturer, Manchester, £5; Messrs. J. Marshall and Sons, railway carriage builders, Birmingham, £5; Mr. W. H. Smith, 136, Strand, London, £2 2s.; Messrs. Warden and Sons, railway spike, screw, and bolt manufacturers, Birmingham, £1 1s.; Mr. Hibbert, Royal Hotel, Holyhead, £1 1s.

PATENT CASK MANUFACTURING MACHINE.—The patents of Mr. Rosenberg, which attracted attention somewhile since, from the completeness and rapidity with which casks of all descriptions could be made, are now in active operation in the Wenlock-road, City Canal Basin. So ther ugly simple is the whole affair, that a person with but the slightest know edge of mechanics might at once perceive himself the principles. Indeed there exists nothing of complexity in the matter. From the beginning of the one minute which it occupies to render a roughly shaped stave geometrical exact, to the end of the three minutes taken in compressing and adjusting the staves together, with bottom, top, and hoops complete by which a cask is formed—the eye readily follows, and the mind as quickly comprehends, the exquisite order and arrangement of the several parts. A tolerably sharp lad or girl may method a cooper cannot properly form more than 200 staves in a day, while one of these machines, with but two boys, finishes 3000 in the same time, every one of which is infallibly correct, and, whether wide or narrow, bears the same elliptic curve. The casks thus rapidly made are free from any chance of leakage, nor do they require the assistance of "flags" or any other extraneous substance, to be inserted between the staves to ensure the important desideratum. Extra machinery is in the course of formation, considerably to extend the working of these important patents, under the immediate direction of a wealthy association.

THE ENGINEERS' STRIKE.—The struggle between the amalgamated workmen and their employers has virtual y terminated in the unconditional submission of the workmen to the terms required from them, and such of the men as the employers can and will accept are hastening to offer their services, and to abjure the declaration which they so loudly denounced.

IRREGULARITIES IN THE MONEY-ORDER OFFICE.—It has frequently happened that persons who are engaged to proceed to foreign parts have been compelled to remain for a day or two after getting their money order, owing to the local postmaster having neglected to forward the counterpart or instruction to honour his draft; and a very distressing instance of the same kind occurred lately, when an order from Plymouth was presented at the Liverpool post office, and the poor woman who presented it was coolly told to call again the day after the morrow, as no orders had come to pay it. The consequence to the person in this case will be absolutely ruinous, herself and several children having to rest their passage money.

HILL HARBOURS FOR REFUGE.—On Wednesday a parliamentary document was printed showing the state of the harbours of refuge and the amounts estimated as necessary for the same. At Dover the estimated expense is £245,000; at Harwich, £110,000; Alderney, £620,000, at Jersey, £700 000; and Portland Harbour and Breakwater, £588,599. The engineers' reports state the progress of the works and the amount still required for the several harbours. For Portland Harbour, in the present year, £34 805 is required to be voted.

A letter from Kalisch, in the Constitutionnel of Bohemia, says: "Great activity now prevails in the streets of Warsaw, as, on account of the expected arrival of the Czar, the chief director of police has ordered all owners of property to have their houses newly whitewashed and the shopkeepers their signboards, coats, and windows painted afresh. The troops have already formed a large camp in the Powonskiwhen field.

Messrs. Shuttleworth and Co., of Fenchurch-street, have again taken a contract to supply 50,000 lb of tea for the use of the navy.

Among the sums to be voted by the House of Commons under the head of civil services is £40,200 in th present year on account of the census of the population. Last year £130,000 was voted.

It is the intention of Government to propose that a sum of £4000 be voted in the present year on account of the Menai Straits navigation.

The Duchess of Nassau, on the 23d ult., gave birth to an hereditary Prince.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Their Lordships sat for a short time,

BOROUGH OF ST. ALBAN'S.

The Earl of VERULAM begged to inform their Lordships that he had communicated to the Mayor of St. Alban's the permission of their Lordships to accept counsel to be heard against the Bill. He should take an opportunity of bringing in the Bill introduced for the disfranchisement of their borough. He had received a communication from the Mayor, thanking the Lordships for the kind privileges thus accorded them, and stating that it was not their intention to trouble their Lordships, or to take up the time of their House by any further proceeding. (Hear, hear.)

The bill then passed through committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

Several petitions were presented against the Militia Bill.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP MURRAY, OF DUBLIN.

Sir W. VERNER having seen a statement in the public prints, that a clergyman had shared at a public meet ng that the late Dr. Murray had at one time been elected by the Government of the day to accept the distinguished office of Privy Councillor, as the reward of his unblemished life and high reputation for wisdom, but that he had declined the proffered honour, begged to ask the noble Lord the member for London whether that statement was correct?

Lord J. RUSSELL said that the fact asserted to by the hon. and gallant member was correct material y, certain y should not have used the word "solicited." But it was the fact that, during the viceroyalty of Lord Anglesey, it was proposed that Archbishop Murray should take a seat at the Privy Council, and that he had declined to accept that distinction. He could only say that it gave him the great est satis a tion to mark that proposal to him, and he very much regretted that it was not accepted by a prelate whose character he esteemed and who e memory he revered. (Hear, hear.)

LEGAL EDUCATION.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, in reply to Mr. EWART, intimated that the benchers of the four inns had agreed to a plan for legal education, by the establishment of professorships and readerships, to be liberally endowed, the institution of private lectures in the d fferent departments of the law, and the requirement of a certificate o f attendance at such Lectures or a public examination previous to admission to the bar.

THE LOSS OF THE "BIRKENHEAD."

Major BERESFORD, in reply to a question by Mr. H. Drummond, bore a willing tribute to the courage and extraordinary proof of discipline displayed by the unfortunate soldiers who perished in the wreck of the Birkenhead, and promised that the claims of the survivors for compensation should be met in the most liberal spirit by the Government.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

MILITIA BILL.—ADJOURNED DEBATE

The adjourned debate (from Friday) on the bill was resumed by Mr. STANLEY, who contended that the opinions of the people throughout the country were against the bill, which they deemed to be unnecessary. If France had a greater military force than this country, we had on the other hand a vastly superior naval force, which, in his opinion, rendered all apprehension of a successful invasion absurd.

Lord SEYMOUR, amid the repeated cheers of the ministerial members, supported the second reading, on the ground that to refuse that stage would be to grant the passing of the militia bill. He combated Lord John Russell's objections, but intimated that in commit ee he would move to make the service entirely voluntary

General RAIN, as a military man, viewed the measure with very little satisfaction, and only voted for it in consequence of the assurance of the Government that it was brought forward on the recommendation of the Duke of Wellington. He suggested that instead of a militia, a force recruiting for the army should be taken in advance for 1853 and 1854, which would give an immediate addition of 15,000 to the army, to be reduced to 7500 from the end of the next year to the end of 1854, which would enable us to place all our regiments in an effective state, at an expense of about £460 000. This would be a much more efficient and much more economical addition to our national defences than the force proposed

Mr. ELLICE agreed with the last speaker that an addition to the regular army would be more effective, and, he believed, in the end, a more economical measure of security than the militia. But a reconsideration of our military power, by bringing home from Canada, the West Indies, and other colonies those forces which the great fac lities of communication rendered to a large extent now unnecessary, would enable us to provide for the defence of the country without incurring any additional expense.

Colonel LINDSAY supported the bill.

Mr. CARDWELL, in going to a division, thought to be read a second time, in order to give an opportunity for examining in comm tee the various suggestions which had been thrown out by hon. gentlemen who had already addressed the House.

Mr. CHAPLIN said that to facilitate the transport of troops the Government ought to advance £550,000 at five per cent, for thirty years, to carry out the proposed railway between Salisbury and Exeter. For such an advance unquestionable security would be given.

Admiral BERKELEY contended that it was impossible that this country could be taken by surprise in the way pointed out by Lord John Russell. To send over 50,000 men, the enemy would require to fit out 60 large steamers, with an escort of half as many more. With 4000 additional seamen and 1000 boys, he could at once, at an expense of £200,000, equip, arm, and man about 40 ships, which would be quite safficient to harrass and annoy, if not wholly to destroy, the expedition before ever it could reach the shores of this country Admiral DUNCOMBE thought that the defence of the country should not be left a together to the navy, and he therefore supported the second reading of the bill.

Mr. M. MILNES supported the bill, deeming it wise to lay the ground for establishing such a permanent force as might act, when necessary, as a large military reserve

Mr. BERNAL said it was a del usion to suppose that by 21 days' drill you could make soldiers of these new levies. He was of opinion that a force thus got together would prove inefficient for its intended purpose.

Mr. DENDES supported the bill, contending that ample preparations would be the best safeguard against any attempt at invasion.

Mr. M. GIBSON admitted that there had certainly been a panic upon this subject which at one time was very prevalent, but now it had disappeared before the object was attained for which it had been fomented. He believed it was pretty well understood, that after the second reading of the bill it would be laid aside—that, in fact, there was no intention to carry it into effect. He, for one, (as on a former occasion) when every argument put forward in its favour was an unworthy imputation against the good faith of those Governments with which it was said we were upon the most friendly terms, and of

Mr. S. HERBERT said two Governments in succession having stated the necessity for adding to the defences of the country, he was not prepared to take the responsibility of opposing the measure before the House. He would support the bill, because he thought it the cheapest and best mode to have a small and inexpensive force in time of peace, which would be capable of great expansion should the necessity for its services arise.

Mr. STANFORD said he could not suppose that France would ever think of a permanent occupation of this country; and although he had to guard against would be a sort of marauding expedition, consisting of 15,000 or 20,000. To meet such a danger he thought a militia force well calculated, and he should, therefore, support the bill.

Mr. H. BEVERLEY opposed, and Sir C. BURRELL supported the bill.

Mr. ROBERTS, on behalf of the Government, explained the defensive provisions, arising from the fo ces ips which France still entertained towards England for the check she had received at her hands in her aggre sion on the continental nations in the time of Napoleon. He could not say positively that any proposal to increase the regular army would have been charged against the Government as evidencing an intention to govern unconstitutionally; besides which, any addition to our regular military establishments would involve some countries to go on increasing their armaments. He opposed of the various suggestions to increase the number of pensioners and to raise volunteer corps; and, contending that a militia was the best means of meeting the difficulty, pointed out that the person who will vote that if the late Ministry, to show that it would bear much less severely on the men and on the country. That the plan was not unpopular, was proved by the fact that in Suffolk seventy men had already volunteered

The House then div ded, and the numbers were:—

For the second read ing	.. ..	315
Against it	.. ..	165
Majority	.. ..	— 9

The bill for abolishing the office of Secretary of bankrupts passed through committee; the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Bill was read a second time, and, after disposing of the other business on the paper, there being only 24 members present, the House was counted out at half past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The St. Alban's Disfranchisement Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Copyright Amendme t Act was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

ADULTERATION OF COFFEE.

Lord TORRINGTON presented a petition from the merchants and traders of London and Westminster, complaining of the Treasury minute with respect to the sale of coffee mixed with chicory, and contending for the necessity of rescinding that minute

The Duke of MONTROSE supported the prayer of the petition.

The Earl of DERBY admitted the importance of the petition, and expressed his dissent from the doctrine laid down on the subject by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer. Though there might be some difficulty in rescinding the Treasury minute complained of, the present Government would give their best endeavours to prevent the spurious mixture of deleterious articles with coffee.

The petition was then ordered to lie on the table.

The Earl of ROSSE gave notice that on Monday next he would move for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the operation of the acts relating to drainage in Ireland as administered by the Board of Works.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

MEMBERS' OATHS.

Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice that he would on a future day move for a committee of the whole House to consider the oaths taken by members

Mr. WALPOLE asked the Secretary of State for the Home D partment whether her Majesty's Ministers contemplated the introd uction of any measure for the e'oan of the ecclesiastical courts?

Mr. WALPOLE replied that the present Queen's Advocate had paid great attention to the subject, and had submitted to his consideration a draft bill. Whether the Government would undertake to adopt that measure, or any other, at the present moment, he could not, considering that the subject was a very complicated one, positively state.

THE REV. MR. BENNETT.

Colonel BOLTE rose to put to the Chancellor of the Exch equer the question of which he had given notice, and it was the more anxious to do so because he found in Battersby's Catholic Reporter a statement to the effect that Mr. Bennett, late of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, had been received into the Church. He now begged to ask whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer was prepared to state to the House what steps had been taken by the G overnment towards instituting the promised inquiry respecting the Rev. Mr. Bennett's appointment to the vicarage of Frome?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied that the Government ha l lost no time in addressing certain inquiries respecting the law herein, reference to this case to the law officers of the Crown. The replies of those learned gentlemen had to be printed, and he might say, only within those few minutes, and he should like to have some time to consider them before he spoke positively on the matters. (Hear, hear.) It was a subject which required the earliest consideration of the Government.

Mr. HORSMAN wished to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer a question with respect to the facts stated by him (Mr. Horsman) the other evening. He wished the right hon. gentleman to state whether or not it was the fact that three bonefied clergymen in the diocese of London signed a testimonial in favour of Mr. Bennett in the usual form; whether or not that was countersigned by the Bishop Bennett in the usual form; whether or not that was countersigned by the Bishop of London; and whether the House might have an opportunity of seeing that certificate?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER thought that, as a bonâ fide inquiry was to be pursued by the Government, to give any information as to details would not be satisfactory.

THE COUNTY FRANCHISE.

Mr L. KING moved for re-considera tion of the bill to give the franchise to £10 occupiers in counties, and to assimilate the procedure of county elections with that of boroughs. The principle of extending the county franchise had been often discussed but never assailed, and when he heard that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had claimed for his party the merit of introducing that principle, and the Home Secretary had sought to carry it out on the move, qualification of militia service, he could hardly anticipate a change of mind on the part of Ministers. It was a singular fact, while the population, wealth, and intelligence of the country had increased, the county constituency had diminished.

Mr. CAMPBELL opposed the motion, on the ground of the advanced period of the session, and the party feeling. The discussion of such a measure was calculated to excite. He also thought previous inquiry necessary.

Lord CLAUD HAMILTON followed Mr. Campbell's address, and strangers were ordered to withdraw, which they did.

Mr. HOME rose and expressed his surprise that a motion for the extension of the suffrage should be allowed to go to a division without a word from the leaders on either side. The details and some of the gross inequalities which at present existed, and the consequent non-representation of the people's wishes in the House of Commons, nothing, en passant, that in the division of the previous evening, with the exception of the member for Liverpool, the majority was composed of members representing small constituencies. He hoped Ministers would state distinctly what their intentions were.

Lord J. RUSSELL referred to the state of public business, and the desire of the Queen for a speedy dissolution, as reasons for not entertaining the motion. Before they assimilated the county to the borough franchise, they would satisfy themselves that the borough franchise had been a failure; but, as far as he could ascertain, both the county and the borough system had worked well—the counties being represented by persons in whom the landlords and occupiers of the soil had confidence, and with regard to the boroughs, the Opposition would scarcely object to the existing system, seeing that they filled the great majority of the borough seats. In another session Government would be ready to give attention to any well-considered measure for the extension of county elections.

Lord D. STUART supported the motion, in the hope that if the House should refuse at present to adopt the ten-pound franchise, it would at least agree to the other portions of the bill which were at the expense of county electors.

Mr. D. SEYMOUR thought the argument that the session was too far advanced to consider a proposition to extend the county franchise came too late, when they had, without discussion, received a bill to fill the House with paupers. Government, without the introduction of this kind, were furnishing the means to Lord John Russell to return to office.

Mr. HADDAT protested against the insinuation that the Opposition were retarding the public business, and called attention to the fact that Tuesdays were not Government days. He contended that if the representation in the counties as compared with that of the people at the head of the boroughs, the same preponderance would in favour of Free Trade which did exist in both cases. If the £10 occupiers were allowed to vote, and the result should be favourable to the Government, he should not complain. He should vote for the measure as a most judicious one, and one about which the great majority of the people were most anxious.

After some observations from Mr. Packe, Mr. Wakley, Mr. Buck, and Col. Sibthorp,

Lord J. RUSSELL considered members were perfectly justified in bringing forward motio s of this kind, seeing that the Government had not only evinced no desire to take the Tuesdays for their own business, but had reinstituly accepted the Thursdays. He thought the question of the representation, both in boroughs and counties, should be dealt with as a whole; and he hoped in the next session it would be considered, and that this and the other great question, Free Trade, would be finally settled.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER agreed that the question should be considered as a whole. If the great deficiency in the act of 1832 was in the representation of labour, it would not be supplied by the present bill. The remedy proposed by the Reform party for the inequalities of which they complained was not one that gave to labour and to property their respective rights, but one to put into the hands of labour the whole power. The complaint was, "labour is not represented;" and the proposal of Mr. Locke King and his school was, "let us represent property still more." He denied that the Government had associated themselves with the Opposition in an extension of democratic power. If a well matured measure for giving to the artisan class the suffrage, consistent with the maintenance of those institutions which were as much for their interest as of any other class, could be brought forward, a due consideration would be prepared to give it a calm and dispassionate consideration; but in the absence of any such measure, they would adhere to the existing settlement.

Sir B. HALL ridiculed the observation that they had just heard was to be considered but as a mere clap-trap for the hustings? If the Chancellor of the Exchequer really meant to give the franchise to the working classes, let him say so openly and boldly, and not by the insertion of 40-shilling, as well as that of Free Trade, he had thrown over the opinions he had held six months ago, and returned to the faith of his early in

After a few words in reply from Mr. LOCKE KING, the House divided:—

For the motion	.. .. ..	149
Against it	.. .. ..	202
Majority	.. .. ..	— 53

The motion was accordingly lost.

Sir W. PAGE WOOD obtained leave to introduce a bill to extend the provisions of the Trustees Act of 1850.

Leave was moved for papers respecting the recall of Colonel Outram from Baroda, and was proceeding to make a speech on the subject, when he was interrupted by a count out at a quarter to seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

COUNTY ELECTIONS EXPENSES.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER moved the first reading of the County Elections Expenses Bill

Mr. ANSTEY opposed the motion.

The House divided, and the numbers were—For the motion, 16; against it, 13: majority, 3

There not being forty members present, the House was counted; but, some additional members having entered, a House was made, and the business proceeded.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER said, that, as there was no House at the time, the division was of no avail, and he would take an opportunity of moving the first reading of the bill on some occasion when the House should be mo e full.

UNIVERSITY TESTS (SCOTLAND).

Mr. MONCREIFF moved the second reading of the Universities of Scotland Bill, the object of which was to abolish tests in the universities in Scotland.

Mr. F. SCOTT and Sir E. H. LEAGH spoke against the bill.

Mr. MONCREIFF, in support of the bill, said its object was to abolish those tests in the universities of Scotland, which were only established for the purpose of preventing Episcopacy in that country, and maintaining the Presbyterian religion, and the repeal of which could lead to no injurious effects upon the Established Church of Scotland. The vice of such tests was that they were always enforced just when they should not be so enforced, and were allowed to go into disuse just at the time when they should be called into operation.

Mr. BETHELL supported the bill, on the ground that the tests were inoperative, and that it was therefore inexpedient to maintain them.

Mr. Secretary WALPOLE could not see how any Government could support a bill which was clearly a violation of the treaty of Union. Such a change could only be justified upon the strongest grounds; and he must say that the case made out by the hon gentleman was far too weak to warrant the House in passing such a measure.

After a few words from Mr. ANSTEY and Mr. EWART in favour of the bill,

Sir A. CAMPBELL said the bill was not a violation of the Act of Union, for there were words in that act to the effect that it could only be altered by Parliament; but it was enjoined by the Coronation oath: and even if the bill were to receive the sanction of both Houses of Parliament, it could not receive the Royal assent without a violation of that oath.

Mr. HUME supported the bill.

Sir G. CLERK said that this appeared to him to be an attempt to do away ultimately with the tests in the English universities.

Lord J. RUSSELL was surprised to hear Mr. Walpole say that no case had been made out, when it appeared to him that he had never heard a more unanswerable case made out for any measure which had been ever brought into Parliament. The state of the existing law was so anomalous, that it ought to undergo the revision of Parliament, and he should therefore support the bill.

Mr. C. BAINE gave his cordial opposition to the bill, being of opinion that secular education must be upon religious education, and believing that the feeling of the whole population of Scotland was averse to the measure.

Mr. OSWALD supported the bill.

The House then divided, and the numbers were—For the second reading, 187; against it, 172: majority, 15.

The bill was consequently lost.

THE CHURCH IN THE COLONIES.

Mr. GLADSTONE, after a vain attempt on the part of Sir John Pakington to induce the right hon. gentleman to postpone the measure, moved the second reading of the Colonial Bishops Bill, the object of which was to place the Church of England in our colonies upon such a footing as would enable it to manage its own affairs, subject in certain particulars to such restrictions and restraints as Parliament might think fit to direct. He did not propose to give to the Church of England any preference in the colonies; on the contrary, he would not accept such a boon for the Church, believing that nothing could be more fatal to its progress—nothing more ruinous to its interests; his only object was to place all religions in our colonies upon a perfectly equal footing. The right hon. gentleman proceeded to argue for the necessity of giving a power of synodical action to the Church of England in our colonies, the mode of carrying out that object being left to the colonists themselves.

Sir J. PAKINGTON moved the adjournment of the debate, and it was accordingly adjourned to Wednesday, the 19th of May.—The House then rose.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Lord REDESDALE presided on the Woolsack, in the absence of the Lord Chancellor.

GENERAL ROSAS.

Earl GRANVILLE asked the noble Lord at the head of Foreign Affairs a question as to what has Lordship termed the extraordinary honours which he saw by the public papers had been paid to General Rosas on his arrival at Plymouth on Monday last. He wished to know whether these honours had been paid to General Rosas in accordance with official instruction.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said no order had proceeded from the Foreign Office, and he might say none from the Treasury either. The only communication which General Rosas had had with the Government was to leave the vessels in this country as quietly as possible as a private individual. He came to this country as a fugitive, and seeking an asylum; and, therefore, was not the time to proclaim his deeds, and to seek to visit them on him.

In reply to the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Earl of MALMESBURY said that he was not aware, but it was very probable, a Treasury order had been issued to prevent General Rosas's effects without search or duty. It was, however, a mistake to suppose that General Rosas was possessed of any great amount of wealth; on the contrary, it was that he had fled to this country almost destitute, and in a state of great poverty.

Lord BEAUMONT said that while they were on this subject he would take the opportunity of put ing a question to the noble Lord relative to the rumoured occupation of Monte Video by the Brazilian troops, and whether that occupation was merely intended as a temporary matter of police, or was likely to be attended by any important political results.

The Earl of MALMESBURY said he believed it was correct that there had been such an occupation, and that Monte Video was now in the possession of the Brazilian troops. He was informed, however, by the Brazilian Minister, that this occupation was only intended as a temporary measure.

The Exchequer Bills Bill, and the Sheep, &c. Contagious Disorders Prevention Bill, were severally passed through committee.

SANITARY CONDITION OF THE METROPOLIS.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY moved a resolution that the sanitary condition of the metropolis requires the immediate attention and interposition of her Majesty's Government. The noble Lord entered into the statistics of the sanitary condition of the metropolis, quoting largely from sessional returns, for the purpose of showing that the condition of the metropolis was extremely deplorable, to the health of the inhabitants.

The Earl of DERBY expressed his assent to the motion, if the words "and interposition" were struck out.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

"HOUSEHOLD NARRATIVE."

Mr SCHOLEFIELD said, as some uncertainty prevailed with reference to the intentions of the Government as to further prosecuting the Household Narrative for infringing the Stamp Act, he should therefore be glad if the learned Attorney-General would state distinctly what was intended to be done.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said the law officers of the Crown, as well as Mr. Justice Crompton, were dissatisfied with the decision of the Court of Exchequer, and, therefore, he had recommended that a fresh suit should be commenced, on which he had no doubt that the Court of Exchequer would decide according to their previous decision, without any argument, and then the matter could be carried to a court of appeal, when the law would be finally settled.

Mr. HUME wished to know whether these publications could not be tested without the enormous cost of the Court of Exchequer and the House of Lords?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, as a general rule, he must withhold his sanction to any proceeding which might endanger her Majesty's revenue.

NEW WRIT.

On the motion of an hon. member a new writ was ordered for the election of a Knight of the Shire for Carmarthenshire, in the room of the Hon. Mr. Rice Trevor, now Lord Dynevor.

MILITIA BILL.

Mr. COBDEN gave notice, that, for the better consideration of the Militia Bill, he would on Monday move that certain returns connected with the army, ordnance, and navy be laid before the House, and that the bill be not further proceeded with until such returns were furnished to the House.

ECCLESIASTICAL REFORM.

The Marquis of BLANDFORD moved for leave to bring in a bill to enable her Majesty further to regulate the duty of ecclesiastical personages, and to make better provision for the management and distribution of episcopal and capitular revenues. The noble Marquis said he had two objects in view in bringing forward this motion: the one was to enable the Church to extend its influence through all the modifications of our rapidly extending population; and the other, to provide a remedy for the spiritual destitution already in existence. To carry out these objects, the noble Lord gave an outline of a plan, the leading features of which were the correction of certain anomalies which now exist in ecclesiastical appointments, and the appropriation of the revenues pertaining to them to the object of extending the benefits of the Establishment. He proposed the suspension of unnecessary dignities and the profitable occupancy of ecclesiastical residences, the abolition of sinecure cathedral appointments, including canonries without care of souls, and a reduction of the allowances to certain dignitaries of the Church. He proposed that in future income of the Archbishop of Canterbury should be £10,000, that of the Archbishop of York, £8000; the Bishop of London, £5000; and the Bishop of Winchester, £5000. He calculated from these sources there would be derived no less than £40,000 per annum towards the establishment of new seas, and £27,000 for the general purposes of the Church. The management of Church property he proposed to transfer to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Lord R. GROSVENOR seconded the motion.

Mr. Secretary WALPOLE would offer no objection to the introduction of the measure, agreeing as he did that it was desirable to create additional sees, and to provide for the better management of Church property.

After a short discussion, leave was given to bring in the bill.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. HEYWOOD moved for a select committee to consider the preservation of the Crystal Palace, or the central portion thereof, with a view to its applicability to purposes of public instruction and recreation.

Mr. HUME seconded the motion.

Colonel SITHORP opposed it.

Lord J. MANNERS said that among the principal causes which had removed the obstacles in the way of the erection of the Crystal Palace, the most cogent was the assurance and specific undertaking that the Building should be of a temporary character, and should be immediately removed after it had served its purposes. Against that undertaking her Majesty's Government could not now act with the view of preserving the Palace on its present site. They, therefore, were of opinion that it ought to be removed; but they did not mean to act in any hostile spirit in the matter, but would readily allow all the necessary time and facilities for its convenient removal to another site; and he suggested the vicinity of Battersea as furnishing a most suitable and eligible site. He hoped the House would reject the motion.

Mr. LABOUCHERE and Lord SEYMOUR opposed the motion.

Lord PALMERSTON supported the motion.

After some further discussion, the House divided—

For the motion	103
Against it	221
Majority against the motion	—118

The motion was accordingly lost.

Adjourned at ten minutes to one o'clock.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I P, of Lisbon—Look at Mr Staunton's problem No 479, once more. It is palpably evident that at the fourth move, when White takes the K B pawn in passing he places the Black King in check with his Queen. He had given check with his Queen at the third move, and Black when pressed to cover the check with his K B Pawn; but at this Pawn, reserved to its march and taken off the board, just as if it had moved only one step, the Black King remained still in check of the White Queen. Your error cannot be examined.

W S L—You are wrong. While had just played his Rook back to K R 3d, to prevent the Queen's move you suggest.

F W A, Brussels, is thanked both for the game and for the compliment implied by his considerate order.

G P. The solution played for was one of Mochi's beautiful Terrace Chessboard

J K, of Inverkeithing. The "Chess-Player's Companion," by the same author

W H S, Bermuda. From the face of a King leaving hon. quarters does not invariably state his right to Castle. In the case mentioned, "G" was justified, therefore, in Castling, if there were no other piece to be moved.

CORONA—We should have much pleasure in examining the back Problems again, to test your correspondent's new solution, if time permitted; but duty to hundreds of other communicants forbids it. He should favour us with an address.

R H W—The key moves to Enigma No 478 are—. B to Q B 5th. 2. B to Q 7th 2. R to K R 3d. The rest are obvious.

KILKENNY—The key move to Enigma 726 is—1. R to Q B 3d. 2 See notice above to Sydney.

R M, of Ashford, is also thanked, for the following

H W F—No 5 shall appear. No 6 has two solutions

CLERK V—Just should send your name to Mr Lankester, the secretary, and join the St George's Chess Club. The subscription is three guineas a year only (an entrance fee)

ENIGMATIST—The analysis of the Bishop's fiendish by Messrs Petroff and Bianchi, being much too long for insertion in this Journal, has been transferred, by the desire of the authors, to the Chess-player's Chronicle; and the first part, we believe, will be given in the May number

O D L—He can obtain a Queen for every Pawn he advances to the 8 h sq, even while his original Queen has to be found

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 479 by The Tyneter, who wish Correspondents would write their signatures legibly; Tyro, J B S, S E T V, Mitchell, Ernest, Philo-Judy, Finch, Argus, Lex, F R S, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 480 by R P W, is correct

SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No 481, by W F L of Salisbury, Stevens, J M of Sherburn, The Tyne or, Jack of Shrewsbury, R B of Ashford, F C, "Farnwood," Bath Duo, Mew, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF ENIGMA No 731, by Stevens, Jack o' Shrewsbury R B, are correct

SOLUTIONS OF ENIGMAS, by A B C, Mona, J P, of Lisbon; J E B, F M B, J M, are correct.

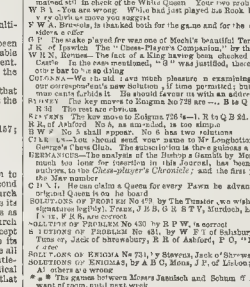
All others are wrong

* * The games between Messrs Jaenisch and Schnus are unavoidably postponed, from want of room, until next week

PROBLEM No. 482.

From the unpublished MS. of the Rev. H. BOLTON.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in eight moves.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

The following is one of the games played during the late Chess gathering between Major Jaenisch and Mr. Staunton. (From the "Chess Tournament a collection of the games played at this celebrated assemblage." BOHN, London, 1852.)

(King's Gambit evaded.)

BLACK (Major J.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Major J.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	36. h to Q 3d	P to K Kt 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P to Q 4th	37. R to Q 2d	P to K Kt 5th (ch)
3. P takes Q P	P to K 5th (a)	38. K to K Kt 2d	R to K 8th (e)
4. Kt to Q B 3d (b)	Kt to K B 3d	39. K to K 3d	R to K 6th (ch)
5. P to Q 3d	B to Q K 2d	40. K to K 2d	P to K B 4th
6. P takes P	Kt takes K P	41. Kt to Q 4th	P to K B 5th
7. Q to her 4th	B takes Kt (ch)	42. K to Q 2d	P to K B 6th
8. P takes B	Castles	43. B to K B 5th	B takes B
9. Kt to K B 3d	K R to K sq	44. Kt takes B	R to Q R 6th (f)
10. Kt to K 5th	K Kt to Q 4d (c)	45. K to K B 4th (ch)	K to B sq
11. B to Q Kt 2d	K R to K 6th	46. Kt takes K Kt P	R takes Q R P (g)
12. Q to K B 2d	Kt to Q B 5th	47. Kt to B 3d	R to Q R 8th (ch)
13. Castles on Q's side (d)	Kt takes B	48. K to Q 4d	R takes R (ch)
14. K takes Kt	Q to Q 3d	49. Kt takes R	K to Q 2d
15. Q R to Q 5th	R takes K B P	50. Kt to K 3d	K to Q 3d
16. R takes R	Q takes R	51. K to her sq	K to K 4th
17. Q to Q 4th	Q to her 3d	52. K to Q 2d	K to K 5th
18. P to K sq	B to Q sq	53. P to Q B 3d	P to Q R 4th
19. B to Q 3d	P to K R 3d	54. h to K Kt 4th	K to Q B 4th
20. P to K Kt 4th	R to Q R 3d	55. Kt to K 3d (ch)	K to K 5th
21. P to K Kt 5th	Kt to Q R 4th	56. P to Q 6th (ch)	P takes P
22. P takes P	Kt to Q B 5th (ch)	57. Kt to Q 5th (ch)	K to K 5th
23. K to Q Kt sq	Q takes P at K B 3d	58. Kt takes Q Kt P	K to K B 6th (ch)
24. K to K Kt sq	R to K sq	59. K to K sq	Kt to Q 6th (ch)
25. Kt to K 5th	Kt to Q K 3d	60. K to Q 2d	K to K 4th
26. B to Q 4th	Q to K B 3d	61. P to K R 4th	K to B 4th
27. Kt to K B 3d	Q takes Q (ch)	62. K to K 3d	K to K 5th
28. K Kt takes Q	Kt to Q B 5th	63. P to K R 5th	K takes P (ch)
29. Kt to Q K 3d	P to Q Kt 3d	64. K to Q B 5th	R takes Q P (ch)
30. Kt to K sq	B to K 4th	65. K takes P	P to Q R 5th
31. K to B sq	R to Q 6th	66. K to K 4th	P to Q R 6th
32. K to Q 2d	Kt to K 5th (ch)	67. K to Q 6th	K to K 6th (ch)
33. K to K 3d	h at to K Kt 4th (dis ch)	68. K to K 4th	K to Q 8th
34. K to K B 4th	P to K B 3d*	69. P to Q B 4th	K to Q Kt 7th
35. K to K R 2d	Kt to K R 6th (ch)	70. K takes P	Kt takes P

And Black resigns.

(a) The mode of evading the King's Gambit has long been known as a cess really practised in England. Jaenisch playing the move attributed to Lewis of Edinburgh by Mr. Lonnisch in an article on the subject in the Schachzeitung for June, 1850, entitled "Partie zwischen Lewis und Staunton" from which it appears that the opening was lately been brought into vogue in Vienna by Messrs Falkner and Ledert. two An other player of some note. The move of P to K 5th is not really an embarrassing one to the first player, for it proves not to be a defensive, but a counter attack of considerable power.

(b) In a note which the late Mr Staunton appended to the article mentioned, the line of play recommended as the best for the first player is to move his K B to Q 3d (checking) the game then proceeds in the manner following:—

BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
4. K to Q Kt 5th (ch)	P to Q B 3d
(Interposing the Q B is justly decried by Mr Falkbeer, the author of the analysis, as inferior)		7. P to Q 4th	K B to Q 3d
5. P takes P	P takes P
6. B to Q 4th	Kt to K B 3d

Mr Harrwitz considers this is the second player's best move, and observes that the advantage of position which he has given up is quite sufficient to compensate for the loss of his Pawn From a subsequent number of the Schachzeitung it appears that Mr Falkbeer, in lead ing over 7. Kt to Q 3d, is in the habit of moving 7. Q to her Kt 3d, and has found it successful in annihilating the counter-attack against many strong opponents. We must confess, that neither 7. K to Q 3d, nor 7. Q to her Kt 3d, appears to us to avail much, and cannot help preferring a move which occurred in reason in this opening which was played with Major Jaenisch. The move was 7. Q Kt to Q 2d; and to this, even with the assistance of our distinguished opponent, perhaps one more acute and unwearied analyser than we have not yet discovered any perfect y satisfactory answer for the first player. In one of our games the after-move ran thus:—

BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
7.	Q Kt to Q 2d	10. Q Kt to Q B 3d	B to Q Kt 5th
8. Kt to K 2d	Q Kt to his 3d	11. Castles	B takes Kt
9. K B to Q Kt 3d	B to Q R 3d.	12. P takes B	K Kt to Q 4th

And the second player has undoubtedly the superior game. If, at the 11th move the first player had moved his Q Kt to Q 2d, the following seems a probable continuation:—

BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
11. Q B to Q 3d	Castles	12. Castles

(Taking the K P, though a natural move, is not a good one, since his opponent might first play Q to his Kt sq, checking, and then play Kt R to K sq).

BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
12.	K B takes Q Kt	13. P takes B	Q Kt to Q 4th

And again the second player has the advantage

(c) A bar better, we believe, than the more apparent move of Kt to K B 3d.

(d) A certainly tailed to make the most of the advantages he acquired in the beginning

(e) Threatening mate next move.

(f) The only possible move to secure his advantage of position.

(g) Again threatening mate. The way in which White's Kt and K B P confine the adverse King, is remarkable.

(h) A good conception. Without great care now, White will be unable to win.

(i) Intending to march on with his K B P

(k) K to Kt 6 h would have enabled White to win, we think; but taking the Pawn, though a slower, was a surer process.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE COMMAND IN AUSTRALIA.—Major-General James Campbell, K H., an old Peninsular soldier and a regimental officer, upwards of twenty years commanding the 98th Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the troops in Austria and its dependences, which includes New Zealand. Major-General Campbell, we understand, will leave England about July or August next, by one of the new line of steamers, for Sydney.

THE EXPEDITION TO THE SOUTH SEAS.—The Herald, 28, Captain Henry Mangles Denham, arrived at Woolwich in the latter part of last week, from Chatham, and, with her tender, the Torch steam-vessel, Lieut.-Commander Chimmo, will be speedily ready to leave on their exploring voyage to the South Seas. The Herald will take on board, at Woolwich, her chronometers from Greenwich, and a great variety of presents for the natives of the southern islands. The Herald has been fitted and equipped in the most efficient manner for the interesting service in which she will be engaged, with her tender the Torch, for the long period of from five to seven years.

CHATHAM.—Orders have been received at this garrison to prepare barrack-room for the reception of detachments of infantry, who, in common with the Royal Sappers and Miners of the Queen's service, and the troops of the Hon. East India Company's depôt from Warley Barracks, are to be placed under the sanitary regulations, and the new system of drill and discipline carried into effect by the officers of that corps in the art of constructing field works for purposes of attack and defence.

"FIRE QUEENSES" IN MAIL STEAMERS.—The crew of the Ripon, which has just left with the overland mail, were drilled previous to their departure by Captain Austen, the new Admiralty superintendent of mail packets at Southampton, and went through all the evolutions necessary in case of fire on board, particularly with reference to managing and lowering the boats, &c. It is expected that ultimately these exercises will be repeated also on board the mail packets while they are at sea, under the superintendence of the Admiralty officers.

THE "EREBUS" AND "TERROR."—We have reason to believe that Sir Edward Parry, and other experienced Arctic voyagers, entertain the opinion that the ships seen by the merchantmen attached to the iceberg, off Newfoundland, were in reality the Erebus and Terror, abandoned by Sir John Franklin and his companions.—United Service Gazette.

SEAMEN'S HOSPITAL.—At the usual anniversary dinner, which took place at the London Tavern, on Monday, Mr Hume, the chief, in his speech testimony to the vast improvement which had taken place in the condition of the merchant seamen since he first went on board an Indiaman, 56 years ago. The benefits of the charity had now been conferred on no less a number than 65,387 patients, of whom nearly one-half were foreigners. During the evening subscriptions to the amount of £1350 were announced, among which included 100 guineas from her Majesty, £500 from the Trinity Corporation, £20 from the Emperor of Russia, 100 guineas from the East India Company, and £200 from the Duke of Northumberland.

Admiral Parker's flag-ship Queen, 116 guns, Captain Wise, arrived at Portsmouth from the Mediterranean on Tuesday morning. Neither the Retribution nor Sampson steam-frigates, which had been sent to look out for her, had failed in with her.

Instructions have been issued by the Admiralty ordering that the Admiralty agents on the Brazilian, Mediterranean, Peninsular, and West India stations shall be repeatedly transferred from one station to another, in order that they may not become intimately acquainted with the pilotage of the routes and ports connected with each of those stations.

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION.—THE WELLINGTON CAMPAIGNS.

The proprietors of the Gallery of Illustration in Regent-street, encouraged by the unexampled success of their first attempt, the "Overland to India," have produced a new series of scenic realities upon a subject which must ever be of national and intellectual interest, the "Campaigns of the Duke of Wellington." We are informed in the descriptive guide that nearly two years have been occupied in the preparation of this gigantic diorama, as we can well believe on considering the vast number of incidents which it embraces, the scenes of which stretch from Hindostan to the north of Europe. Great accuracy is vouched for in regard to the features of the spots themselves; Mr. W. Telbin having himself visited Spain and Portugal to obtain the necessary sketches for the Peninsular campaign, Mr. John Burnett having supplied drawings of the field of Waterloo, and the Indian scenery being obtained from the most authentic sources. The panorama commences with the birth-place of the great hero, Dangan Castle, in the county of Meath, and then takes us at once to India, where a terrible scene of the storming of Seringapatam, with which the Duke (then Colonel Wellesley) inaugurated his brilliant and world-wide career; then follow, interrelated by their appropriate episodes, the storming of the Droog, or Hill Fort, on the road to Assaye, and the bloody, but decisive victory of that name. The Peninsular campaign opens with a very beautiful view of Lisbon. In the numerous tableaux which follow, illustrative of the victorious course of our army, the proprietors announce that they do not profess to depict battles and sieges with rigid regard to technical military details, but rather to give just ideas of sites, actions, local colour, costumes, &c. In this, as regards pictorial effect, they are decidedly right, whilst for historical usefulness there is more to be attained by an accurate representation of the bearings of the various theatres of conflict, accompanied by intelligent viva voce explanations, than from a confused mass or sobriety in the feat of action, and necessarily to a great extent concealed by smoke. The names of Grieve, Telbin, and Absolon are a sufficient guarantee for the artistic execution of the varied succession of scenery thus brought before us; and where the contending forces are introduced, they are realised with an exactitude almost equal to the best groupings of the stage. Curious effects of atmosphere, of water, and of light are studied, to give greater effect to particular scenes; as, for instance, very happily in the interior of the chapel where the body of General Craufurd was laid after the battle of Ciudad Rodrigo, and which Lord Wellington visits by candle light at night, accompanied by some of his attendants. All of a sudden the living spectators of the sad scene quit the sacred spot, the candles are extinguished, and nothing remains but the corpse, wrapped in its martial cloak, dimly distinguishable by the light of the moon. Upon the whole, however, perhaps the most striking and effective scene is that of the storming of San Sebastian, of which our Artist has taken the accompanying Sketch, and of which the particulars will always be read with lively interest.

The town of San Sebastian is built in a conical shape, on an isthmus of the sea, isolated by a tidal river. The hill above about 400 feet high, is fronted strongly. To dislodge the French from this hold in the rear of his advance, was essential to Lord Wellington. The harbour, however, offered a point for embarkation, which no seeming might be necessary from the increased levity of the Spaniards and Portuguese towards the English, their deliverers. Unable to be everywhere at once, Lord Wellington confided the siege to Sir Thomas Graham. The place was excellently garrisoned by 3000 men, under General Rey, and the French, "masters of the sea," supplied him amply. Graham, after a fruitless attempt by escalade, commenced regular approaches, and two breaches above, apparently practicable, invited assault, which Lord Wellington ordered for the 31st, at low tide.

The morning broke heavily, and when the British storming party, scarred by vollies from all sides, reached the breach which seemed so wide, it was found to be so narrow as barely to admit single files to enter. None outlived the attempt. The troops then swarmed up the steep, melted away under the consuming fire of the French, and the hill sides were covered with dead and wounded. Then was adopted the bold resolution of again opening the artillery against the breach, and showers of shot and shells passed narrowly over the heads of the storming parties; while the practice was so perfect that the discharge dealt confusion and havoc in the enemy, few of the assailants were hurt, none disheartened, but all were rapidly reseated. Meanwhile, the rising tide cut off reinforcements or any further assaults, and already to the verge of desperation. In this crisis, a shell from the British batteries set fire to a reserve of ammunition accumulated in the rear of the besieged, when hundreds of the French grenadiers were destroyed by the explosion. During the confusion, an amid eddies of smoke and flames, the assailants rushed on the bewildered garrison, and the fortress was won at the fearful expense of 5000 brave men and officers, who there perished, as on former occasions, the crimes of politicians. An awful thunder-cloud and storm now fell down from the mountains, and closed, like a curtain p ll, this tragedy.

The Panorama terminates with the Battle of Waterloo, the final charge of which is very successfully presented.

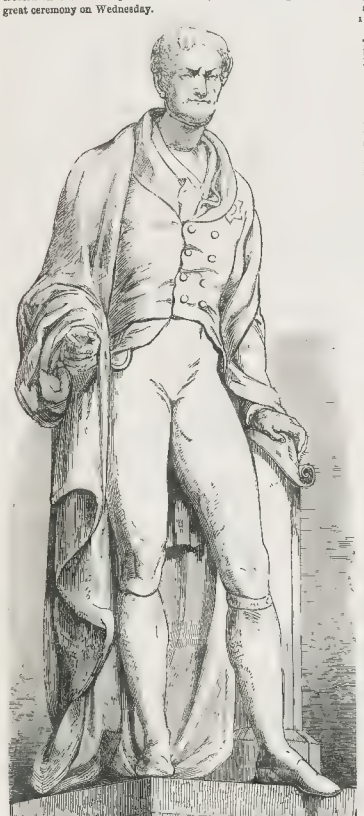
On Monday her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, their Royal Highnesses the Princess Royal, Prince Alfred, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena, and attended by the Hon. Eleanor Stanley, Lord Colville, and Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour, honoured the Gallery with a private visit, to view the new Diorama.

During the week the following distinguished personages have also visited the Dioramas—viz. the Marquis of Douro, the Dowager Countess of Jersey and party, Earl de Grey, the Earl and Countess of Devon, Lord and Lady Palmerston, accompanied by Lady William Russell; the Marquis D'Azeglio (Sardinian Minister), Mr. Fleming, Lord and Lady Mahon, &c,

"THE STORMING OF SAN SEBASTIAN," FROM THE NEW DIORAMA OF THE CAMPAIGNS OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, AT THE GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION, REGENT-STREET.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

BRONZE STATUE OF THE DUKE OF RUTLAND.

THIS noble tribute to his Grace the Duke of Rutland has just been erected in the market-place at Leicester, and was inaugurated with great ceremony on Wednesday.



COLOSSAL BRONZE STATUE OF THE DUKE OF RUTLAND, JUST ERECTED AT LEICESTER.

The Statue, which has been ably executed in bronze, by Mr. E. Davis, represents the Duke of Rutland in the act of receiving the address voted to his Grace on the fiftieth anniversary of his holding the office of Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Leicester. The figure is colossal in size, and is placed upon a lofty stone pedestal, which bears the following inscription:—

John Henry Duke of Rutland, K.G., Lord-Lieutenant of Leicestershire. The inhabitants of the county and towns, during the fiftieth anniversary of his high office, with universal consent, caused this Statue to be erected. 1850. Proceri tibi, maiores largimur honores.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

ON Saturday, an original drama by Mr. Mark Lemon was produced. It is entitled "Mind your own Business." The character to which this title applies was enacted by Mr. Buckstone, and named Mr. Oddiman. He is a rural meddlesome person, who interferes in the love-makings and other doings of his village. Without being a necessary agent in the drama, he nevertheless serves to precipitate matters, especially in the first act. Marian Morrison (Miss Reynolds) is loved by her neighbour, Mr. Verdon (Mr. Webster), who has wooed her through her sister Fanny (Mrs. Stirling). The girl, however, has formed an attachment for a young artist, Arthur Mowbray (Mr. Howe). Busybody misinterprets these facts, and informs Verdon, who has made the usual application to the lady's father, that he is accepted, and brings him on the scene to be rejected. Verdon, thinking that he has been made the victim of coquetry, flies from his estate, and, in the second act, is shown in London, drinking himself to death. Parties of pleasure, also, he visits, and forms one at a dejeuner, Mrs. Smythe's (Mrs. Buckingham), the wife of a rich colonial adventurer, who had been formerly a footman (Mr. Keeley), now shelved by his loving spouse on account of his mispronouncing the W's and other obvious vulgarities. The ex-flunky, however, has a soul, and, acting on a suggestion of Oddiman's, breaks up the party by appearing in his cast-off footman's clothes. All by the unwelcome apparition; and the end is, that a separation is consummated between Mr. and Mrs. Smythe. At this Mrs. Smythe's we find, too, Fanny Morrison, recommended as lady's companion by Mr. Oddiman. Improper proposals are made to her by one of the guests, Mr. Cuprum, M.P. (Mr. Leigh Murray), and the poor girl flies to save her honour. In the third act we find her pursued by her tempter to a roadside inn; but fortunately Verdon has also stopped there, and is summoned by her cries to the rescue. Verdon, indeed, had not long since renewed his acquaintance with Fanny, who had followed the unhappy man from Mrs. Smythe's to his hotel, and in a moment of vicious delirium recalled him to himself and past recollections. This is the scene which forms the subject of our illustration. Acting on her advice, Verdon had resolved to travel homeward; and now she is rewarded for her virtuous interposition. A meeting of all parties soon takes place, and Marian has an opportunity of vindicating her conduct, and proving to Verdon, that, as it was to her sister Fanny his former courtship had been confided, his real passion must also have been for her. Reflection and internal conviction make him ascertain that this is psychologically true; and thus his heart-wounds are at last healed by the discovery of the right object of its love.

Such is the leading argument of this drama, which is throughout written with care, point, and refinement of style. Perhaps it owes everything to the polish of dialogue, which carries the writer safely through many situations and dramatic difficulties which really require more rigorous treatment. Neither is the play perfect in structure, there being more than one needless link, and many stirring passages that serve no other purpose than temporary excitement, leading themselves to nothing. Considering these faults, the play has great merits as a picture of life and a story of interest. It was well acted throughout; but the burthen lay on Mr. Webster, who, as the rustic gentleman and disappointed lover, seeking oblivion in the pleasure that leads to premature death, had a character which none can perform so well as he. We are happy to record that the house was full; and, at the fall of the curtain, the applause universal

Last week it should have been stated that the new burlesque of "O, Gemini" is the joint production of Mr. Mark Lemon and Mr. Gilbert à Beckett.

SCENE FROM THE NEW COMIC DRAMA OF "MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THE TAXES WHICH OBSTRUCT THE SPREAD OF EDUCATION.

There is scarcely any political or social question of importance which does not require to be presented repeatedly, and in different points of view, to public consideration—to be well ventilated, as the phrase is—before the force of popular opinion can be brought to bear upon it with irresistible effect so as to dissipate completely, like mists before the power of the sun, all objections which are raised against its just and final settlement.

The impediments thrown in the way to obstruct the propagation of popular instruction and knowledge, by the fiscal exactions and harassing regulations which the existing state of the law empowers the Excise to make at the very outset of the formation and manufacture of the means and instruments of education—viz. books, newspapers, and other periodicals—present a case of this kind. These impediments to the cultivation of the mind and intellect of the multitude are not appreciated at their full enormity by the public opinion and judgment of the country at large, else they would be at once swept away as a degrading and mischievous remnant of the barbarous legislation of an unenlightened age.

In order, then, to put the whole question in its true light fully before the public, we give, in a condensed form, the speech of the Right Hon. Milner Gibson, M.P. for Manchester, on Thursday week, in the House of Commons, which treats the subject with rare ability and completeness:—

Mr. M. GIBSON, who had a notice on the paper in the following terms —"To bring under the notice of the House the policy of deriving revenue from taxes on knowledge, and to move, in separate resolutions, that such illiberal arrangements ought to be made as will enable the General Post Office to dispense with the duty on paper; that the newspaper stamp ought to be abolished; and that the tax on advertisements ought to be repealed," —said that, in bringing under the consideration of the House a proposal for the repeal of any portion of taxation, and for lessening thereby the public income of the country, a member of that House laboured under considerable difficulties, for there naturally arose an impression in the minds of honourable gentlemen that such a proposition proceeded from what was termed "an economical spirit" in matters of taxation. If that the motion had been dictated by some clamour out of doors, resulting from an indisposition to pay any tax whatever. He admitted that there were persons rather indiscriminating in the course they took with reference to a repeal of taxation; but he, for one, had always endeavoured to avoid supporting any motion or encouraging any views for the repeal of taxation, unless he had first satisfied himself as to the grounds on which such views were based. He hoped, therefore, he might be understood as bringing forward the present motion on grounds of public policy in reference to the character of the taxes themselves, and their effect on the morals and industry of the nation, rather than on the effect they had in increasing the price of particular articles to the consumers of this country. Another difficulty under which he laboured was connected with the financial statement, which the Government would shortly submit to the House. They were sometimes told, after the Budget had been laid before Parliament, that, as the financial arrangements for the year were completed, it was improper to bring forward any motion for a repeal of taxation; and at other times he was told it was improper to bring forward a motion of this kind before the financial statement was made. Thus, according to these two views, it would be impossible for an independent member to find any fitting time to submit to the House a proposal for the repeal of taxation. (Hear, hear.) It concerned, however, that it was the legitimate function of a member of that House, without in the slightest degree questioning the necessity on the part of Government to exercise the most extreme caution before they parted with any portion of the public income of the country, to review the sources of our taxation, and ascertain whether the money to be raised for the support of our establishments might not be raised in a better manner than at present. In bringing forward the present motion, he would not ask the Government, that he did not represent, to act for any suffering interest. Neither papermakers, nor newspaper proprietors, nor the publishers of cheap literature did he profess to represent on the present occasion. His desire was simply to represent the public interests; and if it could be alleged as an answer to his case, that paper-makers, paper manufacturers were not in favour of his motion, or that particular newspaper proprietors would rather retain the stamp duty in reference to certain vested interests, he distinctly stated that that was no argument against the public case he was now urging on public grounds, and that he asked for the repeal of these taxes. Neither could he permit this question to be viewed as a party one. It would be in the recollection of the House, that two sessions ago he submitted the question to its consideration, and was then supported by gentlemen of all political views; he, therefore, now submitted the subject without feeling that he was advocating a party question, which was to give, as it were, a triumph to gentlemen on one side of the House over gentlemen on the other; but he conceived he was advocating a question which had its foundation simply in the general interests of the community, and of persons of all political parties. The question he was now submitting to the House had the good fortune to be supported two sessions ago by no less than four distinguished members of the present Government. (Hear.) Such a position was an enviable one for an independent member of Parliament, and he should not assume, in any remarks he might make, that there was any hostility on the part of the Government to the motion he was about to submit to the House, though he could fancy it just possible that official restraint might, under peculiar circumstances, prevent those who were really disposed to be favourable to the cause from agreeing to his motion at that particular moment. The first proposal he should make had reference simply to the question of the paper duty, and here he could remind the House, that, in submitting a similar motion for the repeal of the taxes on knowledge, he did not propose to ask any gentleman to commit himself to a large reduction of taxation at the present moment. He did not propose that the three proposals for the remission of the paper duty, the newspaper stamp duty, and the tax on advertisements, should be decided on by the House in one vote. He meant to ask the opinion of the House on each proposition separately, so that those who were in favour of one proposition might vote for it without reference to the others. His own opinion, however, was, that all the three propositions should be carried. With respect to the first proposition, respecting the duty on paper, he was only calling on the House to agree to the resolution come to by one of its own committees in 1834. Nay, he was not asking the House to go so far as the resolution of its own committee adopted at a time when the public revenue and the financial condition of the country admitted of much less experiment with taxation. The committee of 1834 came to the resolution, that it was desirable that the duty on paper, in conjunction with two other duties, which he need not now refer to, should rest on general and commercial grounds, totally repealed without delay. Now, his proposition was not so strong as that of the committee of 1834: it was simply, "that such financial arrangements ought to be made as would enable Parliament to dispense with the duty on paper." That was a moderate proposition, and only called upon the House to pass an opinion that the duty on paper was not such a tax as ought to be considered part of our permanent system of taxation. He was not asking them to pass their pen through the act of Parliament which imposed the duty on paper, but only to suggest to the Government that in their financial arrangements they would be consulting the permanent interests of the country if they would make such arrangements as with safety to the public revenue would admit of the repeal of the paper duty. This he held to be a most moderate and legitimate proposition to submit to the House, and one which he hoped no gentleman, who was not in favour of the paper duty as being a good tax, would be prepared to resist. He might have to notice the injurious effect of the paper duty in impeding the circulation of knowledge; but, if he were to omit all allusion to the oppressive regulations consequent upon it, under which the manufacturer laboured, and to the bad effect of the paper duty in preventing the employment of labour, and in preventing this country becoming an exporting country of paper, he should not do full justice to the subject. With regard to the oppressive regulations, he admitted that that was but a complaint against the whole Excise system, but he did not admit that so strong a case with respect to the manufacture itself and the employment of labour could be made out from any other article on which the Excise duty fell as could be made out in reference to paper. He would remind the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that the regulations in reference to the manufacture of paper were most oppressive and vexatious, making it scarcely possible for the manufacturer to touch the very paper he had made. Nevertheless, they were not found sufficient to protect the honest manufacturer from the fraudulent papermaker. It was an undeniable fact that large quantities of paper were sold which it was notorious had never paid the Excise duty, and this paper came in direct competition with that manufactured by the fair and honest trader. With respect to the employment of labour, let him, as he was addressing a Government which felt for the agricultural interest, remind the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the manufacture of paper was one of our rural manufactures, and that the clear streams of Buckinghamshire were best adapted for carrying on the paper manufacture. (Hear.) The Excise duty, however, had shut up all the paper-mills by the side of those streams, and the paper manufacturers were more and more reduced in number, and thus was shown the effect of the Excise duty in creating a congestion of capital, and throwing the whole business in the hands of a few great capitalists. He would read an extract from a letter addressed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and written by a gentleman well entitled to speak on such a subject—namely, Mr. Ingram, the proprietor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS:—

I yesterday did myself the honour to forward for your acceptance a copy of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, of which I am the proprietor, that I might bring under your notice a copy of your portrait engraved for that journal in exchange. I am thereby reminded of addressing you on a subject of national importance—affecting not only the trade and the literature of the country in general, but the welfare of the agricultural population in many districts, and especially in Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire. The subject I allude to is that of the Excise duty upon paper, with the whole effect of which I am particularly acquainted, not only as a newspaper proprietor, but as an extensive manufacturer and consumer of paper. Your long and honourable connexion with literature, and the high position which you now occupy in the councils of her Majesty, justify me in believing that you will do me the honour to listen to the facts which I proceed to lay before you, in explanation of the practical injuries inflicted by this impost—injuries which were, I am certain, never contemplated as possible when the tax was first levied: I need scarcely explain to you, that, when paper is made, it is wet; that, as the Excise duty is levied upon the weight, the paper-manufacturer naturally dries the paper, that it may be as light as possible when he is favoured with the visits of the Excise officer; and that, after it has been so dried, and paid the duty, it must be wetted again before it can be used in the printing offices. This double process of drying and wetting, besides being attended by a very considerable expense for labour, naturally damages the quality of the paper; and, moreover, involves an additional one made in re-pressing it to present, to the artist eye, a recover the glossy and smooth surface it has lost. Now, I have found by experiment and trial that paper can be manufactured in a fit state for the printer, with a beautifully smooth surface, which would be produced by printing and drying, and that printing upon such paper could be carried to much higher perfection as an art, both for letterpress and engraving, than can be attained by paper dried and re-wetted according to the present system of taxation. The numbers of such paper would be scarcely perceptible to the touch, but would require, for such papers as the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is printed upon, a weight of steam or water amounting to no less than 1½lb. per ream. If I were able such paper in my business, I should have to pay an Excise tax upon water of no less than 1s. 7½d. per ream, in addition to a tax of the same rate per pound on the paper itself. Now, I consume 20 tons of paper per week, or 1040 tons and upwards per annum—a fact which I state that you may see at a glance what an enormous sum I should have to pay as a penalty for using the improved paper, which I could manufacture by the aid of a little water. I am quite willing and prepared to inform all printers and paper-makers of my experiment and its results, which could be immediately adopted with much benefit to all concerned, provided we could obtain a removal of the Excise duty. Among other innumerable objections to the impost, which as a practical man I could point out, I may be permitted to remind you that it involves considerable trouble and expense in the collection, both to the manufacturer and to the Custom-house, and prevents books from being printed where they ought to be printed, namely at the paper-mill itself. Were it not for the operation of the Excise duty, I could print at my paper-mill endless numbers of bibles, Testaments, &c., and, indeed, every description of books, at the cost of the ink added simply to that of the paper, a fact which, with others equally important, I think I could satisfactorily prove to you, if you would grant me the honour of an interview. You must, sir, in your youth, have wandered along the beautiful streams of Buckinghamshire, and listened to the busy sound of the water-wheel tearing to pieces an otherwise useless article, to manufacture it into valuable paper; and it must have given you pleasure to reflect that you gave healthful and remunerative employment to great numbers of the rural population. Most of the Buckinghamshire mills have, I grieve to remind you, been swept away under the operation of the Excise duty, and transferred to barren but populous coal districts, leaving the population of Buckinghamshire unemployed, and, to a great extent, pauperized. I have no hesitation in saying, that, if the Excise duty upon paper were abolished, those mills would be speedily restored to the former numbers of people. Nor is this the only evil result of the tax upon agricultural districts. One article straw—which is produced by the farmer, is no sooner employed in paper-making, for which it is peculiarly adapted, than it pays 50 per cent. I need not dwell at further length upon such a positive injury to agriculture as that is

He believed it could be proved that three-fifths of the value of paper consisted in the labour of men, women, and children; and, considering that the agricultural districts were the natural sources of supply, and from their water power and the purity of their streams, for the paper manufacture, he contended he had some claim to submit this motion to the consideration of gentlemen opposite, even as an agricultural question. (Hear.) With regard to Ireland, he had only to remark, that the total repeal of the Excise duty would have a most beneficial effect in producing the employment of labour. The Excise duty necessitated a much larger capital than would otherwise be required for the commencement of a paper manufactory, and, therefore, it was one of the causes of preventing down by difficulties as Ireland, and where there was a deficiency of capital to carry on various branches of industry, it was important that a manufacture so valuable in respect to the employment of labour as the paper manufacture should no longer be shackled by the Excise duty, especially when it was borne in mind that the Irish portion of the duty raised was very small; for the effect of the duty was not so much to produce revenue, as to prohibit to a great extent the manufacture from which it was desired to derive revenue. (Hear.) He had a very short extract from a letter written by a gentleman in Ireland upon this question, and he said:—

As a manufacturer I give constant employment and full wages to 300 individuals, all of this locality—most of them instructed by myself (this gentleman wrote from Dripsey Mills, near Cork), and I am glad to say, composed of this parish, both Protestant and Roman Catholic (for I enjoy the friendship of both), that I keep more than twice that number out of the workhouse. I devote my time and attention to my business, with the exception only of one day in the week, the best portion of which is given to my duties as Poor-law guardian of this union.

Thus showing the importance of the repeal of the paper duty as an industrial question, and there could be no reason why this country should not manufacture paper for the whole world, as it was the cheapest country to be exporters of paper as we are of cotton goods, if by our foolish duty we did not actually cause the Americans to come into this country to buy up cotton waste and refuse of rope for the express purpose of manufacturing paper and sending it to supply our own wants. There was a system that did not supply revenue, but it deprived this country of a valuable manufacture, and prevented the employment of labour, and the improvement of the moral and physical character of the people. He had touched upon these points with regard to the question of revenue, but at the present time he held that the most important part of the question, that peculiarly belonged to it, and did not apply to any other question of Excise or taxation, was the effect of this duty on the literature of the country. If he must ask the favour of the hon. gentleman opposite, if they condescended to go into the question, and also those who sat on his own side of the House, not to make use of that argument that had been, as it were, a stop argument in opposition to a proposal for the repeal of the paper duty. It was said the duty on paper entered to so small an extent into the relative price of books, that the purchasers of books would not feel the effect of the repeal; and the late Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mr. Fox Maule had both used that argument, and had quoted the example of M'Culloch's "Commercial Dictionary." That book, it was said, weighed 4½ lb., and sold for 50s., and that the paper duty being only 1½d per lb., amounted upon that book to 6d. only; and what would be the reduction of 6d. in the price of a book that sold for 50s.? He had only to say in answer to that statement, that it was no reference to the particular price of books, but to the question. (Hear, hear.) His position was the effect of the paper duty, not upon expensive works that sold for 50s., but upon a cheap and popular literature that sold at a low price, and the return for which was derived from an extensive circulation. (Hear, hear.) That was the species of literature he was touching upon; but, even if he were to allude to the others, he should like to know if a reduction in the price of books was to be of no value to the purchasers of books? What was the meaning of their having repealed the duties on Bibles and Prayer-books, but because they wished to increase the circulation of those sacred volumes, and they knew that the Excise duty on paper had to some extent the effect of prohibiting the circulation of them? That view of the question which he was urging was not at all met by the argument about M'Culloch's "Dictionary;" and he asked as a personal favour that upon this occasion, at least, it should be omitted, though he knew it had been used as an official argument when the repeal of the paper duty had been proposed. He would point out what appeared to be really the injurious effect of the paper duty upon cheap literature. It was not that it raised its price, but it could be demonstrated mathematically that it deteriorated its quality—(Hear)—that it stood in the way of improving the quality of that literature that might be circulated among the people, and which that House had a deep public interest in taking every step in their power to render as moral and improving as possible. They had cheapness; they wanted goodness. They had their penny publications; what stood in the way of making them as good as they could be made?—the paper duty; and he would explain how that existed. Take the case of a penny publication, and he would quote from Mr. Cassell, who was extensively engaged in the publication of excellent works, calculated to improve the great body of the people. One of those works was entitled—and justly entitled—the "Popular Educator." That gentleman expended something little short of £100 per week, paid to the Government in hard cash, for circulating his penny publications. The duty on the paper used in those publications took away that £100 per week. If it were repealed, the publications would still be issued—the price would not be reduced—it was low enough to secure a large circulation—but he would not put that £100 into his own pocket; competition would force him to lay it out in the improvement of those publications, and he would expend it in a higher order of authorship and better literary talent than he was able to employ at present. It was a monstrous thing that, to issue penny publications in this country—such a publication as the "Popular Educator," or the "Working Man's Friend"—a man should be called upon to hand over week by week to the Government £40 or £50, the fund out of which authorship would be paid. A man who did not care what he published, and who only looked to cheapness and issuing translations from French novels and a variety of matters that appealed to the passions for the purpose of the largest circulation, might copy what he wanted from other works, and the paper duty which he paid did not stand in the way of his penny publications, because he did not want any fund out of which to pay authorship; but if they wished to meet that question in the manner in which they contemplated those publications, which were as bad as they were cheap, they must create a fund out of which authorship should be paid, and a higher order of literary talent should be employed. He had received a letter from a gentleman who, he was sure, the House would admit was a high authority on this subject—Mr. Knight. It was dated from Fleet-street, the 19th of April, 1852. He had published one or two excellent pamphlets on the question of the paper duty, known by the name of "The Struggles of a Book against Taxation," and also the case of authors in reference to the paper duty, and he said

It is difficult to add anything new to the arguments which have been urged in the House of Commons and by other modes for the abolition of the paper duty. A few points have struck me in addition to what I have written on the subject. And much which is injurious or frivolous in cheap publications, I think there is a manifest tendency towards the moral and intellectual improvement of the general character of our popular literature. The conductors of periodical works almost exclusively addressed to the working classes, as they are termed, appear to me to have commenced ceasing to think that it is necessary to write down to their readers. As a natural consequence of this tendency, writers of information and ability are more needed, perhaps more employed. But this tendency is counteracted by the paper duty. I will explain myself as briefly as I can. If £250 be given for the authorship of a large octavo volume, it operates as a charge of 5s. per copy if 1000 copies be printed, and the book must be high-priced; but if 10,000 be printed, the authorship only adds to the price at the rate of 6d. per copy, and the book may be low-priced. But the paper duty upon each volume amounts to 6d. per copy, whether 1000 or 10,000 be printed; and if 10,000 be printed, amounts to as much as the authorship. Reduce the payment of authorship, and the value of the book is injured; take away the paper duty, and you neither lower the quality nor limit the sale of the book. There is then a fund for the better remuneration of that labour which is to raise the quality and extend the sale, and thus advance the great end of all popular publications—the diffusion of knowledge and the elevation of the moral and religious character of a people. But it is not the repeal of the paper tax would only operate as a bonus to publishers, without lowering the price of books to the people. I believe that the ordinary effects of competition would determine this doubt very satisfactorily. It is probable that there would be no direct lowering of price in many cases of low-priced books, but I am quite sure that there would be an improvement of quality. The number of printed pages sold for 1s. might be the same as now, but there would be better paper, better types, and, what is more important, improved authorship. Publishers of very cheap books would look for something to publish having a copyright value, instead of bad translations backed with pictures. Beyond this, large circulations, of which we have very few now, would have a greater encouragement were the paper duty repealed, for the price of voluminous works could be perfectly remunerative and their sale consequently increased. As an example, I have determined to bring out a new Cyclopædia—the "Imperial"—founded upon the "Penny Cyclopædia." It will form 20 volumes. If I print 6000 copies, the stated paper will cost £12,000, of which the actual duty will amount to £2250, and the direct and indirect additions to cost, consequent upon the duty, would, as I believe, double the tax. Looking at the operation of the cost of paper alone (for the duty is charged 10 per cent. upon the price to subscribers if the tax were removed; but, taking into consideration the fact that I could then print 1000 copies at the price at which I could stereotype the 20 volumes which process of stereotype employed to save the outlay of capital in taxed paper), I could reduce the price 10 per cent. The effects of such a tax upon prices are not to be measured by its direct amount. For example, it may be said that the drawback of duty upon exported books allows the foreigners to be charged as low a price as if the paper were untaxed. This is really not the case. The drawback only represents the positive tax, and not the increased price consequent upon the tax. Suppose I can sell 1000 copies of my "Cyclopædia" to an American publisher at £5 a copy, the taxed paper costing me £1250. I obtain a drawback of £225, which reduces the price of the 500 copies to £2275, at which rate they were invoiced. The American tariff of 10 per cent. adds £227 10s. to the importer's outlay, and makes a total of £2502 10s. But if I could buy my paper untaxed, I consider that I should save, in various ways, £450, so that I might reduce the price to £4 2s. per copy, to which the tariff would add £205. The importer would therefore save £247 10s. That advantage to the importer of 10 per cent. would probably double my sale in the United States. One portion of the advantage would be the diminished amount of tax which he would pay to his own Government. The direct tax, and its collateral effects, in one country produce similar effects in another country, raising the price to the consumer, and thus narrowing the market of the producer. The strongest argument which I have constantly urged for the repeal of the paper duty is, that the tax bears most unequally upon the lower-priced publications, as compared with the higher priced, and therefore interferes injuriously with the education of the people. Upon the wholesale price of a modern novel it is 14 per cent. Upon Mr. Dickens's Christmas Carol it is 12 per cent.; it is 2½ per cent. upon the Quarterly Review; it is 1½ per cent. upon the Penny Magazine. Look at the inequality as regards the two latter examples of periodical works, addressed to different classes of the community. 1000 copies of one number of the Review, sold for 5s., pay a duty of £1. 1000 copies of one unbound volume of the Papers, sold for 8d., pay a duty of £3 6s. If there were an ad valorem duty of 5 per cent. upon all printed books, 1000 copies of the Review would pay £15, and 1000 copies of the Papers would pay £1 13s. 4d. Is a tax of such inequality as regards the two latter examples of periodical works, addressed to different classes of the community, on the war, was really part of a system for the purpose of restraining literature and keeping down the press. These duties being enacted in the same year, he could not help thinking that perhaps the same motive that had actuated Parliament as to the paper duty had actuated them in enacting the advertisement and stamp duties. Now, the advertisement duty amounted to £150,000, or, if they placed, £160,000 a year. Was that a large sum to be frightened at when they talked of repealing duties, considering how large a surplus revenue they had, and considering that this tax upon advertisements struck, as he believed, more than any thing that existed, at the very revenue they proposed to increase by it? (Hear, hear.) A tax upon advertisements!—that no man might say what he wished and what he wanted to be known in the way of business transactions in print and in a newspaper, but he must be fined 1s. 6d. each time he did so. It was, he said, impossible to conceive a more unjustifiable tax. If he wanted a mode for lessening the public revenue, he would suggest a mode which lessened transactions between men and the means of making their mutual wants known to each other—which lessened, in fact, trade, consumption, employment, and revenue; and he would undertake to say that if they repealed this advertisement duty, they would never know it in the next year's revenue. (Hear, hear.) But, if that were true, could there be conceived anything more unjust than to say to a poor servant girl, who wanted a place, "You are rich if you make it known to the world by the only means which exist, you must be fined 1s. 6d. each time." Take the case of ships, merchants' transactions connected with sales of every kind. Could anything be more obvious, than that preventing the knowledge of what was going on was the most mode of preventing the improvement of all commercial transactions and of the public revenue? There was nothing one man wanted to sell but another man could be found who wanted to buy it; and, if they were judicious, they would not stand in the way of those mutual wants being made known: the difficulties that were unavoidable were great enough. Look at the United States of America. They had 10,000,000 of advertisements in their newspapers in a year. In England there were only 2,000,000: 8,000,000 were knocked off by the advertisement duty. And who were the advertisers who had to pay so much time 1s. 6d.? The poorest of the people. The rich advertiser, who took up a column of the Times, only paid his 1s. 6d. The poor servant girl, who only took a line of that paper, paid just as much. There was no justice in the tax itself when considered in principle; but the inequality was most glaring—it was not founded on equality in the distribution of its burden or upon sound principle, because, whether a person advertised in a paper of large or small publication, he was fined 1s. 6d. every time he made known his wishes. He could not believe that the raising of £150,000 could be a reason why rational beings should persist in maintaining a tax so opposed to commercial purposes and sound principles of legislation. They might advertise on a wall, in an omnibus, or by the advertising vans, and no duty was levied; but let them go to a newspaper, and they were fined 1s. 6d. Now, the advertisement fund was a legitimate fund for supporting newspapers, and, if they drove men from newspapers by saying they should pay 1s. 6d. fine, they took the most direct and effectual mode for injuring the newspaper press. After some observations on this part of his subject, the right hon. gentleman passed to the question of newspaper stamps. He had promised that he could show that this newspaper stamp was no revenue question at all, and had never been imposed by the Legislature, or continued by the Legislature, on any such footing. For how had this stamp originated? On the 17th of January, 1711, Mr. Secretary St. John informed the House that he had a message from the Queen. The message then read ran thus:—

> Her Majesty finds it necessary to observe how great licenses is taken in publishing false and scandalous libels, such as are a reproach to any Government. That evil seems to be grown too strong for the laws now in force; it is therefore recommended to you to find a remedy equal to the mischief.

The answer of the House was in these words:—

> We are very sensible how much the liberty of the press is abused, by turning it into such licentiousness as is a just reason to be raising, not only false and scandalous libels, but false news and published against your Majesty's Government, but the most horrid blasphemies against God and religion, and we beg leave humbly to assure your Majesty, that we will, do our utmost to find out a remedy equal to the mischief, and that may effectually cure it.

In accordance with this address, the House proceeded to pa s certain resolutions, which he had copied from "Hansard's Parliamentary History."

> Some members were so exasp rated at the Dutch memorial being published in a newspaper, that, on the 14th, the House being resolved into a grand committee to consider of that part of the Queen's message in which the liberty of the press was complained of, it was moved by Sir Gilbert Dolden Heathcote, chairman, they came to these two resolutions:—"1. That the liberty taken by printing and publishing scandalous and unposs ible creatures divisions among her Majesty's subjects, tends to the disturbance of the public peace, is high y prejudicial to her Majesty's Government, and is occasioned for want of duly regulating the press." "2. That the printing-presses be registered, with the names of the owners and places of abode: and that the author, printer, and publisher of every book set is name and place of abode thereto. These resolutions were ordered to be reported the next day following; but the said report was then put off till that day se'nnight, and afterwards further adjourned from time to time, some members having, in the grand committee on ways and means, suggested a more effectual way for suppressing libels, viz. the laying a great duty on all newspapers and pamphlets.

Such was the commencement of this tax, for after this came the imposition of the newspaper stamp, and the advertisement duty and the paper duty. It was clear, then, that this was not a revenue question at all. An idea, however, had sprung up, that though the stamp duty had been imposed for revenue purposes, the postal advantages which had been connected with it were such that the duty had better remain as it was, since it enabled newspapers and other printed papers to be transmitted through the post free from other charge. Now, this question of the postal transmission of newspapers, &c., had nothing to do with the newspaper stamp. Make what regulation you please for the transmission of printed newspapers by the post, but do not compel a man to stamp his newspaper or other printed writing, whether he wants to transmit it by post or not. (Hear, hear.) He asked them, therefore, to repeal this newspaper stamp upon principle. Could they enforce their law, after that, and what was the news on which they professed to be able to impose a tax? Could their law officers define it? They were at this moment engaged in a lawsuit with one of the most popular writers of the country—Mr. Charles Dickens. The Household Narrative of Current Events was a very nice, excellent newspaper, but it was published monthly. The Board of Inland Revenue, having suppressed many other monthlies of a similar character, had tried to put down this, but Mr. Dickens was prepared to contest the matter in a court of law. The judges had decided, after all the expense incurred, that the Household Narrative was not a newspaper, and that Mr. Dickens had a right to print news on a paper free of stamp duty if he did not do it oftener than once a month. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Dickens had got a verdict, but the Attorney-General declared that he was ready to disturb the decision of the judges, and that he was going to have another lawsuit in order to ascertain whether that paper was liable to the stamp duty or not. But that was a great grievance. In the case of the Household Narrative they were fighting with men of property and spirit; but how many were there in the country who had either not moral courage enough, or money enough, to go into a court of law against the Board of Inland Revenue? (Hear.) If they were afraid to enforce the tax, they should repeal it; and if they could not enforce it equally, they should not maintain it, because by so doing they would be guilty of the grossest injustice. The right hon. gentleman, having quoted various decisions and publications in support of his views, concluded by submitting the first resolution to their favourable consideration.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER observed in reply, that, with respect to the advertisement and paper duties, they were subjects which deserved the gravest consideration; but he must consider them primarily with reference to the effect of their repeal upon the general revenue. The advertisement duty was one which ought to be gravely considered, and the Government had considered it. He did not think that the stamp duty very much from the duty on paper, which was so large that every one should hesitate before he consented to relinquish it. All these matters, however, depended entirely upon the state of the finances, and the House must feel the great inconvenience of coming to a premature decision on the question of this kind. Under these circumstances, he felt it to be his duty to oppose the motion.

[Ultimately the debate was adjourned to a future day within the next week or two, in order to give an opportunity of seeing how the Chancellor of the Exchequer might deal with the question in his Budget]

Lord Mansfield has been appointed by the Earl of Derby Lord High Commissioner of Scotland.

MUSIC.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert took place on Wednesday night, at Exeter-hall. There were three overtures in the programme Mendelssohn's "Isles o Fingal," Weber's "Preciosa," and Beethoven's "Egmont." There was also a selection from Spontini's fine opera, "La Vestale," in which Madame Clara Novello, sang gracefully, Herr Reichart, and Herr Standhil, had the principal soli; but the items in the scheme, which absorbed the attention and aroused the enthusiasm of the immense auditory to the highest degree, were the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony of Berlioz, and Weber's pianoforte "Concertstück," performed by Madame Pleyel, who may safely be pronounced to be the greatest pianiste of the age, combining as she does the surest and most wondrous mechanism, the most fine and delicate feeling, and the most poetic fancy. Such applause as was bestowed at the conclusion of her astonishing and fascinating performance, is rarely called forth in this country. Equally overwhelming was the ovation received by Berlioz at the conclusion of the symphony, as well as at the close of each movement. He has won the suffrages of our musical audiences by the magic influence of his genius: it has been a battle over professional prejudices, intense brain excitement, the scheme hotly refused, and the harpiastic being of surprising loveliness. The entire work is a gem, worthy of comparison with the standing classic chamber compositions. It was splendidly played. Mr. W. S. Bennett and Piatti, in the rondo duo for the 'cello in D minor for pianoforte and violoncello, won also the suffrages of the connoisseurs, as much from the polished execution as from the intrinsic beauties of the new work. Miller. Clauss will perform at the next meeting, on the 12th; and the association has begun auspiciously.

THE QUARTETT ASSOCIATION.

Under the patronage of the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Duchess of Kent, a new series of classic matinées commenced on Wednesday, at Willis's rooms. The permanent executants will be Sainton and Cooper (who will lead alternately), Hill and Piatti; but a new pianist will be introduced at each meeting. The programme on Wednesday night was Beethoven's Quartett in E flat, Op. 44, No. 3, and Beethoven's in E minor, Op. 59, No 2; besides one in E flat by the famed Cherubini, heard for the first time in this country, which produced much astonishment, the scherzo being redemanded, and the larghetto being of surprising loveliness. The entire work is a gem, worthy of comparison with the standing classic chamber compositions. It was splendidly played. Mr. W. S. Bennett and Piatti, in the rondo duo for the 'cello in D minor for pianoforte and violoncello, won also the suffrages of the connoisseurs, as much from the polished execution as from the intrinsic beauties of the new work. Miller. Clauss will perform at the next meeting, on the 12th; and the association has begun auspiciously.

M. PRUDENT'S CONCERT.

M. Emile Prudent, a pianist and composer of fame from Paris, gave a morning concert on Thursday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of Berlie, with a full orchestra. The vocalists were Jetty Treffz and Herr Reichart. The chief object was to display the talents of the pianist as a writer and as an executant, and in both respects he can take high ground. He occupies a position between the classic models and the forms of the modern romantic school. His pastorale, "Les Chasses," with a finale, "Les Adieux des Rêveries des Fées," the quartett, "La serenade," and the "Chasse," in A flat M. Prudent's inventive faculties and his competency to embody them most favourably, and he was extremely well received by the fashionable auditory.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The second concert for the exhibition of the students took place last Saturday, under the direction of Mr. Lucas. The novelty of the evening was a MS overture, "As you like it," by Baly, an amateur: the part writing, "Where the roe bounds," and "'Twas when the seas were roaring;" and a song, "Farewell," by Miss Charlotte Rowe, an associate. There was an average amount of ability in these new compositions. The solo players were Miss Whitworth and Mr. R. Tomes, in a concerto for pianoforte concertos by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and Mr. Simmons and Mr. Colchester, in a violin and viola duo by Spohr. The performances of these students were very creditable. A madrigal, by Brinley Richards, "Ye little birds that sit and sing," and the overture and finale of the second act of Macfarren's "Don Quixote," were inserted in the scheme, as a compliment to two talented associate members. The remainder of the selection was confined to the solo displays of vocalisation of the most accomplished pupils, amongst whom must be mentioned a débutante of great promise, Miss Palmer; who, despite the dreadfully enervating tropical clime, developed, in Mozart's "Quando ritro," a contralto voice of most sympathetic quality. Miss Freeman's rendering of "Che fare," by Gluck, and the singing of Miss Mary Rose and Miss Street, must also be honourably recorded.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

On Monday night, at Exeter Hall, the annual performances of Handel's "Messiah," for the benefit of the above admirable institution, was given, under Costa's direction, the singers being Miss Dolby, Miss Hodges, Signor Belletti, and the band and chorus. Every vocalist and instrumentalist performed gratuitously on this occasion, and the sum were distributed amongst the following distinguished composers: Mme. Bellamy, Miss Williams, and Miss Louisa Pyne. Contralto: Mdme. F. Lablache, Miss M. Williams, and Miss Seymour. Tenors: Mr. Lockey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Swift, and Mr. Benson. Bazes: Mr. Phillips, Mr. Lawler, Mr. A. Novello, Mr. Barry, and Herr Formes. Mr. Brownsmith was the organist. The hall was well filled to listen to this rare artistic combination in the oratorio. It was announced that the magnificent pianoforte, manufactured by the firm of Broadwood, and presented to the society will be disposed of by lottery.

MUSICAL EVENTS.

The Edinburgh critics write in most enraptured terms of the compositions of Mr. Mudie, the pianist, a London professor, now residing in the Scotch capital. An allegro marziale in E flat, a sketch for a fairy fantasia, a nocturne, a valse di bravura, two sonatas, and a concerto in E minor, are all highly commended. The reputation Mr Mudie has just acquired as a composer ——Next Monday will be the fourth concert of the Philharmonic society, and the second meeting of the English Glee Union. On Tuesday evening will be Mr. Lucas's third musical evening, the third concert of the Beethoven Quartett Society; the fifth of the London Wednesday Concerts; Mr. Aguilar's evening concert; and Mr. Brinley Richards's morning concert, at the Hanover-square pianoforte rooms. ——On Friday, Mr. W. Rea's first pianoforte soirée ——The third concert of the Amateur Musical Society took place, under Mr. Osborne's direction, at the Hanover-square Rooms, last Monday ——Herr Janza, the violinist, gave his second soirée at the Queen Anne-street Rooms on the same evening ——The English Glee and Madrigal Union presented the first of a series of its morning concerts at Willis's Rooms, on Monday last; Mr. Henderson, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Francis, Mr. Allen, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Hobbs, and Mr. Phillips were the vocalists. The performances gave the highest gratification to a fashionable auditory ——Mr. Horsley, the veteran composer, has presented the Philharmonic Societies ——Mr. Birch gave his sixth and last pianoforte soirée on Tuesday last, at St. Martin's Hall.——Mr. Neate, aided by Sainton, Cooper, Hill, and Piatti had his sixth and last quartett and pianoforte soirée at the Queen Anne-street Rooms, on Wednesday ——The first meeting of the Musical Institute took place last night, in Sackville street.——The London Sacred Harmonic Society, under Mr. Surman's direction, performed last night, at Exeter Hall, Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with the Misses Dolby, Williams, and Hodges, Mrs. Temple, Messrs. Lockey, Farren, Collett, Weeks, and Phillips, as chief vocalists.——The Misses Macalpine, the clever sister vocalists, gave their first concert at the Hanover Rooms on Tuesday night, assisted by the Misses Dolby and Bodley, Messrs. Wrighton, Swift, and Whitworth, Piatti, Bottesini, Van Heddeghem (violinist) and Mr. Kuhlmark (pianist).——Signor and Madame Ferrari's soirée musicale, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday night, was numerously attended, and was supported by those of the Misses Dolby and Rainford, Madame Macfarren; Messrs. Swift, Isenry, and Horrant; Miss Kate Loder, Mr. W. H. Holmes, and Herr Pauer.——Mr. J. L. Hatton, harp; Mr. Blagrove, violin, concerting; Mr. Clementi, violin; and Mr. Aylward, violoncello; with Messrs. F. Mori and Kuhlmark as accompanyists ——Miss Rosen Taylor, a pupil of Crivelli's, made a successful début at her friend's concert on Wednesday, at an evening concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, with the powerful co-operation of Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Miss Bassano, Miss Emily Williams, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lockey, Benson, F. Lablache, Messrs. Swift, Benson, Whitworth, and F. Sodda; Miss Kate Loder, the accomplished pianist, Mr. Blagrove, violin; and Mr. Lucas, conductor.——Two concerts were given on Tuesday morning and evening, Mrs. Dawson, of Sir George Smart's, on the opening of the Town-hall, Chertsey, the proceeds being applied to the local charities. Mrs Endersohn, Miss M. Williams, Messrs. Hobbs, Land, Lockyer, Phillips, Sedcliffe, and Bernard, the Welsh harpist, were the vocalists and instrumentalists.——Her Majesty and Prince Albert have been graciously pleased to become the patrons of the Choir Benevolent Fund; and his Royal Highness has signified his intention of being present at the fifth choral service at Westminster Abbey next Thursday. The choir will consist of 100 voices, from two.ve of the Cathedral and Collegiate choirs: and after the service a selection of anthems from the compositions of the most eminent composers will be performed. Sir G. Smart, Hobbs, Machin, Francis, Rainbow, and Addison are the committee of management, and Mr. G. Gray is the secretary. This fund was only established last year, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of members, and has already received large subscriptions ——The death of Mr. J. Burrows, the well-known composer, principally known for his elementary works and arrangements, has caused a vacancy in the position of organist of St. James's Church, Piccadilly, which is held for nearly forty years. Several candidates are in the field; but, if the question be decided on its musical merits, the struggle can only be between Mr. Best, a first-rate player, and Dr. Gauntlett, also a very fine executant. The last-mentioned musician is profoundly acquainted with the history and philosophy of music; Mendelssohn entertained the highest opinion of his attainments.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

Our Paris letters supply us with contradictory accounts of the new five-act opera, "Le Juif Errant," produced on the 23d ult. at the Grand Opéra, the music by Halévy, the dure l'ouvrage by M. de St. Léon, and the libretto by MM. Scribe and de St. Georges. As to the splendour of the spectacle, and the excellence of the execution of Mdle Emma La Grua in the new prima donna from Dresden), Mdme. Tedesco, MM Roger Obin, Depassio, Ch.ap.s, Guignan, Nor, and Massol, who played and sang the "Wandering Jew" to perfection, there is no difference of opinion; but "doctors differ" materially as to the interest of the drama and the merits of the music. Eugène Sue's romance has not at all been resorted to by the authors for the poem. They have selected the beginning of the thirteenth century, when Baudouin Count of Flanders and the Crusaders ruled over the Greek empire. The first act is in Antwerp, and Adhemar, the Wandering Jew, appears in the midst of a war of elements, learning on his stick. The second act is in Bulgaria at the foot of Mount Hemus; the third act is in Constantinople, and the last two acts at a ruined tempe on the banks of the Bosphorus. The last scenes are in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, with the Ange Exterminateur, when tells Ashaerus that he must wander still, heaven and hell, which are actually depicted, being equally closed to him. This blasphemous stage exhibition will be an effectual bar to the introduction of the "Juif Errant" in its present shape in this country, even if it be Halévy's masterpiece.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

After the second performance of "Norma," on Saturday night, which was honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert, a new ballet divertissement by M. Gosselin, with pretty music by Nadaud, called "Un Fête des Rosières," was successfully produced. Mdlle. Rosati making her first appearance this season in the principal character. The interesting village fête of the Rosières, in which the best-conducted rustic maiden is crowned in public, has been a fertile subject for the ballet-master; and if M. Gosselin's [illegible] have not been distress ugly taxed, he has skilfully employed [illegible] to produce a series of animated groupings and of characteristic [illegible]. Esper, Lamoureux, Allegrini, and even the male dancers Mas[illegible] and Mathieu, mingle in spirited measure in the throng; out of which must, however, be signalised the arabesque bounds and pirouettes of the rapid Rosati, whose poses are more poetical, and gyrations more graceful, than ever. She brought down the applause from all sides continuously and earnestly.

A very admirable interpretation of "Il Barbiere" with Crivelli's clever but eccentric Rosina, Belletti's finished singing in Figaro, Calzolari's artistic rendering of the Count, and Lablache's matchless piece of comedy in Dr. Bartolo, was given for the second time on Tuesday, the first representation of Bastien by the new barytone Ferlotti has scarcely yet been sufficiently eulogised. Something was wanting certainly in the singing, the music being too low for his register, but he has a very good voice, sings with spirit, speaking, correctly, and malicious attributes of Bastien embodied with greater tact, vigour, and finesse.

[illegible] "Il Barbiere" [illegible] opera), "Othello," was revived, with an infinitely improved cast on that of a month ago. The only two artistes retaining their original parts are Crivelli as Desdemona and Calzolari (Jacquino). Signor Fortini is the successor of Casanova in Sixt Hunter, Signor Belletti replaces Colletti as Polonio, Calzolari succeeds Mr. Sims Reaves as Fernando; Susini, the new basso assumes Rocco, vice Bulacchi; and Mdlle Feller follows Malaume Garnault as Marcellina. With the exception of Calzolari, whose less intelligent style and deficient expressive of the dramatis personæ has been much ameliorated Susini is a young basso from Bologna, with a fine voice, which he may turn to good account if he will attend more strictly to his intonation. Belletti's singing of the cabaletta aria in D minor, "Ah! vendicor," is excellent, and his thorough knowledge as a musician was amply displayed in the concerted pieces. Crivelli has shown greater signs of improvement in her singing in Lucrezia Borgia than on any previous occasion. She is no ordinary artiste to play Norma, Rosina, and Fidelio on three consecutive evenings; and therefore it is that amateurs must feel no serious doubt for her future, the triumphs of which will assent ally depend on subduing exaggeration, and in striving less for ultra effects. Her delivery of the recitative is more careful, and her general observance of the text more conscientious; but she may yet accomplish a more classic and finished reading than she has yet achieved.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The announced début of Mlle Wagner as Fides, in Meyerbeer's "Prophète" did not take place on Saturday night, owing to the injunction obtained by Mr. Lumley against her and Mr. Frederick Gye, the director. On Tuesday her first appearance was again postponed, but the application for a dissolution of the Vice-Chancellor's fiat was postponed on Monday sine die. It is rumoured that the cause will come on to-day or early in the ensuing week. In the meanwhile Dorlesten's "Mariuti" was substituted, for the third and fourth times; the finale of the third act, and the duo between Mdme. Julienne and Signor Tamberlik, in the last act, creating, on both occasions, an almost unprecedented sensation.

On Thursday the incomparable Grisi made her first appearance this season, as true Norma, and afforded another striking proof of the undying vigour which has enabled her to see out so many prime donne, year after year. Her reception was most enthusiastic, and her delineation will always be difficult to describe; so fresh, spontaneous, and fiery is her marvellous rendering of the Druidical Priestess. Herr Formes was Oroveso, Tamberlik Pollio, and Mdlle Bertrandi (who made a very favourable impression last year) Adalgisa, with Mdme. Castellan, Mdlle Bellini, Herr Ander, Signori Ronconi, Tagliafico, and Marini completed the bill of the extra night.

On Saturday the "Huguenots" will be revived to-night, for the first appearance this season of Mario.

SADLER'S WELLS.

On Monday Sir Bulwer Lytton's comedy of "Money" was performed; the part of Dudley Smooth being excellently acted by Mr. Marston. The "Rivals" followed, when the same actor performed Sir Anthony Absolute for the first time, with great success. The irascible humour was given with perfect unctions and of Mr. Marston possesses any intention of undertaking the parts, he will be no room to doubt but that he will prosper in the attempt. "Ion," also, has been played with great success, Mr. Robinson sustaining the part of the hero with great ability.

SURREY.

The Bateman children have been starring at this theatre for some time with considerable success. On Monday they appeared in a new piece, written expressly for them by Mr. B. Bernard. It is entitled "The Old and New School," and is well calculated to bring out their peculiar characteristics.

The legitimate drama, we understand, is to have soon a new trial on this stage. Mr. Creswick has engaged for twelve nights from the 10th instant, and will appear in Lear great characters.

MARYLEBONE.—Mr. Anderson appeared on Monday at this theatre, in the character of Hamlet.

OLYMPIC.—"Hamlet" was also performed here on Monday, Mr. Henry Farren playing the part.

Mr. Charles Dickens and his colleagues being about to perform on behalf of the new Guild of Literature, in the town-hall at Birmingham, on Saturday last, a motion was made on Saturday last to the magistrates for a special [illegible] was opposed on behalf of Mr. Simpson, the lessee, and the proprietors of the Theatre Royal; but, after a two hours' hearing, the magistrates unanimously agreed to grant the licence.

THE LORD DROUGHT.—From the 18th of February (being the last day of heavy rain) to Wednesday last, the number of days [illegible] when any rain, snow, or sleet has fallen may easily be enumerated. They are only the following seven:—

		In.
Feb.	28	..	0.02 A light shower of sleet
March	1	..	0.01 Showery
"	2	..	"
"	27	..	0.02 Snow in the morning
"	30	..	0.01 Rain in the night
April	4	..	0.01 Slight shower, forenoon
			0.06

Not three-tenths of an inch of rain in nearly the latter half of February, the whole of March, and three weeks of April! What becomes of the ancient popular character of these months? February fill-dyke, wet March, and showery April?

GENERAL ROSAS.—The Conflict, steam-sloop, Commander Grey Skipwith, arrived at Devonport on Monday afternoon last, from Falmouth, having on board General Don Juan Manuel de Rosas, late Governor of Buenos Ayres; two daughters, Senorita Dona Manuela Rosas and Donna Mercedes Rosas; two sons, Don Juan Rosas, and Don Juan Manuel Rosas; and suite, consisting of one brigadier-general, three colonels, one trumpet-major, and servant. Immediately on the ship coming to anchor, the custom-house authorities were communicated to General Rosas the orders of the Lords of the Treasury that his baggage should be passed duty free—a compliment which afforded the General great satisfaction. The Lord-Lieutenant, Governor, family, and party, landed at the dockyard on the following day.

ALARMING ACCIDENT.—At half-past twelve o'clock on Wednesday, while the numerous staff of officials were engaged in the Mary-le-bone Court-house was engaged in its various departments, a frightful crash, which shook the whole building to its centre, was heard. All the officers who happened to be there at the time, imagining that the building was crashing towards the street-doors, where for some minutes they remained, wholly unable to imagine the origin, extent, or danger of the supposed damage. At length some enterprising individuals found that they could get into the premises, the custom-house authorities having communicated to General Rosas the orders of the Lords of the Treasury that his baggage should be passed duty free—a compliment which afforded the General great satisfaction. The Lord-Lieutenant, Governor, family, and party, landed at the dockyard on the following day.

ALARMING ACCIDENT.—At half-past twelve o'clock on Wednesday, while the numerous staff of officials were engaged in the Mary-le-bone Court-house was engaged in its various departments, a frightful crash, which shook the whole building to its centre, was heard. All the officers who happened to be there at the time, imagining that the building was crashing towards the street-doors, where for some minutes they remained, wholly unable to imagine the origin, extent, or danger of the supposed damage. At length some enterprising individuals found that they could get into the premises, the custom-house authorities having communicated to General Rosas the orders of the Lords of the Treasury that his baggage should be passed duty free—a compliment which afforded the General great satisfaction. The Lord-Lieutenant, Governor, family, and party, landed at the dockyard on the following day.

ALARMING ACCIDENT.—At half-past twelve o'clock on Wednesday, while the numerous staff of officials were engaged in the Mary-le-bone Court-house was engaged in its various departments, a frightful crash, which shook the whole building to its centre, was heard. All the officers who happened to be there at the time, imagining that the building was crashing towards the street-doors, where for some minutes they remained, wholly unable to imagine the origin, extent, or danger of the supposed damage. At length some enterprising individuals found that they could get into the premises, the custom-house authorities having communicated to General Rosas the orders of the Lords of the Treasury that his baggage should be passed duty free—a compliment which afforded the General great satisfaction. The Lord-Lieutenant, Governor, family, and party, landed at the dockyard on the following day.

The estimates for the civil services of the year ending 31st March, 1852, which have been printed, exhibit an increase of £[illegible],924, as compared with those of 1851, and of £[illegible],443 over those of 1850. The following are the departments in which an increase over the sums granted in last session takes place, with the amount of such increase:—Public works and buildings, £[illegible],000; diplomatic and public departments, £35,378; law charges, £[illegible],000; education, science, and art, £31,842; superannuation and other allowances, £[illegible],000; the Court of Chancery, consular, and other foreign services, £[illegible],000; and a vote of £55,315; and in special and temporary objects one of £[illegible].

The menagerie of the Royal Surrey Zoological Gardens has recently received the addition of a pair of fine young lions, which were brought to this country by the screw steam-ship Proponis, and have been purchased by Mr. Tyler for his establishment. The animals attract much attention from their extreme playfulness, and are rapidly recovering the effects of their long confinement at the Cape and on shipboard.

THE EXHIBITIONS.

MAY is the harvest month of Art—all the Exhibitions now opening their portals, and toiling artists anxiously awaiting their reward, in the shape both of honours and emoluments, for a twelvemonth's toil and study. The Royal Academy commences its season with a private view to-day; but the two Water-Colour Societies, and the National Institution of the Fine Arts, commenced their seasons a week ago. We already, in this week's publication, produce Engravings of some of the most pleasing works exhibited, and purposing to produce many others from time to time, accompanied by more detailed observations. We shall, for the present, confine ourselves to a general glance at the walls of the Exhibitions named.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION OF THE FINE ARTS appears to be going on with spirit which will merit and ensure success. Their gallery in Regent-street is one of the most commodious and well-lighted in London; and the display of pictures, though somewhat limited in extent (it boasts of only a hundred and seventy-seven), is accompanied with the recommendation often felt by the visitor, present very many works of remarkable merit. The very proportion of portrait subjects is a circumstance to be encouraged. We may hope that this circumstance is a token of improved taste amongst the miscellaneous patrons of art, which leads to find that they may adorn their drawing-rooms and dining parlours with something more exciting than repetitions of their own familiar features.

The most striking production in the first or Long Room, and, in some respects, all the walls, is Mr. Lundie's large picture of "Jesus Christ Weeping over Jerusalem." The conception is, we think, original—the treatment certainly bold, perhaps hazardous—but, upon the whole, we are disposed to applaud it. Solemn, painfully solemn, is the effect of this extraordinary work. The moment chosen is that in which the Saviour, in His agony, exclaims, "It is finished" and gives up the ghost. The essence of that moment, and the deep tortures passed, one survives upon the face—we question whether not a little too much so, the sublimity of the subject being sacrificed to it. But, however this may be, it was a bold idea to cover the entire figure with a white sheet, which hangs in broad folds from the shoulders to below the feet, revealing the anatomy of the frame through its texture, and clinging to and following the limbs as if damp with dew or perspiration. Behind this cold drapery is a mass of cloud, of wife and grey intermixed, apparently impervious—almost solidified—and through which the beams of the setting sun, in fiery splendour burst, have no power to penetrate. From above, on one side, a cool ray of light descends perpendicularly, and round the head is a halo of preternatural brightness. The artist's daring has been so far successful as to command attention of the spectator, whatever may be the verdict upon the points of criticism.

In R. S. Lauder's other picture, "Christ teaching Humility" ("Except ye be converted, and become as little children," &c. Matt., chap. 18), the beautiful simplicity of the subject is destroyed by the introduction of too many figures, scattered over much too wide a canvass, in which the Saviour neither occupies the central nor the most prominent position.

J. E. Lauder has a very clever piece, full of thought and character—"Master Walter Scott and his friend Sandy Ormistoun, the aged hind," who points to the wild mountain scenery of the Cheviot range, and tells tales of the wild foray of bygone times.

Barrat F.'s picture of "Le Beloved Disciple" is wanting in that sobriety both of treatment and colouring which the subject requires. The attitude of the Christ, thrown back at his ease, is commonplace and undignified, whilst the St. John offends by his "too much familiarity," combined with his effeminacy of expression. On the other hand, Underhill's "St. John in the Wilderness" is remarkable for its boldness and simplicity. The figure is fairly drawn, the attitude not altogether original, being in embodied from the "Agnus Dei" in the National Gallery; but the attitude is sufficiently modified, the figure looking up to the heavens, to entitle the artist to a large share of the merit of it. The colouring is of the same sort of chiaroscuro as that in the older work just mentioned.

A. Melton presents us with a picture in seven compartments in one very extensive frame, which he denominates the "Life of Prince in Wales," and by which he pretends to typify the various stages of the human career, as birth on the mountain scene of Lyn Idwal; Youth (Chaucer and Spenser with the Muses); Manhood (the Vale of Aust Pass); Decline (the old mill); Death (entrance of Charon); and (in the seventh compartment) Purgatory (Castle). Above on either side are small arched compartments, the one representing the birth of infant man, supported by angels; the other his death, his soul being again borne up to heaven by good spirits. This production is more remarkable for the strangeness of the conceit than for merit of performance.

Mrs. M'Ian makes a very bold and successful effort with a very difficult subject. The picture is amply entitled the "Highlands, 1852," but the extract from some recent publication appended immediately explains the painful scene before us—the depopulation of a Highland village by the tide of emigration:—"That morning the fires upon sixteen native hearths were put out! * * * When the first boat was laden, the pipes played 'Cha till, cha till, mi tuille' (I shall return never); all crowded out the hands to the glen they would never see more, and cried—'Lord! May God put the tear of sound out of the ear.' The artist has seized the melancholy spark of the narrative, and embodied it with remarkable truth and power. It is a scene to pause over, and we shall, to leave no remaining subject unnoticed, but not altogether so hopelessly as the poor emigrants themselves, about the destitute nature.

In connexion with the subject, we find another picture in the same room, coming under the class of the "emigration mania," as it is called, and which only shows how art can find themes, and worthy themes, in the great practical interests of life if it will only seek for them. Collinson's little picture, the "Emigration Scheme," represents the interior of the dwelling of a labourer, or small farmer, apparently but in a shabby genteel, circumstances. A letter from a friend or relation in South Australia has just arrived, and is being read by the husband, who sits with his hands crossed over his knee, ruminating upon it; whilst his wife, from a short distance, watches intently his countenance. The wife, probably, with the weakness and anxiety of her sex, loves her old home and her old friends, and would rather struggle on in the old homely way, than try new schemes of sudden fortune-making in distant and strange lands. In another corner, totally unconcerned, is the eldest born of the family, a stalwart, ruddy-cheeked young fellow, whose figures, altogether, are the most striking and vigorous introduced to hear the news, and the varied expression of the whole piece clearly denotes the actual, and the anxiety to read the usual calm content of the mother's face has been disturbed, and will remain so for some days to come. In the details of this picture the artist revels in textural minutiæ, as of velveteen jackets, corduroy continuations, patched breeches, Indian matting, &c., which have become a sort of labour of love with some painters of our day, and which is unobjectionable in pieces of small dimensions like the present.

In two WATER-COLOUR GALLERIES have been exhibited display, the pale necessity of trading chiefly upon the back. First taking the lead, of the elder in works of magnitude and pretension. In the Old Gallery, Copley Fielding the President, Fripp, and Duncan present us with landscapes more or less effective in their respective styles, and Callow pleases with his venerable architectural subjects. W. Hunt, of ugly-boy notoriety, has taken a more pleasing field, that of fruits and flowers, which he depicts with rich harmony and success. Of Haag's beautiful picture of the "Return from the Campagna" we give an Engraving in the Supplement which accompanies this Number. One of the chief ornaments of the room, however (as undoubtedly J. F. Lewis's "Arab Scribe," a remarkable production, full of spirit and character, and wonderful in high finish), is very dear.

In the NEW WATER-COLOUR GALLERY are many works of which we have not the note, with a view to elaborate criticism; but our limits prescribe brevity. For the present we must content ourselves with a brief notice of Hague's beautiful picture of the "Return from the Campagna" we give an Engraving in the Supplement which accompanies this Number. One of the chief ornaments of the room, however (as undoubtedly J. F. Lewis's "Arab Scribe," a remarkable production, full of spirit and character, and wonderful in high finish), is very dear.

In the NEW WATER-COLOUR GALLERY are many works of which we have not the note, with a view to elaborate criticism; but our limits prescribe brevity. For the present we must content ourselves with a brief notice of Hague's beautiful picture of the "Return from the Campagna" we give an Engraving in the Supplement which accompanies this Number. One of the chief ornaments of the room, however (as undoubtedly J. F. Lewis's "Arab Scribe," a remarkable production, full of spirit and character, and wonderful in high finish), is very dear.

LAW AND POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

LUMLEY v. WAGNER AND F. GYE.—ITALIAN OPERA.

This case, a brief notice of which in its first stage appeared in our late edition of last week, was again mentioned in the Vice-Chancellor's (Parker's) Court on Tuesday. It was a motion on behalf of Mr. Lumley, the lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre (the Opera), to restrain Mdlle. Johanna Wagner, the celebrated cantatrice (whose portrait appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of January), from performing and singing at the Royal Italian Opera House, Covent-garden, in violation of an agreement entered into by her in November last with Mr. Lumley.

The terms of the agreement were, that Mdlle. Wagner was to receive £400 a month or three months (April, May, and June), she engaging to appear twice a week during those times; and if this sum (£300 was to be advanced to Mdlle. Wagner on March 5. It was upon the alleged non-performance of this latter clause of the agreement that Mdlle. Wagner claimed to be released, together from the observance of the contract. The plaintiff, in the affidavit made by him in support of the bill, stated that he examined the pianoforte keys which he was to use with Mdlle. Wagner, making her engagement with him at Her Majesty's Theatre, and that he accordingly paid her the sum of £300. That the said Mdlle. Wagner had since left the Queen's (Royal Italian) Theatre) had offered to pay Mr. Lumley £300 to release her from her engagement.

Mr. Wood and Mr. Cottrell, for the plaintiff (on Tuesday week), made an application for an injunction against Mdlle. Wagner from appearing professionally or singing at the Covent-garden Opera house without Mr. Lumley's permission.

The Court was then told that a motion was intended to be made on behalf of Mdlle. Wagner, that the bill should be dismissed, or that it should be referred to the Master, with directions that the matters in question in the suit might be inquired into. There were also cross-motions, one by the plaintiff, to commit Mdlle. Wagner for contempt in appearing at the Queen's Theatre, and another by Mdlle. Wagner asking her engagement with him at Covent-garden, and that the plaintiff might be restrained from performing elsewhere. That the said Mdlle. Wagner had

NEW BOOKS, &c.

Just published, the second edition, in cloth, 1s 4d by post.
A WORD to the WISE; or, Hints on the Current Improprieties of Expression in Writing and Speaking
By PARR GWYNNE.
"All who wish to mind their p's and q's should consult this little volume."—Gentleman's Magazine. "May be advantageously consulted."—The well educated."—Athenæum.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St Paul's Churchyard

GERMAN BOOKS CHEAP. — Goethe's Works, 40 vols 18mo (1840), £2 2s; Goethe's Works, 30 vols 8vo (1853), £3 15s; Schiller's Works, 12 vols 18mo (1847), 18s; Schiller's Works, 10 vols 8vo (1844), 31s, Der Nibelungen Noth, 4to, with 190 plates by Schnorr and Neureuther (1843), 15s 6d; Koehler, Becker, atlas and maps, 4to, with 100 plates by Kuhlandt, Pecol, &c, and music (1849), cloth 5s, or be f morocco, 7s; Flügel's German Instructor (third original German edition), 2 vols imperial 8vo (1847), 10s; or half russia, 8os; Kiewell's German Dictionary, stout 12mo (1850), 2s 6d; Williams's German Dictionary, 12mo (1851), 3s; Meissner's 2s 6d; Wittkamp's Musbchen, imperial 8vo, splendidly illustrated (1842), Deutsche Volks Musbchen, imperial 8vo, splendidly illustrated (1842), 10s; or half red morocco, 16s; Iwan's German Grammar, 12mo, sixth edit (1850); Iu Goethe s Faust, 12mo (1851), 2s 6d; Bechstein's Deutsches Musbchenbuch 12mo (1849), 1s 3d, or half morocco, 2s 6d; also of BERNARD QUARITCH, 9, Second-hand, Foreign and Rare Book-se.ler, 15, Castle-street, Leicester-square, London —* * B Quaritch's Catalogue of Cheap Books in all the languages of the world published monthly, and sent gratis

GREAT EXHIBITION.—The most important conclusions of the MACHINERY DEPARTMENT have been set forth illustrated in the "OFFICIAL MECHANICS' JOURNAL, published monthly, price 1s

Large Plate Engravings have been given of Adam's, Fairbairn's, and Hawthorn-Locomotives, Garratt's Steam Pump, Gwynne's Centrifugal Pumps, Cook's Antifriction Power, Appold's Governor, Hughes's Manometer, Mole, Milligan's Loom, Redmond's Envelope Machine, Watts and Grant's Safety Apparatus for Mines, Randall and Sanderson's Screw and Tile Machine, Robinson and Russell's Sugar-mill, and the Prussian State Telegraph (Siemens's Patent); whilst most of the Other exhibited machinery has been fully described and illustrated by Wood Engravings.

A complete Alphabetical Index to the four published volumes (price 1d each) has been prepared, and may be had from the publisher. These volumes contain 25 Large Plate Engravings and 300 Wood-cuts.

HENRY, Cheapside. Editor's office, Office for Patents, 47, Lincoln's Inn-fields.

This day is published,
NARRATIVE of a RESIDENCE in SIAM; with an account of the Commerce and Productions of the Country. By J. RUSSELL, Author of "Right Years in Italy," &c.
Forming Vo. 13 of the NATIONAL ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY.
Crown 8vo, numerous Engravings, 5s 6d

VOL. I.
LIFE of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, with Notes by his Son, with Notes, Anecdotes, &c. With Portrait and Vignette, crown 8vo, 5s 6d, or handsomely bound in half calf, marble edges, 7s. To be completed in Four Vols.

Third Edition, revised, and with additional Notes and Engravings,
THE BOOK of ENGLISH SONGS, from the 16th to the 19th Century; comprising Songs of the Affections, Pastoral and Rural Songs Convivial Songs, Moral and Religious Songs, Sea Songs, Patriotic and Military Songs, Sporting Songs, Mad Songs, and Miscellaneous Songs; illustrated with Fifty Engravings from original designs. Cloth gilt, 3s 6d.

"We can heartily commend this volume of lyrics to general perusal."—Morning Advertiser.

Second Edition,
THE ORBS of HEAVEN; or, the Planetary and Stellar Worlds. A popular Exposition of the Great Discoveries and Theories of Modern Astronomy. Illustrated with Fifteen Plates, Maps, Views, Diagrams, &c

"The subject indeed is a theme for eloquence. Like other works of the kind, Mr Mitchell's book is likely to have an extended popularity."—The Economist.

Now ready, Second Edition, enabridged,
A WOMAN'S JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. Translated from the German of Mme PFEIFFER. Price 2s 6d. Illustrated with full-page Engravings printed in two tints; handsomely bound in One Vol. "This edition is compiled with numerous omissions of somewhat tinted drawings of remarkable scenes, objec s, adscurably crowded the original work, to the great disadvantage. They are and adventures during Madame Pfeiffer's bold enterprise. They are as important subjects and embellishments in the text. Indeed, books of travel are much shorn both of beauty and utility when without illustration from the pencil. This the Umbrian Edition has spoiles to Madame Pfeiffer's wonderful and edifying circumnavigation, and these omissions an admirable work."—Morning Advertiser

Also, the Third Edition of
THE MORMONS; or, Latter-Day Saints. An Account of the Rise and Progress of this new Religious Sect; with Memoirs of the Life and Death of Joseph Smith, the American Mahomet. Illustrated with Four Engravings from original designs. Post 8vo, nicely bound, price 2s 6d. "One of the most painfully interesting volumes that ever issued from the press."—Edinburgh Witness.

Second Edition,
MEMOIRS of EXTRAORDINARY POPULAR DELUSIONS. By CHARLES MACKAY LL.D. With 120 Illustrations from scarce prints and other authentic sources, engraved by J. Williams.

 The first Edition of 5000 of this curious Work was sold in three days

"These volumes will captivate the attention of readers who, according to their various tempers, feel either inclined to laugh at or sigh over the follies of mankind."—Times.

"A popular name for a book exactly of the kind calculated to be popular as it is. These are treated with much skill and tact, and the whole forms a very amusing work for readers of every class."—Literary Gazette.

"Whether this work be taken up for the purpose of instruction or for the search for amusement, the result to be obtained from it cannot be satisfactory. The author opens up a fresh page in the annals of human life in a way to claim our attention, and in a manner inspiring the utmost confidence and esteem."—Dublin Evening Post.

"We are not aware that the reader will anywhere find such full and amusing accounts of those celebrated humbugs—the Mississippi Schemes, the South-Sea Bubble, the Tulipo mania, &c—as in these entertaining volumes. The details given by Mr Mackay are exceedingly curious, and will, we are sure, be new to a great portion of the reading public."—Scotsman.

Two vols, 8s 6d each; or the two vols in one, cloth, gilt edges, 1s. The same, elegantly bound, two vols in one, calf gilt, marbled edges, 9s

ILLUSTRATED LONDON LIBRARY.
Demy 8vo, about 400 pages in each volume, handsomely printed in a new and legible type, illustrated in the highest style of art, and substantially bound in cloth gilt, 6s each volume; or elegantly bound in calf gilt, marbled edges, 10s

NINEVEH and its PALACES. A Narrative of the Discoveries of Mr Layard and M Botta at Nimroud and Khorsabad. With Descriptions of the Exhumed Sculptures, and particulars of the Recent History of the Ancient Assyrio Kingdom. By JOSEPH BONOMI. Illustrated with above Two Hundred Engravings, principally from the Assyrian Remains. This volume forms a complete guide to the Assyrian Remains recently received at the British Museum.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON COOKERY-BOOK, embellished with upwards of 200 Engravings, comprises Wood-engravings of 1000 Original Receipts, embracing the whole science and Art of Cookery. By PEREGRINE BUNCH. Volume 2 of "Mayhew's Paragon Series." Lord Stafford, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, sprinkled edges, price 5s.

BOSWELL'S JOURNAL of a TOUR to the HEBRIDES, companion volume to "Boswell's Life of Johnson." By ROBERT CARRUTHERS, Esq. of Inverness. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s 6d. With the volume will be incorporated a complete Index to "Boswell's Life of Dr Johnson."

A STORY with a VENGEANCE; or, How many Joints may go to a Tale. Inscribed to the greater number of Railway Travellers, and dedicated to the rest. By ANGUS B REACH and SHIRLEY BROOKS. With Steel Engraving by John Leech, 8vo, 2s; or handsomely bound, with Engraved Frontispiece, 3s; neat cloth, sprinkled edges, 2s 6d.

THE POLITICAL WRITINGS of LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. With an original Memoir of his Life to the present date, from authentic sources, Critical Notices, &c. In 1 vol. 8vo, cloth, price 12s, or handsomely bound and extra gilt in a complete form These volumes possess great interest. Among the more important works of Prince which they comprise are the "Political Reveries," with the Scheme of a Constitution, published in 1832 "Ideas of Napoleonism," "The Extinction of Pauperism," "Historical Parallels between 1636 and 1833,' &c.

Bound in blue and silver cloth, price 2s 6

LADY FELICIA. A New Novel. By HENRY COCKTON Author of "Valentine Vox," "Sylvester Sound," &c
With highly finished Engravings, and elegant printed in cloth, price 5s.
THE PATHWAY of the FAWN: a Tale of the New Year.
By ANNE BEALE.
Imperial folio, enamelled boards, price 21s,
GEMS of WOOD-ENGRAVING
New Edition, demy 4to, cloth, price 5s,
THE HANDBOOK to the PIANO-FORTE.
By JOHN HULLAH.
POPULAR EDUCATIONAL WORKS.
The 90th Thousand, price 1s; or Coloured, price 2s,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING-BOOK.
By JOHN HULLAH.
The 20th Thousand, price 2s,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON READING-BOOK.
By JOHN HULLAH.
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON INSTRUCTOR.
Just re dy, price 5s, a new and more eg ant Edition of THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT (Authorised Version)
Beautifully coloured, price 5s,
THE GREAT EXHIBITION: a graphic View of the Interior of the Crystal Palace (3 feet 6j inches by 2 feet 6 inches).
IN PREPARATION
MADAME PFEIFFER'S VISIT to ICELAND and the SCANDINAVIAN NORTH Companion Volume to a "Woman's Journey Round the Wor d.
THE ILLUSTRATED BOOK of SCOTTISH SONGS, from the Sixteenth to the Nineteenth Century; with numerous Illustrations.
THE ISRAELITE of the ALPS. A History the Persecutions of the Waldo ses. From the French of the Rev Dr ALEXIS MUSTON; with descriptive Illustrations
Office, 227, Strand.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

MESSRS. SAUNDERS and OTLEY'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.
1. MR. LODGE'S PEERAGE for 1852. Under the especial Patronage of the Queen.
2. THE LANGUAGE of FLOWERS. Under the especial Patronage of the Duchess of Kent The original edition
3. MR. JAMES'S LIFE of RICHARD CŒUR de LION. 2 vols.
4. SHAKSPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS. 2 vols. By Mrs. JAMESON
Two truly delightful volumes; the most charming of all the works of a charming writer.—Blackwood
5. LIVES of FEMALE SOVEREIGNS. 2 vols. By Mrs. JAMESON
6. THE HAND-BOOK of TURNING.
ADVICE to AUTHORS on the PUBLICATION of NEW WORKS. (Sent post-free to orders sent owing six stamps)
8. CAPTAIN KNOX'S CONFESSIONS of COUNTRY QUARTERS. 3 vols.
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

This day is published, price One Shilling,
ARTISTIC ANATOMY of the HUMAN FIGURE. By HENRY WARREN, Professor of Drawing at Queen's College, London, and President of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, with Twenty-three Illustrations drawn on wood by the Author, and engraved by Walter G Mason. WINSOR and NEWTON 59, Rathbone-place, and sold by all Booksellers and Artists' Colourmen

Fcp. 6d, price 1s, numerous Woodcuts,
DISEASES of the EYE.—LECTURES on VISION in HEALTH and DISEASE, delivered at the Central London Eye Hospital, containing a new Theory of Vision, with Rules for Choosing Spectacles, and adapting optical contrivances. By ALFRED SMEE, F R.S, Surgeon to the Bank of England, &c.
HORNE, THORNTHWAITE, and WOOD, 123, Newgate-street.

DR. MADDOCK ON DISEASES OF THE CHEST.
Fourth Edition, price 6s 6d, per Return of Post, 7s,
ON BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION, and CHRONIC COUGH, LOSS of VOICE, &c. By ALFRED B. MADDOCK, M.D.
"We recommend the work with the greatest confidence, and entertain no manner of doubt that it will be the means of saving thousands from a premature grave."—Court Journal.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S MONT BLANC.—The Proprietors of Exhibitions are hereby informed that the Diorama illustrating MR. ALBERT SMITH'S ASCENT of MONT BLANC are copyright, and that any attempt to produce a Panorama with the same subjects will be immediately proceeded against. Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly

WHO can be gay, if ailing or in bad health.' They who really wish to be cheerful, healthful, and happy, should adopt the simple course of attending to their health They may be merry and wise at the same time, by the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS. Whoever is in a state of health is active, energetic, and fit for the business of life The continual use of PARR'S PILLS not only lengthens life, but adds to its enjoyment.

 The Proprietors of ALBERT SMITH'S ASCENT of MONT BLANC are copyright, and that any attempt to produce a Panorama with the same subjects will be immediately proceeded against. Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly

WHO can be gay, if ailing or in bad health.' They who really wish to be cheerful, healthful, and happy, should adopt the simple course of attending to their health They may be merry and wise at the same time, by the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS. Whoever is in a state of health is active, energetic, and fit for the business of life The continual use of PARR'S PILLS not only lengthens life, but adds to its enjoyment.

 We recommend the work with the greatest confidence, and entertain no manner of doubt that it will be the means of saving thousands from a premature grave."—Court Journal.

HIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row

THE RIGHT HON. the VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, G C B, M P., and DOMINIC COLNAGHI and Co, 13 and 14, Pall-Mall East, Publishers to her Majesty, beg to state that they have this day published the Engraving by SAMUEL COUSINS, Esq, A R A, from the Picture of the above noble Viscount, painted by JOHN PARTRIDGE, Esq, which was exhibited in the Nineteenth Exhibition of the Royal Academy, 1850, by a Committee of Noblemen and Gentlemen

Artist Proofs (very Limited in number)	..	..	..	£8 8 0
Proofs before Letters	..	..	..	6 6 0
Proofs	..	..	..	4 4 0
Prints	..	..	..	2 2 0

CHURCH SERVICES, Bibles, and Prayer-books.—The cheapest and largest assortment in London is at HOLDMEYER'S, 195, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-street. Bibles, 3d; with clasps, 2s 6d; or in two vols, in case, 3s 6d; large print, Testaments, 6d; with clasps, 1s; elegant Gems, velvet, 1s 6d; Prayer-books, 3d; morocco, 2½s—very suitable for a present; Bibles, at 9½ handsomely bound, with clasps, 3s 6d; Prayer-books, 3½d; Testaments, 1½d to 6d. Polyglot Bibles, 2s 6d; large print Family Bibles, 6s 6d Prayer-books, 6d; Testaments, 6d. A very large assortment of Common prayer bindings. An inspection is respectfully solicited. Holmes's, 195, Oxford-street.

NEWSPAPERS.—COPIES of the "TIMES," may be seen by any person desirous of purchasing a newspaper, at No 1, Printing-house-square, New Times-office, where every facility is afforded for the inspection of the Files, and where orders for the delivery of the paper may be given. Price 4d unstamped, 5d stamped.

REEVES' WATER-COLOURS.
REEVES' CUMBERLAND LEAD DRAWING PENCILS.
112, Cheapside, London.

ARMS, CRESTS, CORONETS, or INITIALS, STAMPED on NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPES, in gold, silver, and colours, in the most elegant style, a half the usual charge. —RODRIGUES CREAM-LAID ADHESIVE ENVELOPES, 6d per 100; cream-laid note, 1 quire for 3d, thick cream-laid note, 6d per quire, 6s per ream; black-bordered envelopes, 1s per 100; black-bordered note, 4d per quire, 8s per ream; Wedding Cards, 50 for 4s 6d per 50; card-plate fashionably engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s 6d. Observe—At Henry Rodrigues', 31, Piccadilly, London.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, and £10 10s GOLD LEVERS, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price sets aside all intricacy, and the twelve manufacturers of Jones's other houses, for the sake of advertising at lower prices are foreign work. On receipt of a post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s, one will be sent free. Jones's Sketch of Watchwork, free for 8d

WATCHES and CHAINS. — GEORGE CORDING offers a large assortment of first quality at lowest prices Keyless, 3 guineas; 13 10s; 18 guineas; Ladies' Gold Lever dito, four, five, and six guineas; Ladies' elegant Gold Swiss Watches at 4 4s, 5 5s, 6 6s, and the very best 8 8s Engish Gold Lever Watches, at silou. ten, and twelve guineas, and of the highest workmanship and finish Gentlemen's Gold Chains in great variety. 26 to A.O —123, Strand, four doors west of Temple bar

MESSRS. HAWLEYS beg respectfully to inform the nobility and the public that they are the only genuine Patentees in London of the Improved Bunches, with a house in Regent-street, assuming the name of Hawleys. Elsewhere they manufacture for the trade, and for Messrs. Hancock, Hooper, and all the late Improvements, from £3 10s 6d Silver Watches, with silver dials, 5s extra; Gold Levers, 12 guineas; 14 6d; Gold Lever Watches, with silver dials, £3 15s 6d A written guarantee given with each Watch. A choice assortment of Gold Chains, Seals, Keys, &c. Clocks for Churches and Gentlemen's Halls, and High Holborn, from 7h, Strand, and Coventry-street

GOLD CHAINS by Troy Weight and Workmanship.—WATHERSTON and BROGDEN, Manufacturing Goldsmiths, established A D. 1798, having been awarded a Prize Medal for their Improvements in the Machinery for Chain Making, beg to announce that, in obedience to the numerous calls made upon them, they have thrown open their Manufactory to the Public at KING-STREET, HOLBORN. The system of weighing chains against sovereigns being one of the greatest frauds ever practised on the public, Watherston and Brogden will deal with all who favour them with their profit being made on the workmanship alone, which is charged at a moderate rate. The intrinsic value or simplicity of the pattern. A general assortment of Jewellery, all made on the premises.—Manufactory 16, Interesting-court, Cowcross-street, Smithfield.

STAYS SUPERSEDED.—GREAT EXHIBITION ELASTIC BODICE Stiff Stays destroy natural grace, produce deformity, and impliant disease MARTIN'S ELASTIC BODICE is without Whalebone, Lacing, or Buttons to keep one of such sufficient support. It is worn by ladies of rank, and recommended by the faculty. Can be sent by post. 2 and 3 E MARTIN, Inventors and Sole Manufacturers, 264, New Oxford-street, London. Prospectus, &c, on receipt of a stamp.

HEAL and SON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of BEDSTEADS, sent free by post, contains designs and prices of upwards of One Hundred different Bedsteads in Iron, Brass, and Japanned Wood, Polished Mahogany and Rosewood, and Walnut-tree Woods; also, their Priced List of Bedding and their new Warerooms added to keep one of each design fixed for inspection They have also, in addition to their usual stock, a great variety of the best designs of Parisian Bedsteads, both in Wood and Iron, which they have just imported.

HEAL and SON, Bedstead and Bedding Manufacturers, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road

CARPETS.—BRIGHTS SPLENDID VELVET TAPESTRIES.—These goods being woven by steam power, are sold at the price usually charged for ordinary Brussels patterns more elaborate, and the quality equal to any Brussels Designs of old patterns at a great reduction. French Silk and Worsted Damask, warranted, 21 inches wide, from 6s 6d per yard. Turkey Carpets, Floor Cloth, &c.—LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, 4, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, opposite Howel and James s

FRENCH ORGANDIE MUSLINS.—The FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY have taken the centrally situated Premises, Nos 16 and 17, Oxford-street, for the exclusive SALE of MUSLINS, and have now on show some thousands, many of the designs of which are surpassingly beautiful, and all of that lady-like character so peculiar to the French. They are now offering them at the literally absurd price of 3s 11½d the Dress. A Pattern Dress sent on the receipt of 36 postage stamps.
Address, FRENCH MUSLIN COMPANY, 16, Oxford-street, City end.

NEW MUSIC, &c.

HENRY LOVELL and N. J. SPORLE'S NEW SERIES of SONGS.
ST. VALENTINE'S DAY is a DANGEROUS TIME. Serio-comic Ballad. Key G, Compass D to F.
DRAW ROUND the FIRE. Ballad, Key G, Compass D to E.
FAINT HEART NEVER WON FAIR LADY. Humorous Comic Ballad Song Key F, Compass C to F.
These will be followed by "That's the Man," a song suited for a public dinner; the ballad of "Hope Deferred," confined so popular by Mr George Buckland, in his new Entertainment of the "Present and the Past," in the press, and will be published immediately.
Sole Agent, G CASE, 32, New Bond-street.

NEW SONG.—YOU ASK ME IF I LOVE YOU. Price 2s (sent postage free).—This is another happy conception of the composer of "We'll you love me thus in sorrow," "Dearest, then I'll love you more. "The Secret," "The rich man's bride," &c. "We predict a handsome sale for the shady self-publishing favourite. When sung with expression it is a most captivating composition." Musical Review
London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW SONGS.—The YOUNG LADY'S DREAM. I'M a MERRY LAUGHING GIRL. Price 2s each, post postage free.—"Miss Poole has just produced two charming and effective songs. The 'Young Lady's Dream,' descriptive of the effect of novel-reading, is a happy imaginational idea, in a most happy original composition, one which must have extensive popularity. 'I'm a Merry, Laughing Girl,' is by the composer of 'The Young Lady's Fan,' which Miss Poole has also rendered so celebrated. The present is a lively, sparkling production, calculated to charm wherever it is heard."—Musical Review DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

TRAVIS'S AMATEUR ORGANIST, a Collection of Sixty-four Voluntaries, arranged in 4 Books, price 2s each, and may be had in 2 vols, price 5s each, bound, in cloth. The arrangement and unprecedented success of this work, Travis's Amateur Organist, has long remained a most happy and original publication. The numerous Amateurs of the public are respectfully cautioned against ordering any but Travis s Amateur Organist, published only by the Author, 144, Fleet-street, and Messrs. Duff and Hodgson, and may be had of all respectable Music and Booksellers throughout the United Kingdom. Also, the Amateur Instructor and Preludes, by Travis, in Books, 4s. each.

ITALIAN OPERA MUSIC (best Folio Editions).—Le Prophète, 48; Les Huguenots, 48; La Favorita, 24; Lucia, 24; Lucrezia Borgia, 24; Il Pirata, 24; full music size. Also, Maria di Rohan, Norma, Figaro, Lucrezia, Barbiere, La Fille du Regiment, Other Lands, Puritani, Don Pasquale, and Alva. "These arrangements for piano, by Adolphe Adam and Meyer, are the best."—Spectator "Alas, One Dozen Stamps" with catalogue, sent post free for 30 stamps; three Numbers 78 8 amps. Office, 192, Aldy., strd. "Best Folio Editions, 1s 6d."—Times. "Pianiste" Editions. Haydn s twelve Canzonetta ,50 large folio pages), 8s.

MR. CRIVELLI begs to acquaint his Friends and the Public that a Third Edition of THE ART of SINGING embracing the principles developed in Mr Crivelli's Original System of Rules for the Cultivation of the Voice, may be had at his residence, 71, Upper Norton-st; and at all the principal Music-sellers.

FLUTIST to her MAJESTY.—DIATONIC FLUTE. By Royal Letters Patent.—This Instrument affords many additional fingerings which give great facility to the performer. In the upper and lower octaves the intervals are stated to be more correct Flutists, including Richardson; opinions of whom, with description of the Flute, are forwarded free. Manufactory, 135, Fleet-street. R. RICCARDI, Inventor.

TOLBERN'S 25-GUINEA ROYAL MINUTO PIANOFORTE, nearly 7 octaves, G G fall, metallic plate, with all the improvements, in mahogany, case of handsome bird's-eye wood The great peculiarity and worth of these Pianos is, that they will stand any climate without altering pitch, and are of the most beautiful tone and touch.—TOLBERN, manufacturer, 27, 28, and 29, King William-street, Strand, London Bridge.

PIANOFORTES at Manufacturing Prices.—Messrs HOLDERNESSE and CO, 444, New Oxford-street, London, beg to inform their friends and the public that they have reduced the price of their Pianofortes, in elegant rosewood, oak, or walnut-tree wood cases, to 25 guineas each. These beautiful instruments are 6 octaves (C to A) in compass, and have all the recent improvements, are possessed of amazing power, combined with sweetness of tone, and finished in the most perfect manner. Warranted for three years, and exchanged if not approved of. Also, a large assortment of cheaper Pianofortes, by the first makers, and other makers, from £10, lined by Messrs. Holdernesse and Co, with their new patent check action, and double and single-action Harps by Erard, from £16 16s. Every description of musical instrument repaired, purchased, and taken in exchange.

SMARTS WRITING INSTITUTION, 5, Piccadilly, between the Haymarket and Regent-circus; and from 7 to 8 every evening. Persons of all ages received (privately) and taught at any time suiting their own convenience. Terms for the improvement guaranteed in eight or twelve easy lessons. Separate rooms for ladies, to which gentlemen are not admitted. Mr. SMART will attend.—For terms, &c., apply to Mr. Smart, as above

TROUSSEAUX, LAYETTES, and CHRISTENING OUTFITS; for every variety of Wedding, Home, and Colonial FAMILY REQUISITES, at very tastefully executed, plain, moderately, or richly trimmed, by T HUGHES and Co, 561, Regent-street, where every article is marked in plain figures, all stamps for extensively varied printed prized lists. To Equestrian Magnates, Knights's Black-leg Boots, 42s; Hessians, 30s; Wellingtons, 25s. Boots, Shoes, trousseaux and indispensable

SECOND DELIVERY of SPRING and SUMMER SHAWLS.
SILKS, &c.—PATTERNS POST FREE.
4,000,000 worth of rich Fancy and Black Silks, &c, from 31s 6d to 35s the full Dress.
The new Bargee, Lama, &c, from 6s 6d to 10s the ful. Dress.
Also, the new Shawls, at 2s 6d the full Dress,
Shawls, Lace, Mantles, Hosiery, Linens, &c.
Patterns forwarded (post free) to any part of the Kingdom or Colonies.
Address to KING and CO, 243, Regent-street, London.

TO WHOLESALE BUYERS, SHIPPERS, CABINETMAKERS, SLAYMAKERS, &c.—WILCARTER, Slay Manufacturer, Importer and Exporter of Weve Stays, has now on hand a large assortment of Fancy Coutil Corsets, Stays, and Coutil Inserts. Markets for the present and approaching Season. He

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

MAY SUPPLEMENT

No. 557.—VOL. XX.] SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1852. [THREE NUMBERS, ONE SHILLING.

MAY IN TOWN.

LEAVING to all whom it may concern the task of tracing the rural developments of May, of recognising her blazonry in the fresh and open country, and acknowledging her bright presence in the fields and the woods and by the quiet rivers, we propose to meet her and to welcome her in Town—to note her urban signs and her demonstrations in the streets and the squares, the parks and the alleys. For the pleasant month is omnipresent—May reigns in Regent-street, as well as in the forest glade; May shines down the City lane, as well as upon the breezy upland; May revives and calls up from its lethargy the humble wallflower in the pot, as well as the buttercups in the meadows and the young corn in the fields. True, the month in its urban aspect must be principally sought for in its effects upon men, rather than upon things. It has a social development as well as a physical one to perform. It brings out into the full display of bloom and beauty all those delicate drawing-room and opera-house flowers of fashion which glitter and flutter in the West-end parterre. It stimulates into activity all the host of gardeners who live by attending to them—trimming them, watering them, and admiring them. It calls up in all their vigour the thousand and one little vanities wherewith the living flowers in question love to enshrine and deck and amuse themselves. It quickens all throbbing and pulsating West-end London into its bright and feverish annual three months' life. The City, indeed, is all but uninfluenced by May: May shines upon its chimney-pots, but that is all. The funds and the omnibuses go up and down as usual, and scrip is worth neither more nor less than in December. The stern City is proof against the brightsome time. No clerk sits fewer hours on his three-legged stool—no alderman gives himself a respite from City dinners. The great commercial and civic machine marches and munches as it did before the season, and as it will after it. So, indeed, also, of a considerable part of town—of Whitechapel the smoky, and the Borough the smokier—of reserved and Quakerish Clapham—of prim and shy Hackney—of the social solitudes of Hoxton, and the far-pervading wilderness of Bow. These regions are but slightly affected by May. The steady-going merchant and the hard-working artisan keep on in the old routine. Only here and there, on the outskirts of the province of houses, where tea-gardens abound, and tulip shows are held, and brass bands congregate, and balloons go up, and fireworks nightly astonish the firmament—only in such spots is felt the gay and garish influence of the time. It is, we repeat, the West-end which especially and particularly quickens, and leaps into buoyant and exulting life, that knows that its time has come, that its bright days are on, and that the more it makes of them the better. We have not here to tell of fresh clustering foliage bursting from the bud; but we have to tell of the apparition of the works of the loom and the needle and the jenny, expanding in a thousand hues and a thousand figures to greet the opening season. The summer flowers are much. Are not the summer fashions something? Roses and violets, lilies and heartsease! Have we not a corresponding crop of fragile and pretty things smiling through plate glass—lustrous in the glare of opera or ball-room chandelier—enshrining bright eyes or adorning glossy locks? May in the country, and you talk of the exultation and natural elasticity and disposition to merriment of the season. You recall old world stories of May-poles, and garlands, and dancing maidens. But May in town is equally inspiring. What thronges the sunny street? What thronges the flashing parks? What thronges the glittering concert-room? What more than thronges the perfumed ball-room? May in town has its burst of life, just as well as May among the fields. But May in the country, and you talk of the singing of the birds upon the bough. Well, for May in town, we talk of the singing of artists on the boards. A prima donna's throat against a nightingale's—a contralto to rival the liquid mellowness of a blackbird—a tenor to bill and coo with any love-lorn pigeon, and a bass to sing to shame the cuckoo! We think we have proved that as there is a May in the country, so certainly is there a May in Town.

But the month is on us—the proof is easy—let us up into the streets and public places and see. May has been duly inaugurated. Greens have danced, and sooty "my Lords" have capered, and grimy "my Ladies" have passed around the ladle. The omnibus-men have come out in summer coats and white hats, and stuck bunches of ribbons on their whips; and even the worthy police have felt the influence of the season, and enliven their beats with the snowiest of trowsers. See Regent-street, all one gleaming procession of gay and glancing vehicles. Hack cabs look ashamed of themselves, and plunge desperately into the stream so as to disappear from observation. And no wonder. Contrast the illustrious John, serene upon his hammer-cloth, with the tatterdemalion Dick, with a knocked-in hat, and a short pipe in his mouth, and a wiry terrier—prime dog for rats—peeping out between his corduroyed knees. John looks down upon him like a comfortable angel, and passes by, in placid indifference, Dick's angry inquiry of "Now then, old man, vere are ye a-coming to?" An English coachman, thoroughly got up for the season, is a profound thing to look at. Observe that wonderful primness and neatness which encircle the man as with a halo. The pulling on of those stockings was a work of art; the tie of that neckcloth was an achievement of genius. And the face so placid, and so dignified, and so smooth—how could he have managed to shave so closely? The expression is a mottled benignity. He sits a serene Jupiter, and looks calmly down upon the ways of men. If there ever was an institution—a true West-end coachman, got up as he is got up in May, is an institution, a sort of fifth estate. England is England so long as those stockings are unruffled, and no flour flies out of that flaxen wig.

FETE CHAMPETRE IN THE TIME OF CHARLES II. PAINTED BY T. TA[illegible] —(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

But the pavé, not the street, is our main look-out. How fluttering and butterflyes the effect is! How the parasols gleam, and flash, and glitter in the sunshine! How the eye goes rambling and wandering and filled with a confused mirage of forms and colours; the bright draperies of laces, and the shifting hues of shot-silks; the deep-toned magnificence of velvets, and the gay fluttering lightness of the thousand flounced and furbelowed muslins. Every now and then one catches a glimpse of the silky and glistening interior of a carriage; the mind sinking back into cushions and revelling in the unalloyed luxury of softness, as the stalwart, and at the same time delicately got up, Jeames, placing his arm in a horizontal position before his face, enables us to catch for a moment the glimpse of a white gloved hand, or a still more instantaneous vision of dazzling ankles, half shaded by the falling drapery, as the owner trips down the swinging steps of the carriage, and in a moment vanishes across the white pavé, amid the plate-glass windows, and shawls, and cataracts of silks continually pouring down for the edification and delight of all female beholders. And the gentlemen are out in equal force. Long toilettes have been made in bachelors' rooms as well as maids' boudoirs. Cravats have been as difficult to tie as ribbons or flowers to adjust, and there has been an equal embarras de richesse in the matter of waistcoats as in the still more urgent affair of frocks. You would not think that the superlative dandy, with that hat so wonderfully brushed, with these moustaches so delicately cirés, with that short front so elaborately decorated, with those gloves so extraordinarily tight, and with those boots so extravagantly shiny, had made up that faultless toilette in paltry "chambers," up four pair of stairs, in a dusty Inn of Court, in a dismal quarter of the town. He looks as if he had come out of a palace at the least, and as if his atmosphere were a sort of fairy medium of soft nothings and lisping words, and scents, and perfumery. Men of more sturdy and manly mould go mingling in the constantly running stream; and fat old gentlemen, well fattened up, with rosy well-preserved cheeks and fluffy doeskin gloves, have emerged from club bow-windows, and the sweet shady side of Pall-Mall, to catch a glimpse of the sunny side of Regent-street in the brilliant afternoon of May. Observe the foreign gentlemen with beards of majestic dimensions and strangely tortured moustaches, and hair cut as short as the bristles of a well-worn blacking-brush. Those gleaming hats dread a shower as ruin, and those most fragile of boots with little shiny tips would shrink like mad dogs from the very idea of a fluid drop spotting the hot dusty pavement. The foreign gentlemen, therefore, seldom show except in the driest and most enduring-looking sunshine. A cloud disperses them as the dawn does ghosts. They vanish into strange by-streets round and behind Leicester-square, where lurk dingy cafés and grimy Hôtels Français; and "Table d'hôte" is written over doors in thin squeezed up letters, and dark fat ladies are seen taking snuff at windows. The foreigners always keep together, and move in groups, and the unfamiliar sound of their languages strikes the ear, even amid the grinding of the wheels and the buzz of the ordinary press of comers and goers. Foreign ladies are generally seen in company with a ribbon and a white poodle. How their sallow waxy faces shew yellow beside the roses and the lilies of perfidious Albion; and how the gleaming black eye stares with its keen quick glitter into the meek blue orbs of our gentle insulaires. A great proportion of these people are artistes of some kind or another. They have nearly all that peculiar indescribable jaunty picturesqueness and slangy finish of manner which belongs to the tribe, particularly in its continental development. The chique is never absent; you catch it in the turn up of the cuff, and in the turn down of the collar—in the set of the hat, and in the curl of the moustache. It is only in this season that our friends are visible: May is the crowning month. They have come hither from beyond the Alps and beyond the Pyrenees. They have left quiet German towns, all beer, music, sausages, and metaphysics; and brilliant Italian theatres, all glare and false glory, where a prima donna is called sixty times before the curtain in an evening; they have left the solitude of far-away Alpine valleys, and the bewildering glamour of Parisian salons, for the great London "diggings"—the great European gold deposit—where to make a hit is equivalent to striking a richer vein than glimmers either in Bathurst or California. This is their season and their time. Let the carriages cease to roll—let the Jeameses cease to adorn the benches by the shop doors—let the cheap nights of the Opera begin, and the last long nights of the House of Commons draw to a weary end, and they are also gone, vanished from town as on an approaching shower they vanished from the streets; but as certain to reappear the following May, as the cuckoos or the swallows.

Jostling amid the brightly fluttering throng, elbowing fine ladies and gentlemen with a delightful sense of independence, go the peripatetic vendors of those wares which old custom has made the street a shop for. Canes are there by the score, from the undeniable cudgel or bludgeon to the slenderest and glossiest of wands, with the most dandified of tassels depending from the polished wood. Sticks with dog heads for canine admirers; sticks with skulls for gentlemen given to the contemplation of frail mortal emblems; wonderfully crooked sticks, with knobs as big as turnips, for the amiable race of the eccentrics in general—all are to be had from the vendor, who modestly keeps his station on the kerb-stone. Next to him saunters the man of pen-knives, with half-a-dozen instruments skilfully arranged in each hand, the half-a-dozen blades belonging to each open and glittering in all manner of sharp uncomfortable angles, and suggesting unpleasant ideas should you trip and fall suddenly into the merchant's arms. But the dog-seller, which also means the dog-stealer, is out of all sight the most interesting of the industrials called forth by May in the West. Sometimes he is dressed as a groom, with those strange wrinkled corduroy leggings, for the profession of which there must be set apart a peculiar race of tailors—with a threadbare cut-away coat, a low shiny hat, and a white neckerchief clasped by a steel horse-shoe brooch. Others, again, come has always a style and a fashion of his own. Mark his baggy velveteen shooting jacket, full of pockets, with a little dog's head peering forth at each; his grey or drab breeches terminating at the knees in the display of a pair of villanous legs—that class of cords with round lumps of calfs and lace up boots, which Mr. Dyce says never seem complete without fetters. Of erve the smooth oval look of the fellow's face, the nonchalance with which he bites a straw, and the ferret-like glance of the small eyes which restin truly pursue every dog which passes. Down [illegible] Swan Dick, or perhaps in White-chapel Isabella, that gentleman is seen as a "crib," in which many a stolen Fido, and Carlo, and Prince and Rover is to say nothing of the sterner tribes of the Snaps, and the Lyns hers, the Grips and the Teasers, languish for their respective mistresses and masters. The dogs have somehow gone lost, and the fancier has, of course, somehow "found" 'em. The advertisement from the sorrowing proprietor goes forth, and in the dusk of the evening he is favoured with a call from a shambling individual, with a black eye, who "knows a party who would make it all right about the dog for two sovs down and no questions axed." The arrangement is duly come to and as next day Mrs. Edwards Edwards walks forth with her recovered Princey, and passes our friend in Regent-street, with the dog's heads sticking out of his pockets, she has little notion of the proximity of her defaulted property. The dogs displayed by a dog-fancier are perfect miracles of coat-shine. All the resources of soap and water must have been exhausted, with, perhaps, various chemical combinations as well, before those poodles could have attained their marvellous pitch of whiteness.

How were those Scotch terriers trained to look such phenomena of sharpness? How were those English cousins of theirs tortured into that grin of no pernatural ferocity? Buy one or all of these races, and you will find their gifts slowly fade away. The poodle will get dirty in spite of you; the Skye terrier will lose the wondrous brightness of his eyes; the English terrier will look as mild as milk and water before the week be out. The state in which the dogs are exposed to sale is one of the mysteries of the "fancying" craft, and as such we leave its Round the corner a long line of carriages is defiling along the curb and discharging their occupants at a lofty door. On each side two gigantic placards of yellow and blue flank the entrance. A morning concert—a grand morning concert—one of the greatest morning concerts of the morning-concert-giving month of May, is going on, and the salle is crowded to the door with gay toilettes and rainbow-coloured bonnets. All the notabilities of the fashionable world are announced. Perhaps one half of the notabilities in question are announced for another grand morning concert, or perhaps for two others; but this is a matter of course, and nobody takes any notice of it. So the programme, long or short, must out, goes on: wonderful feats of legerdemain are performed on the pianoforte key-boards—fiddles are made to sound like flutes, and flutes like trombones. The new soprano sings a higher note than any old soprano, and the new basso profondo sings a lower note than any old basso profundo, and all the world are in raptures accordingly. Never was there such a hit—such success—such a grand morning concert!

Let us notice two other social features peculiar to our London May. Lounging by the kerb-stone near the open sunny space in which the squirts keep guardianship over mast-headed Nelson, loiters a doubis or a treble row of carriages, and a glittering procession is constantly ascending and descending the portioned steps of the National Gallery. For it is early in May, and all the world are crowding to the grand May lounge of London—the Royal Academy. Let us saunter through the rooms; amid the blaze of the freshly-finished paintings, and the actual furnace of the gilt frames; amid "landscapes with cattle" and "landscapes with showery effects—storm passing off;" amid "on the Thamesee" and "on the Wyes;" among scenes from "Gil Blas," and episodes from the "Vicar of Wakefield;" among Landseer's deer, and Roberts' temples, and groups historic from Maclise, and groups mythologic from Etty and Uwins; among old games and dances by Frith, and picturesque genre assemblages by Ward; among the mangled-out nuns of the P. R. B's, and the heaving seas and sunny skies of Stanfield and Cook—and we shall find ourselves in a scene thoroughly characteristic of London May. What an atmosphere of flirting and fluttering, what discussion and debate, what enthusiasm of admiration, and what cold severity of criticism—all mingling in one vast soft interminable and unintelligible buzz. How the favourite pictures are blocked in—how they are pronounced by the ladies to be dear, lovely, delightful, charming, with what interest are the portraits of "a lady" and "a gentleman" surveyed by the originals the real, and their particular circles of friends, and with what indignation do they overhear a contemptuous remark about those snob portraits taking up the room which ought to be given to art—not painted flattery at a guinea the square inch! Here is a severely critical group deep in chiaroscuro and grisaille, and middle tints, and pearly tints, and the arrangement of the lights. Next to them again is a joyeux allez company of loungers, who saunter day by day into the rooms, and chat, and laugh, and have seen the picture, but don't seem to care for the rest—"There's so many—and the rooms are always so crowded—and one forgets—and you'll see it all in the critiques of the papers—and it's a bore." An artist contemplating his own work may be known at a glance. He stands opposite it with folded arms and a stern visage. He shifts his position to try the effect of different lights. He frowns a dismal scowl at the stranger who, referring to his catalogue, murmurs—"1437. Moses' Sisters dressing him for the Fair"—"not a confoundedly bad picture, and on such a subject too!" He scorns nine-tenths of the works around with a bitter scorn, and deems that there is a conspiracy to keep him down. The conversation of a knot of small artists is always wonderful, it is all about the evil influences which warped the hanging committee. They would each and all have been on a line, were it not that Landseer is jealous of this gentleman's "Puppy-dog trying to catch its tail;" and Stanfield, of this other gentleman's "View of Primrose Hill—sunset effect;" and Maclise, of this third gentleman's grand historical picture, 40 feet by 30, of "King John mending the Pen with which he signed Magna Charta;" and are perfectly agreeing in the grievances of the other, and coming to the unanimous and consolatory resolution that they are the three worst-used gentlemen in Christendom.

Yet another social feature of our London May. We are in the great Hall of Exeter. The vast area is a sea of upturned faces; the platform towers to the organ—a mountain of life and animation. Five or six thousand people are gathered together; the people of the class we have seen at the morning concerts or at the Royal Academy. Mark how sombre and grim are the toilettes. Where are all the fluttering ribbons and the flashy laces? Where the bright hues of wavy feathers, and the gaily-coloured parterres of artificial flowers? A restrained and respectable neatness reigns instead. Black and drab are the prevailing colours, and the effect is as if Milton's

Twilight grey
Had in her sober livery all things clad.

How perfect is the change from the glare and the garishness of more fashionable assemblies! We have got from the Cavaliers to the Puritans—from Whitehall to Conventicle. Suddenly a gentleman comes forward from the platform and stance conspicuously before the meeting. He is of grave and reverend aspect, and there is no mistaking the ecclesiastical cut of the single-breasted suntout, and the loose clerical set of the neckerchief. He is recognised at once; but, instead of the ordinary outburst of popular applause, the demonstration is, in nine cases out of ten, a silent one; and with one instantaneous flash there leap into the air thousands and thousands of white handkerchiefs. The entire assemblage is lost, as beneath a snow-storm. It is all one white flutter, and flutter, and the orator bows his thanks for the ladies' welcome. A curious and significant feature, indeed, of English society and feeling are the "May Meetings." Then comes the great annual jubilee of what is called the "Serious World." Then all the sober and non-dashing faubourgs of the London universe pour forth their inhabitants to these Great Exeter Hall gatherings, and there schemes are organised by the score, and money poured in by the thousand pounds in aid of the restless, all-spreading, all-attempting, all-daring spirit of philanthropy and propsgandism which are two of our most notable national character.stics.

All this revives annually with May. The frivolity of our lives, and the seriousness of our lives, the amusements of our lives, and the purloses of our lives, all receive a fillip in May. One might trace the season in a hundred trifling developments, but each full of character and significance. May shines in the roaring street, and the long dormant love of green things puts forth more or less vigorous buds of yearning in all hearts. May shines upon the muddy Thames, and men begin instinctively to talk of a "blow on the river," and to picture the wide wy banks and wooded nits of Richmond. May breathes upon the Parks, and the long untrodden greensward is trampled by thousands of enjoying feet; and the tardily drying mud of the "Ladies' Mile" is churned up again by the long vehicular procession of all species of glazed panels and picked-out wheels, from the vast old family carriage to the shy dark brougham with a dog looking out of the window. May beams down into the alley and the "all a growing, all a blowing" man wheels his barrow of humble out ssvoury flowers along the squalid ravine between the houses. May is bright upon the roofs, and the hard-worked garreteer, be it man or woman, stoops over the pot or the box of mignionette or wall-flower on the window-sill, and adds pure refreshing water to the vivifying flash of the summer sun. May is hot upon the square yard of sooty London garden ground, and the stunted abortion of a tree makes an effort towards its six annual leaves. May is musical in the heart, and the blind old lark gives a flutter in its cage and sings as though at Heaven's gate. In all these little features and peculiarities all this great City proclaims May. We have traced its greater and more important social developments, its grand West-end features; but in little matters, as in big, the spirit is the same. "All creatures now are merry minded." The "greens" dance and Amazons opine. The prima donna and the caged poodle-ish alike sing their loudest. The serious men make their largest speeches in Exeter-hall, and the gay men open their most vigorous flirtations in drawingroom and opera-box. Que voulez-vous? The summer is begun. The blood stirs. It is May—May not alone in country, but in town!

A. B. Reach.

A FETE CHAMPETRE IN THE DAYS OF CHARLES II.

(From a Fly-Leaf in Mr. Pepys' Diary.)

Midsummer Day, 1667.—To my office, where comes my Lord Brounker with another; and after much diverting talk concerning my Lord Buckhurst and Nell (Gwyn), presently urgeth Sir W. Pen and me to take horse, and so to Epping, where he had appointed divers to meet him (as also servants with meats and wine and the like), and to eat and drink al fresco. Doubted in some sort, for that I had firmly promised my wife to dine at home; Will Soames, his cousin, and my niece Rose Hampton, being to dine with us, and my wife, poor thing, grievous troubled about the cheer. But on the whole and minding that W. Soames is given to borrow money wrote her that my Lords had ordered me on the nation's business to Dorking, and bid her send me my peach-coloured coat and fringed gloves. Comes back my messenger with the cloaths, and an angry message from my wife; whereat I cannot blame her nevertheless. Mem. to chide her, seeing that it might have been on the nation's business, and it is not for her to misdoubt what I say, as confidence betwixt man and wife is that without which nought can prosper. And so to Epping, where truly I found much good company. My Lord Staines and Sir Harry Pysbody (who methought was in prison), also Hugh Goresby and his wife, Sir Geoffrey Hudson the dwarf, Mistress Knibb, and other women from the King's house, all mighty pretty. We sat under the trees in the forest; but, Lord, how foolish the women did talk. I had a deal of discourse with Knibb, who had scarce any paint on her cheeks, and looked as yellow as a China orange. Proposed a play, and my Lord Staines' black page to enact "Othello;" but when in sport we began to tutor the fool, he would but grin like unto a baboon, which so incensed my Lord (and justly) that he did slash him on the legs (which are tender in these neathen) until he roared again, at which we had much mirth. Methought H. Goresby jealous that my Lord would lift Mistress Goresby from her horse, gazing in her eyes (which be fine) all the while, but this was most foolish. One Mistress Jane Rogers had a fine velvet hat and white feather, which did content me much. I took not great delight in the wine, yet the clary was not ill; but the fruit was excellent, and many good jests were made touching the apple, and the like. Only Knibb did curse dreadful, breaking her tooth with a Barcelony nut; and I to comfort her must needs promise to give her a silver crack-nut for her occasions. Then she sang "All you who love maidens," and a certain other song, whereat Mistress Goresby did shew great indignation, and did walk away, but after some time came back, my Lord going after to pacify her, swearing no harm was meant, which was not, and I hate such follies. Jane Rogers spilled some wine upon my coat, whereat I was vexed, but showed it not at the time, hoping to be well with her, but heard after that she abided me not. Sir G. H. (the dwarf) caused great sport, and in a bumper, well nigh the bigness of his head, drank speedy marriage to a young lady whose name I minded not. She answering, that, unless he would himself marry her, she would remain unmarried, he professed his readiness thereto; and my Lord pronouncing a grave blessing on their loves, we did all salute her, calling her Lady Hudson, and so, with much laughter, to horse; and my Lord Staines would seat Mistress Goresby on hers, saying it was meet, as he had taken her off. Whereat Goresby, being drunk, called my Lord "knave," which, if true, came amiss from such as he. My Lord would have chastised him, but was withheld by the women, and presently, with some drink and much ado, they were as fast friends as the wicked can ever be. And so riding to town, Mistress Knibb singing lustily, and calling to wayfarers that they were rogues and worse, which was very pretty and good sport. Sir G. H. did insist on many foolish things, the little wretch's brain being weak and distempered with drink. However, we gave charge of him to servants, and so home, I thanking Providence for a pleasant day, but somewhat troubled for my spoiled coat and for my wife's anger. And, indeed, it fell out, that, coming to my house, found my Lords had really sent for me, and raged, which was silly, as things done cannot be undone. Promised her a new sack, poor thing, and so to sleep.—From a MS. belonging to Mr. Sharley Brooks.

PETER BROWN'S HOLIDAY.

I.

Who likes may rule the state,
Who chooses may be great,
Or spend his weary days digging gold in the mire;—
He who prizes his wealth
Above virtue or health,
May grub, and grub away to his inmost heart's desire.
And the world may toil and fight,
In the wrong or in the right—
What matters it to me? I can live at my ease;—
My name is Peter Brown,
And I'm going out of town,
To loiter for a while in the shadow of the trees.

II.

I've had enough of strife
In my little bit of life,
And I've made up my mind not to wrangle any more;
And however things may go,
And whatever winds may blow,
I'll cease to be a slave, and to grumble or deplore.
Let editors indite,
'Tis their business to write;
But I'll read no more debates till the nights grow dark and cold.
My name is Peter Brown,
And I'm going out of town,
To the trees and to the flowers, and the breezes of the wold.

III.

Let Derby say his say,
And let Dizzy have his day,
And let the flinty President stalk freedom through the breast;—
Let Boney do his worst,
Till he vanish like the first;—
What signifies to me? I want a little rest.
Prate away, ye vestries all,
Talk, ye mighty and ye small!
I would rather hear the blackbird and the trumpet of the bee;—
My name is Peter Brown,
And I'm going out of town,
And politics and parishes are nuisances to me.

IV.

I'm sick of old Pall-Mall,
And the Opera as well,
I'm weary of the Club, and the streets so dull and drear;
My eyes are tired of books,
And my ears of Jones and Snooks!
Oh, the leaves! the green leaves! and the song of birds so clear!
I'm fagg'd and bored to death,
want to draw my breath,
And as the May is here, and the season at its prime;
As sure as I am Brown
I shall vanish out of town
Good bye, ye choking streets! I'll be happy for a time.—P. B.

MAY AND ITS FLOWERS.

Hail, beauteous May! Thou dost inspire
Mirth and youth and warm desire.
Woods and groves are of thy dressing;
Hill and dale do boast thy blessing.
Thus we salute you with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.

WHATEVER changes may have taken place in the social and moral world since the gracious hand of Milton penned his beautiful "Invocation to May," blessed be God, no change of season has succeeded to render his picture of this charming month less perfect, or the homage he has paid to it less just. May, the fourth month of the year, is as truly merry May in 1852 as it was two centuries ago. True it is that the Maypole rears its head no longer on the village green, and that the faith of our maidens in the beautifying properties of its dew has waxed fainter and fainter. True it is that Kings and Queens no longer go a-maying in Greenwich-park, or milkmaids in Islington fields; but the spirit of the season is as rife within us as it ever was; and if the demonstrations which attend it be less marked than of yore, it is only that change of times has brought a change in the nature of our pleasures; the springs of enjoyment are copious as ever, though they may have wandered into new channels. Yes, May is as it ever was—merry May! the morning of the seasons—the youth of the year—the birthday of beauty on every side—on upland and lowland, mountain and moor; in the singing brooks and in the still waters; for, "Lo! the winter is passed; the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of singing of birds is come; and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land." Such was spring in the days of King Solomon; such it is in those of Queen Victoria; and such will it ever be while light and life remain on the earth.

Leaving the antiquary to lament the decadence of the time-honoured observances it delights him to honour, and the classic, with a deprecating shrug of the shoulder, to compare the May of Arcadia with that of his own less favoured land; leaving to other hands to tell of the May of the Great City; move we aside into the retired byways of Nature, and see what she has been doing for us there in the dull chill days of winter to minister to our enjoyment in this month of months.

"Beware of him who loves not flowers and children," says the old adage, and justly: flowers that seem associated with our first experiences, interwoven with our earliest and happiest recollections; flowers whose beauty is ever new to us, for long before it has had time to pall upon our senses it has departed; to whose perfume we owe many a passing glimpse which nothing else could give us of thoughts and feelings long forgotten—of a past we had never thought to see again. Beware, indeed, of him who loves not flowers.

There are few, even among the most philosophical minds, who have not yielded to their influence; few of the most unimaginative who have not owned their spell. The sight, in a foreign country, of the pervanche melted Rousseau to tears; and the yellow gorse, seen under similar circumstances, produced upon Linnæus the same effect. Mungo Park, in his journal, tells us that the sight, in the wilds of Africa, of a flower which he had been familiar to him in his native land, was as the face of a friend to him, and fulfilled the office of a friend by raising his spirits at a time when almost overcome by despondency at the magnitude of the difficulties which surrounded him. Dr. Carey, the great Oriental scholar, records his delight at the sight, in India, of a daisy which had sprung up spontaneously from some mould in which more important plants had been packed from England; and the author of "Memorials of the War in the Peninsula" assured the writer that the smell of the rosemary always recalled most vividly to his mind all the circumstances of the battle-field of Toulouse, he having been brought to a sense of existence, after a severe wound, by its powerful odour.

Over the poets flowers have ever exercised the same benign influence, for there are few of them who have not hymned their praises and done them homage. No inconsiderable collection might be formed of the flowers thus celebrated. It is, however, curious and worthy of remark how much more frequently wild flowers have been the theme of their admiration than those more indebted to art for their production—another proof that nature is, after all, the true fountain of inspiration:—

Ye field flowers, the gardens eclipse you, 'tis true;
But, wildings of nature, I dote upon you,
For ye waft me to summers of old,
When the earth teem'd around me with fairy delight,
And when daisies and buttercups gladden'd my sight,
Like treasures of silver and gold.

I'en now what affection the violet awakes!
What loved little islands, twice seen in their lakes,
Can the wild water-lily restore!
What landscapes I read in the primrose's looks,
And what pictures of pebbled and minnowy brooks
In the vetches that tangle their shore! Campbell.

By slow and gradual steps we are led on, by the appearance of one flower after another in our gardens, to the full flush of the treasures of May. The snowdrop, or snowbell, as the Italians prettily call it; the mezereon, the daffodil named by old writers; the Lent lily, with its large family of arums—heralds of the floral year of the garden—prepare us for the "succession of bright hues and gracious odours" in which we may revel there for the next two months, but no such avant-courriers do service to the flowers of the field; they are wrested from the sleep of winter, as it were, at once, unheralded, unannounced, but not unnoticed. To the botanist the haunts of even the simplest wild flowers are familiar, and their coming an object of interest. He knows where to seek his favourites: he can track them on the sands and stony places, and among brambles, briars, and rocks; half hidden by the withered leaves of a bygone season, they stand still revealed to his sight. But for their less gifted admirers, who can boast so such knowledge of their vagrant habits, there are no pioneers to their hiding-places like the children of the peasantry. None can do the honours of the woods and hedgerows like them; and well may it be so, for are they not their only wealth—are they not their own by right of free forestry? The high-bred, well-trained, courtly pansy may be demed them, but its gipsy sister, the American heartsease, is their own; the stately garden lily may be beyond their reach, but the sun-like lily of the valley is no recluse to them. Let us follow, then, that group of sunburnt children, and make the acquaintance of the flowers of the field, and under the only designations of science, but in the familiar names of common life.

How gay are the hedgerows on every side with the white hawthorn, boasting, if the name of May, and filling the air with its faint perfume! Close beside it rose the crab-tree, with its beautiful blossoms, all pervading in its maturity the promise of the spring; the mountain ash, rather in its fruitage than in its blossom, and the Rowan, equally attractive in both. The traveller's joy (wild clematis) crowns the highest points of the hedgerows, and smothers even the prickly holly in its embrace; whilst here and there the white convolvulus, with its vine-like tendrils, might furnish a garland befitting the brow of a Queen.

Beneath the friendly shade of the hedgerows blossoms many a plant of interest—the wild vetch, the common mallow, jack-in-the-hedge, mouse-ear, hawkweed, and others too numerous to be even glanced at. The pheasant's eye, the blue vetch, the wild mustard with its yellow flowers, adorn the freer ground of the corn-fields, and win favour from eve y eye but that of the farmer.

Flowever pleasant our leisurely stroll along the grassy hedgerows may have been, we gladly turn aside from the hot sun and dusty road to enjoy the mellow light and solemn stillness of the woods, broken now and then perhaps by the glancing wing of the blackbird as it springs from hedgerow to covert, or the "weet-weet" of the chaffinch as it calls to its mate. No ponderous wagon or jostling market cart meets us here, to remind us of labour and this working-day world. The forest trees, not yet in full leaf, present all their distinctive characteristics to the sight—some sturdy and defiant, some flexible and feathery, but all beautiful!

The hawthorn has arrived at full maturity. The beautiful wild cherry has donned both leaf and blossom, scattering its delicate petals around it like a shower of summer snow; whilst amongst the soft mosses and mellc grass at its feet, the blue pyramid, the anemone (the wind flower), the seamless violet, the wakerobin, and, above all, that most delicate of flowers, the wood sorrel, lately seen but in scattered patches, literally clothe the earth. The lily of the valley, too, half hidden by its leaves, is no less abundant in glades more shaded and secluded; the major periwinkle, with star-like flowers, the sweet woodruff, with its white tufts and ringed leaves, the herb Paris, speedwell, the wood anicle, the bird orchis, first of a numerous and capricious family—all combine their attractions and ample reward us for the trouble of seeking them out in the cool, moist nooks they love so well.

To make a sunshine in a shady place,

If from the woods we turn into the luxuriant meadows, what wealth of fragrant grasses meet us at every step. Ice sweet-scented vernal grass; the bulbous grass; the quaking grass, trembling at every breath; the foxtail, with its yellow-green flowers and glossy hair, that shows like silver in the sunbeam: these, with many others, render their tribute to the month of flowers. Nor are the old pastures regardless of their own peculiar sweets. True, they can boast of common flowers alone—the daisy, the buttercup, the meadow crocus, sweet Cicely, &c.; but, were they even less fair in themselves, their profusion alone would claim our admiration.

The wild heaths, too, boast their attractions, although they hold their full state at a later period. The bursting fern, the bilberry, with its purple fruit; the hairgrass, waving in the wind; the yellow gorse, and swaying broom, fill the air with honey-like fragrance, and contribute their share to the delights of the season.

The rough places, too—the mountains, and even crumbling walls—now pay in their tribute. There may be seen the yellow violet, the saxifrage, the globe-flower, the yellow farmalery, the crowberry, the maidenhair, the snapdragon—all unite in clothing the stony places with luxuriant verdure. The floating crowsfoot forms mimic islands in the shady pool; the vetch and water-violet adorn its sedgy banks; and even the sullen bog rushes, and sends forth the Dutch myrtle (sweetgale) to welcome in the spring-time.

We must, however, linger no longer in the fields, delightful as they are, for we have yet to see what Nature has been doing in the garden.

Although many and heavy charges are brought against our climate, it has one advantage unshared by those of a more genial nature. Our buds and our blossoms come forth more gradually in spring, and more gradually decline in autumn, and are thus to the lowery year what gradually decline in autumn, and are thus to the day. Their succession is sufficiently rapid to prevent the most capricious from wearying of their charms, and their variety abundant enough to satisfy the most exacting. We shall say nothing of the rich exotics, which derive their beauty chiefly from science—unlike our own favourites, that owe little of their attractions to any but the cunning hand of Nature herself.

Among the ornamental forest trees of the month, the chestnut stands pre-eminent, with its rich cone of flowers, and broad fan-like leaf. Beneath it, and forming a strong contrast in general outline and detail, flourishes the glowing red hawthorn, a perfect bush of blossoms, and which, although only a variety of the common May, is scarcely surpassed by any shrub for beauty and fragrance. Beside it the delicate laburnum (the May of the Italians) drops its golden showers around, fittingly designated "my Lady's chain;" whilst the lilac mingles its flowers among it, producing an harmonious contrast of colours too well known to the gardener not to be frequently adopted.

The acacia, the Guelder rose (the snowball of childhood), tosses aloft its abundant bloom; whilst the evergreen white syringa (the orange-flower of England) diffuses sweet odour alike from leaf and blossom. Nor must we forget to enumerate the rhododendron, whose early varieties are now in full perfection.

We must, however, linger no longer in the shrubbery, but turn to the parterre, and observe what that has to show. Among the gayest and most showy flowers of the border, the tribe of lobelias stands conspicuous: here they are of many kinds, and in different stages of progression, but all fairly not the least attractive, with its slender leaved, spike-like blossoms—how rich in their abundance! The shining lobelia, with its deadly blue in its lighshade itself. The tiger-flower is here, rich in scarlet and orange—boasting marks on its blossom not unlike those on the animal suggesting its name. The family shaded as those on the animal suggesting its name. The family of the bugloss follow next—numerous enough to fill a garden of themselves, though limited principally in their colours to the various shades of blue and violet. The single bugloss, the viper bugloss, the double viper bugloss, are all now in bloom; with many more of the family ready to fill their places when they shall have done their duty and passed away.

The graceful hyacinth next demands our notice, and would seem to be an especial favourite of nature, seeing what numerous gifts it has bestowed upon it. It may fairly boast of stateliness of form, richness of scent, and beauty of tint rarely matched by any other flower. We have the feathered hyacinth, the Spanish, the Peruvian, and many others more or less charming, whose attractions make us wonder the less at the grave mischief their beauty entailed on our Dutch neighbours some half a century ago.

The azalea, lately forced and stimulated into bloom to furnish forth the fashionable bower of the bouquet, now appears in its natural season in all its various dresses of scarlet, white, flesh-coloured, and variegated.

The cobea haunts its purple blossoms in the air, and shows us the progress that vegetation can make in a single week of sunshine. The progress that vegetation can make in a single week of sunshine. The yellow, the red, and the Pyrenean jasmines also climber inside it and diffuse sweets so around. Nor must we forget the scarlet trumpet, the most beautiful of its species, seedless though it be. Surely it was this variety that led the fond mother to bestow its lofty name on her child, as sung by the poet Crabbe:—

"Why Lord-ess wi you call your child?"
I asked the gardiner's wife, in accents mild.
"We have a right," replied the homely dame,
And Lord-ess was the infant's name.

But we must detain the reader no longer by minute descriptions of the many plants which yet remain to claim our regard. Of the 600 species of geraniums, the hardy scarlet, and one or two others that can face the wind, may be seen in our borders. The heliotrope is there also, richer in fragrance than in beauty; the marigold, double and single (with its "virgin" associations); and all the mallow tribe, alluded to so frequently in holy writ. The philyreas, the valerian, the Florentine iris, the speedwell, the slipperwort, the aspnodel, the peony, the stillaria, and a thousand others, unite to make the garden of May one paradise of sweets; nor must we forget to say that even the dwarf box, that hems these treasures in, has its own small offering to bestow on the minute green flowers it puts forth to welcome in the month.

Such are a few of the attractions that Nature puts forth to allure us into the genial air and glorious sunshine of this festive season; and although it must all end a very humble attempt to do justice to a theme by which we are surrounded, it may, we trust, prove to have been a spirit of enquiry in some few "to be already past," and will at least present features little familiar, we trust to the generality of our readers, if only say, "Would it were worthier." But who ever has spoken of nature in the full flush of its beauty, but has felt the poverty of language to do justice to a tythe of its beauty?

I care not, Fortune, what you me deny,
You cannot rob me of free Nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky
Through which Aurora shows her smiling face;
You cannot bar my constant feet to trace
The woods and lawns, by living stream at eve.
Let health my nerves and finer fibres brace,
And I their joys to the great children leave,
Of reason, fancy too, might there can me bereave.

Such are the bursts of the poet who sing "The Seasons" so well; and where can I find a fitter one with which to conclude this brief notice of May and its Flowers?

Z. M. W.

MAY-DAY FANCIES.

BY FRANCIS BENNOCH.

I.

THE biting wintry winds are laid,
And spring comes carolling o'er the earth:
Mead, mountain, glen, and forest glade
Are ringing with melodious mirth.
The fields have doff'd their sober brown,
And donn'd their robes of lovely green.
On meadow wide, on breezy down,
Are flowers in countless myriads seen.
Come forth, come forth, enjoy the day,
And welcome song-inspiring May!

II.

Through bud and branch, and gnarled trunk,
To deepest root, when quickening light
Touches the torpid juices, sunk
In slumber by the winter's might,
Electric currents tingling rise,
Each circle swells with life anew;
Wide opening to the sunny skies,
Young grateful blossoms drink the dew.
Come forth, thou furrowed age, and say
If anything feels old in May?

III.

Step o'er the brook, climb up the bank.
And peep beneath those withered leaves—
Among the roots with wild weeds rank;
See how the fruitful earth upheaves
With pulsing life! How quiveringly
The timid young flowers, buds, sing, bend
Their gentle heads, where modesty
And all the graces sweetly blend.
Come forth, come forth, and hail the day.
Come, welcome in the glorious May!

IV.

From desk and 'Change, come forth and range;
From clanging forge, and slop, and mill;
From crowded room, from hoard and loom,
Come! but the rattling wheels be still.
Come, old and young, come strong and weak,
Indulge the limb and brain with rest.
Come, gaudy youth and wrinkled cheek,
In leisure feel your lab our blest.
Come forth, come forth, and hail the day.
Come, welcome in the glorious May!

V.

Come, ere the dappled East has burn'd—
Made molten gold the winding stream;
Come, ere the fiery sun has turn'd
The pearly dew to misty steam;
Come, ere the lark has left his nest,
Or lambkin bleated on the hill;
Come, see how nature looks in rest,
And learn the bliss of being still.
Come forth, come forth, and hail the day!
Come, welcome blossom-teeming May!

VI.

Æolian murmurs swell the breeze,
Enchant the ear, and charm the brain;
While merry bells and humming bees
Fill up the burden of the strain.
On earth, in air, oh, every where,
A brighter glory shines to-day;
Oh! bursts reveal how birds prepare
New songs to hural joyous May.
Come forth, come forth, no lingering stay.
Come, crown with flowers the matchless May!

VII.

No trumpet's thrilling call is heard
To revelle host or lordly crest,
But that myse'f, as voiceless word,
By which the world is onward prest—
Which bids the grass in beauty grow,
And stars their paths of glory keep,
Makes winds and waves harmonious flow,
And dreaming infants smile in sleep.
That voice, resistless in its sway,
Turns winter wild to flowery May.

VIII.

From edges of the dusky shade,
That canopies the restless town,
From tripping many a youth and maid,
With flushing face and tresses brown.
High hopes have they, their hearts to please,
They seek the wild wood's haunted dell;
They laughing come, by twos and threes,
But chiefly twos. I mark them well—
So trimly drest, so blythe and gay,
With them it seems 'tis always May.

IX.

They steep their kerchiefs in the dew;
Th n hollow wondrous with gurgles out,
As winged seeds were blown by kiss
What hazy old lovers were about.
Some pluck the growing leaves to learn
If love reciprocated be or no;
Or in rea, tagic stanzas turn
Love's hopes and wishes, sighs, fear.
Oh, love is earnest though at play,
When comes the love-inducing May.

X

With hawthorn blooms and speckled shells,*
Chaplets are twined for blushing brows;
While gipsies work their magic spells,
And lovers plight their troth-de bled vows.
Then round and round, with merry bound,
They tread the mystic fairy ring.
The silent woods have voices found,
And echoing, chorus while they sing:
"With shout and song, and dance and play,
We welcome in the glorious May!"

XI.

Link'd hand in hand, their tripping feet
Keep time to mirth's inspiring voice;
They wheel and meet, advance, retreat,
Till happy hearts in love beg ins.
The ring is formed for kisses so —
Leaping and racing o'er the plain:
The young wish time would suspend its dy,
The old wish they were young again.
And so, with one accord, they say,
One shimmers on, the spirit May!

XII

The voice that bade them work one forth,
Now gently, kindly whispers "Home!"
To-day has been a day of mirth;
To-morrow nobler duties come.
Such pleasures nerve the arm for strife,
Being joyous thoughts and golden dreams,
To mingle with the web of life—
And memory store with woods and streams.
Such joys drive cankering care away;
Then ever welcome, flowery May!

* In some parts of the north of England they form chaplets for May-day with flowers and speckled shells of eggs, as here described.

"THE VILLAGE BRIDAL."—PAINTED BY H. M. ANTHONY.—EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

"THERE! HE'S GONE!"—PAINTED BY F. DICKSEE.—EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

"THE VILLAGE BRIDAL."—BY ANTHONY.

We have already, in our last notice, made honourable mention of Mr Anthony's original and effective style of handling, particularly in landscape subjects, as evidenced in his several works at the Suffolk-street Gallery. We have now great pleasure in engraving his picture of the "Bridal," which is much and deservedly admired as a chef d'œuvre of foliage effects. The ivy-clad roof of the old village church is so marvellously executed as to have the effect of illusion. You almost expect to see a swallow shooting forth from some of its shadier recesses. The trees on the left, also, are well distinguished in form, leaf, and colouring. Under their shade the bridal procession is seen entering the church, whilst a group of village soldiers look on with curious interest from a respectful distance near the spectator. But the landscape portion of the picture is by far the best, and is that department upon which the artist should rest his fame. His figures and animals are less successful, and sometimes are introduced unnecessarily; as, for instance, is the case with the four dogs scattered about the middle and foreground, and the two figures near the centre.

"THERE! HE'S GONE."—BY T. DICKSEE.

In the Suffolk-street Gallery T. F. Dicksee has two clever little pieces, one of which, emphatically entitled "There! he's gone!" especially pleased us, as we are sure it will please our readers, with the little quiet moral which it appears rather to insinuate than propound, and the happy manner in which the whole story is told, without affectation or excess of sentiment. What can be more touching to those who centre all their hopes and lavish all their cares upon one dear object, than to find the bird for such is the "pet" on this occasion—fly away from its gilded cage into the wide world without, at the very moment its fair mistress has opened the door to minister to its daily wants? Yet such is the little episode now realised before us—"There! he's gone!" Yes! who would have thought it? There is a blank astonishment in the look the vain, last look after the fugitive—which tells of a heart's first disappointment, and its first foretaste of the cold realities of life. All the adjuncts of furniture, cage, jug upset in the excitement of the moment, are tastefully introduced, tending to the completeness of a high'y effective little picture.

"THE RETURN FROM THE CAMPAGNA."—BY CARL HAAG.

"The Return from the Campagna," by Carl Haag, is one of the gems of the Water-Colour Exhibition, and a remarkably fine specimen of the limner's art. The scene is a simple one—a Roman peasant woman bringing home her goats at evening, whilst she still economises the time by plying the distaff, leaving her infant to amuse himself in a basket which she carries on her head—an incident strictly true. Beside her is a boy playing on a pipe. The atmosphere glows with the broad beams of the setting sun, the foreground alone being invested with the cooler hues of stunted herbage. The general character of the spot is truthfully preserved, the Eternal City looms in the far distance, and a light mist already steals into the sky from the marshy plains which surround it.

"THE HAPPY OLD MAN" PAINTED BY R. JORDAN.

"THE HAPPY OLD MAN."—BY R. JORDAN.

The Art-Union societies of the Rhenish provinces are daily giving a stimulus and encouragement to art, which cannot fail of popularising art and diffusing its civilising influence amongst the masses. Though the general tendency of the German school has of late been too much toward a style of cold positivism from which neither art nor nature can be gainers, we have occasionally happy exceptions in domestic subjects such as that now before us. "Das Glückliche Alter," the happy old man, with his thoughtful but contented expression, tells of a life of usefulness and calm enjoyment. His little granddaughter, affectionately clinging to his arm, has just interrupted him in the study of the book which he holds in his hands, and the grave subject of which he is still meditating upon, whilst he gives a half-hearing to the little nothings of childish fancy.

"THE RETURN FROM THE CAMPAGNA."—PAINTED BY CARL HAAG.—EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

A TOWN PASTORAL.

BY THE HON. DAMON FITZ-DAMON, CAPTAIN IN HER MAJESTY'S GUARDS, AND THE LADY SYLVIA SILVERDEW.

In yon proud park, once (Cunningham recites)—
The Hyde, a manor near the Bridge of Knights,
Beside that gentle lake to which the dame
Of George the Second gave the Serpent's name
(Aptly, perchance, its name and nature mate,
For 'tis, the vulgar say, in scaly state)—
There lately wander'd a distinguished pair,
A captain gorgeous and a maiden fair.
What time the martial music, throbbing loud,
To yonder Gardens drew the lounging crowd.
While thus alone they interchanged the sigh,
Press'd the kind arm, and glanced the fondling eye;
The Muse o'erheard them, as by turns they spake—
The Muse Shorthandia, always wide awake.

DAMON.

Why pouts my Sylvia? Why, in musing mute,
Marks she the toe-point of her fairy boot?
Or counts the ripples breaking on the shore?
Has she a head-ache? 'Tis a shocking bore.

SYLVIA.

No, Damon, no. She owns a direr smart:
'Tis not her head that aches, sir, but her heart.
But why name hearts to thee, whose nature hard
Knows but the heart that's stamp'd upon the card?

DAMON.

Sylvia is hasty; but I hope and trust,
Will never say the thing that is unjust.
Why should mistake arise between us twain?
Do Damon, dear, the favour to explain.

SYLVIA.

'Tis needless; for, despite that pleading smile,
His conscience is explaining all the while:
But, to add clearness to its struggling tones,
Let me pronounce two little words—Miss Jones!

DAMON.

Joneses there be in shoals, my love, and each
May father her you mention in your speech:
There's Jones the banker (would I had his tin!)
And Jones the barrister, of Serjeants'-inn;
And Jones of Llan St. Ffraidd, a squire of Wales,
Not to name Davy, famed in sailors' tales.
And each may have a daughter—has, no doubt—
But why, on that account, should Sylvia pout?

SYLVIA.

You artful thing! But, sir, you go too far,
And show what sort of character you are.
Last night, perhaps, you never went at all
To Lady Nortonfolgate's fancy ball?

DAMON.

Do I deny it? Did I not request
That you would name the dress you liked the best.
Did you not counsel Edward's (the Black Prince),
Which I refused? How you have quizz'd me since,
Because I did not like, in any case,
A part requiring me to black my face.
You knew that I was going, in the dress
Of Gaveston, the favourite of—Queen Bess.

SYLVIA.

I did; and trusted, sir, that you would prove Constant to her whom you pretend to love;
Nor thought, in Lady Nortonfolgate's park,
You'd flirt by moonlight, sir, with Jones of Arc.
Oh, never frown! the whole affair I heard
Early this morning from a little bird.

DAMON.

That little bird 's a great and silly goose;
But to reproaches let's proclaim a truce.
If all the Joneses named in Boyle's Court Guide,
And all the Arcs in Euclid's Odes had fled
To shake my constancy to thee, I vow
They would have lost their labour, Sylvia. Now!

SYLVIA.

I must believe you. Men, 'tis said, but live
To cheat, and gentle women to forgive.
And pray how go your fortunes? Does your book
Upon the Derby wear a healthy look?

DAMON.

Why, not too much of that. Upon my soul
I half believe my place will be the hole!
All's very dark as yet, the pot don't boil,
But a long shot may be the cue for spoil.

SYLVIA.

Enchanting phrases, in whose little nouns
Lies the philosophy of Epsom Downs.
I hope you'll win; I also hope to see
That when the spoils are won, you've thought of me.

DAMON.

Gleams there, in shop of Roskell and of Hunt,
A jewel fit to deck my Sylvia's front—
That jewel is her own, when I have scann'd
The "Augur's" number on the shouting Stand.

SYLVIA.

Nay, nay, a little ring, a mere cadeau—
But try and liquidate the debts you owe.
Papa declares that I shall never wed
A man whom creditors can keep in dread.

DAMON.

My elder brother offer'd to be bound
To pay my dues eight shillings in the pound;
But they refuse Sir John's proposal fair,
And will exact their utmost claim they swear

SYLVIA.

'Tis hard, but in your trouble you must see
How very wrong extravagance must be.
Had Damon led a wise and prudent life,
Sylvia had now been Damon's loving wife.

DAMON.

Reproach me not, 'tis not the wisest plan;
Besides, I've now become an altered man.
I've no new debts (to speak of), seldom play,
And only drink to drive my griefs away.

SYLVIA.

To comfort you I'll tell you something new,
Then judge if my affection be not true.
Listen:—Lord HORACE GLIMMER, of the Blues,
For Sylvia's hand, by pa's permission, sues!

DAMON.

Glimmer! an awful ass! a helpless spoon!
Send him about his business precious soon!
A prig! a screw! a pump! a muff! a bore!
I never heard such impudence before!

SYLVIA.

Be he all that (whate'er all that may mean),
He pays his homage with a soul serene;
Calm in the knowledge that his rentals clear
Produce him just twelve thousand pounds a year.

DAMON.

Were it twelve millions he could offer you,
They would be dear if he were taken too;
But by such follies I should be amused—
How did the blockhead look when you refused?

SYLVIA.

But understand, I've not refused him yet.
At the Botanic fête to-day we met.
You should have seen him o'er my bonnet bent,
While we were standing in the Fuchsia tent!

DAMON.

And had I seen him friendship's licence pass,
I should, assuredly, have stopped the farce.
But, Sylvia, do not keep me on the rack,
Let him with promptitude receive the sack.

SYLVIA.

Twelve thousand pounds—an income so complete,
A London mansion, and a country seat!
Though Sylvia be the daughter of an Earl,
A chance like that were good for any girl.

DAMON.

You never loved me, Sylvia, that's a fact,
Or with such heartlessness you would not act.
Have not such chances fallen to me, I pray,
Have I not spurn'd them, for your sake, away?
Had not Rosa Dorrington a fine estate?
Had Mrs. Weedon diamonds, cash, and plate?
Was I not free to pick a Bishop's niece,
Of three, with twenty thousand pounds apiece?
Or Madame St. Lullion—rather brown,
But with a million francs, and money down?
Not to name Amy Yates, who's very nice,
And whose rich aunt has hinted for me twice?

SYLVIA.

Good gracious me, we're getting angry, quite,
Which, with a lady, is not so polite.
What a long list of slighted wedding-rings,
Like that Lablache, in "Don Giovanni," sings.

DAMON.

Excuse my warmth, my dear, you know it shows
How ardently my heart's affection glows;
But make me happy, clear my every doubt,
And send Lord Horace to the right-about.

SYLVIA.

Make yourself happy, then; for ere I dine,
I'll write his Lordship a dismissing line.
Papa will scold, but all his wrath I'll bear—
So long as you are happy, I don't care.

DAMON.

Dear Sylvia! One thing I've decided on,
I'll have another shy at brother John;
Urge him to settle with my pestering duns,
And free me from the pangs of younger sons.

SYLVIA.

Then, if he pays them off, approach my sire;
Tell him that to my hand you've dared aspire;
Our mutual flame reveal. I trust he'll say,
"Take her;" but if he don't—we'll run away!

DAMON.

Celestial thought! no more my hopes shall droop;
The ticket that for matrimonial soup.
To Wiltshire I'll be off on Monday night,
And hope to send you word Sir John's all right.

SYLVIA.

Write as before, enclosing to my maid—
Mamma inspects my letters, I'm afraid.
But see! the band has done—the tiresome things!
Come to our box to-night—the Wagner sings.

So spake the fair, and parted with a look
Stenography will not attempt to book.
May Damon's brother promptly yield the tin,
His duns prove ductile, and his courser win;
And Fate, in giving Sylvia as his wife,
With roses strew the pathway of his life.

SHIRLEY BROOKS.

THE LAST PROMENADE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

DOES any reader wish a contrast? Does any reader rejoice in glaring opposites? Does any reader sigh for an example of glory past, and pomp which is but a vision, and magnificence which is but a memory? If so, we will help them to what they seek. Let them call to mind the First of May, 1851, and place it side by side with the First of May, 1852. Let them summon up their recollections of the Crystal Palace, when the Queen sat in her chair of state, with all the best and greatest, and proudest, not only of England, but of Europe, around her, and the Crystal Palace now—empty, desolate, forlorn—the wreck of booths clustered where the costliest productions of skill and art were piled; a handful of lounging dealers bargaining and wrangling over planks, where bishops and archbishops blessed the work, and the nobles of letters, arts, sciences, and birth rejoiced to hear the Royal mandate go forth that the labour was achieved, and that the world was welcome to admire it!

On the First of May, 1851, how unprecedentedly glorious was the scene! Rich as it was in visual splendour and in brilliant and beneficent associations, the pageant was still richer in its perfect novelty. Did ever Kingly banquet or Imperial coronation suggest the same ideas or swell with the same import? Mere splendour the world has long been sated with. Embroidery and cloth of gold, the waving of banners and the pealing of trumpets, the glitter of processions and the gorgeousness of heraldry—all this has for centuries and centuries been gradually "used up." No doubt, mere glare and pomp may still possess some lingering charms for the eyes of the groundlings; and, so far as they contain in themselves the elements of beauty, reasonably so. But, on the First of May, 1851, a scene of more superb and overpowering gorgeousness than was ever witnessed within the four seas of England was invested with a significance which, more than any occurrence the world has yet seen, told of the glad new era before us, the era of the arts and sciences, of the era when man is every day more and more triumphantly asserting his power over the elements.

Nine-tenths of our ceremonials and our pageantry come down to us through the grey gloom of the olden times. We trace in them the savour of feudality. The armour rings out in their rejoicings, and through its clash we hear the solemn chantings of the old church. But on the First of May, 1851, we had our first great national festival—free from the manners, the associations, and the relics of our fathers. Although the magic and the cantrips by which the old story-tellers loved to account for the feats of great minds are gone, one magic is left—the greatest of them all. It was appealed to in aid of the Labour Festival of modern times. It is a magic which, properly sought, is ever found; fairly wooed, is ever won; a magic whose spirits are sure to come when you do call upon them—the magic of Science and Art! And this magic built a Palace fitted for the modern idea and the modern purpose. Neither drawbridge nor portcullis, neither barbican nor watch-tower, did it rear; but reverendly and gracefully adopting that ecclesiastical form which is shadowed in so many fanes—beautified in so many shrines, it called, as it were, from the turf a fairy edifice—modern in material, modern in fashioning; novel, also, in material and in fashioning; a structure which he who raised the Cathedral of Canterbury or the Dom of Cologne might have gazed at in mute wonder, and deemed that it surpassed even his greatest feats in architecture.

This was the crowning and the peculiar glory of the Exhibition—that it was entirely and totally of our own times. Truly, the First of May, 1851, was a great May-day—the greatest May-day which ever was celebrated in England. For, after all, may not the crystal fountain be taken as our May-pole? and—with all grace be it spoken—the Queen as our Maid Marian; and did not all the world bow to the one, and cluster fondly and for months and months around the other? Yes, the First of May of last year was the great modern May-day. Our forefathers hailed May as the in-coming of the joyous summer-tide, when the green leaves burst out in the wood, and the rusty corn sprang upwards, and the rejoicing time of the birds was at hand. Why, then, may not our modern May-day be equally typical—typical of the advancing summer of knowledge and wisdom?

True, for the moment, the contrast, so far as the shrine of our great festival goes, is, as we have said, striking, and, as we now say, strange and sad. The outward and physical portions of the ceremony—the relics of the occasion—are, it is said, we know not with what truth, on the eve of being utterly swept away. A few weeks, and we are threatened that all that remains of the Crystal Palace will be the evanescent mark it has made upon the earth. The enthusiasm of May, June, July, and August, 1851, has gone in the way of all enthusiasms: it has had its fierceness, its glitter, and its heat. It has now chilled down. How the opening of the Palace stirred us all—how London was moved to its depths—and not only London, but England and the Continent. How we talked but of the one great approaching show. How all other entertainments were neglected, and how even the high and mighty Houses of Parliament gave over oratorising, inasmuch as they could find no listeners. Now the summer opens as summers are wont to do; we have got back to our politics and our theatres, our concerts and our panoramas. We are at little things again. We are frittered as of old, and yet not without some sort of struggle. Decided as the general apathy appears to be, it has not been without its exceptional sparks of existence and regret. In the assemblages, concerts, and promenades of the last month drawn to the desolated Crystal Palace, nominally by the attractions of military bands, but really, we are sure, by a haunting desire to see the last of the scene of so many happy and instructive hours—are to be traced the signs of a lingering and fitful love for the Building. Significant and melancholy were the last gatherings at the empty shrine. People entered the Building impressed with a sad and thoughtful curiosity. "How will it look? Bare, empty, gutted, the corpse of iron and glass, left at last untenanted and dead?" But on the outside the general coup d'œil was more cheering. The sun of May, 1851, seemed again to play upon the greenery of the Park and the shining Serpentine. The crowds of May, 1851, seemed again to be pouring westward; again the creaking omnibuses were loaded outside and in; again the cabs moved in double and triple lines to the grand rendezvous; again policemen struggled to keep order due in the advancing cavalcade, and cabmen flattered themselves that the old times were come once more. It was, indeed, a pleasant retrospective glance. It was delightful to abandon oneself to it—to allow oneself be cheated into the notion that a year had not rolled away—that the Crystal Palace was still the Crystal Palace; that we could still march straight from the west transept door into India, or turn to the right into Tunis, or cross the nave once more to call upon the Persian and the Turk. Leaving the street for the Park, the illusion was still kept up; the slender iron columns rose as gracefully, and the long expanses of glass shone as brilliantly as they did before, only the flags had been stripped; the long rows of national blazonries had disappeared; stars and stripes and tricolours, crescents and black eagles, had vanished together—touching memento of the state of matters inside. But still the crowd thronged Palaceward as of yore. They poured along the broad walk running parallel with Knightsbridge; they made their way beneath the trees along the head of the Serpentine from the "Lady's Mile;" and they came stretching across the sward in caravans from the Bayswater corner, where the Marble Arch now rears its triumphant clumsiness, and they were all absorbed at the yawning portals; and the shillings rang, and the turnstiles clicked, as merrily as before. But one step across the threshold, and the dream was past! "Barren," like Justice Shallow's patrimony—"Barren, barren, barren." If ever the force of the common expression, "full of emptiness," was experienced, it was when the visitor crossed the threshold. How blankly and vacantly the eye took in the long vistas of nave and aisles, the vast ranges of gallery, the huge wastes left naked and desolate, or only heaped with the rubbish of fittings, dirty calico which had once shown bravely, and piles of smashed carpentry which had once borne the wonders of the place. A city sacked—a ship gutted—a costly volume with all torn rudely out between the battered boards—the sense, the imagination, the poetry and the toil—the whole place was an iron and glass type of desolation and of the passing away of things. Perhaps even the aspect of your own household despoiled would not be more melancholy. For while it lasted the Crystal Palace was a sort of second household to all London. People here set up a species of extra and supernumerary Lares and Penates. They had their ares and their focæ in two places at once. Every night a man was at home chez soi. Every day saw him at home chez Paxton. For a moment people felt clearly indignant. Where was their amenblement? Here was a trick played upon a manifest and lawful property. Was Prudhon at work, or had Cabet set up a second Icaria in Hyde Park? A man felt that he was despoiled: if his Englishman's castle had not been broken into, his Englishman's palace had been cleared out; all the old associations had been snapped like straws; all the old pets in the way of favoured articles had been laid violent hands on; not an old familiar form met the eye, not an old familiar hue was there to greet one as a friend: the visitor stood in the most dismal of all structures—a well-loved, well-known house empty and deserted.

It was curious and interesting to watch how the people cast melancholy wondering glances at the bare spaces of boards and iron pillars which had been regions and continents, and islands and towns: how they roamed hither and thither, pointing out where such a statue had stood, such an engine had worked, such a tapestry had been hung, or such a trophy had been built; they looked for sites, and sought recollections. Like antiquaries gleaning out old battle-fields, and determining the position of camps or cities which only live now in ancient vellums and emblazoned parchments, they went calculating distances, and calling up memories, and settling quite positively where ran the boundary which separated the Free States from the Zollverein; and where stood some particularly favoured object, some triumph of artistic or industrial skill, which was one of the lions, and to which all memories naturally recurred. And this was done generally in a mood of sober regretfulness, quietly and calmly, with a half-smile and a half-sigh—a natural lingering longing mental look back at the departed glories. Here and there might be seen the more eager curiosity of the occasional visitor—of course, a stranger in London—to whom the Palace itself was a novelty, who had never witnessed it brilliant and busy. You might know him by his flighty anxious manner, his constant questions, his anxiety to comprehend the vanished arrangement. "Ah! so here the crystal fountain stood? And here was the koh-i-noor, and there the silk trophy, and there the palms and tropical trees, and there India, and there the Chinese Empire!" But the vast majority knew these landmarks well; and often you might see a contemplative soul, quietly seated upon a morsel of booth-wreck, and clearly occupied in summoning up before his mind's eye the well-remembered pageant visible from the spot. The east end organ would sometimes for a moment rouse him by its familiar notes; but the close-following clang of the brass band would remind him that he was listening but to a passing hymn.

Seated in such solitary musing, in such a place and beneath such influences—embracing in one view all the great majesty of empty desolation around—might we not imagine ourselves the Last Man, gazing on the chaos of a bygone world. Where now were all the cities and the palaces, the villages, and the busy places of the earth—where the kingdoms, with their boundaries, their laws, their habits, and their rulers? This desolate place was England; that desolate waste was France. No fear now of wars or clashing interests. No difference now between the white cliffs of Grinez and the white cliffs of Dover. There was the Austrian frontier—a waste now on both sides. No difficulty in slipping across it, or even across the grim boundary of all the Russias. No custom-houses, no passports, no garrisons, no national flags; mere earth, monotonous earth; and the names of Russia, or Austria, or France, or Britain—nicknames, breaths of empty air, symbols which have lost their value, bubbles which have burst!

A strange, dreamy notion to think of Europe so vanished, and only the earth on which Europe had been, left—a collection of rocks and mould, and clay and stones, in no way different from the rocks, mould-clay, and stones of Asia or America. Yet this is what on its own scale one sees in the Crystal Palace. A collection of boards and iron pillars, and a sky of glass; none of the boards or the pillars differing, and the glass sky monotonously the same. Nothing more is left of the vanished world. Search for Greece, Spain, Russia, America, for New Zealand and Bombay, for Birmingham and Manchester, for Paris and Vienna, and you find—boards, iron pillars, and the glass sky. The kingdoms have vanished, the boundaries are extinct, the capitals are razed, and all that is left is the memory of the collocation of the peoples!

How strangely different in their freshness and their hopeful curiosity were our feelings one year ago, as all London was panting to be let loose upon the new-created world. How anxious and eagerly speculating crowds hung from morning to night round the Building, and made wild guesses at the glories within. How the wagons and carts, creaking under their burdens, were scanned and criticised; and how the dribbets of information in the newspapers touching the day to day progress—how Austria was nearly arranged, and how China was quite ready—how Switzerland was perfectly represented, and what a comparatively meagre collection would do duty for the States—how these morsels of diurnal information were greedily swallowed! And then the opening ceremonial. Every one had something to say of it. Would not the Queen go in state? Would not the pageant rival in grandeur a coronation? The most brilliant theoretical replies flew about, and the good public stood higher and higher on its tiptoes. Then how crowded town became; how the railway trains pulled up, loaded with sight-seers—how lodging-house and hotel-keepers anticipated a home California—how the streets became dotted with country groups, going along huddled together, and keeping a sharp look-out for pick-pockets; and how the élite of our foreign neighbours, French and German, poured in—moustached and frowning artists, and keen, wide-awake journalists, with all their eyes and their ears open for behoof of their respective exilitons. And then came the First of May—Queen's weather—the sky one arch of summer blue—the sun bright as that which shines on Naples. London never rose so early as on that May-day morning; never even when the dew was to be gathered and the garlands to be woven, and the May-pole to be danced round. At an hour when the streets are generally silent and clear, except when market-carts go rumbling by, or the last straggler of the night cabs makes its way like an owl to his hole, streams of gaily-dressed people were pouring westward, and cavalcades of vehicles were taking the same direction. Closer and thicker grew the ranks as they progressed to their destination. The trot soon steadied to a walk, and the walk soon collapsed in a dead stop. Piccadilly was all one jam—a hopeless mass of moveless four-wheeled things; so the occupants were fain to get out and join the foot-procession on the pavé, flowing agreeably and equally on, with no more crowding, pressing, or squabbling than if the good folks were marching to their parish church. It was a sight that May-day morning, to see the English people govern themselves. No surly Chasseurs de Vincennes were there. No masked batteries of artillery quietly built up in by-streets. No parties of ruthless Lancers or Cuirassiers coming down in sudden charges upon the crowd, and driving it and bullying it hither and thither. The usual ceremonial line of the Guards, indeed, marked out the path her Majesty was to take. But we do not count them soldiers in the Continental sense. They are a portion of the pageantry; and we no more believe that they are aught than citizens playing their parts in the ceremony, than we do that the warriors in an Adelphi melodrame, who threaten to shoot the hero, are other than a number of honest supernumeraries earning an honest penny, and entertaining the highest respect for the gentlemanly brigand, or the unfortunate Prince, at whom they level their respectable old flint muskets. The whole scene was one in which truly l'ordre regnait partout—order in the English, not the French sense. The utmost stretch of popular license was comprised in the fact, that certain small boys climbed into trees, and from them chaffed corpulent policemen, who vainly attempted the ascent in pursuit. Including, however, even this symptom of popular disturbance, the sharp-eyed French journalists had before them a scene which they never saw before, and which they must recross the Channel if they ever wish to see again—a people come to the years of discretion.

And through this multitude passed, amid their triumphant acclamations, the Queen, with her excellent Consort, who was indeed fairly entitled to be called the founder of the feast. And the great gates were flung open, and to the thousands and thousands congregated in the glorious edifice, their senses still dazzled by the gorgeousness of the picture in the midst of which they stood, the long and loud fanfares of the trumpets proclaimed the approach of Royalty—just as in Shakspeare's history-plays we are accustomed to "A flourish of trumpets, enter the King." Need we pause here further to recall the memories of that day's pageantry. They are still fresh in all minds. The Throne, the chairs of State, the circle of ministers, courtiers, and ambassadors, the surrounding multitude of the beauty and the intelligence of the greatest city in the world, all enshrined in a fane the like of which had never before been reared by man. Do we not recollect the moment when the Queen rose to her feet, and all the assemblage rose with her, when she stretched out her hand with a queenly air which befitted, and proclaimed with her own lips that the Exhibition was open; and when on the instant the bands and choirs and organs all burst forth together, their peals drowned, however, in the roar of acclamation which was straight taken up by the crowd outside, and through which could only be faintly heard the thunder of the cannon, and the merry voices of an hundred parish bells!

And now we are told that this great shrine is to fall; and that May, 1852, is to see destroyed what May, 1851, inaugurated. The rumour may be true; but, until it ceases to be a rumour, and takes the palpable shape of a fact, we shall continue to disbelieve it.

IT IS MAY-DAY

"OH, it is May-day, Nunks!" said the young children; "therefore we will be merry!"

"May-day!" replied the old uncle; "what have I to do with May-day? What has frosty December, or at least wheezy November, with the May of Life? I don't want to meddle with other people's affairs; they've no sympathy with me. What have we, in this land of houses, to do with mossy meads that are daisy-pied, and maypoles, and garlands, and festoons, and wreaths? There is no pole in the Strand now, unless it be the pole of an omnibus. Ah! to be sure, I forgot, we have barbers' poles—and garlanded too; and we have scaffold-poles; and, occasionally, at Greenwich or Camberwell, or somewhere, a greasy pole, that climbing-boys distress themselves ascending, ambitious of mutton and trimmings. Often enough, too, we encounter other greasy poles in our streets, less than four of whom are enough any day to 'make one rude.' If we have any wreaths, they are snow-wreaths; and our garlands and festoons are turned to, or cut in, stone, or cast in iron: these are the only everlasting flowers. It may be all very poetical—if becoming—to talk of rolling in the dew on the mountains on May-day; or of bathing your face in it—I forget which: either way, I have no doubt, the desired object of exciting the bloom in the cheek will be obtained. But the mountain-dew within our reach is but too much bathed in, and all the year round: there are too many incitements to it; the very vagabond sparrows in our house-eaves cry 'fill up.' What's the use of your talkers and fine writers occupying valuable time rhapsodizing about hazel eyes, and chesnut hair, and all that sort o' thing, when it is only natural? I had as fine eyes and hair as any man of my time, but you don't hear me talking about them. (What? like a Skye terrier!) Don't be impertinent! I had dimples, too; but you see they've only made wrinkles! and bloom, too; but that has only made me now look vulgarly weather-beaten. Mating time? Nonsense! that applies to birds, not to boys and girls: take care you don't make a check-mate of it, or a mess-mate! Maundering in that way about pretty May! I tell you, those hedge-flowers have thorns amongst them. Jack-in-the-Green surrounded with Bloomers! Folly! Whoever heard of such a thing? How could you countenance a fellow making of himself such a jack—? Why, didn't you see his oars growing out from the leaves? No, no, rural felicity is incompatible with bricks and fog: posies of lilies and daffydowndillies are things that pertain to milkmaids and clodhoppers. Now and then we have bull-rushes in Smithfield, but they are not so pleasant as they are startling. So, there your old uncle won't take his fatted calves, as you call them."

"Ah! Nunks, you were once a young man yourself, and, I've been told, as rich-hearted and merry as any. Now, don't I see a tear in your eye?"

"Stuff and nonsense! And if you do, isn't it because I am ashamed of having been a young fool! Well, well, don't be vexed: I don't want to make you old before your time: it will be soon enough when it comes. God knows! Off with you, then, to your mirth—off to Greenwich—off to Richmond—away from the smoke and the roar of wheels. Don't believe that the old chap doesn't hail summer again—donning instead of the white, the green. What has become of those gondolas you were so enthusiastic about? They should have had their steam up or May morn! Ah! all in good time. Then away with you: take as much heaven on earth as you can find; and the more you find, the better for it. Ah, you rogue! if I were young again, I would show you the way to spell 'opportunity!'"

"Hurrah! Isn't uncle wondrous young for his years!—going to cast his wisdom teeth. I declare!"

It is May-day—be joyful!

M F

MUSICAL REVIEWS.

GOTTFRIED WEBER'S THEORY OF MUSICAL COMPOSITION. Robert Cocks and Co.

Gottfried Weber, the celebrated writer on the theory of music, was born at Freinsheim, in Rhenish Bavaria, in 1779, and died at the baths of Kreuznaach, in 1839. The composer of the "Der Freischütz," Carl Maria Weber, bore no relationship to the distinguished theorist, who was educated at Mannheim, and studied the law at Heidelberg and Göttingen. Like his father he obtained a highly honourable position in the magistrature, after great success at the bar. He was a judge at Mayence and Darmstadt; for his labours in preparing a new civil and criminal code for the Grand Duchy he obtained in 1832 the post of Attorney-General at the Supreme Court of Cassation. Gottfried Weber was not only famed as a jurisconsult, but he gained glory as a composer, and, above all, as a writer on the theory of music, although, like Sir John Hawkins, only educated as an amateur. It was in reading the contradictory systems of Vogler, of Marburg, of Kernberger, and other theorists, that Weber conceived the notion of giving to the world a work on the laws and rules of composition which should be eminently practical, taking as his basis the scores of the great masters for analysis and illustration. Three editions of his work were rapidly circulated throughout Germany; and, notwithstanding the strong opposition displayed by other theorists to some of the principles laid down by Weber, his production still remains one of the best class-books extant. The author was elected member of the majority of the European musical academies, besides the orders and decorations he received in his own country. Mr. James Warner, of the United States, having translated Weber's great work, Mr. John Bishop, of Cheltenham, has edited a very superior edition, issued by Cocks and Co., supplying many gaps which the American translator had left in the version of the German original. This will be a very useful and valuable publication for this country, containing as it does general musical instruction for the earliest beginner, and important doctrines for the guidance of the most advanced students. The classification of the subjects is clear; the division and arrangement of the rules and laws, from the first general idea of musical sound, up to the last hints for practical exercise in pure composition, are admirable. The chapter on "The Modulatory Structure of a Piece of Music, taken as a Whole," is a masterly essay. Weber charms the reader by his freedom from bigotry and pedantic intolerance. "Art," he remarks, "is free, ought to be, and does not tolerate admeasurement of its limits by rod and chain." The publishers have produced Weber's work with typographical clearness and elegance. It may perhaps be hereafter a question for the editor whether an abridged edition, at a cheap price, would not be of infinite service for the masses; in the meanwhile this treatise ought to be in the hands of every professor, and of every amateur desirous of acquiring a lucid and comprehensive analysis of the theory of musical composition.

CONCERTO in D MINOR for the PIANOFORTE, with full Orchestra, by SILAS; SONATA for the Pianoforte, by SILAS. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

The fame of the youthful composer from Holland is spreading by degrees in this country. His pianoforte pieces prepared the way for the name of Silas to be heard in the drawing-room. His trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello commanded the serious attention of the admirers of classic chamber composition, and now he has come boldly before the world in the highest range of musical imaginings the ideal sonata and the colossal concerto. In all Mr. Silas's works as yet the pianoforte is the leading instrument; but if his pretensions in this category assume the highest grade in art, then will the essays at opera and oratorio follow in due course. The youthful writer is now going through the ordinary ordeal to which genius must be exposed; namely, his compositions have met with ridicule, neglect, coldness, and indifference, just as those of Beethoven and Mendelssohn experienced on their first introduction in this country. As usual, it is from the professional portion of the community that Silas encounters the most bitter opposition. It is, indeed, well for art's progress in this world, that there is a musical public to judge dispassionately new works—to give the reins to imagination and fancy, and to treat with sovereign contempt the fiat of autocrat artists, despite of their insolent affectation of superior wisdom, and of their attempted monopoly of judgment and taste. Honest, independent, and unrestrained enthusiasm have many a time and oft defeated the dictates of the "big wigs" of the profession, as in the memorable instances of the Beethoven symphonies and posthumous quartets, and of the Weber and Meyerbeer operatic productions; and, if we are not egregiously mistaken, there will be much recantation, sooner or later, in respect to the works of Silas. Like everything that is new, the hearer has to become habituated to the style; but he is brimful of ideas—he has had the courage to combat conventionalities, he has the gift of originating novel forms, he is creative as well as imaginative, and evidently endowed with profound knowledge of the mechanism of his art. Of the concerto before us, the proper period for a musical analysis will present itself when heard in public with the orchestral accessories, such a work cannot be judged definitively from simply hearing it played over at the pianoforte. In the laying out of his subjects, variety, novelty, and striking contrast are the chief characteristics. The theme of the first movement is remarkable: the scherzo strikes us as being altogether new, and amazingly exhilirating; and the finale is large and vigorous. The sonata is less pretentious in design and treatment than the concerto, confined as its proportions are to one instrument. Perhaps familiarity with its intentions may dispel an impression of dryness in the details, but it is utterly impossible not to be deeply impressed with the facile invention and rare skill of the young composer; the adagio is full of charm, and the allegro finale in two-four time brilliant and impulsive. Taking the sonata and concerto in connexion with Mr Silas's trio; and his preceding fugitive pieces for the pianoforte, every impartial observer must come to the conclusion that the highest order of musical capacity and intellect has been developed in his style, and his future will be watched with deep interest. The advent of an aspirant as the successor to the great classic celebrities is too rare an occurrence to be treated lightly; but if Silas be gifted to the extent of what his admirers (amongst whom we enrol ourselves) believe, then will he have nothing to fear. No tomahawking diatribes, no professional prejudices, no artistic bigotry and jealousy can prevent his final triumph, if the aspirations of Silas be based on the eternal principles of truth in art, novelty of idea, and classic perfection of form and treatment.

VOCAL PIECES.

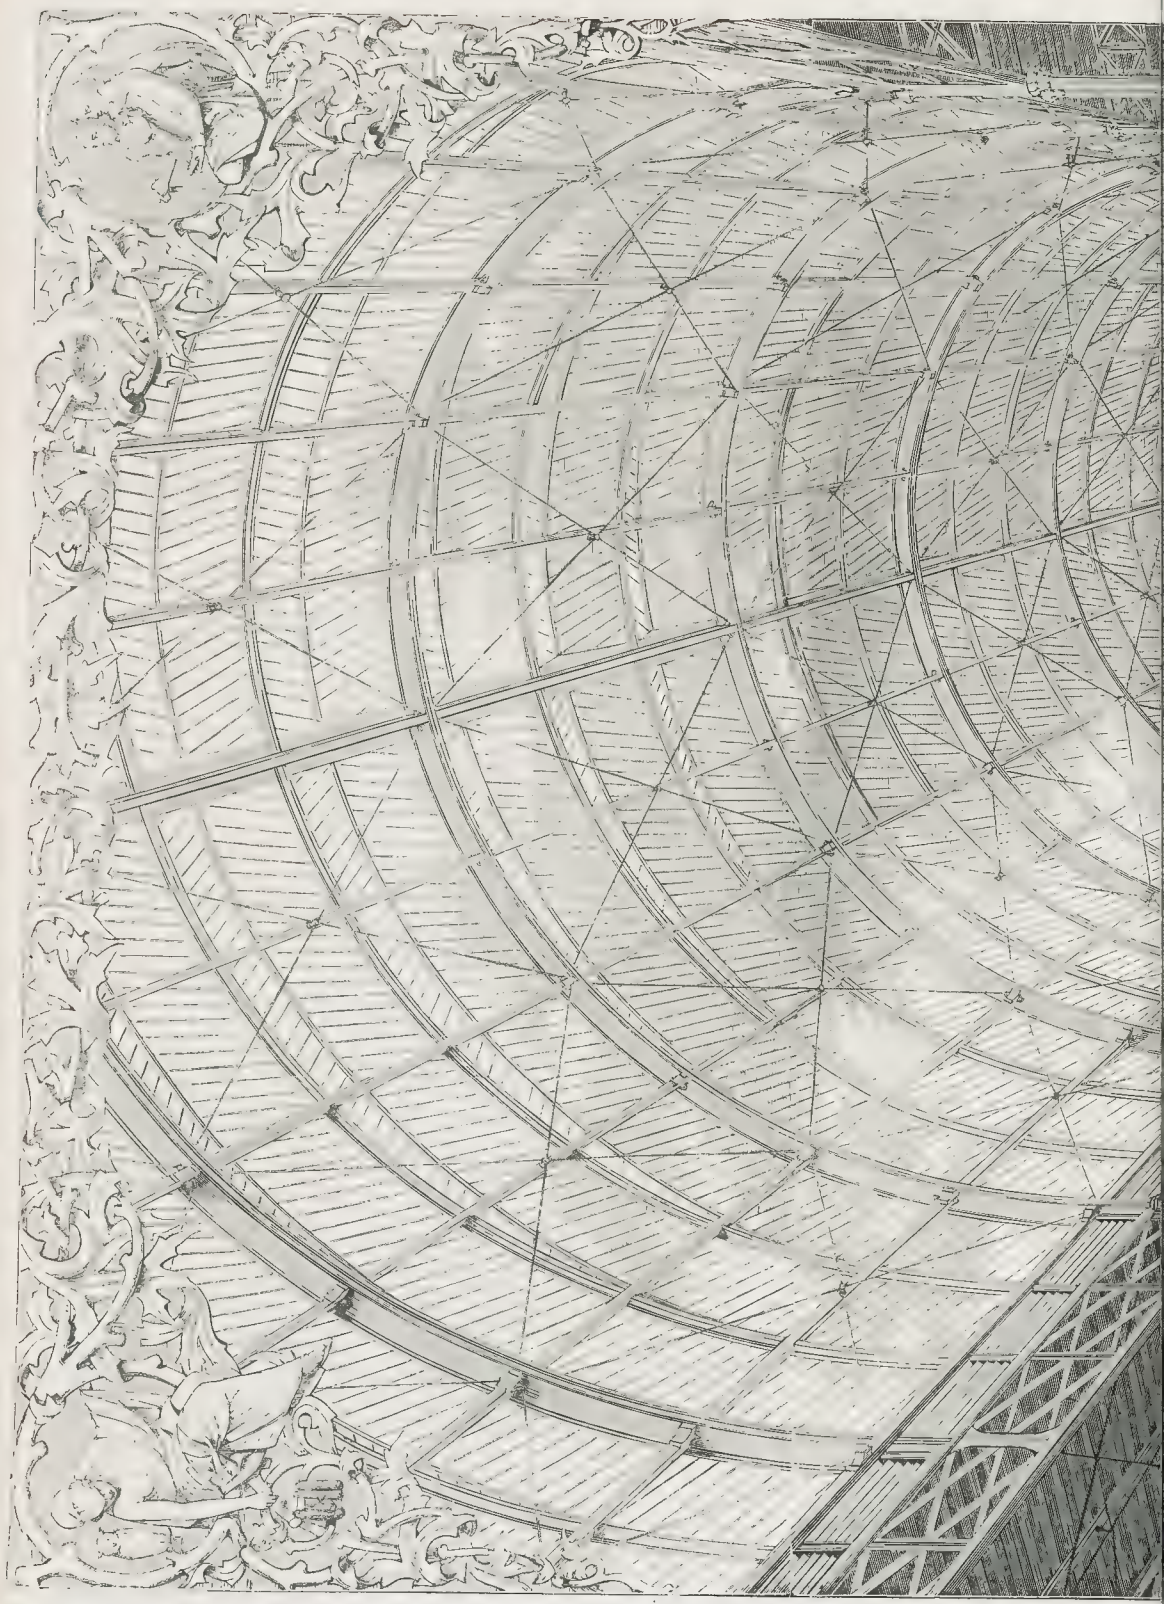
VOCAL EXOTICS. Edited by Mr. Bartholomew: R. W. Ollivier. "All Hail to the Magyar." Arranged by L. Stoffregen: R. W. Ollivier. "The Sister's Wedding." By G. Linley: Idem. "Hither Come." By G. Linley: Cramer, Beale, and Co. "Chorale." Arranged by R. J. Meade, M.A.: J. N. Novello. "I love to sing when I am sad." By Ann B. Spratt: C. Jeffreys.

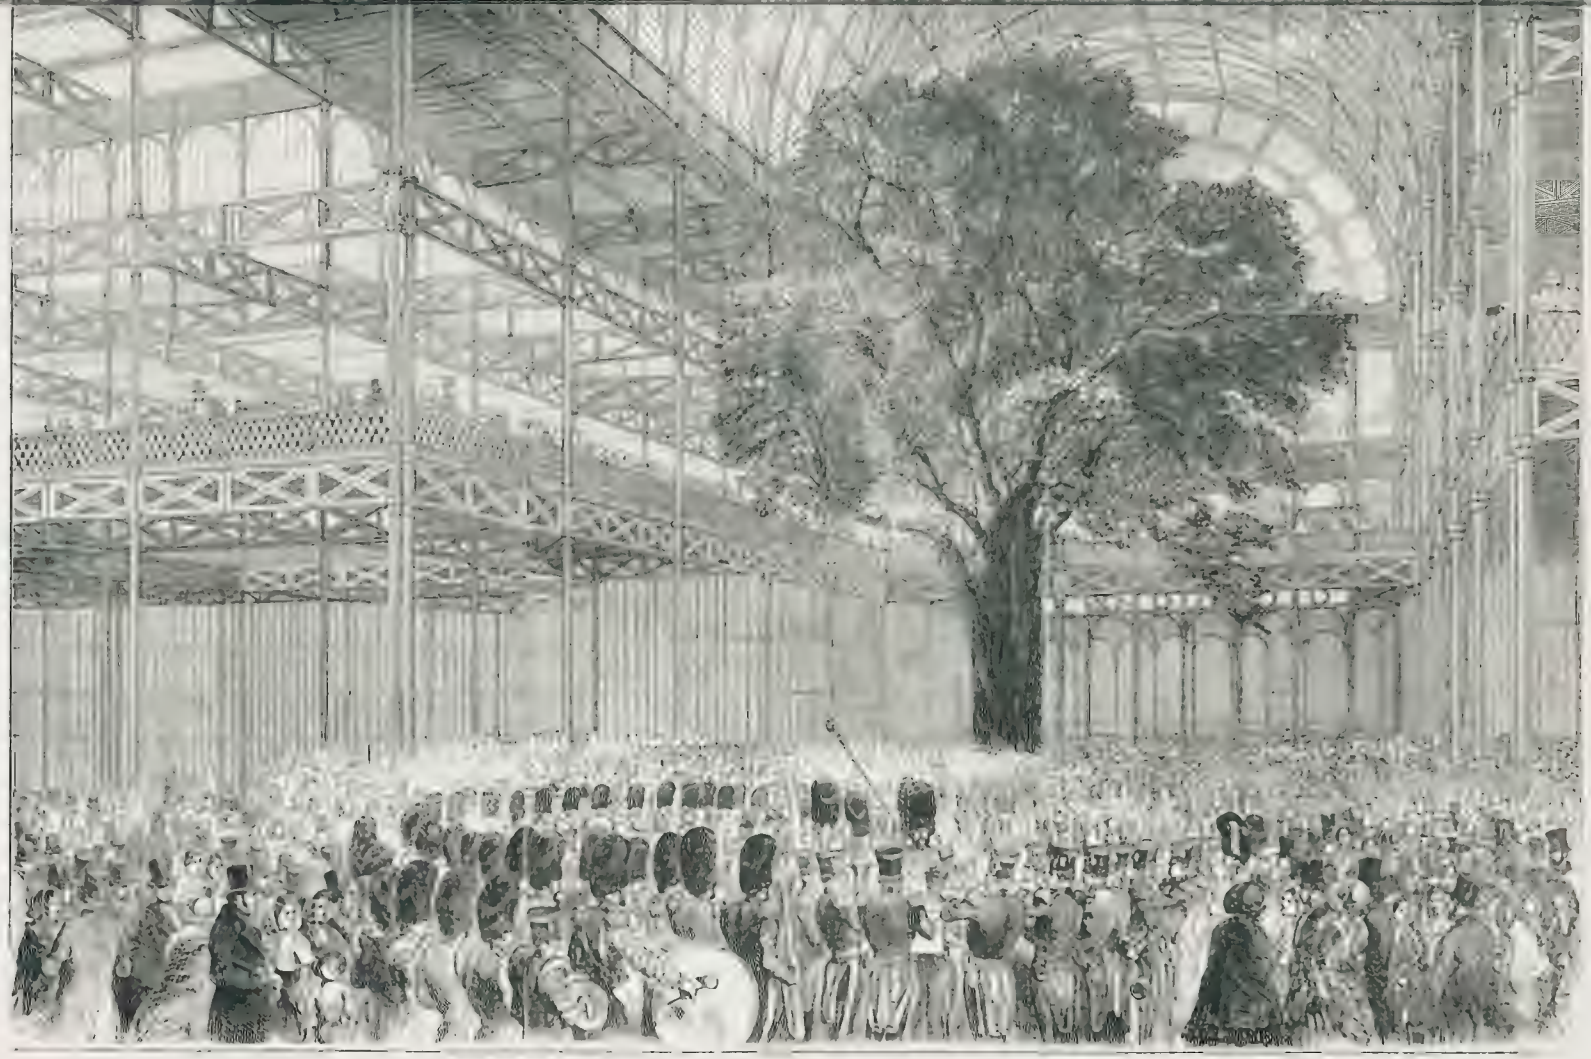
"Vocal Exotics" are a selection of the songs of various nations, written and adapted by W. Bartholomew. The number before us is C. Preyer's "Jedem das Seine," a sprightly melody in two-four time. Schaufler's Hungarian national song has been translated by Mr. S. Hickson, and well arranged by Herr Stoffregen. Mr. Linley's two songs are worthy of his reputation; the words of the "Sister's Wedding" are by L. E. L. The chorale is sung by the native pupils of Sawyerpuram, in South India; Mr. Meade has written English words, and nicely harmonized the subject. The profits of this publication are to be given to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, for the Jubilee Fund, and the proposed new church of Sawyerpuram. The song of Miss A. Spratt is a pleasant ditty.

DANCE MUSIC.

THE PETTEL WALTZES. By A. H. Dendy: J. C. Jones. "The Bright Stars," and "Reria." By Julius Wittenberg: D'Almaine and Co. "Olivia." By L. F. A. Freleu: E. W. Ollivier. "The Koh-i-Noor Quadrilles." By F. T. Dawson: J. Shepherd.

Mr. Dendy's waltzes are a set of six, published with or without cornet accompaniment. The introduction is graceful; the figures are ingenious, if not novel; and the time is distinctly marked. Mr. Wittenberg has an ear for effect, if not very original in his tunes; the "Reria Schottische" is the most striking. "Olivia" is styled "valse élegante," and it is not a misnomer. We cannot record that the quadrilles of Mr Dawson are a gem, like their title, but there is merit in his compositions.





THE LAST PROMENADE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE SQUANDERS OF CASTLE SQUANDER.*

IN our Supplement of the 31st of January last, we brought down this story of Irish extravagance and misery to the departure of the youngest and only respectable male scion of the house of Squander from those paternal halls where intemperance and debauchery were almost the sole lessons that were placed before him. The progress and conclusion of the work are now before us, in the two handsome volumes which have been issued from the office of the "Illustrated London Library" and the "National Library." Mr. Carleton writes with a strong hand—as strong and unsparing as his purpose, which is to lay bare, under the thin disguise of a contemporary fiction, the real truth which lies at the bottom of all the miseries of Ireland—miseries that by no means afflict the peasantry alone, but that descend from the very highest to the very lowest classes. The virtues and the vices of the Irish character are before the world. The deep tragedy that walks side by side with mirth, as if the two were sworn brothers; the pathos and the jollity; the recklessness for good or for evil, and that will crack a skull or save a life in frolic—all these things have been told again and again; but no one has told them with more vigour and truthfulness than Mr. Carleton. Ireland with all its multifarious faults, wrongs, and miseries—with all its laughter and tears, all its vengeance and its endurance, all its sportiveness and bloodthirstiness—is daguerréotyped in his pages. The reader is painfully aware as he proceeds, that he who has written thoroughly knew his subject, and hopes with him, that from his merciless portraiture the good intended by its author will result; and that Ireland, now paying the penalty of national as well as of private wrongs, may be purified and healed in the process; that she will learn how to distinguish her friends from her enemies, and draw from affliction, almost too heavy to be borne, the wisdom that may atone for and remedy all. Whether the portraiture drawn by Mr. Carleton be not somewhat too truthful, if such an expression can be allowed, and whether he has not told some things which it would have been better to have left untold, rather than to have shocked the ears of a nice-minded and clean-tongued generation, we shall not now pause to inquire. Tastes will differ upon this point; and as Mr. Carleton's book partakes to some extent of the character of an anatomical operation performed upon Irish society, he and his friendly critics may plead that to the lancet and the scalpel, scientifically applied, there is no impropriety or indecency. But, leaving that point as one with which we have no concern, we shall endeavour to give a general idea of this remarkable story.

We have not space to detail the various steps by which the Squanders of Castle Squander, under the guidance or misguidance of old Squander and his hopeful sons, reached, with open eyes, the precipice of ruin; nor to show how, at last, they rushed over it; nor to dwell upon the lighter episodes with which the tragic incidents of their fate have been contrasted and accompanied by the author. We shall, however, take up the story at the point which it had reached in our Number of the 31st of January, and give as fair a summary of the whole as our space will allow. We select, in preference, those passages which illustrate most forcibly the social condition both of the owners and the occupiers of that ill-fated soil, referring the reader who is interested in the minor details of the story, to the volumes themselves.

Hitherto (says the author) we had seen the modes and habits of life which characterised the Squander family in what may be considered the palmy days of their prosperity; that is to say, at a period when they knew nothing of those close and pungent struggles which approach the domestic hearth, and affect their personal comfort and means of life. Mr. Squander's liberation from prison—to which his extravagance ultimately consigned him—was brought about at a very seasonable moment; for if he had remained there but another week, such a multitude of detainers would have been laid upon him, that he might in all probability have closed his existence, like many others, within its walls. The greater portion of his property we may say, as a matter of course, had been a long time in Chancery, and was placed under different receivers. At the period to which we have now arrived, a very inconsiderable fragment of it was under his own control; and, indeed, harsh and oppressive and rapacious as was the conduct of these men, we question whether the tenants located upon this portion of it, would not have been better off had they also had to do only with receivers.

Mr. Squander had scarcely been a week at home, when certain suspicious-looking strangers were observed in the neighbourhood, and many of them seen to lurk about the house itself. Vigilance and caution had now, however, become the order of the day, and of the night also. The surrounding tenants were all warned to be on the look out for the advent of such persons, and at once to report the fact at the castle in the first place, and next to take such steps as to cause their sudden disappearance from the country. The lodge-gate was not only kept locked, but two of the most desperate and unscrupulous fellows on the property were placed in it night and day, as a guard of observation, for the duties of which they were qualified by plenty of arms and ammunition. Mr. Squander, now and henceforth a prisoner in his own house, was forced, by the solitary and secluded life which he felt himself compelled to lead, to look back, with what feelings we shall leave our readers to guess, upon the profligate extravagance of his past career, as well as to feel its consequences in his present confinement, and, what was still worse, as they impended over himself and his family. This condition of existence was not at all calculated to improve his temper, or to preserve his natural and boisterous cheerfulness. The man had never been in the habit of thinking. His whole life had been a turbulent flow of coarse and sensual enjoyment, unchecked by one moment's reflection as to the end and object of his being, or the duties which his position imposed upon him, whether they affected himself or others. Need we feel surprised, then, that, without a single resource, drawn either from a sense of religion or moral feeling, he turned to that stimulus which was calculated, by its pernicious but grateful influence, to enable him, under such circumstances, to grasp at the feverish but exhausting antidote to care and memory, and the gloomy anticipations which hung over him. This was the fact. Brandy and whiskey-punch, early and noon-day grog, were now the sources of artificial consolation and hollow fortitude on which he fell back and depended. And yet the man was not naturally a bad man; neither was he a good man. Although generous and profuse, he possessed not one spark of charity nor sympathy with the wants and distresses and sufferings of his poorer fellow-creatures. If, for instance, he met a young female of good looks and appearance, who scrupled not to enter into a bantering match with him, and return jest for jest, no matter how ribald or coarse the quality, he would not hesitate to throw her a handful of silver, as a reward for her unfeminine want of modesty; but if he met an unhappy mother with a string of wretched and shivering children at her heels, and perhaps a sick infant lying against her cold and unsheltered bosom, who so loud in his invective against imposture or mendicancy? who so stern a moralist against the houseless poor? who such a political economist upon such topics as involved the necessity and the justice of the wealthy to contribute from their abundance to the relief of popular destitution? We need not dwell upon this. We are certain that the points will be at once recognised, by our Irish readers at least, as those which constitute the staple character of the majority of Irish landlords.

Mr. Squander's temper now became not only irksome to himself, but also very painful and trying to his family. Sometimes he ventured out to the garden well guarded, either by myself and his sons or his servants—our orders being to shoot any person who should attempt either to serve him with a writ or arrest him. Occasionally he took a walk in the avenue, and if it happened that any unfortunate stranger looked through the gate, or made a moment's delay opposite it, there were instantly half-a-dozen pistols and a blunderbuss or two levelled at him, and he immediately took to his heels, amidst the shouts and execrations of the body-guard, as well as of the old man himself, who would shake his cane at him, and send the inoffensive individual, the Court of Chancery, and the Lord Chancellor himself, all to a certain warm establishment, which we need not mention.

This state of affairs was anything but comfortable, and Mr. Squander found that it was necessary to take some steps to reduce his style of living within his means, or at least as near them as he could. His two sons were a burthen upon him, and yet they could not bear the notion of having their expenses curtailed, or of appearing in the world with their usual dash and style diminished. Something, however, must be done, inasmuch as their family income now could not be expended in such a manner as that one pound should discharge the functions of ten. The circumstance, it is true, of the old Squire's being on his keeping, did not signify much in that part of the country, because there were, in point of fact, a sufficient number of the gentry to keep him in countenance. But still it was felt that something must be done, and that too very quickly. The establishment had not yet been reduced, and the servants besides were becoming clamorous for their wages. The prodigality of food and liquor had disappeared, and the licentious indulgence, waste, and profligacy of the kitchen had received a gradual but sure check, a check, indeed, which called up a vast deal of virtuous indignation in that quarter, and which suggested to them the necessity of asserting en masse the rights of servitude against the injustice and oppression of that vile, Whiggish principle—retrenchment. Now, at this very critical period it so happened that Mr. Squander had made his mind up for a step beyond mere retrenchment, and this step was reduction, and a consequent dismissal of a great number of the useless and saucy drones who had always robbed him, and were even then eating him out of house and home.

* * * * * *

